

THE DICTIONARY
Historical and Critical
OF
M^R PETER BAYLE.

THE SECOND EDITION,

Carefully collated with the several Editions of the Original; in which many Passages are restored, and the whole greatly augmented, particularly with a Translation of the Quotations from eminent Writers in various Languages.

To which is prefixed,

THE LIFE OF THE AUTHOR,

REVISED, CORRECTED, AND ENLARGED.

BY

M^R DES MAIZEAUX,

Fellow of the Royal Society.

VOLUME THE SECOND.

Bi — E.

L O N D O N :

Printed for J. J. and P. Knapton; D. Midwinter; J. Brotherton; A. Bettesworth and C. Hitch; J. Hazard; J. Tonson; W. Innys and R. Manby; T. Ward and E. Wicksteed; W. Meadows; T. Woodward; B. Motte; W. Hinchliffe; J. Walthoe, jun. E. Symon; T. Cox; A. Ward; D. Browne; T. Longman; S. Birt; W. Bickerton; T. Astley; S. Austen; L. Gilliver; H. Lintot; H. Whitridge; R. Willock.

M D C C X X X.

Mr BAYLE's

Historical and Critical

DICTIONARY.

B.

BYBLIS, Daughter of Miletus, and the Nymph Cyanea [A], fell in Love with her Twin-Brother Caunus, and endeavoured to inspire him with the same Passion; but, not succeeding in it, she was so distracted with Grief, that she hanged herself (a). Ovid, who tells us this, in one of his Poems (b), says, in another, that she ran after Caunus, 'till she was quite tired. He adds, that, her Strength being wasted, she fell down, and obstinately lay on the Ground, and cried abundantly, notwithstanding all the Care the Nymphs took to comfort her; and that she consumed herself in Tears, and was metamorphosed into a Fountain (c). He admirably describes the Progress and Symptoms of This Incestuous Passion [B], and, had he wrote no other Verses, would have sufficiently

(a) See Remark [D].

(b) Ovid de Arte Amandi, lib. i.

(c) Id. Metamorph. lib. ix, fab. xis

[A] She was Daughter of Miletus, and of the Nymph Cyanea.] This Cyanea was Daughter of the River Meander (1); but some Authors say, that Miletus married Eidothea, Daughter of Eurytus, King of Caria, and that Caunus and Byblis were born of This Marriage (2). Others affirm, that the Name of the Mother of These two Children was Aria (3); others call her Tragasia (4). Authors differ likewise as to their Paternal Grandmother's Name; for some say, that Miletus was the Son of Deione (5); others say, that Acacallis, the Daughter of Minos, was his Mother (6). They agree better in This, that Miletus left the Isle of Crete, and built a City in Asia, which was called by his Name. Minos was the Cause of This Retreat. He thereby designed to prevent the Violence of his Ambition, or of his Love. Ovid represents Minos as very uneasy at finding himself old, and seeing Miletus in the Flower of his Age: This Disquiet, too common to Those, who reign, made him look upon Miletus as a Man capable of dethroning him,

Tunc erat invalidus, Deionidenque juventæ
Robore Miletum, Phœboque parente superbum
Pertimuit, credenque suis insurgere regnis, Haud tamen est patriis arcere penatibus ausus.
Sponte fugis, Miletè, tua — (7).

Asfirm with Age, Miletus now he fears, Vain of his Birth, and in the Strength of Years;
VOL. II. N° XXXI.

And now regarding all his Realm as lost,
He durst not force him from his native Coast.
But you, by Choice, Miletus, fled his Reign, &c.
GAY.

You will find, no doubt, in the Greek Words, I am going to quote, an amorous Prince, who made himself dreaded: Ἐπει δὲ ὁ παῖς νύμφῃ, καὶ ἐγνέτο καρδὴ, καὶ δεγασθεῖ, καὶ ὁ Μίνως κατὰ πῶτον ἐνεχείρει βιάσασθαι, τότε νύμφῃς ὁ Μίλητος ἐμῶς εἰς ἀναλόν, βυλῇ Σαρπηδό- νος, εἰς Κάριαν ἀποδιδράσκει (8). As he grew up, he became beautiful, and strong; and Minos, falling in Love with him, offered Violence to him. Upon This, Miletus, by the Advice of Sarpedon, taking Ship by Night, fled into Caria.

[B] He admirably describes the Progress and Symptoms of This incestuous Passion.] Byblis, at first, was ignorant of her own Passion. To kiss her Brother often, and fall about his Neck, seemed to her a good Action; She confounded This with the lawful Affection which is due to a Brother. She continued in This State of Ignorance, even when she perceived how careful she was to make herself fine, and how desirous to appear handsome, when she was to see Caunus.

Paulatim declinat amor, visuraque fratrem
Culta venit, nimiumque cupit formosa videri.
Et, si qua est illic formosior, invidet illi;
Sed nondum manifesta tibi est; nullumque sub illo
Igne facit votum, veruntamen æstuat intus (9).
A

(8) Anton. Lib. beral. ibid.

(9) Ovid. ibid. ver. 462.

(1) Ovid. Metamorph. lib. ix. ver. 450.

(2) Anton. Lib. beral. cap. 30. pag. 155.

(3) Scholiast. Theocriti ad Idyll. viii.

(4) Nicenetus apud Parthen. de Amator. Affect. cap. 11.

(5) Ovid. ubi supra, ver. 444.

(6) Anton. Lib. beral. ibid.

(7) Ovid. lib. ix. pag. 443.

sufficiently shewed his great Skill in the Description of Love. Antonius Liberalis relates

*But Love (too soon from Piety declin'd) Insensibly deprav'd her yielding Mind.
Dress'd she appears, with nicest Art adorn'd,
And ev'ry Youth, but her lov'd Brother, scorn'd.
For him alone she labour'd to be fair,
And curst all Charms, that might with her's compare.
'Twas She, and only She, must Caunus please;
Sick at her Heart, yet knew not her Disease.*

STEPHEN HARVEY, Esq;

Neither This, nor the Grief she conceived against the Fair Ones of the Neighbourhood, opened her Eyes. Her Fire burnt without casting a Light; It did not yet inspire her with a Wish for the Cure. She went so far, as to be pleased with giving Caunus the Title of Sir, rather than That of Brother; and chose rather that he should call her by the Name of Byblis, than That of Sister.

Jam Dominum appellat, jam nomina sanguinis odit, (10) Ib. ver. 467. Byblida jam mavult, quam se vocet ille forem (10).

*She call'd him Lord; for Brother was a Name
Too cold, and dull, for her aspiring Flame;
And, when he spoke, if Sister he reply'd,
For Byblis change That frozen Word, she cried.*
Ibid.

And yet, whilst she was awake, she had not the Boldness to hope for any thing: It was in her Sleep that she began to be familiar with Those impure Imaginations; She dreamt often of her Brother, and thought once she enjoyed him.

--- placida resoluta quiete

Sæpe videt quod amat, visa est quoque jungere patri
(11) Ib. ver. 470. Corpus, & erubuit, quamvis sopita jaceret (11).

*'Till gentle Sleep an easy Conquest made,
And in her soft Embrace the Conqueror was laid.
But O! too soon the pleasing Vision fled,
And left her blushing on the conscious Bed.*
Ibid.

She was ashamed of it, though it was but a Dream; but, the next Day, she made many Reflexions upon it, and wisht to have many such Dreams.

Dummodo tale nihil vigilans committere tentem;
Sæpe licet simili redeat sub imagine somnus.
Tectis absit somno, nec absit imitata voluptas.
Proh Venus, & tenera volucer cum matre Cupido!
Gaudia quanta tuli! quam me manifesta libido
Contigit! ut jacui totis resoluta medullis!
Ut meminisse juvat! quamvis brevis illa voluptas, (12) Ib. ver. 479. Noxque fuit præceps, & cæptis invida nostris (12).

*So that no Guilt my waking Thoughts employ,
Let me in Dreams the Transport oft enjoy;
No Witness can, in Sleep, the mimic Bliss destroy.
O Sea-born Goddess, with thy wanton Boy!
Was ever such a charming Scene of Joy!
Such perfect Bliss, such ravishing Delight!
N'er bid before in the kind Shades of Night.
How pleas'd my Heart! in what sweet Raptures lost?
Ev'n Life itself in the soft Combat lost.
How in Remembrance does The Transport last!
Tho' short the Bliss, and soon the Night was past.*
Ibid.

Soon after, she was vexed, that the Quality of Sister forbade her to hope for That of Spouse: She represented to herself the Gods, who had married their own Sisters, and could not believe, that Mortals could enjoy such a Prerogative.

Sunt superis sua jura: quid ad cœlestia ritus
(13) Ib. ver. 507. Exigere humanos, diversaque fœdera tento (13)?

*But what are their Prerogatives above
To the short Liberties of Human Love?*
Ibid.

She must either get rid of her Passion, or die; she is sensible, that, if her Brother had loved her first, he would have been heard very favourably; from whence she concludes, that she must venture to open her Mind to him by Letter, if Modesty will not suffer her to use Words. She takes her Pen, and, after a thousand Agitations of Mind, she declares her Passion. She represents several past Things to her Brother, by which he might have guessed, that she was in love with him; she puts him in mind of certain Sighs, which she had fetched, and of her Custom of embracing him, and of I know not what, that might have made him sensible, that her Kisses were not Those of a Sister.

Esse quidem læsi poterat tibi pectoris index
Et color, & macies, & vultus, & humida sæpe
Lumina, nec caula suspicia mota patenti,
Et crebri amplexus, & quæ, si forte notasti,
Oscula sentiri non esse fororia possent (14).

*Wan Looks, and weeping Eyes, have spoke my Pain
And Sighs discharg'd from my heav'd Heart in vain.
Had I not wish'd my Passion might be seen,
What could such Fondness, and Embraces mean?
Such Kisses too! (O heedless lovely Boy!)
Without a Crime no Sister could enjoy.*
Ibid.

She protests, that she has done all she could, to extinguish This Flame; and that she has only recourse to him, after having tried all other Remedies in vain. She exhorts him to leave the Examination of what is just and unjust to old Folks, and to make use of the Privileges of Youth, in a Thing, of which the greatest Gods have set an Example; Et sequimur magnorum exempla deorum (15), and wherein he need not fear the Opposition of a Father, nor the World's Censure, since their Amorous Commerce may be concealed under the Familiarity, which Decency authorizes between a Brother and a Sister. Lastly, she begs of him to take pity on her, and that he would not be the Cause of her Death.

Nec nos aut durus pater, aut reverentia famæ,
Aut timor impedit: tantum absit causa timendi.
Dulcia fraterno sub nomine furta tegemus.
Est mihi libertas tecum secreta loquendi:
Et damus amplexus, & jungimus oscula coram.
Quantum est quod desit? misereere fatentis amor,
Et non lassuræ, nisi cogeret ultimus ardor:
Neve merere meo subscribi causa sepulchro (16). (16) Ib. ver. 557.

*We gain one blessing from our hated Kin,
Since our Paternal Freedom hides the Sin.
Uncensur'd in each others Arms we lye;
Think then how easy to compleat our Joy,
O pardon, and oblige, a blushing Maid,
Whose Rage the Pride of her vain Sex betray'd;
Ner let my Tomb thus mournfully complain,
Here Byblis lies, by her lov'd Caunus slain.*
Ibid.

It was not long before the Bearer of This Letter brought her an account of Caunus's Indignation. This was a Thunder-Stroke to her, and made her faint away; but, recovering from her Swoon, she uttered such Complaints, as shewed, that she would not be discouraged. She blamed herself for having made use of a Letter; and she fancied, that her Words might have been more effectual, and that, perhaps, the Messenger, having mistaken his Time, had hindred the good Success of her Letter.

Forfitan & missi sit quædam culpa ministri:
Non adiit apte, nec legit idonea, credo, Tempora,

BYBLIS. BYBLOS.

3

lates the Issue of This Matter somewhat differently [C]. Some say, that Byblis was not in love with Caunus, but, on the contrary, that Caunus loved her [D], and could not persuade her to consent to the Gratification of his Desires. They deprive her, a little after, of the Honour of This noble Resistance; They suppose, that she repented of her Hard-heartedness, which had engaged him to leave his Country; and that she ran up and down the World, in quest of this dear Brother; and that, not being able to find him, she hanged herself (d). Others relate This Adventure in such a manner, as neither dishonours Byblis, nor Caunus [E].

(d) See what will be quoted of Conon, in Remark [D].

Tempora, nec petiit horamque, animumque vacan-tem.

(17) Ib. ver. 611.

Hæc nocuere mihi — (17).

Perhaps, my careless Page may be in Fault,
And in a luckless Hour the fatal Message brought.

Ibid.

She revolved in her Mind every Thing, which might excuse her in her new Attempts; so true it is, that the Passions are ingenious to flatter themselves, and that they may be taken for Animals, and even Those sort of Animals, which are most industrious to seek their Food. She resolved to declare herself by word of Mouth; she spoke again and again, without being discouraged at the fruitlessness of her Intreaties. Caunus, tired with refusing, before she was tired with being refused, forsook the Country.

If Ovid had not deserved, in this Place, as much or more, than in a thousand others, the Censure of the Grammarians, who found, that he dwelt too long on Particulars; he would have made a Perfect Description. 'Lascivior aliquanto est Ovidius, inquit Fabius, Lib. 10. Institutionum Cap. 2. & nimis amator ingenii sui; & mox, Ovidii Medea videtur mihi offendere, quantum vir ille præstare potuerit, si ingenio suo temperare quam indulgere, maluisset. Et hic sane fatendum est, lascivire ipsius ingenium, nactum scilicet materiam sequacem & genio suo affinem (18). — Ovid, according to Quintilian Lib. 10. Instit. Cap. 2, is too luxuriant, and too fond of his Genius; and afterwards; Ovid's Medea seems to me to show what the Poet was capable of, had he rather tempered, than indulged, his Genius. And it must be confessed, that his Genius runs riot upon this Occasion, having so copious and suitable a Subject to work upon. Note, that I mention only Part of the Touches, which he gives us.

(18) Farnab. in Ovid. Met. lib. ix. ver. 591. pag. 225.

[C] Antoninus Liberalis relates the Issue of This Matter somewhat differently.] He says, that Byblis, being offered very considerable Matches, despised them all; and that, not being able to resist the violent Passion she had conceived for her Brother, she resolved to cast herself head-long from the Top of a Mountain. She was ready to execute her Design, when the Nymphs, touched with Compassion, hindered her. They did more than That; for they cast her into a deep Sleep, and, whilst she slept, changed her mortal Condition into an immortal One, and called her the Nymph Hamadryad Byblis, and admitted her into their Community. The Water, which ran down the Mountain, from whence she would have cast herself, was called Byblis's Tears (19). Others pretend, that the Fountain, which was called Byblis, was formed where This Maid had wept, and hanged herself (20).

(19) Anton. Lib. Metam. cap. xxx.

(20) Photius, & Parthenius, de Amator. Affect. cap. 11.

[D] Some say ——— that Caunus loved Her.] One of Conon's Narratives, whereof Photius has left us some Extracts, imports, that Caunus, having tried several means, in vain, to obtain the Enjoyment of his Sister Byblis, left his Country; and that it was not known, what became of him. This grieved Byblis so much, that she forsook her Country likewise, and led a vagabond Life, and at last was so afflicted, Πρὸς τὴν ἀρετὴν ἱκέτης ἀνταγορεύσα, Obfrustrator amores animo fracta (21), at the Consideration of the ill Success of Caunus's Love, that she made a Halter of her Girdle, and hanged herself. Caunus, wandering up and down the World, came into Lycia, where the Naid Pranoë told him, that Cupid had revenged him, since Byblis had hanged herself; Τὰ τε συνέχευεν δὲ τῇ Βυβλίδι λέγει, καὶ ὡς ἐχρησάτο τῷ ἐρωτικῷ δίκῳ. That is, according to Andrew Schot's Translation, quæ Byblidē accidisset narrat, utque amore sit vacilla mori. She added, that, if he would marry her, He should reign over That Country. The Proposal was accepted (22). Parthenius relates, I. That Nicænetus had reported, that Caunus, loving his Sister against his Will, left the Country, and undertook long Travels, and that Byblis was much afflicted at her Brother's Absence. II. That most Authors say, that it was She, who loved Caunus, and intreated him not to be cruel to her; and that he abhorred The filthy Proposal, and retired to the Leleges, where he built a City, which was called Caunus; and that Byblis, finding, that her Passion continued, and that she had forced her Brother to leave his Country, was so overwhelmed with Grief, that she hanged herself on a Tree (23). The Scholiast upon Theocritus followed the less common Tradition: ἡς (Βυβλίδος) λέγει, ἡγεσθαι δὲ Καύνοσ, ἀπέλασσε Μίλντων (24). Stephanus Byzantinus followed the other Tradition; that Byblis, being in love with her Brother, strangled herself, because he fled from her (25). Hyginus only says, that the Passion she had conceived for her Brother made her kill herself (26). Eustathius says the same thing (27); and here are two Verses of Ovid agreeable to the same Tradition:

Byblida quid referam vetito quæ fratris amore
Arsit, & est laqueo fortiter ulta nefas (28) ?

Byblis' incestuous Passion need I name,
Who expired in Death the guilty Flame ?

[E] Others relate This Adventure in such a Manner, as neither dishonours Byblis nor Caunus.] Consider the above-mentioned Narrative of Nicænetus: You will only find there, that Caunus, to his great Grief, was in love with his Sister, and absented himself from her; and that Byblis, being very much afflicted at his Absence, desired his Return, and shed many Tears on That Occasion. All these things are compatible with the severest Virtue; for it may be supposed, that Byblis wished only, that her Brother might conquer his Passion, which kept him out of his Country. To feel a criminal Passion, and to oppose it so far, as to retire from the Object, which is loved against one's Will, is no crime. It is a Thing as involuntary as Pain; It is not to be answered for, unless it be consented to; and take notice, that Nicænetus praises Caunus for having always loved Justice. Καὶνὸν ἐτίμησεν ἀεὶ δικαίοντα. Democritus (29). She brought forth Caunus, who ever loved Justice, (21) Photius, Biblioth. Codicē 186. pag. 423. de Cononis Narrat. ii.

(22) Id. ibid.

(23) Parthen. de Amatoris Affectionibus, cap. 11.

(24) Schol. Theocriti ad Idyll. viii.

(25) Steph. Byzantini. in Καύνοσ ex Edit. Berkelii.

(26) Hygin. cap. 243. pag. 299.

(27) Eustath. in Dionys. Perieget. ver. 533.

(28) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. i. v. 283.

(29) Parthen. ubi supra.

BYBLOS, a maritime Town of Phœnicia, between Tripoli, and Berytus, was situated on a Hill, and was the ancientest Town in the World (a), if we may believe some Authors (b), who say, that it was built by Saturn, Son of Heaven and Earth. Malcander, and his Wife Astarte, who reigned there, gave Isis a good Reception, when she went thither, to seek the Body of Osiris, which the Waves of the Sea had cast on That Shore (c). The Grammarians have grounded on This Journey one of their Etymological Observations [A]. Some Inhabitants of

(a) Stephan Byzant. in Βυβλος.

(b) Sanchoni. apud Eusebium Prepar. Evang. lib. i. cap. 10. pag. 37.

(c) Plutarch. de Iside & Osiride. pag. 357.

[A] The Grammarians have grounded on this Journey of Isis to Byblos one of their Etymological

Observations.] Let us remark, in the first place, that the Word Βύβλος signifies the Plant, which supplied

Byblos reported, that Osiris was buried in Their City, and that it was in honour of Him, that They practised the Ceremonies, which were thought to be used in honour of Adonis (d). The City of Gebel, or Gobel, mentioned in the ninth Verse of the Twenty seventh Chapter of Ezekiel, was That of Byblos, if we may believe St Jerom (e), which may be confirmed by the Translation of the LXX. It is also thought, that the Byblians were employed, by Hiram, King of Tyre, to prepare the Materials for the Temple of Solomon (f). They shook off the Yoke of the Tyrians, and set up a distinct Kingdom. They were afterwards Tributaries to the Kings of Persia [B]. This City, having been subdued by Alexander, remained subject to the Ptolomy's, Kings of Egypt, 'till Antiochus the Great had taken Phœnicia from them, which he made a Province of the Kingdom of Syria, in the third Year of the CXLth Olympiad, and the CCCCXXXVlth of Rome (g). The Civil-Wars having overthrown This Kingdom, Tigranes, King of Armenia, made himself Master of the Upper Syria; and then there arose a Tyrant, who established his Authority in Byblos. He was beheaded by Pompey's Order (b). Strabo, in saying This, observes, that Byblos, the Royal Seat of Cinyras, was consecrated to Adonis [C]. The Goddess Venus was particularly honoured there [D]. Isis had a Temple there also (i). Byblos was assigned to the Maritime Phœnicia, in the Division, which was made of the Provinces, under the Christian Emperors. It's Bishops appeared in the first Council of Constantinople, and in That of Chalcedon. The Genoese delivered it from the Dominion of the Saracens, in the Year 1106; but it fell again under the Yoke of the Infidels, after the Victory, which Saladin obtained over the Christians, in the Year 1187 (k). There was a very strong City in Egypt, which was called BYBLOS. This we learn from the Extracts, which Photius made out of Ctesias (l). See also the Dictionary of Stephanus Byzantinus.

(d) Lucian, de Dea Syria, pag. 879. Tom. II.

(e) Hieron. de locis Hebraicis.

(f) 1 Kings v. 18.

(g) See the fifth Book of Polybius.

(b) Strabo, lib. 16. pag. 521.

(i) Plut. ubi sup.

(k) See Father Noris de Epochis Syromacedonum. Differt. iv. cap. ult. pag. 466, & seq.

(l) Phot. cap. 72. p. 120, 125.

supplied the Matter, of which Paper was made; and let us relate next, what the Etymologists say of it. They affirm, that Byblos was so called, because it was the Place, where Isis, lamenting Osiris, laid down her Diadem, which was made of Paper (1). Others will have it, that This Name proceeds from hence, that Paper, in That City, might be preserved for any length of time, without being spoiled in the least (2). Consult Stephanus Byzantinus, and the Author of the great Etymologicon.

[B] The Byblians were Tributaries to the Kings of Persia. Arrian relates, that Enulus, King of the Byblians, served, with his Ships, in Darius's Fleet; but, understanding, that Byblos had capitulated with Alexander, he forsook the Persian Party, and went, with his Ships, to the Macedonian Fleet (3).

[C] Strabo — remarks, that Byblos, the Royal Seat of Cinyras, was consecrated to Adonis. I shall set down The Passage of Strabo, to shew the Carelessness of the Ancients in their Writings. 'Η μὲν ἐν Βύβλῳ, τὸ τῷ Κινύρῳ βασιλεῖον, ἱερὰ ἐστὶ τῷ Ἀδωνιδῷ· ἢ τυχόν τι μὲν πλεονάζει. Πιομνήσις πελεκίσας ἐκεῖνον (4). That is to say; Byblos, the Residence of King Cinyras, is consecrated to Adonis. Pompey delivered it from Tyranny, by ordering his Head to be cut off. This is the most natural Sense of The Words. Cinyras had established the Seat of his Tyranny at Byblos; but Pompey caused his Head to be cut off; and by that means restored The City to it's Liberty. Now it is improbable, that Strabo had This Thought, and, if it was his Meaning, he would be guilty of extreme Carelessness, since he would, of a sudden, produce a Tyrant, called Cinyras, and leave us, without saying any Thing of Him. He was not obliged to be more prolix, if it be supposed, that he speaks of the ancient Cinyras, the Father of Adonis: for That Name was sufficiently known. I believe he means Him; and, if so, what shall we do with his ἐκεῖνον? What can we refer it to? Observe, that his Latin Translator has ill rendered the ἱερὰ ἐστὶ Ἀδωνιδῷ, by, in qua sunt Adonidis templa. Pinedo has taken notice of This Fault (5). Let us observe a small Oversight of Father Noris: Adonis, says he (6), filius fuerat Cynerae (7) apud Byblum regis, ut ex Plutarcho & Ovidio prænotavi. — Adonis was the Son of Cinyras, King of Byblos, as I have before observed from Plutarch and Ovid. Now it is certain, that he had not alledged Plutarch; but Strabo, concerning This; and that Ovid, whom he had cited, does not say, that the Father of Adonis was King of Byblos, nor Husband of the Mother of That Adonis. He supposes, that This Mother was the Daughter of Adonis's Father, which was the general Tradition. Nevertheless the Author expresses himself in this Manner. Cyneras fuit & vetustis Bybli regibus, qui ex Zmyrna conjuge Adonim puerum formosissimum suscepit (8). — Cinyras was one of the ancient Kings of Byblos, who had, by his Wife Zmyrna, the most beautiful Youth, Adonis.

[D] Venus was particularly honoured there.] She had a Temple there, wherein the Ceremonies of the Worship of Adonis were performed. Lucian speaks of it as an Eye-witness: Εἶδον δὲ καὶ ἐν Βύβλῳ μύρα ἱερὸν Ἀφροδίτης Βυβλίου. Ἐν τῷ, καὶ τὰ ἑργία ἐς Ἀδωνὶν ἐπιστράξαν (9). Vidi etiam Bybli magnum Byblie Veneris templum, in quo ritus quosdam sacros in Adonidem peragunt. He mentions also another Temple of Venus, consecrated by Cinyras, on Mount Libanus, a Day's Journey from Byblos (10). He went to see it. Father Noris thinks, that, perhaps, it is the same Temple, which Constantine caused to be demolished (11), and which was consecrated to Venus Aphacitis, near Mount Libanus, and the River Adonis (12). I think This ought not to be questioned, since Eusebius observes, that The Temple of That Venus stood upon Mount Libanus. The Surname of Aphacitis was taken from the Place where That Temple was built, as Zosimus observes (13); and it is probable, that Macrobius speaks of This Venus, in the Twenty first Chapter of the first Book of the Saturnalia, and not of Venus Aribitis, as it is in the Editions (14). What he says relates to the Worship of Venus and Adonis among the Assyrians; and he tells us, that the Statue of That Venus was on Mount Libanus. Eusebius observes, that many infamous Things between Men and Men, and Men and Women, were committed in the Temple, which Constantine caused to be destroyed (15); but Sozomen says only, that the Heathens affirmed, that, on a certain Day of the Year, the Efficacy of the Invocations caused a Fire, in the Form of a Star, to descend from the Top of Mount Libanus, which fell into the neighbouring River. They pretended, that This Fire was Venus herself, whom they called Urania (16).

(9) Lucian, de Dea Syria, pag. 878. Tom. II.

(10) Id. ibid. pag. 880, 881.

(11) Euseb. de vita Constant. lib. iii. cap. 5c. Sozomen. lib. ii. cap. 5.

(12) Noris de Epoch. Syro-Maced. Differt. iv. pag. 467.

(13) Zosim. Hist. lib. i.

(14) See Seldenus, de Diis Syris Synt. ii. cap. 3. pag. 204.

(15) Euseb. ubi supra.

(16) Sozom. lib. iii. cap. 5.

BIGOIS, a Nymph, who had written, in Tuscan, a Book concerning the Art of interpreting Lightenings. This Book was kept at Rome, in the Temple of Apollo, with some others of That Nature (a).

(a) Servius in Aeneid. lib. vi. ver. 72.

BIGOT (EMERIC), one of the most learned, and most honest Men, of the XVIIth Century, was of Roan (a), and of a most illustrious Family of the Long-Robe [A]. He was born in the Year 1626 (b). The Love of Learning diverted him from public Employments; he applied himself solely to Books, and Sciences: He wonderfully increased the Library, which his Father had left him [B]. Once a Week an Assembly was held at his House, for learned Conferences. He corresponded by Letter with a great many learned Persons: His Advice and his Abilities were useful to many Authors; and he endeavoured to promote The Good of the Commonwealth of Learning. He published but one Book [C]; but it is probable he would have published more, if he had lived long enough to finish them. Mr Menage within the Kingdom, and Nicolas Heinsius in a Foreign Country, were his two most intimate Friends [D]. He had contracted none of the Defects, which Learning draws after it: He was modest, and an Enemy to Contests. It may be said in general, that he was one of the best Men in the World [E]. He died at Roan, the eighteenth of December, 1689, being about Sixty four Years of Age.

(a) Histoire des Ouvrages des Savans, Febr.
1690, pag. 266,
267.

(b) Ibid.

(1) Febr. 1690,
pag. 266, 267.

* Prefatus au
Mortier, scellé from a kind of Cap which is the Mark of their Dignity.

(2) The Goth
Epigram of the 2d Book of Palquier is addressed
ad Edmericum Bigotum Tiber-menis in Senato Rotomagen-si Presidem.

(3) Taken from Mr le Labou-reur's Additions to the Memoirs of Cassinow,
Tom. I. p. 884
& seq.

(4) In the foregoing Remark.

(5) He should have said Som-menil. Proper Names are bravely disguised
in Father Jacob's Works.

[A] He was of a most illustrious Family of the Long-Robe. According to the fine Elogy, which Mr de Beauval consecrated to him, in his History of the Works of the Learned (1), he was the Son of the Dean of the Court of Aids, and of a Daughter of Mr Groulard, first President in the Parliament of Normandy; and he reckoned, among his Ancestors, two Presidents of Sovereign Courts, one Advocate-General, and six Counsellors in the Parliament. Let us unfold this a little, according to the Particulars, which Mr le Laboureur supplies us with. LAWRENCE BIGOT, Lord of Tibermenil, was Advocate-General in the Parliament, when the City was taken from the Protestants, in the Year 1562. He was a zealous Catholic, and contributed greatly to the hanging many People at Roan. The Huguenot Historians have complained of his Rigour. He died the thirteenth of July, 1570. He was the Son of ANTONY BIGOT, Lieutenant-General to the Bayliff of Roan, and Father of HEMERY BIGOT, Lord of Tibermenil, who had the Reverfion of his Father's Place, with a Dispensation of Age, by a Patent of the first of November 1551, registered in Parliament the Twenty first of August, 1552; and he exercised it, from the Year 1570, to the Year 1578, when he was raised to the Dignity of President in the same Parliament. He had opposed, in the same Year, the Motion made to the States of Blois for excluding the King of Navarre from the Succession to the Crown of France, as Tuannus observes in the Sixty third Book of his History. Several of his Letters have been printed with Those of Stephen Pasquier (2). He left no Children. This Family was continued by JOHN and STEPHEN BIGOT, Brothers of the Advocate-General. I omit the Posterity of John Bigot; as for Stephen, he had twelve Sons, and six Daughters. LAWRENCE BIGOT, Sieur de la Turgerie, one of his Sons, was the Father of STEPHEN BIGOT, Counsellor in the Court of Aids at Roan, who transmitted his Office to his Son WILLIAM BIGOT, Father of WILLIAM BIGOT, Counsellor in the Parliament of Roan. JOHN BIGOT, another Son of Stephen, was Lieutenant to the Bayliff of Roan, and had no other Heir but his Son JOHN BIGOT, Sieur de Sommenil, Counsellor in the Court of Aids at Roan, who collected, in his large Library, the Originals of the History of the Province of Normandy, and who had nineteen Children by his Wife Barbara Groulard, Daughter of Claudius, First President in the Parliament of Roan; among others, JOHN, Sieur de Sommenil, Counsellor in the Parliament of Normandy, NICOLAS Sieur de Cleuville, who succeeded his Father in his Office, and HEMERY BIGOT (3), who makes the Subject of This Article.

[B] He increased the Library, which his Father had left him. I have already (4) said something concerning This Library of Mr Bigot, the Father, in quoting Mr le Laboureur; but here is an Author, who speaks more amply of it. "John Bigot, Elq; Sieur de Sommenil (5), and Cleuville, Dean of the Counsellors of the Court of Aids of Normandy, understands Books very well, of which he has made a magnificent Library, consisting of above Six thousand Volumes, among which there are above Five hundred very good and rare Manuscripts, which he communicates freely to those, who want them for the Public; for which he will ever deserve Praise (6)."

[C] He published but one Book. It is the Life of St Chrysostom, composed by Palladius. Neither Fronto Ducaeus, nor Sir Henry Savil, could ever find the Greek Text of this Work; there was only a Latin Translation of it, composed by Ambrosius Camaldulensis. Mr Bigot found the Greek at Florence in the Great Duke's Library, and published it at Paris, in the Year 1680, with the Latin Translation he had made of it, and some other Treatises. The Journal des Savans gave a particular Account of it; but without saying any thing concerning a Letter of St Chrysostom to the Monk Casarius (7). Consult the Journalists of Holland, who have often mentioned it (8). Here are the Words of one of them, who mentioned it last of all: "Mr Bigot's Design was to add the Epistle to Casarius, which he had found in a Library at Florence, to the Life of St Chrysostom; but it appeared to express against Transubstantiation, that the Examiners obliged him to suppress it (9)."

[D] Mr Menage was one of his intimate Friends. Of all the Passages of the Menagiana, in which Mr Bigot is mentioned, I shall only copy That of the Seventy fifth Page. "If I was forty Years of Age, I should weep bitterly for Mr Bigot's Death; but I am so overwhelmed with my own Evils, that I can no longer be sensible of Those of others. I am as unhappy as Priam, who survived his whole Family. Mr Bigot lodged at my House, Thirty five Years ago, every time he came from Roan to Paris, and we never had any Difference. He was singular in one Thing: as he spoke but little, he never told me any thing he designed to do, notwithstanding the Intimacy, which was between us; inasmuch, that, when he went to Rome, he said nothing of it to me till a Day or two before he set out. When he took his leave of me, he only asked me, if I had any Commands for him. I lose much by his Death. He wrote to me, not long before, that, for my sake, he was going to read all the old French Poets, and that he would impart to me all that he should find proper for my Origin of the French Tongue. The Library, which he left, is worth at least Forty thousand Livres. He was a Man of great Learning; and the Learned of Holland expected his Letters as so many Decisions of the Difficulties they proposed to him. It was a beautiful Friendship, which lasted thus long between These two great Men without any Interruption. The Poet, who said, that These kind of Friendships are happy (10), might with as much reason have said, that they are rare. Mr Menage dedicated his Anti-Baillet to Mr Bigot.

[E] He was one of the best Men in the World. I cannot better comment on this Text, than by the Words of Mr de Beauval. "There never was a more sincere or faithful Friend, says he (11); and he owned himself, that it was a Praise, which affected him most. He was a Man of an Integrity not common in this unhappy Age, and such an Enemy to Ostentation, that his Modesty went as far as his Simplicity of Manners. His peaceful and calm Temper made him incapable of the Noise and Quarrels, which Jealousy creates among learned Men."

(6) Father Jacob in his Treatise of Libraries, pag. 681. printed in 1644.

(7) Journal des Savans, March 1680. pag. 103. Edit. of Amst. You will find the following Words there in praise of the Author.

Mr Bigot, famous for his noble Library, and who has been a long time an Honour to Learning at Roan.

(8) Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lett. June 1635. Art. III. pag. 605. June 1686. Art. VII. pag. 685, & alibi.

(9) Hist. des Ouvrages des Savans, Febr. 1690, pag. 267.

(10) Felices ter & amplius, Quos irrupta tenet copula: nec malis Divulsus querimoniis Suprema citius solvet amor die. Horat. Od. 13. l. 1. The Epistle Rari would make as true a Sense as the Epitaph Felices.

(11) Hist. des Ouvrages des Savans, ubi supra.

[F] He

(c) Paris Gazette,
Dec. 24. 1689.

Age (c). He has shewed, by his Will, that he died with the same Affection for the Good of Learning, which he had during his Life [F].

[F] He shewed by his Will, that he died with the same Affection for Learning, which he had during his Life. He has entailed his Library upon his Family, to avoid the dividing of it, and intrusted Mr Bigot of Monville, Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris, with the care of it, having left a considerable Legacy to increase it every Year (12).

(12) Ibid.

(a) La Croix du
Maine, pag. 141.

BIGOT (WILLIAM), born at Laval, in the Country of Maine (a), a Physician, and a Philosopher, was a learned Man in the Reign of Francis I. It was believed, that the learned Peter Castellani conceived some Jealousy against him, and that, for fear his Glory should be eclipsed, he hindered him from having any access to the King. Others say it was a Calumny, which Melanchthon believed too rashly [A]. It is certain, that the means, which, it is said, Castellani made use of, to render William Bigot odious to their Common Master, is very improbable [B]. The Story concerning it in the Menagiana, is not exact [C]. Bigot must have [A] It was a Calumny, which Melanchthon believed too rashly. We have two things to do; we must shew what Melanchthon published, and what was said against him on That Subject. These are Melanchthon's Words: 'Duo sunt in Gallia viri excellentes docti, Castellanus, & Bigotius. Et quia Castellani disputationes crebro à Rege audiuntur, hortatur quispiam ex proceribus ut Bigotius etiam audiretur. Interrogat Rex in quo doctrinæ genere verferetur. Cumque alii honorifico testimonio eum ornarent, tandem Castellanus, qui augeri ejus opinionem nolebat, interpellans, Quid, inquit, tantopere prædicatis? Est Aristotelicus. Rex interrogat qualis sit ea descriptio. Dicam, inquit Castellanus. Aristoteles desoxozes/lav adfirmat meliorem statum esse quam regnum. Hac voce apud Regem sciebat se omnem auctoritatem & Aristoteli & ejus studiosis detraxisse. Cumque Rex interrogaret an hoc scripserit Aristoteles, & ceteri id adfirmarent, audivissetque defendere Bigotium Aristotelicas sententias, delirare Aristotelem inquit, & negavit se defensionem harum ineptiarum auditorum esse. Facile vicit Castellanus tali iudice (1). — There are, in France, two very learned Men, Castellani and Bigot. And, as the King is frequently present at the Disputations of Castellani, some one of his Courtiers advises him to hear Bigot. The King asks, in what kind of Learning he is conversant. And, when others give him an honourable Testimony, Castellani, at length, who was unwilling his Fame should increase, interposing, says, why this a-do about Bigot? He is an Aristotelian. The King enquires what That Description means. I will inform your Majesty, says Castellani. Aristoteles affirms an Aristocracy to be better than a Monarchy. He knew, that, by this Declaration, Aristoteles, and his Followers, would lose all their Credit with the King. And the King, having asked, whether Aristoteles wrote so, and others affirming the same thing, and hearing that Bigot maintained the Aristotelian Doctrines, declared that Aristoteles was mad, and that he would never hear one, who defended these Follies. Castellani easily gained his Cause before such a Judge. The Author of Castellani's Life refutes this with some Force. What he says deserves to be set down at length. A Bigotio Gorgiam quendam in vicis & quadri-vitiis proficiente ita privatim & publicè lacessitus convitiisque appetitus fuerat, & scripto apud exteros traductus, ut meritò eum odio prosequi posset veredetur. Nam & Philippum Melanchthonem calumniis ita illi infestum reddiderat, ut is nimium credulus & facilis ea de ipso scriberet quæ nos, propter publicam causam, non sine gemitu legere poteramus. Nempe Castellani ex eo calumniatorum esse genere qui, invidia concitati, mendaciis confictis bonas causas apud Reges oppugnant & deteriores redderent. Argumento esse Bigotium, quem ille Philosophia Aristotelica præstantem, ne sibi & suæ gratiæ obesset, eum odiosum Regi reddere meditaretur. Aristotelem, quod laudato paucorum & populi principatu unius imperium improbasset, apud Regem graviter criminatus esset. Quod totum cum esset vanissimum, & à Castellano Aristotelem amante & admirante alienissimum, nec minus improbe à Bigotio confictum quam à Melanchthone leviter literis mandatum, Bigotium tamen postea in gratiam receptum Regi commendavit, atque

'illi quæ à Rege petebat apud Nemaufenses impetravit (2). — He was so attacked, and calumniated, both publickly and privately, and so exposed in writing to Foreigners, by Bigot, who set up for another Gorgias in Towns and Highways, that he seems to have had some Reason for the hatred he bore him. For he had so exasperated Philip Melanchthon against him, by his Calumnies, that the latter, too credulous and easy of Belief, wrote such Things concerning him, as, for the sake of the Public, I could not read without Grief: To wit, that Castellani was one of those Calumniators, who, excited by Envy, prejudice Persons in the Favour of their Prince; that Bigot was an Instance of it: whom he endeavoured to render odious to the King, on account of his being an Aristotelian, that the other's Credit might not ruin his Interest at Court. He brought an heavy Accusation against Aristotle, before the King, for preferring an Aristocracy, or Democracy, to a Monarchy. Which being all false, and far from Castellani, who was a Lover and Admirer of Aristotle, and no less unreasonably invented by Bigot, than rashly committed to writing by Melanchthon, yet, receiving Bigot into favour, he recommended him to the King, and obtained for him of the King, what he wished for at Nimes. It appears from these Words, I. That Bigot, in Imitation of the ancient Sophists, and namely of Gorgias, declaimed, and read Lectures, every where. II. That he had spoken ill of Castellani, both in private and public. III. That he made his Peace with Castellani; and that, by the Recommendation of this reconciled Enemy, he obtained, from Francis I, what he wished for at Nimes.

[B] The means, which it is said Castellani made use of — is very improbable. I shall not repeat Peter Galland's Remarks against Melanchthon's Narrative, but make some, which he has not made: I. It is no ways likely, that Francis I enquired what an Aristotelian Philosopher was? He was too knowing a Prince, and took too much care to have an exact Account of the State of the University of Paris; in a word, he had had too many Conversations with learned Men, to be ignorant of Aristotle's Name, and what a Follower of Aristotle was. The Question, which he is said to have asked, would be likely, notwithstanding That Prince's Learning, if to be a Peripatetic had been a rare and a new thing in France; but, as there was almost no body in the Philosophical Chairs, who did not make an open Profession of Aristotle's Philosophy; nothing is more unlikely, than to suppose, that That Prince was so surprised with an Idea of Novelty at the hearing the Name of an Aristotelian Philosopher, as immediately to require an Explication of these Terms. II. The flourishing State of the Peripatetic Sect at that time, and the great Respect, which was paid to Aristotle, do not permit us to believe, that Castellani thought he was able to wound the Reputation of a Rival by calling him a Peripatetic. It would have been taking a wrong way to weaken the Praises, which were bestowed upon Bigot in the Presence of Francis I. III. The Professors of Philosophy in the Universities of France do not explain Politics; and it would have been ridiculous in those times to have said; I will explain to you what an Aristotelian Philosopher have been a great Philosopher, since he was very much praised by Julius Cæsar Scaliger (b). He published some Treatises, both in Verse and in Prose [D]. It is a Mistake to say, that Calvin reproached him with holding the Truth in Unrighteousness [E].

(2) Petrus Gallandius in vita Petri Castellani, n. 74. pag. 130, 131.

(1) Melanchthon in responsione contra Clerum Coloniensem. Editio, Anno 1543.

Bongars had never heard of our William Bigot; for, in a Letter, which he wrote the sixth of August, 1596, he desired to be informed, who he was [F].

I have several curious Particulars to add to this Article. Our William Bigot was Son of JOHN BIGOT, and was born towards the end of the Month of June, 1502; for he says, in a Letter, dated at Basil, the Twenty seventh of December, 1536, that he left France at the Age of Twenty eight Years, and that it is six Years and a half since he was banished his Country. He was, therefore, Thirty four Years and a half, when he wrote this Letter. Few Authors make such Complaints of their Enemies, as this Philosopher does in his Works. We perpetually meet with some apologetical or antilogical Letters, designed to refute the Calumnies of his Adversaries. This obliges him to let us into many Particulars of his Life [G], some of which even sopber is: He is one, who prefers Common-wealths before Monarchies. IV. It is most certain, that Francis I protected Aristotle against Ramus. The Author of Castellan's Life says, that That Prince had like to have condemned this Rebel against Aristotle to the Gallies (3). So that there is reason to think, that Melanchthon did not relate the Matter as he should have done. He was mis-informed, and suffered himself to be pre-possessed without hearing both Parties. Nevertheless, his Words have gained Credit, and I find no Body, who speaks of our Bigot, without taking for certain what Melanchthon published of him. So much Power the Stars of some Men have to immortalize any Story, whether it be true, or false; agreeable, or contrary, to all Appearances!

Naudé was in the common Error: See here what he says: 'Erasmus might have appeared among the Learned Men, whom Francis I drew after him by the Chains of his Liberality — if he would have accepted the Principality of his Royal College, or Canonship of Fifteen thousand Livres Revenue, which he offered him several times; and likewise William Bigot, who was the first Philosopher of his time, if his High Almoner, the Bishop of Macon, had not diverted him from the Desire he had to have him near his Person †, that he might not have a Learned Censurer of the Discourses he made every Day at the King's Table (4).'

[C] The Story inserted in the Menagiana is not exact. This is the Story: 'Peter Galland was envied, and his Enemies would have sent for one, whose Name was Bigot, a great Aristotelian Philosopher, from Normandy, to supplant him. Francis I, who had been told of him, asked Peter Castellan, what he was? Peter Castellan answered, that he was a Philosopher, who followed Aristotle's Opinions. And what are Aristotle's Opinions, added Francis I? Sir, replied Peter Castellan, Aristotle prefers Common-wealths to Monarchical States. This made such an Impression on the King's Mind, that he would hear no more of This Mr Bigot. Thus Peter Castellan served his Friend very dexterously (5).'

I could make some Objections against This Account. I. Our William Bigot was not a Norman, but a Manceau. II. His Ability in the Peripatetic Philosophy could not supplant Peter Galland, who only taught Philosophy. III. Melanchthon, who ought to pass for an Authentic Writer, as to this matter, since he was the first, who related it, does not say, that The Business was to supplant any Professor of Paris: He says, that They would have introduced Bigot to Francis I; that That Monarch, who had heard Peter Castellan discourse so often, might also hear the Discourses of This William Bigot. Observe well, that, when the only Author, who speaks of any Fact, commits a Mistake, his Narrative cannot be altered without a new Error. I except the true Discovery of the Fact. IV. We learn from the Life of Castellan, that, at his Recommendation, Francis I granted This Bigot a thing, which he desired. How can it be said, then, that That Prince would hear no more of This Mr Bigot?

[D] He published some Treatises both in Verse and Prose. Some of his French Verses were printed with the Poems of Charles de Sainte Marthe, Uncle of Scavola (6). Gesner mentions a Collection of Poems, Gulielmi Bigotii Lavallensis, printed at Basil, in the Year 1536 (7). He adds, It is seven Years, since I saw the Author at Basil. Among other Pieces in That Collection, there was, Catoptron ad emendationem juventutis factum carmen: epithalamium quoddam, & epigramma in Empiricum (8). Du Verdier Vau-Privas mentions This Title: Gulielmi Bigotii Lavallensis Christianæ philosophiæ prælium, opus cum aliorum tum hominis substantiam luculentis expromens rationibus; Tolosæ apud Guidonem Boudevilleum 1549 (9). Probably Julius Cæsar Scaliger hinted at This Book, when he said: 'Sic videmus ejusdem rei diversas esse notiones: quas barbare quidem barbaris, sed non inscite apud doctos, formalitates appellabamus. Hæc quidem risui sunt atque contemptui novis Lucianis atque Diagoris culinariis: sed non neglecta sunt à maximo Philosopho Gulielmo Bigotio, qui quidem pene solus hoc summum jus hodie tuetur recondita philosophia (10). — Thus we see there are different Notions of the same thing, to which we gave the Appellation of Formalities; a Term, barbarous to Barbarians, but with the Learned not improper. These appear indeed ridiculous and contemptible to our Modern Lucians, and Kitchen Diagoras's; but they are not neglected by the great Philosopher William Bigot, the only one, at present, who maintains this supreme Justice in the Mysteries of Philosophy.'

[E] It is a Mistake to say, that Calvin reproached him with holding the Truth in Unrighteousness. Here is what we find in the Notes of a very Learned Man on Castellan's Life. 'Ad quem (Bigotium) extat epistola Joannis Calvini data IV Kal. Januarii MDLVII. in qua eum increpat quod à superstitionibus, id est, à professione fidei Romanæ non recederet. — There is extant a Letter of John Calvin to Bigot, in which he blames him for not departing from Superstition, that is, from the Profession of the Romish Faith.' This Letter of Calvin is the Two hundred forty sixth (11), it is written to one Peter Bigot, who did not give Glory to God by professing the Truth. Calvin had formerly lodged at his House. The Name of Castellan's Adversary was William Bigot: It is not therefore He, to whom Calvin wrote.

[F] Bongars desired to be informed, who he was. He asked this question, after he had read the Letter, which Joachim Camerarius had written to This William Bigot. It is at the end of the third Book of the second Volume of Joachim's Letters. 'Stibarum quis fuerit, nisi molestum est, explica, & quis Vilelmus Bigotius Gallus, ad quem extat epistola sub finem tertii libri (12). — Inform me, if it be no trouble to you, who Stibarum is, and who William Bigot the Frenchman, to whom there is extant an Epistle, about the end of the third Book.'

[G] The Disputes, which he had — obliged him to let us into many Particulars of his Life. He was not quite a Year old, when his Nurse died of the Plague. Observe, by the way, that they were obliged to procure him a Nurse out of the Country, no Woman of the Town being willing to bring him up, because he was born with two Teeth. The Death of his Nurse, preceded by That of thirteen other Persons of the same Family, was the beginning of our Bigot's Misfortunes. Not one of the Neighbours would undertake the Care

(b) See the End of Remark [D].

(6) La Croix du Maine, pag. 141.

(7) Gesner, in Biblioth. p. 287.

(8) Ibid.

(9) In Supplemento Epitome Gesnerianæ.

(10) Jul. Cæsar. Scalig. Exercit. 307. n. 15. pag. 946; ad Cardan.

(11) In Editione 3. Hanov. 1597.

(12) Bongars, Epist. 130. ad Camerari. pag. 488. Edit. Hag. 1695.

(3) Galland, ubi supra. n. 47. pag. 75.

* Erasmi. Epist. ad Christoph. Messiam. item ad Goclenium, item ad Joan. Hond.

† Richer. in axiomat. Polit.

(4) Naudé Ad. dit. to the Hist. of Louis XI. pag. 369. 370.

(5) Menagiana, pag. 147.

(c) See the Remarks of the Author CARDAN, and particularly Remark [T]. even favour of the Ingenuity of Cardan (c), so injudiciously are they advanced (d). He (d) Citat. (13). informs us, among other things, that his Wife's Gallant was punished just as (e) Between Citations (13) and (14). Abelard was. See, below, Remark [G] (e).

of him, or even inform his Relations of it; in a word, he was exposed without pity under a Hedge by the Side of a great Road. His own Father, drawn that way by other particular Affairs, found him in this Condition. As he grew up, his Education was intrusted with Persons, who did not take all the necessary care of it; so that he no sooner withdrew himself from their Discipline, than he plunged into Debauchery. Falling into a Scrape at Antwerp, he was obliged to retire into the Country. This Retreat was of no small Service to him; It brought him back to a Relish for Study. He applied himself to Greek, which he acquired without a Master, and in a very short Time. The other Sciences cost him no more Time, or Pains; he affirms, that he was obliged to his First Masters only for a little Latin; and as for Philosophy, Astronomy, Astrology, Medicine, &c. he was αὐτοδιδάκτωρ, Self-taught. After having passed some Time in this Retreat, he resolved to go into Germany, that he might be more at Liberty. He took this Journey in Company with Mr du Bellai de Langey, who was sent by the King to the German Princes, to inform them of his Majesty's Pretensions; which Negotiation was carried on with great Secrecy; and Mr du Langey was to appear in some Courts only in the Habit of a Jewel-Merchant. Our Bigot came to Tubingen, and was there admitted Professor of Philosophy. Happening to quarrel with the other Members of the University, who were displeased at his endeavouring to refute the Philosophical System of Melancthon, he was obliged to retire to Basil, in 1536, where he continued for some time. At last, he returned to France, and found a sure Protection in Mess. du Bellai, his Patrons. Budæus would have kept him at Paris; and procured him the stipendium regium Philosophi; but Castellan prevented it. Read the following Account of this Matter by one William Figulus, who wrote Notes on a Poem of Bigot's to JESUS CHRIST, which I shall take notice of hereafter. Budæus Bigotium, Germania regressum, rogavit stipendium regium Philosophi præferret Aulæ, quam sequi parabat; quo de Bigotius vicissim egit cum Cardinale Bellai: Mecænate suo, id ut ferret: sed longe aberat ab illo sibi desiderato scopo Bigotius, cum id apud Franciscum Regem tacita invidia & oblectatione quidam Aulicus interrupisset, non obscuriore certe Academiz Parisiensis quam Bigotii damno. Qui fit autem is, in responsione Melancthonis ad Colonienfes invenies: id nunc Bigotius insinuat, & id quidem miris fatis, cum eo invito ea invita claudatur (13). — Budæus desired Bigot, who was come back from Germany, that he would prefer the Royal Stipend of a Philosopher to the Court, which he was preparing to follow; and Bigot, in his Turn, asked permission to do so of his Patron the Cardinal du Bellai: but Bigot was far from gaining this favourite Point, being defeated in it by a certain Courtier, who, through envy, misrepresented him to King Francis, not less to the Loss of the University of Paris, than that of Bigot himself. Who this Courtier was, you will find in Melancthon's Answer to those of Cologne. Bigot now insinuates this, and indeed by a strange Fate, since, against his Will, it is unwillingly shut up. — Does he mean the Post of Regius Professor of Philosophy? However it be, Bigot, being disappointed, turned his Thoughts to other Employments. He was offered a Chair in the University of Padua, with a good Salary: he refused it, and chose to go Nismes, whither he was invited to regulate the University, which one Baduellus had there begun. The Zeal, which he shewed in defending the pretended Privileges of this University, raised him many Enemies, who recalled Baduellus. It was then a Kind of War between the two Masters, and their Scholars. Bigot had some Arrests of the Parliament of Toulouse, confirming the Conventions he had made with the Town. He even came to Paris; and, by the means of his Friends, and particularly Cardinal du Bellai, he obtained Letters from the King, and other Persons of the Court, addressed to the Governor, and Principal Men, of Nismes: but, thinking to enjoy a certain Tranquillity in that Town, and having for that purpose sold all he could of his Patrimony at Laval, he went to Toulouse, where he found his Affairs in a Situation very different from what he expected. His Wife, by whom he had already had two Daughters, not keeping her matrimonial Faith, and having yielded to the Caresses of a certain Compeer of hers, a Player on Instruments, who dwelt at Bigot's House, it happened, that the Adulterer, whose name was Petrus Fontanus, met with the Punishment of Abelard; in a word, he lost the true Tokens of his Manhood: but, what added to the Misfortune of our poor Husband, was, it's being discovered, that the principal Actor in this Tragedy was one Antonius Verdanus, an old Servant of Bigot's. This was enough for the Enemies of Bigot; and the Opportunity appeared too favourable, of plunging him into Difficulties, for them to let it slip. His Wife was carried off. He was accused of the Crime of Mutilation, and several others, all which demanded his Head. He delivered himself up to Imprisonment too rashly, and continued a long time in Confinement. He even expected to lose his Head, so great was the Power of his Enemies, and such malicious Turns did they give to all his Actions. At last, an extraordinary Session, which was held at Puy in Velay, delivered him from his Prison, but not from the Misery, to which this Affair had reduced him; which yet was not over, with respect to Civil Proceedings, in 1549, when he published his Christiane Philosophie Prædium. Tired with so many Attacks, he says, in several Parts of This Book, that his Stars promise him, that he shall die towards the North, and out of his own Country; that he wishes he could leave This ungrateful Land, and retire to die at Metz. It is his favourite Town: he could not forbear addressing to it several Verses, in his Poem to JESUS CHRIST, and to beg of it never to reject him. All This is taken, partly from an Apologetical Epistle, and another Antilogical Epistle, &c. The Apologetical Epistle is in a Collection, of the Publication of which you have taken no notice; It is This; Gul. Bigotii, Lavallensis, somnium ad Gul. Bellaium Langæum, Mecænatem suum, in quo cum alia tum Imperatoris Caroli describitur ab Regno Gallia depulso. Ejusdem explanatrix somnii Epistola, quæ se item & Gul. Budæum a quorundam calumniis defendit. Ejusdem Catoptron, & alia quædam Poemata, cujus prius inemendatus: Parisiis, 1537, 8vo. The Antilogical Epistle is to be found together with the Christiane Philosophie Prædium, Opus cum aliorum, tum hominis substantiam, luculentis expromens & exemplis & rationibus, Gul. Bigotii, Lavallensis, Autore. Ejusdem & ad Jesum Christum Carmen supplex, & Antilogica Dedicatrixque Epistola (14), perapte tam Prædium quam reliquis ipsius Christiani scriptis prælegenda: Tolosæ, Guid. Boudewillai, 1549, fol. I have already observed, that the Carmen Supplex was commented on by William Figulus. His Notes are inserted in This Edition, together with others, which he wrote on other Verses of the same Bigot, which are at the end of the same Volume (15).

The Memoir, which I have made use of just as it came to my Hand, is very proper to inform us of two Things; the One, that Mr Lancelot knows how to make an excellent Use of the Books, which the Mazarine Library furnishes him with; the second, that nothing is more necessary to the Author of such a Work as This, than to consult All the Prefaces, All the Epistles Dedicatory, All the Apologies, and All the Writings, called Eristique, and All the Remarks of Authors. It is in them we find a great many Particulars of their Lives.

(13) Gul. Figulus in hæc verba Bigotii. Denique miris invito invitata est mihi clausa Lutetia fatiis.

(14) Ad Joann. Card. Bellaium.

(15) Taken from a Manuscript Memoir, communicated by Mr Lancelot.

BILLAUT (ADAM), known by the Name of Master Adam, was a Joiner of Nevers, who became a pretty good French Poet. He made himself first known in his own Country, and to the Princesses of Gonzague (a), who resided sometimes in their Dutchy of Nevers; and afterwards he ventured to go to Paris, where he met with some Patrons. He took this Journey in the Year 1637 [A]. The Duke of Orleans honoured him with a Pension (b). This new Poet published a Collection of Poems, entitled Les Chevilles de Maître Adam, and did not fail to add to it the Verses, which many Poets of his Time made in his Praise. The Abbot de Marolles honoured it with a Preface, which favours of a Panegyric, and wherein he does not forget to inform us, that Peter Billaut, and Joan More, our Poet's Father and Mother, were originally of the Village of St Benin des Bois, in the Country of Nivernois. It appears by Master Adam's Verses, that he intruded himself among the Grandeess; but I do not believe that he grew rich by the Poet's Trade [B]. He died the nineteenth of May, 1662 (c). Mr Baillet was not lavish of his Praises on him [C]. I have heard it said, that he was obliged to return to his Joiner's Trade for a Livelihood; but I do not believe it.

(a) The Princess Mary, and the Princess Anne, the first of which has been Queen of Poland.

(b) See the Preface to the Chevilles.

(c) Romauld, Histor. and Chron. Journal, October 19, pag. 450.

[A] He came to Paris, in the Year 1637. All the Proof I have for it, is a Passage of the Abbot de Marolles, wherein he says, that, being at Nevers, in 1636, he was saluted one Morning by Mr Adam Billaut, who repeated some of his Verses to him, and gave him some Copies of them. This Abbot adds, that he promised the Princess Mary to proclaim the Merit of This rare Poet, and that Master Adam came to Paris the Year following. He was known there, continues he, to the Grandeess, and to all the Court (1).

good Estate to his Children (3). He had a Pension from Cardinal Richelieu, as may be inferred from his desiring one of his Friends to solicit the Payment of it (4).

(3) He had a Wife, and some Child en. Preface of Mr de Marolles.

[C] Mr Baillet was not lavish of his Praises on him. Master Adam, says he (5), surnamed Billaut, commonly called the VIRGIL OF THE JOINERS, left us his Chevilles (Peggs) his Villebrequin (Wimble) and his Rabot (Plane), and his other Tools, which he thought to immortalize by consecrating them to the Deities of Parnassus. — Unless it be known that he was an illiterate Joiner, he will pass for an indifferent Poet, and perhaps, for a Black guard of Parnassus. — For it must be confessed, that Master Adam does more Honour to the Joiners, and other Tradesmen, than to the Poets, and the Muses.

(4) Chevilles, pag. 110. Edit. of Roan, 1654.

(5) Jugemens sur les Poetes n. 14.38.

(1) Memoires de l'Abbé de Marolles, pag. 107.

(2) In the Epistle Dedicatory of his Chevilles to the Count d'Arpajon.

BILLI (JAMES de), Abbot of St Michel en l'Herme, was one of the learned Men of the XVIth Century. He translated several Works of the Greek Fathers into Latin, and particularly Gregory Nazianzen, to the Satisfaction of good Judges (a). I designed to publish a long Account of him; but I could not meet with his Life, composed by John Chataud (b); so that I refer my Readers to Moreri, and shall only observe some Mistakes of the learned Mr de Launoi [A], who published two Letters, which inform us, that James de Billi complained much of being at Paris. He complained of it, among other Reasons, because Provisions were dear, and because he was obliged to lose part of his Time with the Ladies [B]. His Sister, who lived with Madam de Montmorency, was the occasion of it. It is not

(a) See Mr Baillet, Jugem. des Savans, n. 873.

(b) See Tessier Biblio. Bibliotheque, pag. 170.

[A] Some Mistakes of the learned Mr de Launoi. He has inserted, in his History of the College of Navarre (1), two Letters of James de Billi, written to James Pelletier; and he believed they were written in the Year 1582. This shews, that he did not know, that the Author of those two Letters died in the Year 1581. La Croix du Maine affirms it. Mr Baillet takes it for granted in divers places of his Jugemens. Moreri notes the Twenty second of November 1580. But Thevet, in the second Tome of the Elogies, pag. 292, marks the Twenty fifth of December 1581. He is more in the right than Moreri. The Ignorance of such Things is nothing, and can do no prejudice to a learned Man; But I cannot apprehend, that a Man can discover his Ignorance in much more considerable Matters, without some Prejudice to himself. By publishing these two Letters, as written in the Year 1582, Mr de Launoi must have believed, that the Prince of Condé was then in Prison; that the Admiral, having gathered the broken Remains of the Army, passed the Loire, and committed great Ravages; that the Duke of Guise pursued him with long Marches, &c. All these things are plainly contained in the first of James de Billi's two Letters, with this Circumstance; that the Prince of Condé had almost made his Escape out of Prison, which induced the Queen to have him removed to Chartres. It is plain, that This Letter was written in the beginning of the Year 1563. The Date, which Mr de Launoi produces, is, Lutetiae 10. Calend. Feb. 1582 (2). Without doubt, he found the Date of the Place, and of the Day, in the Original, and added That of the Year to it. I know not what grounds he could have for his Conjectures; but it is certain, either that he did not consider the Contents of That Letter, or that he was but little skilled in our Modern History. Moreover, the Publication of those Letters shews, that he did not understand Greek; for he left several Faults, which the Printers had committed, in some Greek Words, which our Abbot had made use of. For example, This Verse of Homer,

Ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν πρὸς ἵσυχθαί ἐδομεν ἀχρυν-μενοι πρὸς.

was printed thus,

Ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν πρὸς τὴν ἐδομεν ἀχρυνμενοί πρὸς.

[B] He complained, that he was obliged to lose part of his Time with the Ladies. If you desire to know all the Reasons, why he was sorry, that he had left his Province, read his own Words; 'Hic omnia perturbata, morbis infesta; hic extrema annona caritas, hic meo succo victitandum, hic cursitandum, litigandum, & sororis causa, quae apud Magistri Equitum uxorem educatur inter puellas, tempus terendum & perdendum. — Every thing here is in Confusion; The City is unhealthy; Provisions are dear; Here I must live upon biting my Nails, or sucking my Thumbs; I am obliged to hurry up and down; I must engage in Quarrels; and, upon my Sister's Account, who is educated among the young Ladies in the Master of the Horse's Family, must squander away my Time. This latter point favours but little of the Abbot; neither are we speaking of a Court-Abbot, but of an Abbot, who was a great Grecian, and who minded nothing but his Studies. [C] Here

(1) Page 360.

(2) That is, January 23.

VOL. II.

not universally agreed, that his Translation of Gregory Nazianzen is a good one : I am going to shew, from some Particulars, that it is not [C].

[C] Here are some Particulars, which shew, that his Translation of Gregory Nazianzen is not a Good One.] It was first printed at Paris in 1569, and at Cologne in 1570, and then again at Paris in 1583. This last Edition was made by the Care of Genebrard, and dedicated to Pope Gregory XIII; it is much the most ample, and exact. It is this Version, which is placed over against the Greek Text, in the Edition of Paris, in two Volumes, by Morel, in 1609 (3). Father Louart, a Benedictin, who intends to undertake a new Edition of Gregory Nazianzen, reckons, among the difficulties, which will retard the Execution of this Enterprize, the Necessity of revising the fine Translation of the Abbot Billy (4). Though it should answer still less to the Text, says he (5), than has been observed by the Editors themselves of Paris, in 1610 and 1611, in their Prefaces —

(1) Ibid.

(2) Du Pin, Biblioth. Tom. II. pag. 222. Edit. Amst.

(4) See Memoires de Trevoux, July, 1704. pag. 1247. Edit. of France.

(5) Ibid.

The profound Veneration paid to the Memory and Learning of this great Man, will always be a reason for preserving his Version as much as possible. And if what the learned Petavius remarks upon St Epiphanius, that it is more difficult to correct a Translation, than to make a new one: if This, I say, be not true in relation to a learned and polite Version, such as That of the Abbot de Billi, This will lessen the Pains, at least will spare the disgust of too severely censuring the Faults, which have escaped This learned Abbot, who, otherwise, was so perfect a Master of the two Languages. For the rest, Father Sirmond is not the only Person, who has corrected This Version. It is scarce to be known again in the Dogmata Theologica of Petavius, in which St Gregory is cited in almost every Page. What is more remarkable is, that, besides the great Knowledge this learned Jesuit had of the two Languages, he was likewise a perfect Master of the Divinity of the Greek Fathers.

How complacently soever this is expressed, it plainly gives us to understand, that the Translation of our Abbot de Billi is very imperfect.

The same Benedictin refutes what had been advanced in a Memoir, communicated to the Journalists of Trevoux, that the Abbot de Billi gave up his Manuscript to the Bookellers. 'This illustrious Abbot, says he (6), published his Latin St Gregory twice in his Life-time. As for the Abbot de Billi's Greek Manuscript, it was never in a Condition to be printed. Some will be surprized at the No-

(6) Ibid. pag. 1248, &c.

(7) La Croix du Maine, pag. 93.

(8) See the Biblioth. Francoise of du Verdier, pag. 395.

(9) Billon's Fort Inexpugnable, pag. 229.

BILLON (FRANCIS de), Secretary, born at Paris, published a Book, entitled, *Le Fort inexpugnable de l'Honneur du Sexe Feminin, which he dedicated to Catherine de Medicis, and to some other Princesses (a). His Epistle Dedicatory is dated from Rome, in the ancient Field of Mars, in the Year 1550. It is a whimsical Book (b), in which Henry Stephens found many Blasphemies, which consist in Comparisons between the ancient Prophets, and the Secretaries of the King of France (c). It was printed at Paris in the Year 1555, in Quarto. I have quoted it sometimes. The Author was a Nephew of a Bishop of Senlis [A]. I think he had been Secretary of William du Bellai, Lord of Langei.

[A] He was Nephew of a Bishop of Senlis.] The fourteenth Chapter of his Book contains The Pen's Petition to the Ladies in favour of the Secretaries. They have only 'seized, says the Pen in That Petition (1), the Fruits of my Letters - - - like the Engineer of this Fort, who spent all his Substance in building of the same, for the eternal

BION, a Bucolic Poet, born at Smyrna [A], lived in the Time of Ptolomy Philadelphus [B], who reigned from the fourth Year of the CXXIII Olympiad,

[A] He was born at Smyrna.] The Epithet Σμυρναῖος, that attends him every where, is a good Proof of it; it may be confirmed by the Verses of Moschus, wherein mention is made of the Sorrows of the River Meles for the Death of it's Son Bion. That River runs by Smyrna.

Τὴν τοι, ὦ Σμυρναῖον λιγυρότατε, δούτερον ἀλγόν.
Τὴν τοι, μέλαν, ἦν ἄλγος ἀπώλετο πρὸν τοι Ὀμήρου.

velty of This Proposition, after what Chataud has said of it in his Elogy of the Abbot de Billi, and what Genebrard wrote concerning it to Pope Gregory XIII, in the Year 1582, immediately after the Death of This Abbot. This Letter is still to be seen in three Editions of Paris. I have in my Hands this pretended Greek Manuscript of the Abbot de Billi, the very Original, which passed from this Abbot to Genebrard, and from his Hands into Petavius's Library, whence the Bookellers of Paris had it, to print, as they said, the Greek Text, revised by the Abbot de Billy. I am ready publicly to produce it, and to prove, that the Greek Text was never restored by the Abbot de Billy, nor by any other. St Gregory — is — the only one of the four Doctors of the Greek Church, whose Text remains in the Corruption of the first Edition, if even the Paris Edition has not very much added to it (7). It is certain, even by the Confession of the Editors of Paris, (first and second Preface) that this Abbot left nothing as to the Greek Text of St Gregory, but what is in an Edition of Basil, printed by Hervagius, in 1550, in which, by dint of guessing, we read, in the Margin, and sometimes between the Lines, here a Latin, and there a Greek Word. — It is a Chaos, which I believe the illustrious Author himself could not clear up, were he to return at present into the World. — Morel, in his Preface, speaks almost in the same manner of this Manuscript; and all, who please, may be convinced of it by their own Eyes. It was, however, this pretended Correction of the Greek Text by the Abbot de Billy, which was given into the Hands of a Corrector of the Press, who, not being able to make any thing of it (which was no wonder) printed neither the Edition of Basil, nor this pretended Correction, but One, I know not what, formed out of those two, as his Fancy directed him. — I appeal, after this, whether it was honest in the Bookellers to impose upon the Public by so deceitful a Title, as That of the Abbot de Billy; Jacobus Billius — — — cum MSS. Regiis contulit, emendavit, &c (8). This is enough, I. To undeceive Those, who have a good Opinion of the Work of this Abbot. II. To render suspected what Bookellers affirm.

(7) Ibid. pag. 1250.

(8) Note, that the Memoir of Father Louart is to be found likewise in the Nouv. de la Rep. des Lettres, Ocl. 1704, pag. 382. &c.

The Impregnable Fort of Female Honour.

(c) Henri Etienne, Apologie d'Herodote, chap. XIV. pag. 94.

(2) It is perhaps a false Print for Billon.

(1) Moschus, in Epithelio Bionis.

This, O most sonorous of Rivers, is to you a new Occasion of Grief: You first lost Homer; now you deplore another Son.

[B] He lived in the Time of Ptolomy Philadelphus.] See here the Proof of it. Theocritus was afflicted for the Death of Bion; and he lived in the Time to the second Year of the CXXXIII. There is some probability that he passed the best part of his Life in Sicily [C], or in Greater Greece (a). He was an excellent Poet, if we rely on the Lamentations of his Disciple Moschus. The few Pieces, which remain of him, witness the fame, in the Opinion of very good Judges. Bion died of Poison, as Moschus plainly observes (b). There are many Editions of the Idylls of these two Poets; but the best of them is, without doubt, That of Paris, of 1686, with a Translation in French Verse, and some Remarks (c). See what the Journalists said of it [D]. It was soon after reprinted in Hol-

B I O N.

II

(a) Græcia Major. This was the Name of That Part of Italy, which we call the Kingdom of Naples.

(b) Taken from Bion's Life, prefixed to the Translation of his Idylls, by M. de Longe-Pierre.

(c) M. de Longe-Pierre is the Author of both.

Time of That Ptolomy: it follows, then, that Bion lived also at the same time. This Proof would be much stronger than it is, if the fix Verses, which precede these Words of Moschus, ἐν δὲ Συρακούσισι Θόρυξος, interque Syracusanis Theocritus, did not pass for a Supplement of Musurus (2). That Author, finding an Hiatus there, filled it up, supposing that Moschus mentioned the Complaints, which the Death of Bion had excited among the Poets in several Countries. This Supposition connects the beginning and end of That Hiatus very well; but, because it is not the only expedient to find this Connexion, there is reason to doubt, whether Moschus had the Thought, which Musurus ascribes to him, and, consequently, it can be no longer certain, that Theocritus was represented, there, as then alive.

(2) See the Remarks of Mr de Longe-Pierre, pag. 177, 180.

(3) Nel li' ro primo de Poeti Bucolici Ciceroniani. Lorenzo Crasso quotes him in his History of the Greek Poets, pag. 89.

(4) Sono molte altre le prove dell'autorità portata dal Vintimiglia che almeno crede d'abitazione Ciceroniana Bione. Lorenzo Crasso, pag. 90.

(5) That is, Homer.

[C] He spent the best Part of his Life in Sicily.] It is Moschus again, who supplies us with Proofs of this Fact. I have not seen how John Vintimiglia makes use of them (3), to prove, that Bion was of Sicily, or, at least, that he resided there (4), but it is very probable, that these two Verses were chiefly considered by him:

Ἀμφότεροι παλαιὸς πεφιλῆμένοι. ὅς μὲν ἔπινε
Παρασίδῃ κρήνας, ὃ δ' ἔχεν πόμα τὰς ἀρεδύσας.

Ambo fontibus chari erant, alter (5) bibebat

B I O N, surnamed the Borysthenite, because he was born at Borysthenes (a), was a Philosopher of much Wit, but very little Religion. He flourished about the CXXth Olympiad (b). He was much beloved by Antigonus, King of Macedonia; and, as he had a Boldness, which came near to Impudence, he made no scruple to confess to him, that he was the Son of a Freed-man, who became a Bankrupt, and of a Harlot [A]. He despised the Platonic Philosophers, whilst he was an Auditor of Crates; afterwards he took the Habit of a Cynic; then he addicted himself to Theodorus, who was a professed Atheist; and, lastly, he was a Disciple of Theophrastus, who was the Head of Aristotle's Sect. He loved Pomp and Ostentation, and shewed himself in several Cities. He caused himself to be followed, at Rhodes, into the Place of Exercise, by several Sea-men, who had the Complaisance to dress themselves like Scholars at his Sollicitation. He must needs have been very eloquent, to persuade Sailors to such a Thing. He had a good Genius for witty Sayings [B], as we may judge from some of his, which have been preserved

(7) Nella Storia di Sicilia.

(8) In Elegiis Sæculorum qui vixerunt memoria literis floruerunt.

(9) Nell' Antica Siracusa apud Lorenzo Crasso ubi supra, p. 90.

De fonte Pegaseo: alter (6) tenebat poculum de fonte Arethusa.

Lorenzo Crasso observes, that John Lascaris, in his Illustrations of Sicily, as he is quoted by Maurolicus (7), does not mention our Bucolic Poet Bion, but another Bion, who was of Syracuse, and a Rhetorician by Profession. Jerom Ragusa, a Sicilian Jesuit, speaks only of This Rhetorician (8). Bonanni maintains something like a Paradox: He pretends, that Moschus speaks only of Theocritus: Sappia chi legge, says he (9), che nel sopradetto Idillio non si può intendere Bione poeta Bucolico, perche costui non fu Siracusano, ma Smirneo, e fiori dopo Moscho. Così medesimamente per nessuna ragione vi può esser inteso un altro Bione il quale è Siracusano, perche egli non fu poeta, ne scrisse cose pastorali, ma fu Rhetorico. Bion, the Bucolic Poet was not of Syracuse, but of Smyrna; and Moschus cannot be supposed to mean another Bion, who was of Syracuse, because That Bion was not a Poet, but a Rhetorician.

[D] The best Edition of This Poet is That of Paris. See what the Journalists say of it.] Viz. The Paris Journal of the nineteenth of August, 1686; the News from the Commonwealth of Learning, in the Month of Septemb. 1686, Artic. I; The Acta Eruditorum of Lipsie, at the second Edition of the first Volume of the Supplements. I do not believe it has been mentioned in the Bibliotheca Universalis.

(a) There was a Town, and a River of this Name: The modern Name of the River is Dniester; it runs thro' the Frontiers of Moldavia and Poland.

(b) See the Remarks [G] and [K].

[A] He made no Scruple to confess to Antigonus, that he was the Son of a Freed-man - - - and of an Harlot.] The manner in which Antigonus asked him; Τίς σὺ δὲν εἰς ἀνδρῶν; ποῦ τοι πατὴρ ἦδ' οὗτος; Who are you, what Contryman are you, and of what Family? made Bion believe, that the King had been told, that he was of very mean Extraction; so that he thought his best way was to own the thing; and indeed, he would have lost more by denying it, than he would have got. Wherefore he freely confessed whatever the Public knew about his Father and Mother, and ended with a Verse of Homer, the better to answer Antigonus, who had made use of one of the same Poet's Verses, when he asked him who he was. Ταύτης τοι γένεαις τε καὶ αἵματι εὖ χρομαί εἶναι. Such are my Father and Mother, and I glory to be born of them. He added, Let Pericles and Philonides leave this out of their Histories, and do you judge of me by myself (1). We find in Athenæus what Bion's Mother's Name was. Καὶ Bion δ' ὁ Βορυσθενίτης φιλόσοφος ἐταίρος ἦν υἱὸς Ὀλυμ-

(1) Diog. Laërt. lib. IV. in Bion. init.

πίας λακωνίης, ὡς φησι Νικίας ὁ Νικαεὺς ἐν ταῖς τῶν φιλοσόφων διαδοχαῖς (2). Bion, the Borysthenite, the Philosopher, was the Son of a Lacedæmonian Harlot, named Olympia, according to Nicias of Nicæa, in his Succession of the Philosophers. She had a fine Name, and her Country was at a great Distance from the Place, where she was married. It would be in vain to ask, whether she had prostituted herself in her own Country, and whether she went to live near the Borysthenes, that she might pretend to be a Woman of Honour in case of Necessity, or that she might thrive better among the Barbarians, who are not so nice, as the Inhabitants of Greece: The Books say nothing of This; but it appears by her Son's Answer, that she was taken from a Place of ill Fame, when she met with an Husband. Μήτηρ δὲ, οἷαν ἐ τοῖς τῶν γυναικῶν, ἀπ' οἰκίᾳ (3). My Mother was taken from a Bawdy-house; and such a Man as my Father could not pretend to a better Match.

(2) Athen. lib. XIII. chap. VI. pag. 491, 492.

(3) Diog. Laërt. ibid.

[B] He had a good Genius for witty Sayings.] This Passage of Horace must be understood of Him.

Carmines

preserved [C]. He was no less successful in the making of Parodies. In all likelihood it was he, who, considering how difficult it was to please different sorts of People, had a Thought about it, which Dion Chrysostom refutes [D]. He retired to Chalcis, as Aristotle had done; but it is not said, that it was on a like Occasion; and, falling sick there, he did as most impious Men do, he ran into another Extream [E]. He became superstitious; he had recourse to Ligatures, and to an hundred other things, which, in the Judgment of the Vulgar, were Preservatives,

(4) Horat. Epist. II. lib. II. v. 60.
Carmine tu gaudes, hic delectatur Iambis;
Ille BIONEIS sermonibus & fale nigro (4).

You think, perhaps, Heroic Numbers best;
Iambic Measure is Another's Taste.

A Third, to gratify his Spleen, would abuse
Bion's sharp Stile, and the Satiric Muse.

(5) Porphyryon, an ancient Commentator upon Horace, says so. See Cruquius on those Words of Horace.

(6) Dacier on This Passage of Horace.

(7) Acron.

(8) Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 52.

(9) Plut. in Amatorio, pag. 277.

(10) Diog. Laërt. lib. IV. n. 49.

(11) Ibid. n. 48.

(12) Cicero, Tusculan, III. cap. 26.

(13) Diog. Laërt. n. 49.

Chabot remarks, on this Passage, that most Interpreters understand Comedies by Sermones Bionis. Their Meaning is, that Aristophanes having excelled in Comedy, and Aristophanes's Father's Name having been Bion (5), the Epithet in question was given to Comedies. This Pretence is groundless: Aristophanes's Father was called Philip (6); and, if the Character of Bion Borysbenites be narrowly considered, it cannot be doubted, but that these Words of Horace are meant of Him. An ancient Scholiast upon That Poet (7) has hit the Mark; for he explains Bionis, by satyricis, lividis, amaris, carmine maledico. 'Bion autem, he goes on, Sophistes cognominatus mordacissimis veribus est usus, quibus ita omnes laceravit ut ne Homero quidem parceret. '----- Bion the Sophist wrote very satirical Verses, in which he attacked every body, nor spared even Homer himself. Why should he spare Homer? he spared neither Socrates, nor Jupiter; he slandered Men, and Gods, indifferently. See the following Remark. He had the Art of making People laugh. Ἦν δὲ καὶ διαλεικὸς καὶ πολὺς ἐν τῷ γελοῖῳ διαπορῆσαι, φοβητικὸς δὲ νόμασι καὶ τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν ἡρώων. Erat autem & spectatorum studiosus, risumque moovere auditoribus maxime peritus, gravibus nominibus adversum res utens (8). He had an impetuous Spirit, which made him overstrain things. Thus I translate φοβητικὸς νόμασι ἡρώων; and the Latin Translator of Plutarch seems to me to have misunderstood the Place, where it is said, that the young Beards of handsome Boys were, as Bion expressed it, so many Harmodius's and Aristogiton's, because they make the Tyranny of Love to cease, as soon as they appear. This is an Instance of Those strong, quick, and strained, Expressions, which were usual with our Sophist. Plutarch makes use of the Word φοβητικώτερον, which I think is very ill rendered by That of importunus. Here is the whole Passage: Ἐτι δὲ φοβητικώτερον ὁ σοφιστὴς Βίων τὰς τῶν καλῶν τριχὰς Ἀρμόδιος ἐκάλει καὶ Ἀριστογείτονας, ὡς ἅμα καλὸς τερασνίδος ἀπαλαττομένης ὑπ' αὐτῶν τὰς ἐσχάτας. Et quando Bio sophista importunus nonnihil formosorum crines Harmodios vocavit & Aristogitones, quod iis enatis pulcra tyrannide amatores sese abdicare cogantur (9).

[C] We may judge of it from some of his Sayings, which have been preserved. Moreri mentions some of them, but has not made choice of the most remarkable. The way to the other World, said he (10), is very easy; People go thither blindfold. He found something contradictory in Funerals; They burn People, as if they were insensible; and lament them, as if they were sensible (11). He looked upon it as a Folly to tear one's Hair in Time of Affliction, as if a Man were less sensible of Grief, by making his Head bald. Laërtius does not mention This; It is Cicero who reports it: Hinc ille Agamemnon Homericus & idem Aëciannus, Stindens dolore identidem intonsam comam.

In quo factum illud Bionis, perinde stultissimum regem in Iulian capillum sibi evellere, quasi caloitio maeror levaretur (12). This Jester expressed the Debauchery of Alcibiades very lively: In his Youth he robbed Women of their Husbands; and, when he was grown up, he robbed Men of their Wives (13). What was intolerable in his Jests, was, that he jesting upon Morality and Religion. If Socrates, said he, had occasion for Alcibiades, and did not make use of him, he was a great Fool; if he had no occasion for him, his Continency is no great Matter (14). To ridicule what was said of the Punishment inflicted on the Danaïdes, he said, that they would be more severely punished, if they were condemned to carry Water in Vessels, which have no Holes in them. Ἐλεγε τὸς ἐν ἀνὰ μᾶλλον ἐν κοιλίᾳ εἰς ὀλοκλήσεις καὶ μὴ τετραμένους ἀγγείας ὑδροφόρον (15). Dicebat ei qui essent apud inferos magis profecto cruciandos si integris quam si perforatis vasis aquam ferrent. And, because it is a common Observation, that Divine Justice sometimes punishes the Faults of the Fathers in their Children, he said, that it was more ridiculous, than if a Physician should give Physic to a Son, or a Grandson, to cure his Father's, or his Grandfather's Sickness. Ὁ γὰρ Βίων τὸν Θεὸν κοιλῶν' α τὴς πατρίδας τῶν πατρῶν γελοιώτερον εἶναι εἶπαι ἰατρὴ διὰ νόσον πατέρα καὶ πατέρα ἐκγονον ἢ πατέρα φαρμακούνους (16). Etenim Bio Deum qui malorum liberis supplicia inferret magis agebat ridiculum esse medico qui filio aut nepoti ob morbum patris vel avi medicinam adhiberet. Plutarch shews the Falsity of this Comparison with great Solidity. It is easy to shew, that there is something false in most of Bion's witty Conceits. However, they are, for the greatest part, the Effect of a quick and happy Imagination; and it may be said, in general, that most witty Conceits have their false Side. His Impudence in turning Religion into Ridicule ought to have been restrained; for a serious Refutation does not near so much harm as the Jests of a witty Man. Young Persons suffer themselves to be led away by these kind of Mockers, more than can be imagined; And Bion spoiled many of them (17). This was unavoidable, considering the Boldness, with which he employed his Wit against a false Religion, which Ignorance and Impolture had made an hundred times more ridiculous, than Religion, in itself, and in it's true State, is excellent.

[D] He had a Thought on the Difficulty of pleasing different sorts of People, which Dion Chrysostom refutes. Bion said, that, unless a Man was a Tart, or Thasian Wine, it was impossible he could please many People. Dion Chrysostom calls this Thought a very insipid one; 'for, says he, it has often happened, that, at a Table of Ten Persons, a Cold Tart has pleased some, and an Hot one others; but perhaps, adds he, Dion pretends to speak of a Tart, which was both hot and cold at the same time (18). An Author, whom I shall often have occasion to refute, has falsified This. 'It is reported, says he (19), of Bion, the Philosopher, that, to please every body, he wished himself a Tart, because, he said, every body loved it; but Dion Chrysostom shews, in the Sixty fourth Oration, that he is grossly mistaken, and that his Wish is the true Wish of a Madman; because, said he, every body does not love Tarts alike; for some love them hot, and others cold; one will have them round, another square; one will have them soft, another hard: And therefore, said Dion Chrysostom, Bion should have desired to be Gold or Silver, to please every body; and yet, if I may find fault with Dion Chrysostom's Opinion, as he has passed his Judgment on That of Bion, I would say, that Dion Chrysostom is as much mistaken as Bion; for several People love neither Gold, nor Silver, no more, than if there was none in the World; and therefore I say, such a Desire is a fantastical One.'

[E] Being fallen sick, he did as most impious Men do; he ran into another Extream. I have heard a Gentleman say, who belonged to the Count de

(14) Ibid.

(15) Ibid. n. 50.

(16) Plut. de sera Numin. vindicta, pag. 561.

(17) Laërt. n. 53.

(18) Dion Chrysostom. Orat. 65. pag. 612.

(19) Caract. Doctrin. curios. pag. 704.

vatives, and Charms. Diogenes Laërtius ridiculed him, as he deserved, upon that Account [F]. Bion suffered much in his Sicknefs, being affifted by none of thofe, who took care of the Sick: At laft, Antigonus fent him two Perfons, who attended him (c). Bias and Bion have fometimes been confounded with each other [G].

Diogenes

(2) Taken from Diogenes Laërtius, in the Life of Bion. It is in the 4th Book, §. 45. & seq. of the Amsterdam Edit. 1692.

(20) He, who was killed in a Battle near Sedan, in 1641.

de Soiffons (20), that Saintbibal, a famous Unbeliever, made great Complaints, that no Man of their Sect had the Gift of Perfeverance. They do us no Honour, faid he, when they lie on their Death-Bed; They difgrace, and belie, themfelves: They die like other Men, confeffing their Sins, and receiving the Sacrament. He might have added, that They commonly praftife the minute Part of Superftition. The Example of Tullus Hoftilius, alledged by the Author of the Thoughts on Comets (21), is admirable on this Subject. A long Sicknefs brought That Prince fo low, that, after having flighted Religion, he became at laft Superftitious, and a Promoter of Superftitions. 'Ipfe quoque longinquo morbo est implicitus. Tunc adeo fracti fimul cum corpore sunt spiritus illi feroces, ut qui nihil ante ratus esset minus regium, quam facris dedere animum, repente omnibus magnis parvifque superftitionibus obnoxius degeret, religionibusque etiam populum impleret (22). — He lay sick a long time. Then was That undaunted Spirit fo broken, as well as his bodily Strength, that He, who before thought the Confideration of sacred Things unworthy of a King, immediately fell into Superftitions of all kinds, and even forfeited the People with Rites and Ceremonies.' This Conduct is not to be wondered at; moft of Thofe, who live in Prophanenefs, live only in Doubts; They do not attain to Certainty; when, therefore, they fall fick, Irreligion being no longer of any ufe to them, they take the fafeft way; That, which promifes eternal Happinefs, if it proves true, and makes them run no hazard, if it fhould prove falfe. They confels to a Prielt; They do every thing elfe, ad majorem cautelam. All Readers have admired This Thought of Mr Boileau.

(21) Pag. 354.

(22) Liv. Dec. I. lib. 1. cap. 3.

Qui fait l'homme intrepide, & tremblant de foibleffe,

Attend pour croire en Dieu que la fièvre le preffe,
Et toujours dans l'orage au Ciel levant les mains, Dès que l'air est calmé rit des foibles humains (23).

(23) Sat. I. ver. 253.

This makes th' intrepid Wretch, with Heav'n at odds,

'Till Sicknefs preffes, to deny the Gods:
In Storms he prays; but, when the Blast fubfides, Weak, fuperftitious, Mortals he derides.

To this may be referred This Paflage of Guy Patin; 'My deceafed Father told me, that Mr du Maine, the Head of the League, faid, that Princes had no Religion before they arrive at above forty Years of Age; when they grow old;

(24) Patin, Lett. 64, of Edit. 1.

--- cum numina nobis
Mors inflans majora facit (24).

(25) Lib. 8, pag. 333.

Concerning thefe Latin Words, fee Silius Italicus (25). And, as for the reft, I refer you to the Remark [F], of the Article DES BARREAUX. [F] Diogenes Laërtius ridiculed him, as he deserved, on that Account.] The Verfes wrote againft him (26) are very pretty; here is a Latin Translation of them:

(26) Le Biene, 2e 55. lib. 4.

Bionem Boryfthenitem, quem Scythica tellus
produxit,
Dixiffe audivimus, reverâ nihil effe Deos.
Ac fiquidem id dogma tueri perfiftiffet, meritò
dicendus effet
Senfiffe ut vifum fuiffet, etfi malè vifum effet.
At nunc, quàm in longum morbum incidiffet,
ac mori pertimefceret,
Qui Deos non effe dixerat, qui fanum non viderat, Mortalibus qui illuferat, dùm Diis immolarent;
Non pro foco folum, ariſque, ac menſa,
Nidore, adipe, thureque Deorum nares implevit;
Nec folum, peccavi, dixit, delictis parcite:
VOL. II.

Sed & anni collum facile porrexit excantandum,
Bracchiaque loris perfuafus devinxit (27);
Rhamnumque & lauri ramum janua impofuit:
Cuncta adminiftrare magis quàm mori paratus.
Stultus qui mercede voluerit Deos effe:
Quafi tunc effent, quàm illos Bion demùm effe arbitraretur.

(27) Bion laughed at this in one of his Books, as may be inferred from Plutarch, de Superftitione, pag. 168. D.

We have heard Bion, the Boryfthenite, born in Scythia, affirm, that, in reality, there are no Gods; And, if he had persevered in defending This Opinion, it might juſtly have been ſaid, that he thought as Things appeared to him, though he ſaw them in a wrong Light. But, now, falling into a long Sicknefs, and being afraid to die, He, who denied the Exiſtence of the Gods, who never entered a Temple, who laughed at Men that ſacrificed to the Gods, This very Man, not only before the Hearth, the Altar, and the Table, filled the Noſtrils of the Gods with Savour, Fat, and Frankincenſe; not only ſaid, I have offended, forgive me my Sins; but even ſtretched out his Neck to be charmed by an old Woman, and was prevailed upon to tie Bandages about his Arms. Nay he even laid a Bramble and a Branch of Laurel over his Door, being ready to go through any Ceremony, but That of dying. Fool that he was, to believe in the Gods only for Intereſt as if They then only began to Be, when Bion was, at length, brought to acknowledge their Exiſtence.

See the uſe, which Mr du Rondel has made of This in his excellent Life of Epicurus (28). His ſaying, that Diogenes Laërtius was an Epicurean, is remarkable; for This Diogenes inſinuates plainly, that he does not blame Bion's Conſiteor, and his mea culpa, mea maxima culpa, or his peccavi.

(28) Printed at Amsterdam, in 1693.

[G] Bias and Bion have ſometimes been confounded with each other.] This Plutarch did, when he ſaid that Antigonus, being importuned by the repeated Solicitations of Bias, ordered a Talent to be given him (29). He denotes This Antigonus by the Epi-thet γένων; which is a Sign, that he ſpeaks of the firſt Antigonus, who was one of Alexander's Captains and Succeſſors. Now Bias having preceded the Death of Alexander, at leaſt Two hundred Years, it is plain, he could not aſk any thing of Antigonus; and, ſince Bion was a Diſciple of Crates, and Theophrastus, it is certain that he might be known to Antigonus. We muſt ſay, then, either that Plutarch is groſſly miſtaken, or that the Tranſcribers of his Book have changed ὦνδ Bion into ὦνδ Bion. By the by, I am not well aſſured, whether Aldobrandinus had reaſon to underſtand Antigonus Gonatas by the Antigonus, who aſked our Bion of what Country and Family he was (33). I allow it poſſible, that This Philoſopher might live 'till the Reign of Antigonus Gonatas: But, in ſhort, Plutarch makes him live exactly under the old Antigonus; (for I ſuppoſe, he ſaid Bion, and not Bias). This deſerves ſome Conſideration; and therefore I would not ſay, with Moreri, that Bion lived in the CXXVth Olympiad, and in the time of Antigonus, ſurnamed Gonatas, King of Macedonia. See below, the Remark [K]. As for the reſt, if Plutarch miſtook Bias for Bion through defect of Memory, he is not the only Perſon, who has committed the like Miſtake; for Eufatbius aſcribes to Antifthenes what belongs only to Bion. It is on the Verſe of the Iliad, applied by Bion, in his Answer to Antigonus, ΤΑΥΤΗ; ΤΟΙ ΓΕΝΕΙΣ ΤΕ ΚΑΙ ΑΙΜΑ; ΕΥΧΟΡΑΙΣ ΕΙΡΑΤ (31). Eufatbius ſays, that Antifthenes, the Cynic, made uſe of thoſe Words, after having answered the Perſon, who aſked him, Whoſe Son he was? I am the Son of a Man, who wiped his Noſe with his Elbow (32), &c. Cafanbon obſerved this Miſtake of Eufatbius. See Mr Menage on Diogenes Laërtius, in the Forty ſeventh Paragraph of the fourth Book.

(29) Plot. de virtutis pudore, pag. 331. E.

(30) Not. ad Diog. Laërt. in Bione, inſit.

(31) Lib. 6.

(32) That is, of a Sallemantarius; as if we ſhould ſay, at preſent, one who ſells Herring and Codſh.

I ſhall obſerve, that The Sophiſm againſt Marriage, the Sophiſm, I ſay, which is alledged, in all the Compendiums of Logic, as an Example of a faulty

AN Examination of a falſe Diſſemina againſt Marriage.

Diogenes Laërtius mentions ten Persons, who bore the latter Name. Moreri speaks of them after him; but gives the first Place to him, who makes the Subject of this Article, whereas he ought to have been reckoned but the Third (d). Diogenes Laërtius has not mentioned all the Bions (e). The Translators of Plutarch have misunderstood a Thought of Bion, which he censured [H]. Bion's Sophism, which Seneca answered solidly, seems to me to be but an Argument, ad hominem, by which he would conclude, that the Doctrine concerning God's Power over all Things implies some Contradictions [I]. I know not where König found, that Bion died in the fourth Year of the CXXXIVth Olympiad [K].

Without

a faulty Dilemma, is attributed to Bion, and to Antisthenes, by Diogenes Laërtius, and to Bias, by Aulus Gellius. It may be an Error of the Transcriber in the latter; Bionis was, perhaps, changed into Biantis, as Cassaubon conjectures (33). However it be, This is our Bion's Dilemma: If you take a beautiful Wife, she will be common; and if you take an ugly one, she will be a Torment to you. Έάν μὲν γὰρ αἰσχρὰν, ἔξεις ποινὴν, ἐάν δὲ καλὴν, ἔξεις κοινὴν (34). Among other Defects, this Argument may be retorted thus; If I take an ugly one, she will not be common; if I take a beautiful one, she will be no Torment to me. But this Retortion does not hit the Matter; It is but a palliative Remedy; so that Bion's Dilemma is worth nothing, take it any way. The true Answer is to say, I. That most Women are neither beautiful nor ugly; and therefore Bion concludes from a few to all. See Favorinus, in the eleventh Chapter of the fifth Book of Aulus Gellius's Noctes Atticae. II. That the Beauty of a Woman is not inconsistent with Virtue, and that an ugly Wife may, besides, make herself beloved by her Husband (35). There is a Commentator upon Aulus Gellius (36), who confutes Bias's Argument by a Reason, borrowed from the Hebrews; which is, says he, That They, who have been ill married, shall be absolved before God, without appearing before his Tribunal: This would make it worth marrying an ugly Wife. If St Chrysostom were to be the Judge in the Case, he would condemn the Retortion of the Dilemma; for he preached, that They, who have a beautiful Wife, find nothing worse than to have her, it is a Possession too full of Suspicions, and Snares; and They, who have an ugly one, find nothing worse than to have her, it is so disgusting a thing. 'Ο καλὴν ἔχων γυναῖκα ἐδὲν χεῖρόν φησι τῷ καλῇν ἔχειν γυναῖκα (ὅποιας τὸ πρῶτον γέμει καὶ ἐπιτελεί) ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἐστὶν, ἐδὲν χεῖρόν φησι τῷ ἀμορφον ἔχων γυναῖκα. ἀνδρίας γὰρ τὸ πρῶτον εὐμπεπλησται. Qui pulchram habet uxorem, nihil pejus esse ait quam pulchram habere uxorem, (rem enim esse insidiatum & suspicionum plenam) qui deformem, nihil pejus esse dicit quam turpem habere uxorem, rem enim esse acerbioris refertur (37). Here is a Preacher, who does not talk at random; he goes upon the Authority, or the Confession, of Men, who knew it by Experience; nevertheless, his Conclusion is no better than That of Bion. To condemn the Retortion of the Dilemma, it would be sufficient to say, that it contains two false Consequences. If I take a beautiful Wife, she will be no Torment to me; nego consequentiam; for it may be so, and it may not be so: If I take an ugly one, she will not be common; nego similiter consequentiam; for it may be so, and it may not be so. But, to put a Stop to all these Quibbles, one need only tell the Bias's, and the Bion's, I will run the hazard of it.

- (33) Leg. Conubial. pag. 32.
(34) In Mellissae, Tom. II. cap. 34.
(35) In locis Communibus, cap. xxxix.
(36) Serm. 65.
(37) Leg. Conubial. pag. 32.
(38) In Mellissae, Tom. II. cap. 34.
(39) In locis Communibus, cap. xxxix.
(40) Serm. 65.

I have not mentioned all the Variations relating to This Dilemma: I may yet transcribe what I have read in Tiraquellus upon it (38). That pointed Argument is not only ascribed to Bion, and to Antisthenes, by Diogenes Laërtius, and to Bias by Aulus Gellius, but also to Aristippus by the Monk Antony (39), and to Solon by Maximus Tyrius, and by Peter Martyr (40). The Retortion was made by Pittacus, if we may believe the Commentaries of Ariston, quoted by Stobæus (41).

[H] The Translators of Plutarch have misunderstood a Thought of Bion, which he censured. Let us first set down the Greek of Plutarch: Εὐθὺν τοίνυν καὶ ἀεὶ λέγει τὰ τῷ Βίων, εἰ τὴν ἀγρὸν ἐμμελὲς ἐγκωμιάζων ἑυτοροῦν ποιεῖν καὶ εὐκαρποῦν, οὐκ ἂν ἀμαρτάνειν ἐδόκει τὸ τοῖαν μάλλον ἢ σκάπτειν καὶ πράγματ' ἔχων. εἰ

τοίνυν ἐὰν ἀνθρώπου ἀποπῶ, ἂν εἰς ἐπαίνον, εἰ τοῖς ἐπαινεμένοις ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ ἐστὶ καὶ πᾶσι κοινόν (42). That is to say; Bion's Thought is, therefore, very impertinent: He believed, that, if he could make a Field fruitful by bestowing Praises upon it, he should not be to blame if he chose rather to praise, than take the Pains to manure it. Therefore a Man ought not to be called absurd, for praising others, if his Praises are useful to them, and make them produce good Fruit. The impertinence, which Plutarch finds in This Thought, is, that a Field would not become worse by being praised; whereas the Praises, which are bestowed upon a Man, who does not deserve them, fill him with Vanity, and spoil him. 'Ο μὲν Ἀγρός ἐ γίνεσθαι χεῖρον ἐπαινεμένος. ἀνθρώπων δὲ τυφῶσι καὶ ἀπολλύουσιν οἱ λευδῶς καὶ παρ' αἰσίων ἐπαινῶν (43). Atque ager quidem laudando non fit deterior: hominem insipientem ac perditum qui immerito laudant. This Censure of Plutarch is lost labour; for Bion does not say, absolutely, that we must praise others; but he makes Praise to depend upon This Condition, viz. that They make those better, who are praised. Let us see how Amyot translates Plutarch's Greek: 'Wherefore Bion's Saying is foolish and silly; for he argues thus; If I could make a Field fruitful by praising it much, I should not commit a Fault in praising it, rather than tire my Heart and Body in manuring and cultivating it. Therefore, neither does he commit a Fault, who praises a Man, if, by praising him, he makes him useful, and fruitful to him, who praises him.' In this Translation, the Active Verb is taken for the Passive; for Bion does not speak of the Utility of Praise with respect to Him, who praises, but with respect to him, who is praised. The Latin Interpreter has stumbled more grossly; he imputes this foolish and ridiculous Thought to Bion, that he believed, that a Field became more fruitful by praising, than by cultivating it (44). Stultè itaque ac fatuè Bion qui agrum laudando putabat se redditurum fertilem ac frugiferum, potius quam sodoendo & colendo. Non tamen (45) homo absurde facit laudans, ubi id iis qui laudantur est utile. To excuse Amyot, it might be said, that he thought, that Bion, being an Atheist, acknowledged no other Duties, but what are profitable; and that, therefore, his meaning was, that Praise ought to be bestowed wherever they are well paid for; and that They should not be refused even to a Field, if they could make it fruitful. In a word, that the Trade of Flattery is not to be blamed, provided it be attended with Profit. But this Excuse is altogether idle; A Translator ought faithfully to deliver what he finds in the Original, and refer his Conjectures to particular Remarks. If any one thinks, that Plutarch did not relate a Thing exactly, let him give notice of it to the Readers: but what Plutarch said must be translated.

[I] He pretended, that the Doctrine of God's Power over all things implies some Contradictions. Bion pretended to prove two very different Things; the one, that all Thieves were sacrilegious Men; the other, that no Thief was sacrilegious (46). He drew those two Consequences from the same Principles; and That Principle is one of the most solid Truths, which good Philosophy teaches us concerning the Nature of God. The Supreme Being, the most Perfect Being, ought to have an absolute Power over all Things; All other Beings depend on him; They belong to Him, as to their Author and Preserver. Doubtless Bion's Design was to refute This Doctrine by two contradictory, and pernicious, Consequences, which he pretended he could draw from it. This is one of them; All Those, who steal what belongs to God, are sacrilegious; now

(42) Plutarch. de Adulat. & Amici Discrim. pag. 59.

(43) Id. ibid.

(44) You will find in the Table of Matters, Bion agrum laudando fertiliorum fieri putabat.

(45) Here is a tamen well placed!

(46) See Seneca, chap. 7, of the seventh Book de Beneficiis. No Commentator observes whether Seneca had found that Argument of Bion in any of the ancient Authors that are extant.

Without doubt, Theon speaks of him, when he says, that, according to the Sophist Bion, Avarice is the greatest of all Vices (f); a Sentence, which has been canonized by the great Apostle of the Gentiles. Plutarch ascribes a Maxim to him, which would do Honour to the most orthodox Philosophers; which was, to tell his Scholars, that, when they had acquired so much Constancy, as to bear, with the same Tranquility of Mind, those who injured them, as those, who treated them civilly, they might believe they had made some Progress in Virtue [L]. His Answer to Theognis has not so much Morality in it [M].

(f) Bion ὁ σοφιστὴς τὴν φιλαργυρίαν μακροτάτην ἐκείνην καλεῖται. Bion Sophista vitiorum metropolis dicebat avaritiam. Theon. Progm. cap. 5, pag. 72.

now all Thieves steal what belong to God; for all things belong to him; Therefore all Thieves are sacrilegious. This is the other; To transport a thing from one Place, which belongs to God, to another Place, which belongs to him likewise, is no Sacrilege: Now Those, who rob Temples, only carry Things from one Place, which belongs to God, to another, which equally belongs to him; for all things belong to God; Therefore Those, who rob Temples, do not commit Sacrilege. Seneca refutes these Quirks easily and solidly; but he considers Bion as a Tyrant, who would be cruel at certain times, and at other times plunder Temples. When he would be cruel, he makes use of his first Syllogism; It is a Decree for the Destruction of all Robbers: and he makes use of the second, when he desires to enrich himself with the Spoils of Holy Places.

[K] I know not where König found, that Bion died in the fourth Year of the CXXXIVth Olympiad. I have before supposed (47), that Plutarch makes our Bion flourish in the Reign of the first Antigonos; and I have not found Aldobrandinus's Opinion very certain, viz. that That Philosopher was questioned as to his Birth by Antigonos Gonatas. To make This more clear, I must observe here, that Eratostratus had known Bion at Athens, and reckoned him among his Heroes. It cannot reasonably be questioned, but that Strabo, who informs us of This (48), meant Bion the Borysthenite; for what he says that Eratostratus ascribed to his Bion (49), is the fame, which Eratostratus ascribes, in Diogenes Laërtius, to Bion the Borysthenite. Wherefore, since Eratostratus was born in the first Year of the CXXVth Olympiad (50), it must necessarily be granted, that Bion attained, at least, to the beginning of the CXXXIst; for, under twenty Years of Age, Eratostratus's Acquaintance with him had not deferred to be mentioned. I see but one Difficulty in This Supposition; which is, that I observe, that the Learned Mr du Rondel intimates, that Epicurus survived Bion (51). Now Epicurus died in the second Year of the CXXVIIIth Olympiad. I only propose This Difficulty, to engage Mr du Rondel learnedly to clear up This Point of Chronology.

[L] According to him, to bear, with the same Tranquillity, Injuries, and Civilities, is to have made some Progress in Virtue. Bion told his Friends, and Disciples, that They might then be assured of their Proficiency, when they could endure a Reproof, as patiently, as they could hear the highest Encomiums, even such an one as This of the Poet *.

Some Heavenly Flame inspires your Breast;
Live great, rejoice, and be for ever blest.

Plutarch had reason to observe, that the Rule of Bion is rather a Sign of a confirmed and perfect Habit of the Soul, than merely of Amendment. It is, in truth, a Character of Perfection (52).

[M] His Answer to Theognis has not so much Morality in it. Plutarch has preserved it, and speaks well of it. These are his Words. 'And witty also was That Answer of Bion, in Opposition to these Verses of Theognis,

One cannot speak, or act, if poor be he:
His Tongue is bound to his Peace, as well as He.

'How comes it to pass then, said he, Theognis, that Thyself, being so poor, pratest and torturest our Ears in This Manner (53)?' The insolent and insulting Spirit of This Philosopher appears in This; A poor Poet, who complains, that Poverty ties up his Tongue, ought not to be treated in this Manner; for, though Experience often shews, that want of Bread, and Cloaths, makes a Man very talkative: yet it is certain, that there are many things, which a Man ill-dressed dares not say.

Plurima sunt, quæ

Non audent homines pertusa dicere læna (54).

(53) Plut. de Audiend. Poetis, pag. 22.

(54) Juven. Sat. v. ver. 130.

I say, it is certain, that Indigence chills the Hands of many People, and stops their Mouths, as Theognis observed. And therefore he was of Opinion, that a Man should use his utmost endeavours to get rid of Misery; and that Death itself ought to be preferred to Poverty.

Ἀνδρ' ἀγαθὸν περὶ πᾶν δάμνησι μάλισα,
καὶ γῆρας πολὺ, Κύρνε, καὶ ἡπιάλυ.
Ἦν δὲ χρὴ εὐχόμενα καὶ ἐς μεγαλήτεα πύλον ῥίπτεω καὶ πείρων, Κύρνε, κατ' ἡλιεάταν.
Πᾶς γὰρ ἀνὴρ περὶ δειμνυμένῳ ἔτε τι
εἰπὼν,
Ὅδ' ἔρξαι δύναται γλώσσα δὲ δὲ
ῥέει.
Χρὴ γὰρ ὁμῶς ἐπὶ γῆν τε καὶ ἐνὶ ἄνθρω-ποις
Δίξεναι χαλεπῆς, Κύρνε, λύσιν πένης.
Τεθνῆναι, φίλε Κύρνε, περὶ χρεὼ βέλτερον ἀνδρὶ, ἢ ζῶεν χαλεπῇ τερρώμενον πένι (55).

Nor Sickness self, or trembling Age, we see Subdue the Mind like Coward Poverty.
Fly Poverty, as from the worst of Foes;
Let Seas, and lofty Rocks, her dire approach oppose.
Sunk in himself, and conquered by his Fears,
Unfit to act, or speak, The Poor appears.
Chuse then to die, e'er Poverty you see;
For Death, at least, my Friend, will set you free.

(55) Theognis, pag. 17. ver. 173.

BIRON, Marshal of France. Look for GONTAUT.

BLANC (Lewis de) Professor of Divinity at Sedan. Look for BEAULIEU.

BLANCHE of Castile, the Mother of St Lewis, King of France. Look for CASTILE.

BLANDRATA

(a) Biblioth.
Antitrich. pag.
28.

(b) This Piece is printed among Calvin's Opu-
cula.

(c) In the Article
ALCIATUS
(JOHN PAUL),
and in that of GENTILIS
(VALENTINUS)

(d) Taken from the 322d Letter of Calvin.

BLANDRATA (GEORGE), an Italian Physician, born in the Marquisate of Saluces [A], lived in the XVIth Century. He fled from Pavia (a), where the Inquisition would have play'd him a scurvy Trick, and retired to Geneva [B]. He embraced the Protestant Religion there, and, at first, edified the Church by his Conduct and Docility; but it was perceived afterwards, that he attacked, privately, the Divinity of JESUS CHRIST. He was not contented to spread his Difficulties among the Ignorant, but proposed them to the Minister of the Italian Church. That Minister, who was of the Family of the Counts of Martinengo, rebuked him, and would not so much as make use of him in his, or his Wife's, Sickness, though he earnestly offered his Service. Calvin, to whom the same Difficulties had been proposed an hundred times, seeing, that, though his Answers had appeared satisfactory, the same Objections were raised the next Day, was, at last, angry with Blandrata, and treated him harshly [C]. Nevertheless he continued to salute him, and to speak to him; and was also so complaisant, as to answer his Objections in Writing (b). But, having discovered, that a Trap was laid for him, in requiring an Answer in writing, he would hear Blandrata no more. It is reported, that This Heretic accused Calvin publickly of something he had written, and that his Accusation was convicted of falsity by producing the Original. Some time after, the Consistory of the Italian Church proceeded, as I have elsewhere related (c). Calvin assured Blandrata, that he should not be proceeded against for his past Faults; but Blandrata durst not trust to it; for, some days after, seeing one of the Syndics of the Republic come to the Auditory of Divinity, where he was hearing a Lecture of Calvin, he pretended to bleed at the Nose, and fled as fast as he could, and came no more to Geneva (d) [D].

Having

[A] He was born in the Marquisate of Saluces. Who would not wonder, that Mr Moreri should think, there is a great Difference between Piedmont, and This Marquisate? Blandrata, says he, was a Piedmontois. Others say, he was a Native of the Marquisate of Saluces. There are no ways different Opinions: Those, who make him a Piedmontois, do not pretend to place this Marquisate out of Piedmont; They take Piedmont in its general Signification, as is usual, when one does not design to explain all the Duke of Savoy's Dominions, exactly, and Geographically. Now it is certain, that this Service, the Marquisate of Saluces is Part of Piedmont. See Blandrata's Dictionary.

[B] He retired to Geneva. Moreri makes him go from Pavia to Poland, and says nothing of his Journey to Geneva. This is no ways exact. Blandrata was more than once in Poland, which ought to have been observed. He practised Physic there before he went to Geneva. He had so practised it in Transylvania before the same Journey to Geneva: And, having been a Physician of Reputation in That Country (for he had been a Physician to Queens) he chose rather to retire thither (1), than elsewhere, when he thought he could not be safe in Geneva, or in Switzerland. This is one of Those Combinations of Moral and Physical Things, of which Father Mallebranche speaks, in his Treatise of Nature and Grace. How comes it, that Poland and Transylvania were sooner infected with the Errors of the Socinians, than any another Country? It is, because the general Laws, which excite our natural Passions, and our Reason, would have it, that George Blandrata, being forced to seek a Retreat, should rather pitch upon a Place, where he was very well acquainted, than upon an unknown Country. This is the reason, why he went from Geneva to Poland; and, when he was there, he invited Alciatus and Socinus to come to him; he intruded himself among the Great; a Prince of Transylvania, whose Physician he was, became his Profelyte, &c. However it be, Moreri should have said, that Blandrata had been a Physician in Poland, and in Transylvania, before the Inquisition of Pavia laid hands on him; that, being fled from Pavia, he went to Geneva; and that, leaving Geneva, he returned to Poland.

[C] Calvin — treated him harshly. Calvin makes no scruple to confess how harshly he spoke to him. I see by your Face what a detestable Monster you feed in your Heart. Here is the whole Passage. Eodem tempore suis questionibus fatigabat Calvinum, eoque magis, quod cum subinde fingeret se placatum esse & acquiescere responsis, postredie redibat quasi novus, nec definebat ea ipsa de quibus saepe audierat, sciscitari. Itaque coactus est ei Calvinus in faciem dicere, vultus tuus detestabile

monstrum mihi ostendit quod in corde occultum fovet, ac saepius eum asperere objurgavit, ut si fieri posset, corrigeret perfidiam, & fallacias doloque reuolos, quorum fastidio erat quodammodo decessus (2). — At the same time, he wearied Calvin with his Questions, and the more, because, pretending to be satisfied, he the next Day returned afresh, and repeated the same Question. This obliged Calvin to tell him to his Face, that his Countenance betrayed the detestable Monster he nourished in his Heart, and often severely reproved him, to correct, if possible, his Insincerity, and Quibbling, with which he was quite surfeited.

[D] He fled from Geneva as fast as he could. Several Authors are mistaken as to the time, when Blandrata left Geneva. They say, he did not leave it, till Valentinus Gentilis had retired into the Territories of the Canton of Bern: But this is false. Gentilis did not go away till after he had made the Amende honorable in all the cross Streets of the City, the second of September 1558. Abnegatione per compita civitatis facta, dimittitur (Gentilis) praestito jurejurando sese portas urbis non excessurum: mox tamen violata fide ad Matthaeum Gribaldum in Sabaudiam profugit. Sequuti sunt aliquanto post Alciatus & Blandrata (3). — Having made a public Abjuration, Gentilis was dismissed, upon Oath not to leave the City; yet, afterwards, violating his Faith, he fled to Matthew Gribaldus in Savoy. Soon after followed Alciatus and Blandrata. Primus Valentinus Gentilis in judicium vocatus, simulata poenitentia non sine insigni perjurio profugit. Sequutus est Paulus Alciatus, aut etiam praecessit, solo male conscientiae vulnere adactus. Blandrata aliquanto post (4) — Valentinus Gentilis, being first prosecuted, and pretending repentance, fled away, not without notorious Perjury. Paulus Alciatus followed him, or rather went before him, moved only by the Consciousness of his Guilt. A little after, went Blandrata. Erat ille Blandrata Salucensis, professione Medicus, qui Gentilem Geneva profugum paulo post sequutus fuit (5). — That Blandrata was of Saluces, by Profession a Physician, who followed Valentinus Gentilis, when he was exiled from Geneva.

Now it appears by a Letter of Peter Martyr, dated the eleventh of July 1558, that Blandrata and Alciatus had been already at Zurich, and that they did not go from thence, till after Martyr had given them this Advice. The Mistake of Hornius is still worse. He says, that Blandrata and Alciatus, being terrified with the Execution of Servetus and Gentilis, retired from Switzerland to Poland, and that, having been expelled from Poland in the Year 1565, Alciatus turned Mahometan, and Blandrata fled into Transylvania (6). There is nothing of Truth in this. I have consulted the pretended

(1) See in Clit.
(2) the Passage of Beza's 8th Letter.

(2) Calvin, Epist. 322.

(3) Beza, in vita Calvini.

(4) Id. Epist. 80.

(5) Hoornbeek, Appar. Advers. Socinian, pag. 24.

(6) Hornius, Hist. Eccles. pag. 351. Eda. 1677.

(e) Post varias deliberationes ita fors tulit, ut Blandrata, qui Medicinam diu in Polonia primum deinde in Transylvania apud Reginas fecerat, eo reverteretur. Benaz, Epist. 51.

Having formerly practised Physic in Poland, and Transylvania, he pitched upon that Stage, to dogmatize at his ease (e). He went into Poland, in the Year 1558, and was honourably received there by The Protestants. Calvin made him see, that so considerable a Divine as he was, could reach him there [E]. He wrote several Letters to the Faithful in Poland, in which he exhorted them to drive this Man from among them, who might infect the Purity of the Faith with his Heresies. The Impression, which these Letters made, very much crossed the Designs of George Blandrata; but nothing proved so contrary to him, as the Discords, which arose among Those, who, like him, opposed the Mystery of the Trinity: But, notwithstanding Those Discords, the Socinian Heresy was settled some time after in those Parts. He changed his Scene in the Year 1563, having been invited into Transylvania by Prince John Sigismund (f). We must not forget, that, at his coming into Poland, he was made Elder of the Churches under the Jurisdiction of Cracow (g), and that, in the Year 1560, the Synod of Xianz, to which he had brought the Sum of Six hundred Crowns from Nicolas Radzivil, great Chancellor of Lithuania, made him, and his good Friend Lismannus (h), Assistants to Cruciger, who was Superintendent of the Churches. They were willing to assign him Colleagues, lest the Ecclesiastical Government should too much resemble Papacy (i). Neither must we forget, that, in the Year 1561, Blandrata appeared in the Synod of Pinczovia with Letters of Recommendation from

(f) Bibl. Antitritin. pag. 28.

(g) Ibid. See also Calvin, Epist. 320.

(h) Lectus, Compend. Histor. Universi p. 41.

(i) Id. ibid.

(7) See Remark [D], of the Article ALCIATUS (JOHN PAUL).

(8) Biblioth. Antitritin. pag. 28. Hist. Reformat. Polonice, p. 170.

(9) Pag. 412.

(10) Benaz, Epist. 51.

(11) Hist. de l'Armen. Tom. III. pag. 34. Edit. Holl.

(12) In Remark [L].

(13) See Remark [E], of the Article ALCIATUS (JOHN PAUL).

Mahometism of John Paul Alciatus elsewhere (7); and I say here, that Blandrata retired into Poland the same Year that he left Geneva, that is, in the Year 1558. Now, Gentilis having been beheaded in the Year 1566, one may easily judge, whether it could be the reason why Blandrata left Switzerland, and fled into Poland. If That Punishment had made him resolve to fly into That Country, could he have been expelled from it in the Year 1565? Some Persons, more to be credited in these Matters, than Hornius, affirm, that John Sigismund, Prince of Transylvania, sent for Blandrata about the Year 1563 (8). It was not, therefore, a Decree of Banishment, which obliged him to fly from Poland into Transylvania in the Year 1565. John Letus has committed a surprising Mistake in his Abridgment of Universal History (9). In three Lines, he makes two Men of the Physician Blandrata and George Blandrata. As to the first, he says, that the Synod of Xianz made him Assistant to the Superintendent of the Churches in the Year 1560; and he supposes, that the second went into Poland, when the Disorders, occasioned by Stancarus, were hardly over. Which is a new Error. The Disputes, which Stancarus had raised, by maintaining, that JESUS CHRIST is not a Mediator, as to his Divine Nature, were in their Height at the Arrival of Blandrata. 'Tum autem forte Francisci Stancari Mantuani petulantissimi hominis importunitate (ut sane fatalis esse videtur Polonis Italia) scissæ erant Polonicæ Ecclesiæ (10). --- At that time, the Polish Churches were divided, through the Turbulency of Francis Stancarus of Mantua, Italy seeming to be fatal to the Poles. But all this is nothing in Comparison of Father Maimbourg's Anachronisms. He says, our Blandrata went into Transylvania in the Year 1553 (11). He supposes, that, in the same Year, Prince John Sigismund took Delight to hear his Physician, when, setting up for a Divine, he spoke like a Philosopher of the Trinity, which he termed a Chimera. He adds, that This Prince durst not yet declare himself, as well because his Mother, Queen Isabella, a most Catholic Princess, was still living, as because Soliman did not desire, that a Diversity of Sects should be suffered. This relates to the Year 1555. He says, that, out of Complaisance to Soliman, all the Heretics were banished; but that, the Queen, and Soliman, dying soon after, in the Year 1566, the Innovators returned, and enjoyed great Liberty, and that it was then, that Blandrata corrupted the greatest Part of the Court. What a strange way of relating things! How many Fallacies! We shall see hereafter (12), Varillai's Anachronisms and Visions. [E] Calvin made him see, that so considerable a Divine, as he was, could reach him (13). It appears from Calvin's Letters, that the Churches of Poland conceived a great Esteem and Affection for Blandrata; but it appears also from the Socinian Histories, that Calvin's Letters were looked upon as a Perfection, which forced Blandrata to retire elsewhere. Here are the Proofs of these two Particulars. 'Valde miror hominem, quem sola ostentatio & fastuosus vultus commendat, tanti apud vos fieri, ut quasi novus Atlas Ecclesiam sustineat suis humeris. Certè tam inconsideratæ credulitatis nisi me puderet gentem vestram non amarem' (14). --- I am very much surprized, that one, who has nothing to recommend him, but Vanity, and Ostentation, should thus gain your Esteem, as if he were a new Atlas, who bears the Church up on his Shoulders. Were I not ashamed of such rash Credulity, I should not love your Nation. 'Unum non dissimulo, eos qui tam humaniter Georgium Blandratam exceperunt parum fuisse cautos & providos, & male consuluisse vestræ exultationi. Magis etiam miror quosdam primariæ auctoritatis viros graviter offendi quod libere hominem detexerim (15). --- One Thing I will not dissimble, viz. that They, who so kindly received George Blandrata, were not very cautious, and but ill consulted your Reputation. I am still more surprized, that Men of the highest Authority are offended at my exposing the Man. 'Ergo non vulgare fecit operæ pretium longo itinere quod tantum sibi nomen acquisierit. Nullus est apud alias gentes, vos admiramini non secus atque Angelum e Cælo delapsum. Vestræ delicias minime vobis invideo (16). --- This Journey, therefore, which gained him so great a Name, was of very great Advantage to him. Other Nations despise him; you admire him as an Angel from Heaven. 'I do not in the least envy you your Favourite.' You see how zealously Calvin expresses his Anger, because Blandrata had met with so many Bubbles, who admired him, and were offended at a public Writing, in which he was traduced (17). Let us see now the Proofs of the Operation of This Remedy. 'Calvinus his non contentus Blandratam quum alia ratione non posset literis in Poloniam missis persequi, apud patronos & fratres acriter criminari, ita cuncta ad eum perdendum agere. --- Illæ ejus literæ fidem in multorum animis invenerant (18). --- Calvin, not satisfied with This, when he could do it no otherwise, persecuted Blandrata by Letters, which he sent to Poland, accused him sharply to his Patrons and Brethren, and left no Stone unturned to ruin him. --- These Letters of his influenced many. Quam ille (Blandrata) vocationem tanto alacrius amplexus est, quod eum Calvinus missis per Poloniam & Lituaniam literis persequi non desisteret, ita ut ei tutam in his oris vitam agere per ejus cæcælium non licuerit, pro ut in superioribus exposuimus (19). --- Which Invitation Blandrata the more readily accepted, because Calvin ceased not to persecute him by Letters, which he sent into Poland and Lithuania, insomuch, that the false Zeal of the latter would not suffer him to lead a quiet Life, in those Parts, as we have seen above. 'Cum nec hic quiete degere posset, Calvinus scriptis suis eum persequente, à Johanne Sigismundo Principe circa ann. 1563, evocatus, concessit

(14) Calvinus, Epist. cccxix.

(15) Id. Epist. cccxx.

(16) Id. Epist. cccxxi.

(17) It is the Preface of Calvin's Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles.

(18) Histor. Reformat. Polon. pag. 126.

(19) Ibid. pag. 170.

from Nicolas Radzivil, and that he delivered a Confession of Faith there, in virtue of which the Assembly gave him an honourable Testimonial [F]. Having retired into Transylvania, where he was supported by the Favour of John Sigismund, whose Physician he was, and by that of Petrovitz, chief Minister of State, he boldly discovered his Heresy, and chiefly after the public Dispute, which he maintained with Francis David against some Reformed Doctors, in the presence of the whole Court, in the Year 1566 (k). The Prince adhered entirely to the Antitrinitarian Party, and died in that Persuasion in Blandrata's Arms, in the Year 1570 (l). This Heretic did not want new Patrons; he was Physician to Stephen and Christopher Battori, Princes of Transylvania. He was also Stephen's Physician, when That Prince enjoyed the Kingdom of Poland, and even a Member of his Privy-Council (m). He strenuously opposed Francis David, who, not being contented to deny the Divinity of JESUS CHRIST, maintained moreover, that he ought not to be worshipped. Blandrata called Faustus Socinus to his assistance from Switzerland, to oppose Francis David (n); I say he called him to Transylvania in the Year 1578, where he was Prince Christopher Battori's Physician. The Favour, which he found himself in with the King of Poland, made him take so much Delight in hoarding up Riches, that, for fear of cooling that Prince's Liberality, he deserted the Interests of the Unitarians, and began to favour the Jesuits [G]. He was yet living about the Year 1585 (o), when Bellarmin wrote his Treatise de Christo; but he was dead in the Year 1592, when Socinus wrote against Wuiekus. Father Maimbourg says, that Blandrata became mad, and that he was knocked on the Head by one of his Nephews, who carried all his Money away (p). I know not whether what is said of his Madness may be credited; but the other Fact is certain, and has been imputed to a Judgment of God, both by the Orthodox, and the Heterodox

(k) See Maimbourg, Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. III, pag. 346. Edition of Holland.

(l) Maimb. ib. pag. 361, but he says 1571, instead of 1570.

(m) See Remark [E], towards the end.

(n) Wissowatius, Narrat. Compend. in Bibl. Antitrinit. pag. 213.

(o) Biblioth. Antitrin. pag. 28.

(p) Maimb. ubi supra, pag. 361. ex Reficio de Atheism. Evangel.

(20) Bibl. Antitrin. pag. 28.

* Socinus, dedicating to him his second Answer to Volanus, calls him Stephani Regis Poloniz Archiepiscopi & Confiliarii intimus.

(21) Andreas Wengericius, Slavonic reformate, lib. 1, cap. xlii. pag. 85. Edit. 1679.

(22) Id. ibid. pag. 86.

(23) Id. ibid.

concessit in Transylvaniam, atque illic egit ipse, hinc Stephani & Christophori Bathoreorum Transylvaniz Principum, immo & Stephani ad regnum Poloniz jam erecti, archiatrum & consiliarium intimum (20). * . . . When he could neither here enjoy Quiet, being persecuted by Calvin's Letters, he accepted of the Invitation of Prince John Sigismund, about the Year 1563, and went into Transylvania, where he was Chief Physician, and Privy Counsellor, to Stephen, and Christopher Bathori, Princes of Transylvania, and to Stephen, even when he was raised to the Throne of Poland.

[F] He appeared at the Synod of Pinczovia, with Letters of Recommendation from Nicolas Radzivil, and he delivered a Confession of Faith there.] What Calvin had written to That great Polish Lord, to acquaint him, that George Blandrata secretly held Servetus's Heresies, had not yet produced it's necessary Effect; Blandrata had ward off the Blow by his Artifices; for Nicolas Radzivil made great Complaints of the Churches Behaviour towards Blandrata, and declared, that Calvin had dealt unjustly and rashly with him. 'Homo iste facile technis suis fallacibus, optimo principi fucum facit, adeo ut ille iratus Joh. Calvino, Blandratam nomine suo ad Synodum Pinczoviensem, An. 1561. 25 Jan. habitam, delegaret cum literis, quibus serio exposculabat in causa Blandratæ cum Ecclesia, dicebatque male & precipitanter egisse J. Calvinum, quod Blandratam traduceret, & Servetismi notaret (21). Blandrata pleaded his Cause in the Synod very boldly, and cunningly: Here is the Confession, which he delivered: It was very Orthodox: 'Fateor me credere in unum Deum Patrem, in unum Dominum Jesum Christum Filium ejus, & in unum Spiritum Sanctum, quorum quilibet est essentialiter Deus. Deorum pluralitatem detestor, cum unus nobis sit tantum Deus essentia indivisibilis. Fateor tres esse distinctas hypostasies & æternam Christi divinitatem ac generationem, & Spiritum Sanctum verum & æternum Deum ab utroque procedentem (22). . . . I profess to believe in one God the Father, in one Lord JESUS CHRIST his Son, and in one HOLY GHOST, each of which is essentially God. I abhor a Plurality of Gods, since there is to us but one God, indivisible in Essence. I believe three distinct Hypostasies, and the eternal Divinity and Generation of CHRIST, and the Holy Spirit, true and eternal God, proceeding from them both.' The Effect of This Confession was such, that the Synod supplied him with a good Certificate; which appeared also by the Letters, which the Assembly wrote to Nicolas Radzivil, and to John Calvin (23).

[G] He forsook the Interest of the Unitarians, and favoured the Jesuits.] This we learn from Socinus, who complains of it in his Answer to P. Wuiekus. He confesses, that Blandrata had done their Sect many Services; de nostris Ecclesiis aliquando præclarè est meritis; but, says he, he fell off in his latter Days. 'Haud paulo ante mortem suam, vivente adhuc Stephano Rege Poloniz, in illius gratiam, & quo illum erga se liberaliorem (ut fecit) redderet, plurimum remisit de studio suo in Ecclesiis nostris Transylvanicis nostrisque hominibus juvandis; imo eò tandem devenisse ut vix existimaretur priorem quam tantopere foverat de Deo & Christo sententiam retinere; sed potius Jesuitis, qui in ea Provincia tunc temporis Stephani Regis & ejus fratris Christophori, Principis haud multo ante vita functi, ope ac liberalitate non mediocriter florebant, jam adherere, aut certe cum eis quodammodo colludere. Illud certissimum est eum ab eo tempore, quo liberalitatem, quam ambiebat, regis Stephani erga se est expertus, cepisse quosdam ex nostris hominibus quos carissimos prius habebat & suis opibus juvabat, spernere ac deferere, etiam contra promissa & obligationem suam, & tandem illos penitus deseruisse, atque omni veræ ac sinceræ pietatis studio valedixisse, & folis pecuniis congerendis intentum fuisse, quæ fortasse, justissimo Dei judicio, quod gravissimum exercere solet contra tales desertores, ei necem ab eo, quem suum hæredem secerat, conciliarunt (24). — Some time before his Death, while Stephen, King of Poland, was yet living, to ingratiate himself with That Prince, and obtain more of his Favours, he cooled in his Zeal for the Transylvanian Churches, and our Party; nay he went so far, that he scarce seemed to retain his former Notion, which he so zealously had maintained, of God and CHRIST; but rather to adhere to the Jesuits, in Pretence at least, who were, then, in great Credit in That Province, through the Favour and Liberality of King Stephen, and his Brother Christopher, a Prince lately deceased. It is very certain, that, from the Time he experienced the Bounty of King Stephen, which he courted, he began to neglect and despise some of our Party, whom before he greatly loved, and assisted with his Fortunes, even contrary to Promises, and the Obligation he lay under; that at length he quite deserted them, and, bidding adieu to the Study of true and sincere Piety, was wholly bent on amassing Wealth; which things, by the just Judgment of God, which generally falls heavy on such Apostates, perhaps occasioned his Death by the Hands of his Heir.' It is said, that his Brother's Son strangled him in his Sleep (25).

(24) Socini Resp. n. ad Wuiekum, cap. 11. pag. 43. Vide Hoornbeek, Appar. pag. 25.

(25) See, below, Cited. (27).

[H] His

rodox [H]. The Catalogue of Blandrata's Works may be seen in the Bibliothèque of the Antitrinitarians [I]. They had such a mean Opinion of his Pen at Geneva, that it was believed, there, that the Works, which came out in his Name, were revised by another [K]. In the Remark [D], I shall take notice of several false Dates concerning his Adventures, and in the Remark [K], of several Mistakes concerning his Errors. Before I conclude, I must observe, that the Unitarian Historians speak of the Confession of Faith, which he presented to the Synods of Poland, with so many Disguises (q).

The Anachronisms, and Chimeras of Varillas, are so strange, that one cannot forbear making some Reflexions on them [L].

(q) Vide Histor. Reformat. Polon. pag. 130. & Bibl. Antitrin. pag. 135, 136.

[H] His Death was attributed to the Judgment of God both by the Orthodox and Heterodox. We have seen (26) how Socinus applies to him the Judgment of God, which he is used to exercise with great Severity against those, who desert his Cause for worldly Interests. If Father Maimbourg had heard of Blandrata's Kindness for the Jesuits, he would not have judged of his End as he did; and would not have added Madness to it. But let us hear a learned Divine of Leyden. 'A fratris sui filio in lecto jacens suffocatus fuit: sanè non extra justam Dei ultionem in hominem, quem primum in istis Ecclesiis execranda heresis, multarum in Deum & ejus veritatem blasphemiarum, librorum horrendissimorum turbarumque gravissimarum auctorem non aliter quam singulari diroque mortis genere occumbere oportuit (27). — He was strangled in Bed by his Brother's Son: in which appeared the just Vengeance of God upon one, who deserved to die a remarkable and dreadful kind of Death, as having been the first Propagator of an execrable Heresy in those Churches, as having uttered many Blasphemies against God, and his Truth, and been the Author of many vile Books, and the greatest Disturbances.'

(27) Hoorn-beeck, Appar. pag. 26. Konig is mistaken, as to the time. Perit, says he, in lecto strangulatus per fratrem quem heredem constituerat. Ann. 1560.

[I] The Catalogue of Blandrata's Works appears in the Bibliothèque of the Antitrinitarians. There are two sorts of them: Some belong but in part to him; others seem to be wholly his. Among the latter, there are some Theses, Letters, and Observations concerning the Invocation of JESUS CHRIST, which have only been printed in other Books. Most of them have been inserted in a Piece, which James Paleologus published in 1580; wherein he refutes the Judgment of the Polish Churches in the Case of Francis David. As to the Works, in which Blandrata had only a Share, the chief are, the two Conferences held at Alba Julia, the one in 1566, and the other in 1568; The Book entitled, De falsa & vera unius Dei Patris, Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, cognitione, auctoribus Ministris Ecclesiarum consentientium in Sarmatia & Transylvania, printed at Alba Julia, in the Year 1567 (28); and That, which is entitled, Refutatio scripti Georgii Majoris in quo Deum trinum in personis & unum essentia, unicum deinde ejus filium in persona & duplicem in naturis ex lacunis Anticristi probare conatus est, printed in the Year 1569. Hoorn-beeck complains justly, that Those Heretics had inserted some abominable Pictures in These two Pieces, which served to represent the Trinity (29). Temeraria & horrenda Papistarum simulacra quæ æterna oblivione, & execratione sepelienda erant potius — non detegenda illa pudenda, & prostituenda coram omnibus, &c (30).

(28) Bellarmin had seen this Book, he quotes it several times.

(29) Apparatus pag. 27. See also pag. 55.

(30) Id. ibid. pag. 27.

(31) Beza, Epist. 81.

[K] It was believed, that his Works were revised by another. Beza declares it plainly enough: Extat, says he (31), apud me ipsius Blandratæ epistola (non tamen scripta sine Theseo, si Blandratam bene novi) in qua Gregorium suo quodam jure non tantum de illa pædobaptismi controversia non satis opportunè mota increpat, verum etiam apertè illum à Trithemismo ad Samofateni dogma revocare nititur. — I have by me an Epistle of Blandrata himself (not written without a good Assistant, if I know Blandrata well) in which, with a Freedom natural to him, he not only reproves Gregory, for unseasonably setting on Foot the Controversy about Infant Baptism, but endeavours to bring him back from Trithemism to the Doctrine of Paulus Samofatenus. But what he had before said is a stronger Proof of it; for he had named the Person, who put Blandrata's Thoughts in order. Petro quodam Statorio juvene, alioqui bono ingenio nec contemnenda doctrina prædito, operam omnem suam fucandis barbarissimis scriptoris Blandratæ commentis navante. — Peter Statorius, a young Man, otherwise of a good Genius, and no contemptible Learning, employed his whole Time in disposing and ordering the Thoughts of That most barbarous Writer, Blandrata. I might have been contented to set down only Part of the first Passage; but I had some Reasons for doing what I have done. The Words which I have quoted, which are of no use for the Proof of the Question, serve to confute Moreri for not having well characterized Blandrata's Heresy. He accuses him of having taught Arianism, and the same Tenets as Valentinus Gentilis: Which is to speak in too general and even deceitful Terms. Blandrata was at first an Arian; I believe it; but he only passed through That Opinion; He fell into That of Paulus Samofatenus, in which he was more fixed, than in any other. So that he ought to be distinguished by That, and not by Arianism. Consider the Nature of the Letter, mentioned by Beza in the beginning of This Remark. Besides, it is certain, that Socinus, and the Historians of Socinianism, mention Blandrata as a Socinian; and Prince John Sigismund as a Man, who, after the Conferences, which were held in his Presence, embraced the Doctrine of the Unitarians, in the Sense, which the Socinians put upon That Name (32). Maimbourg ascribes only Arianism, to Blandrata, and to Prince John Sigismund; and pretends, that Blandrata gained over the Minister Francis David, who, says he (33), from a Protestant became an Arian. These are two new Fallhoods. Francis David was worse than a Socinian: and it was He, who brought Blandrata nearer to That System. Let us hear Beza. 'Incidit Blandrata in Transylvaniam rediens in quemdam Franciscum Davidis, paulo magis quam superiores illi ut ajunt providum, qui cum nimium crassam esse illam Trithemitarum blasphemiam simpliciter propositam animadvertisset, maluit omnia involvere, permixtis omnium pene hac in re hereseon commentis, quam simpliciter suam sententiam profiteri (34). — As Blandrata was returning into Transylvania, he happened to meet with one Francis David, a more provident Man, as they say, than those, who went before him: this Man, observing, that the Blasphemy of the Trithemists, simply proposed, was too gross, chose to blend together all the Heretical Opinions in this matter, rather than simply profess his own Sentiments. The Truth is, that Blandrata, relishing the Samofatenian Hypothesis of Francis David, and finding it more consistent, than the Nonsense, which he had believed till then, forsook Trithemism, and became a good Unitarian. Gentilis did not the same; and therefore Moreri should not have confounded the Doctrine of These Men. Let us once more hear Beza. 'Inde in Moravian ad Blandratam & Alciatum alioque nihil meliores discedit (Gentilis); ubi cum satis inter eos convivere non posset, quod à Trithemismo ad Samofatenum plerique transivissent — in Sabaudiam ad suum Gribaldum redit (35). — Gentilis, then, departed into Moravia to Blandrata, Alciatus, and others of the same Stamp, where finding, that they could not agree among themselves, many of them having gone over from Trithemism to the Doctrine of Paulus Samofatenus — he returned into Savoy to his Friend Gribaldus. De Blandrata rogatus (Gentilis), perit etiam, inquit, ut qui in Sabellii & Samofateni delirium incidit (36). — Gentilis being asked concerning Blandrata, replied, He is lost, He is fallen into the Errors of Sabellius, and Paulus Samofatenus.'

(32) Wislowski. Narrat. Compend. in Bibl. Antitrin. p. 213.

(33) Maimb. Hist. of Arian. pag. 345.

(34) Epist. 81.

(35) Beza in vita Calvini.

(36) Id. Epist. 81.

[L] The Anachronisms and Chimeras of Varillas are so strange, that I cannot forbear making some Reflexions on Them. He says, that George Blandrata,

Since the second Edition, I have seen a Book, in which it is asserted, that he had drank plentifully, before he went to Bed, the very Night in which he died; and that it was a Question, whether some one of his Relations, or the Devil, had killed him [M].

(37) Varillas, Hist. de l' Heresie, lib. 18. pag. 149, Edit. Holl.

(38) Ibid. pag. 150.

drata, being persuaded, that a fine Wit could not continue long in the Catholic Religion - - - - took the Pains to search, among the ancient Heresies, for That which would suit him best, and at last pitched upon Arianism (37). - - - - that he taught it after a quite new way, in the City of Pavia (38), that the Magistrate confined him to a Prison, where he would have remained all his Life, if he had not found the way to bribe a Keeper, who set him at liberty; that he fled to Geneva, where, not finding himself enough at Liberty, he travelled, till he found, in Transylvania, what he had sought for elsewhere in vain. ' They were extremely exasperated, there, against the House of Austria, on account of the Murder of Cardinal Martinusius. - - - - These Dispositions seemed so favourable to Blandrata, that he staid in Transylvania, with a Design to make his Advantage of them.' He made himself known by his Skill in Physic, and was preferred to the Dignity of Physician to young John Sigismund. ' The greatest Persons of Transylvania took it as an honour, after the Choice their Sovereign had made of Blandrata, that he would condescend to visit them in their Sickness, which he did frequently. During the Course of their Sickness, he spoke only of diverting Matters to them: but, after he had cured, or at least persuaded them, that he had contributed much to their Recovery, he changed his Discourse insensibly, and fell upon Politics. He made them observe, that the Italians, who had killed Cardinal Martinusius, and the House of Austria, which certainly had ordered, or at least approved, That Crime, could not be persuaded of the Catholic Religion; since They had not scrupled to attempt the Life of a Man, who ought to have been inviolable to them by all that was most sacred in the Catholic Religion, because he was a Priest, an Archbishop, and a Cardinal all at once. If Blandrata perceived, that his Proposition was not very acceptable, he went no farther: But, if he observed, that they heard him with Pleasure, he added, with a low Voice, and as if he would have explained a great Mystery to them, that the Catholic Religion, in the deplorable Condition, to which human Corruption had reduced it, was but an Artifice, which the Court of Rome, and the House of Austria, made use of, to share the Empire of the World between them: That the Court of Rome made use of the Illusion, to maintain and

' advance itself in the Tyranny it had usurped over Men's Consciences; and that the House of Austria took also advantage of it, to establish a sole Monarchy in Europe; That the new Sects had indeed found out the Evil, but had not remedied it; since, by admitting the Trinity of the Divine Persons in such a Manner, as the Popes had settled the Belief of it, they must, by a necessary Consequence, give credit to the rest of the same Pope's Doctrines, which were only Consequences drawn from That Principle: Whereas, by acknowledging no more Persons, than Natures, in God, all the Difficulties, raised during fifteen Centuries, would be removed: the Holy Scripture would be understood by itself; there would be no more occasion for Councils; and the Popes, being no longer consulted, would lose their Authority. These were the ways, by which Arianism was revived in Transylvania (39).'

Few Words will suffice to shew the Impostures of This Historian, and to convict him of publishing the Imaginations of his own Mind for Historical Facts. Do but consider, that he supposes all This happened in the Year 1552; and he was obliged to suppose it, since Martinusius was murdered towards the latter end of the foregoing Year. Observe also, that he supposes, that Blandrata was gone from Geneva, before he went to dogmatize in Transylvania. Now what will you think, when you come to know, that This Heretic did not leave Geneva till 1558, and that he was not invited into Transylvania to be John Sigismund's Physician, till towards the Year 1563? What will you say of so many Arguments, grounded on the Murder of Cardinal Martinusius? What will you say of his Skill in managing the Dispositions of Those, whom That Murder had lately exasperated? Take notice, that no one accuses him of having dogmatized in Transylvania, during his Residence there, before he had been imprisoned at Pavia.

[M] I have read, that he had drank plentifully, the Night, in which he died; and that it was a Question, whether - - - - the Devil had killed him.] The Author, who informs me of This, is a Monk, whose Article I shall give. ' Blandrata, says he (40), cui cum sano ante sedes ejus affuisset, secunda nocte subito extinctus est, utrum a Satana, an ab Affine, toto quo sui in Transylvania tempore sub judice lis fuit. Hoc certum, quod optimo, prius quam cubitum concederet, vino incaluerat.'

(39) Id. ibid. pag. 151, 152.

(40) Leonardus Rubenus, de Idololatriâ, lib. II. cap. 2. pag. 72.

BLOMBERG (BARBARA), was a young Lady of a good Family, at Ratibon, in the Time of the Emperor Charles V. It was believed, a long time, that she had lain with him, and had brought him a Son, who was the famous Don John of Austria; but, at present, the most general Opinion is, that she only served as a Cloak to a great Princess, by whom Charles V had That Bastard. I have spoken of this more at large in another Place (a). In Brantome's Time, it began to be doubted, that the Lady, who passed for the Mother of John of Austria, was really so [A]. It was less doubted, that the Emperor had enjoyed her

(a) In Remark [A], of the Article AUSTRIA (DON JOHN OF).

[A] In Brantome's Time it began to be doubted, that she was the Mother of Don John of Austria.] I shall set down his Words somewhat at length. ' John of Austria was a Natural Son of the great Emperor Charles V, and of a great Lady and Countess of Flanders, the Mother of a Great Person, of whom we have spoken, or possibly may speak, and not of a Baker's Wife at Brussels, or of a Laundress, as it was commonly reported. She was extremely handsome; her Name was Barbara Blomberg; she was afterwards married to the Lord Requel, a Gentleman of the Country of Namur, or Luxemburg. One may very well believe, that he loved, and enjoyed her: But that she was the Mother of Don John, is a Mistake; for his noble Carriage shewed, that he took after his Father and Mother. As soon as he was born, the Emperor, his Father, sent for a rich Shepherd from the Mountains of Liege, to whom he gave him to be nursed, and brought up, without the Knowledge of many Persons, ordering him to ' use him to labour and hardship, as he would do his own Child, without feeding him effeminately, or delicately, and without telling him, that he was an Emperor's Son, till he grew up, and the Emperor had a mind to forsake the World, and to retire into Spain. Then he commended the King, his Son, to send for Him, and the Shepherd, and to make use of him; and he allowed him a very good Pension, and recommended him several times to his Son, as his own Brother. I have learned this in Spain from some great and ingenious Persons, who knew it well. You see what it is to be nobly born: He, who had been educated in a Country-House, like a Shepherd, became afterwards very genteel, gallant, civil, and agreeable, and had nothing left of his Rural Education. I saw him in Spain; He was a very handsome Man, and had a good Grace, as I have said; and, though he had been brought up in a Rustic Life, yet there appeared nothing of it in his Behaviour; for he behaved himself very nobly her [B]; and, at the bottom, there was no consequence from the one to the other. That Prince might have diverted himself with the fair Barbara Blomberg, who was at first brought to him, to sing before him, and to dissipate his Melancholy; I say, he might have passed, from the Pleasure of the Ear, to all the rest, without having a Child by this Mistress (b). However it be, John of Austria died in the Persuasion, that Barbara Blomberg was his Mother, and, as such, recommended her to the King of Spain. This Recommendation had it's Effect: For Philip II., to whom the true Mother was not unknown (c), did all that was necessary to deceive the World. He sent for Barbara Blomberg into Spain, the same Year that Don John died (d), and gave her a very good Reception. Some time after, he sent her with a handsome Equipage to Mazote, into the Royal Monastery of St Cyprian. After having lived there four Years, she went to Lareda, for the good Air of the Place, where she died. Brantome informs us to whom she had been married. She had a Son, whom Don John, who believed him to be his Uterine Brother, recommended, on his Death-Bed, to the King of Spain, and whose Name was Pyramus Conrad [C]. He served under the Duke of Parma (e).

(b) Barbara Blomberg Ratibonensis, for na ac genere iuxta nobilit. Ex qua ad Carolum inclit ut maritum cantu alle-varet, &c. Strada, lib. x, Dec. i, pag. 611.

(c) See Remark [A], of the Article AUSTRIA (Don John of).

(d) In 1578.

(e) Ex Strada, Decad. l. lib. x.

(f) Brant. Lives of foreign Captains, Tom. II. pag. 49.

nobly among the Soldiers; he had also a good Air among the Ladies; to whom he was very acceptable (1). I shall make Three Observations on This Discourse. I. It seems, Brantome believed, that Barbara Blomberg was a Baker's Wife of Brussels, or a Landress; for, since he could not believe, that she was the Mother of a Prince, whose Noble Carriage shewed, that he took after his Father and Mother, he must have distinguished her from the Great Lady and Countess of Flanders, whom he acknowledged to be the Mother of Don John. If he had not made This Distinction, it might be said, that he took Barbara Blomberg, and the Countess of Flanders, for one and the same Person; but, in that case, could he have said, that Don John was too much a Gentleman to be the Son of Barbara Blomberg? He was, therefore, mistaken as to Barbara's Family and Country: She was a Gentlewoman of good Quality in Ratisbon, and not a Baker's Wife, or a Landress of Brussels. II. It would be but an ill Proof, that a great Prince could not have had a Bastard by a Woman of a mean Condition, to say, that That Bastard's Noble Carriage shewed, that he took after his Father and Mother: for, if thereby is meant, that he is of a great Family, both on the Father's and Mother's Side, it is supposing what is in question; it is giving no proof, but only saying, he is the Son of a great Lady, because he is the Son of a great Lady; a ridiculous Argument! if it be meant that, on all accounts, one observes in him inclinations too noble and too great, not to believe that his Birth is noble, both on the Mother's and Father's Side, it is still a bad Argument; since Experience shews, that great Lords, who under-match themselves, have Children as high spirited, and as much infatuated with their Grandeur, as Those, who are equally matched; supposing always, that the Education be equal. Are the Sultans mean-spirited, tho' they are sometimes the Sons of a poor Country Wench? III. This Education at a Shepherd's House, in the Country of Leige, is contradicted by good Historians, as Famianus Strada. See the Article AUSTRIA (Don John of) (2).

[B] It was left doubted, that the Emperor had enjoyed her. We have just now seen, that Brantome says: one may very well believe, that he loved and enjoyed her. It is very unlikely, that Charles V contrived This Feint with This Lady of Ratisbon, before he had a very intimate Acquaintance with her. Nor is it more likely, that the Lady was less complying as to the Being, than as to the Seeming to be; for commonly the latter is more dreaded than the former, and a Woman would think herself very unhappy to go through the last, without going through the first. The Author of the New Dialogues of the Dead might say many pretty things concerning This particular Idea of the Conduct of Barbara Blomberg. He has said some good ones, according to the Idea, which is different from This (3).

[C] She had a Son, whose Name was Pyramus Conrad. The Wallon Author, who published the Life of John of Austria at Amsterdam, in the Year 1690, believes that Barbara Blomberg was a Widow, when she was willing to pass for Charles V's Mistress, and that Pyramus Conrad was her legitimate Son (4). If he had recollected what he says at page 279, he might easily have seen, that Pyramus was younger than John of Austria. Strada, whom he copies, says, That Don John sent his pretended Brother into Burgundy, to perform his Studies there, and that, when he came to hear, that Pyramus had laid aside his Books, and plunged himself into Debauchery, he caused him to be imprisoned. This was his Condition at the Death of That Prince. The King of Spain, having some regard to Don John's Recommendation, wrote to the Duke of Parma, to know Pyramus's Inclination. The Duke informed him, that he had received a Letter from him, wherein the young Man acknowledged himself unfit for, and without any Inclination to, Learning, and that he desired to bear Arms. The King ordered him to learn the Art of War under the Duke of Parma, and assigned him a Pension of thirty Crowns per Month. Thus far Father Strada carries the History (5).

(3) In the Dialogue between Lacretia, and Barbara Blomberg.

(4) Life of John of Austria, p. 112.

(5) Strada, Dec. l. pag. 627.

(2) Towards the beginning of the Text.

(a) Catalaunen-sis, and not Cabillonensis, of Châlons upon the Saône, as it is said in Witte's Diarium.

(b) See the Preface which is prefixed to one of Mr. Dailly's Books, entitled, Apologia pro duabus Synodis Nationalibus.

(c) The same Preface.

BLONDEL (DAVID), a Protestant Minister, in the XVIIth Century, was accounted one of the Men, who had the greatest Knowledge of Ecclesiastical and Civil History. He was of Châlons in Champagne (a), and was made a Minister in the Synod of the Isle of France, in the Year 1614 (b). He exercised his Ministry at Houdan, near Paris. Few Years after, he began to write for the Protestant Religion; for, in the Year 1619, he published a Book at Sedan, intituled, A modest Declaration of the Sincerity and Truth of the Reformed Churches of France. It was an Answer to the Invectives of three or four Writers of the contrary Party, and particularly to those of the Bishop of Lussan, so well known since under the Name of Cardinal Richelieu. From that time Blondel was looked upon as a very hopeful Man, and therefore he had always some honourable Employments in the Synods. He was above twenty times Secretary in those of the Isle of France (c) [A].

[A] He was above twenty times Secretary in those of the Isle of France. Maresius, a Professor at Groningen, will have it, that Blondel was chosen for That Function, because he wrote a fair Hand. 'In æstimo fuit apud suos fratres, à quibus sæpe prop-ter calligraphiam factus est Actuarius synodorum: nunquam tamen in ulla eorum vel nationali vel provinciali Præfide aut Assessoris gradum obtinuit (1). He adds, that they never gave him the Office of Moderator, or Assistant to the Moderator,

(1) Mares. in refutatione Præfatis. Apolog. Curcellæanæ, p. 344.

He was deputed four times successively to the National Synods [B], where he never failed to be chosen to draw up and collect the Acts. It is likely, that it was he, whom the National Synod of Castres deputed to the King, in the Year 1626, and who returned his Majesty thanks, in the Name of That Assembly (d). His Speech is to be seen, at length, in the twelfth Volume of the Mercure François. This same Synod ordered him to write in Defence of the Party (e). I have heard say, that They designed chiefly, that he should write against the Annals of Baronius; and that no Protestant was thought more capable of confuting them, than Blondel. And, indeed, he had a prodigious Memory [C], and was a Man of vast reading; neither did he want Penetration to make Discoveries, and draw advantageous Consequences from Matters of Fact. His Style was harsh, and perplexed

(d) If I do not assert it, it is because he says nothing of it, when he speaks of this Synod. Besides that the French Mercury does not say David Blondel, but simply Blondel. Now there were more Ministers of this Name at that Time.

(e) See the above cited Preface.

WHAT sort of hand Blondel wrote.

[B] He was deputed four times successively to the National Synods.] One of these four Synods was not That of Alex, in 1620, as Mr Des-Marets believed (2). This Mistake would be very inconsiderable, if he had not added, that du Moulin, Moderator of That Synod, was very much opposed by Blondel, Secretary to That Assembly; and if he had not reported This Misunderstanding as the Cause of many other Events. 'Quantum autem Molinæus suos alios duos ex ordine Ministerii Condeputatos infensos habuerit in illa functione in qua ipse Synodi præfess, Blondellus Secretarius fuit, & cum sæpius querentem audivi, & eventus ipse docuit. Cum enim, &c. (3).' This is a Consideration, which ought to oblige Writers to avoid the very smallest Mistakes. That, which is inconsiderable in itself, is no longer so, when false Consequences, and false Suppositions, are added to it.

(2) Maref. ubi supra, pag. 243. See Curcellæus's Reply, prefixed to the Quaternio Dissertationum.

(3) Marefius, ibid.

(4) Colomiés. Mélanges Historiques, p. 14. 15.

(5) Apud Paulum Freherum, Theatr. p. 1180.

in the Synods. I have heard say, that Blondel's Hand-Writing was the fairest, and most distinct, that could be seen, but very small; so that, in few Lines, he could make long Remarks, in the Margin of a Book, printed on large Paper.

[B] He was deputed four times successively to the National Synods.] One of these four Synods was not That of Alex, in 1620, as Mr Des-Marets believed (2). This Mistake would be very inconsiderable, if he had not added, that du Moulin, Moderator of That Synod, was very much opposed by Blondel, Secretary to That Assembly; and if he had not reported This Misunderstanding as the Cause of many other Events. 'Quantum autem Molinæus suos alios duos ex ordine Ministerii Condeputatos infensos habuerit in illa functione in qua ipse Synodi præfess, Blondellus Secretarius fuit, & cum sæpius querentem audivi, & eventus ipse docuit. Cum enim, &c. (3).' This is a Consideration, which ought to oblige Writers to avoid the very smallest Mistakes. That, which is inconsiderable in itself, is no longer so, when false Consequences, and false Suppositions, are added to it.

[C] He had a prodigious Memory.] Mr Colomiés says one thing of him, which gives us as great an Idea of it, as any thing whatever. I have learned of Dr Vossius, says he (4), that Salmasius, being at Paris, avoided meeting with Mr Blondel in any Visit, as much as he could, because the latter was a great Talker, & omnia in numero habebat, etiam locos integros authorum, whereas the other, though he had a prodigious Memory, sæpè filebat. Some Persons, who had heard Blondel in Conversation, have assured me, that his Tongue ran like a Torrent, and that he discoursed of all kind of things with a surprising Facility, without ever hesitating about Proper Names, or Years; nay, he could tell, sometimes, on what Day of the Month, and of the Week, such and such things happened. The Authors of the Funeral Oration of John Caspar Lentzius say that, when Blondel was blind, he discoursed four Hours concerning the great Book, which he designed to write against Chifflet, and that he did it with such an Effusion of Memory, as astonished the Hearers: 'Quo (malò cecitatis) non obstante Amphilodami eum salutantes non admittit modo, sed per 4. horas operis sui, quod pro re Gallica contra Chiffletium Hispanicæ causæ patrocinantem spissum moliebatur, summam eis exposuit, qui ad prodigiosam tanti viri memoriam obstupuerunt (5).' We shall presently hear two Men, who, though contrary to one another in many things, and particularly on the Account of Friendship for David Blondel, agree as to his prodigious Memory. They agree also as to the Meanness of his Style; but one of them pretends, that Blondel was so esteemed by the Roman Catholics in France, that, to tempt him, they promised him a Mitre. I shall set down the whole Passage. 'Vir excellens fuit noster Blondellus — nam ut præteream ingenii acrimoniam, & iudicii soliditatem, memoriam ad prodigium usque felicem, eloquentiam temporaneam, (quæ tamen, ut nihil est ab omni parte beatum, non ita elucet in scriptis, profundæ quidem ubique eruditionis, sed quorum gratiam obscuritas aliquando imminuit) ad hæc naturæ dona indefatigabilis diligentia, qua non vulgarem linguarum Latinæ, Græcæ, Hebraicæ, ut & Italicæ quoque & Hispanicæ, notitiam sibi comparaverat, omne Scriptorum genus pervolverat, & eorum opes in divitem illum cordis sui thesaurum recondiderat. Adeo ut nihil esset, five magnum, five parvum, in libris Patrum,

Actis Conciliorum, disputationibus Theologorum, & in historia veteri ac recenti, tum sacra tum profana, quod ejus cognitionem effugeret, & de quo interrogantibus accurate illico non responderet, nullusque cum eo familiarius versaretur, qui non semper doctior ab ejus colloquiis discederet. Quare omnes, qui noverant, stupendæ ejus eruditioni asurgebant, non solum Protestantes, sed etiam Catholici Romani, qui ipsum vel insulæ Episcopalis, quamdiu cælebs vixit, vel magnæ alicujus in Aula, aut in Curia, dignitatis illico in partes suas pertrahere parati erant, nisi religiosiorem comperissent, quam ut mundanarum opum aut honorum splendore caperetur. Quid dicam de morum suavitatē, de modestia, de candore, & aliis virtutibus quibus omnes honestos viros ad sui amorem rapiēbat (6)? — Our Blondel was an excellent Man — for, to say nothing of the Acuteness of his Wit, the Solidity of his Judgment, the prodigious Happiness of his Memory, and his ready Eloquence (which however, as nothing is completely perfect, does not shine so greatly in his Works, the great Learning of which is often diminished by a certain Obscurity); to these Gifts of Nature he added an indefatigable Diligence, by which he acquired an uncommon Knowledge of the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and even the Italian and Spanish Tongues, had read all kind of Authors, and laid up their Wealth in the rich Treasure of his Heart. Inasmuch, that there was nothing, considerable or trifling, in the Works of the Fathers, the Acts of the Councils, Disputes of Divines, and in ancient or modern, sacred or profane, History, which escaped his Knowledge, and which he could not immediately give an exact Account of to Those, who asked him; nor did any one of his more intimate Acquaintance ever leave him, without going away improved by his Conversation; All therefore, who knew this, paid a great Deference to his surprising Knowledge, not only Protestants, but Roman Catholics, who were ready to tempt him over to their Party by the Offer of a Bishopric, while he lived single, or some great Dignity at Court, or at the Bar, had they not found him too conscientious a Man to be taken with the Splendor of worldly Riches or Honours. What shall I say of the Sweetness of his Manners, his Modesty, Candor, and other Virtues, which gained him the Love of all honest Men? Now let us hear his Adversary. 'Laudibus quas hic, Curcellæus, in Blondellum congeris, calculum meum integrum adjicio: Fuit vir multi-jugæ lectionis, portentosæ memoriæ, jucundæ admodum conversationis (7), iis præsertim, qui in aliorum consortio audire malunt quam loqui; ut tam parum tædii adferret iis apud quos eruditissimos suos Sermones, linguâ præsertim nostra, torrentis instar ad multas horas fundere poterat, de quacunque materia ex improvviso eum discurrere reporteret, quam frigidus erat & ingratus ubi præmeditata publice docere debebat; prout stylus ejus utraque linguâ tam intricatus est & tot hyperbatis scatet, supra diffusissimum quemlibet Atticismum (8), ut sine fastidio legi non possit, Lectorque attentus oblitus sit sæpè quomodo periodum inciperit, ubi pervenit ad illius finem (9). — I entirely assent, Curcellæus, to the Praises, which you heap upon Blondel. He was a Man of great Reading, a surprising Memory, and entertaining Conversation, to those especially, who choose, in Company, to hear rather than speak; inasmuch that he was as little tedious to Those, with whom he conversed learnedly and fluently, particularly in our own Tongue, for many

(6) Steph. Curcellæus in Prefat. Apologetica. Mr Daillé expresses this Elogium in five Terms, and more briefly, dedicating to him the Apology for the Reformed Churches. See in Sir Thomas-Pope Blount, many such Elogies.

(7) He had said in his Exercit. III. de Gratia. & Redempt. n. 22. ὁ πᾶν Blondellus, Photius ille nostri sæculi, & omnis antiquitatis quod vixit, Βιβλικὸς καὶ ἱστορικός.

(8) Should be not have said, Asiaticism; for the Asiatic Style was accounted a diffusid one.

(9) Maref. in Refut. Prefat. Apologet. Curcellæanæ. p. 338.

perplexed with too many Parentheses [D]: But what then? would That have hindered him from confuting a Falſity? It appeared, by the Event, that he did not trouble himſelf much about refuting Baronius [E], and that he applied himſelf much more to other things. In the Year 1631, the Province of Anjou demanded him of the National Synod at Charenton, to be Profeſſor in Divinity at Saumur (f); but this Requeſt was not granted, either becauſe it was thought, that, having no Talent for Preaching [F], he was not ſo fit, as another, for the Inſtruction of the Students in Divinity, or becauſe it was believed, that, if he ſhould apply himſelf ſolely to Hiſtory, in which his chief Skill lay, he might ſignalize himſelf the better in the Service of the Party. However it be, he continued in the Iſle of France. In the Year 1645, the National Synod of Charenton made him Honorary Profeſſor [G], and gave him a ſuitable Penſion, which had never been praſticed before (g). The Explications on the Eucharift (h); a great Book, concerning the Primacy of the Church (i); the Pſeudo-Iſidorus, and Turrianus Vapulantes (k), which is a Work againſt the Decretal Epistles; the Treatiſe of the Sybls (l), wherein he undertook to prove the Oracles to be falſe, which are attributed to them, and wherein he refutes the ancient Practice of praying for the Dead; and the Treatiſe de Episcopis & Presbyteris (m); pleaſed the Proteſtants much: but ſome among them diſapproved, that he did not wholly addiſt himſelf to Controverſy, and that he concerned himſelf in Diſputes of Civil Hiſtory, as when he wrote a Book de Formula Regnante Chriſto (n). Some of them were alſo offended at the Book, which he publiſhed, to ſhew, that what is reported concerning

(f) See the Epistle Dedicatory of his Authentic Act.

(g) The above-cited Preface, Citat. (b).

(h) At Roſen, 1641, in 8vo.

(i) At Geneva, 1641, in Fol.

(k) Ibid. 1637, in 4to. See in Remark [N] about This Pſeudo Iſidorus.

(l) At Charenton, in 1649, in 4to.

(m) At Amſterdam, 1646.

(n) Ibid. 1646, in 4to.

Hours, and upon any Subject whatever, as he was cold and disagreeable, when he was to teach premeditatedly and in Public; for his Stile, in both Languages, is intricate, and full of Transpositions, besides a certain diffuse Asiaticism, which makes it nauseous; nor can the attentive Reader remember how the Period began, when he comes to the end of it. He had said, in the Preface of the same Book: 'Decennium est præter propter, cum primum ejus ea de re Diatribe prodit. Sed cum Gallice tantum scripta esset, nec eo stylo qui suum Lectorem alliceret, (nam quam fuit memoriosus & multæ lectionis, tam δυσπρόνητα laboravit, parumque felix fuit in suis conceptibus, five patriâ five Latinâ lingua exprimendis); tandem vilis est voluisse eam sermone eruditorum extare. — It is about ten Years, since his First Dissertation on this Subject appeared. But being written in French, and in a Stile not likely to tempt the Reader (for he was as unhappy in expressing clearly his Sentiments in either Language, as he was happy in Memory and great Reading); he seemed at last resolved it should appear in a Learned Language.'

[D] His Stile was barſh, and perplexed with too many Parentheses.] We have already ſeen what Judgment Maresius and Corcellæus gave upon this; let us add That of a Jeſuit. 'Cum Blondellus propter ſinuofas inconditæ plerumque orationis ambages & inextricabiles ἀπερίβρωτοι καὶ ἀπέρητοι labyrinthos minus gratus politis lectoribus eſſe ſoleat, & bonæ cauſæ offuſis tenebris ſæpius incommodaverit, operæ precium viſum fuit eandem reciprocæ ſerram (10). — Blondel being disagreeable to polite Readers, on account of his Circumlocutions, and Parentheses, and often injuring a good Cause by the Obscurity of his Stile, I thought proper to re-handle the same Point.' He means, that he had re-examined the Queſtion about Pope Joan. Chifflet ſays, that a Lady of Paris, to whom Blondel had preſented his Volume of the Sybls, read ſome Pages in it, without underſtanding any thing of it; and told the Author, that it would be very proper to tranſlate that Work into better French; and that ſhe was much diſpleaſed and ſurprized that it was not already done (11).

[E] He did not trouble himſelf much about confuting Baronius.] After his Death, they found only many Notes, which he had written in the Margin of his Baronius. His manner of writing in very ſmall and cloſe Characters, made thoſe Notes more numerous; but they cannot be ſaid to be the Refutation of an Author. The Magiſtrates of Amſterdam bought This Copy of Baronius, and gave it to the Library of their City. It is there that Thoſe, who would know what David Blondel wrote againſt the Annals of Baronius, may ſatisfy their Curioſity. A Miniſter of Bearn (12), and a Refugee at Amſterdam, many Years before the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, ſays, that the Burgomaſters of That City having ordered him throughly to confute the twelve Volumes of Baronius, he did it, by the Help of Gou, without any trouble, and that he had not only tranſcribed David Blondel's Notes, as he was ordered by thoſe Gentlemen, but alſo that he had collated them with the Annals of Baronius, which he had never ſeen before; And that, having diſcovered ſome Faults, which Blondel had not obſerved, he thought he ſhould commit a Sin of Irreligion, if he ſhould not publiſh them. 'Quum mihi demandata foret ab ampliffimis Reip. Amſtelodamenſis Conſulibus Provincia funditus everſendorum Annalium 12 tomis comprehenſorum — Deo cooperante nil arduum eſſe comperi (13). — Ut eorum (Conſulum Amſtelodamenſium) juſſu quæ Blondellus — animadverſerat non tantum exſcripta ſed etiam cum Baronianis collata — publico darem (14). — Non potui ſerio poſthumas animadverſiones Blondelli — cum Chronologicis Baronii narrationibus nunquam antea mihi viſis conferre, quin ſtatim. — Hæc autem (ex animo fateor) mihi religio fuit impio ſepelire ſilentio (15). He publiſhed, therefore, a Book in the Year 1675, entitled Anti-Baronius Maginelis, which contains an Hundred and forty Pages in Folio. In my Copy, the Title makes no mention of David Blondel; but, in the Journal des Sçavans (16), the Title contains theſe other Words; quibus acceſſerunt quædam ad Baronium animadverſiones Davidis Blondelli. Moreover, the Title notes the Year 1679. Doubtleſs this is a Bookſeller's trick. Probably the Book did not ſell; and, at four Yeas end, they be thought themſelves of a new Title-Page, and to promiſe wonders in it, under the famous Name of David Blondel. The Truth is, Blondel ſcarce appears in That Book; and, if one was to judge of his Marginal Notes from thence, they would be very much deſpiſed (17).

[F] He had no Talent for Preaching.] See what is quoted from Samuel Maresius, in the End of the Remark [C]. I have heard ſay, that Blondel did not preach by Meditation; and that it was with much difficulty he learned his Sermons Word by Word. So that the Pulpit was not his Talent.

[G] The National Synod of Charenton made him Honorary Profeſſor.] From That time he was reputed free from any Engagement to the Church; he was no longer obliged to Reſidence, and had full Permiſſion to ſettle at Paris, to be at hand to conſult the Libraries. Theſe were the Reaſons, which induced the Synod to confer That Title upon him: Here is my Voucher for it. 'Poſterior (Synodus) Blondello honorarii profeſſoris nomen & ſtipendium assignaverat, ſoluto vinculo quo ſuæ Eccleſiæ tenebatur, & facta ei facultate ſedes ſuas ob commoditatem librorum ipſi neceſſariorum ad Baronii promiſſam reſutationem figendi Lutetiæ (18).'

[H] He wrote a great Book concerning the Primacy of the Church.] This Work is much eſteemed, and confutes Cardinal du Perron moſt learnedly. Mr Colomies

(13) Maginelis Anti-Baronius in Epist. Dedicat.

(14) Ibid. in Prefat.

(15) Ibid.

(16) July 10, 1679, pag. 222

(17) See Mr Baillet, of the Anti, n. 156.

(18) Samuel Maresius, Reſut. Corcell. p. 304.

(10) Philippus Labbe, in Joanne Papistæ Cenotaph. everſo, ad calcem. De Script. Eccl. pag. 841.

(11) Chifflet. in Imagine Davidis Blondelli, pag. 6.

(12) Whose Name was Magendie.

concerning Pope Joan, is a ridiculous Fable [I]. After the Death of Vassius, he was

(19) Colomel. in Opusculis, pag.
99.

Colomel tells us, that the Author was preparing a second Part: 'I heard, says he (19), Mr Dailly say, that Mr Blondel had left a Continuation of the Primacy of the Church, almost as large as That which is printed. It is in the Hands of a Minister near Leyden, whose Name is Curcellæus, the Son of him, who turned Arminian.'

[I] Some were offended at the Book, which he published - - - concerning Pope Joan. I shall not make use of an Universal Proposition; though a very zealous Divine of Groningen does it. 'Allis quiritantibus de Johannæ Papiæ historia per ipsum suggestita ac in fabulam commutata, non sine offensione OMNIUM Protestantium (20). - - -

(20) Marefius,
Exercit. III. de
Gratia, n. 22.
He says, in his
Answer to Curcellæus, p. 315.
That no Protestant would have advised him to write such a scandalous Piece.
NEMINEM reformatorum reperies qui illi autor exitit itius scandalosæ scrip-tionis.

'Others enquiring about the Story of Pope Joan, which he refuted and turned into a Fable, not without offending All Protestants.' I should fear it would be looked upon as a satirical Stroke. I am therefore contented to say, that That Work of Blondel offended some Protestants. This is undeniable. The Reasons of this Scandal, which I am going to mention, are so dishonourable, or even so shameful, that if the Divine of Groningen had not avouched them, I should think, that the Arminian Professor of Amsterdam imputed them to the Reformed, to make them ridiculous, or suspected of a strange Infatuation. Curcellæus is the Arminian Professor, of whom I speak. He says, that, as soon as Blondel's Work appeared in Public, some Persons condemned it without any farther Knowledge of the Matter, and had not patience to read it; it was sufficient for them to know what the Author aimed at, to say, that he had done very ill, and to complain grievously of him for depriving them of an occasion to insult the Roman Catholics. 'Non desuerunt qui audito solum ejus argumento damnatoriam confestim sententiam ferrent, indignati quod materia sibi eriperetur Romano-Catholicis posthac insultandi, & mulierem Romæ Pontificiam sedem aliquando tenuisse obijciendi (21).'

(21) In Prefat.
Apolog. apud
Maref. pag. 312.

They inquired into Blondel's Motives, and, instead of believing, that a Man, who had read so much, and had such a vast Knowledge, might have discovered the weak side of That Story, they maintained, that Honesty had no share in his Action, that he wanted a good Benefice, and that, to obtain it, he had made his Court to the Pope of Rome. 'Prætereo illos quos non pudeat jactare Blondellum in fabulam transformare molitum esse quod certa plurimum historicorum fides de Johanna prodidit, ut Pontifici Romano gratificaretur & ab eo pingue aliquod Beneficium extorqueret (22).'

He, who mentions this rash Judgment, refutes it by a Reason drawn from the disobliging things said of Popery in That Book of Blondel's. 'Malignam istam suspicionem Scriptum, unde calumniandi ansam arripuerunt, plane jugulat, in quo tantum abest ut partium illarum gratiam ambiverit, ut contra multis in locis acriter eas pungere non dubitavit.' He adds another Reason, which is, that the Work of the Primacy of the Church was in the Press, when the Author was writing his Treatise concerning Pope Joan. Others were less partial; they confessed, that the Author had refuted the History of the She-Pope by such powerful Reasons, that they could not see any good Answer could be made to it; but they took it very ill, that he had made use of his Time and Knowledge to refute a Tradition of That Nature. 'The Protestant Interest, said they, requires it should be true; why must a Minister discover the Falsity of it? Would it not have been better to leave the Papiists the Trouble of washing off their own filth? Did they deserve, that any one should do them this good Office, they who cease not to traduce the Memory of the Reformers?' Such was the Discourse of the most moderate; and thus Men will always speak, when the Interest of a Party has a greater share in what is said, than Honesty, and the Love of Truth in general: I say, in general; for they are two very different things, to love Truth in itself, and to love the Party, which one takes for the true One, being resolved never to take it for the False. 'Alii erga Joannæ & opus paulo aequiores, fatentur quidem ipsum tam efficacibus opinionem vulgare argumētis impugnasse, ut non videant quid illa reponi cum specie possit: sed tamen ajunt non debuisse otio suo & eruditione abuti, in confutanda fabula quam pro vera historia haberi Protestantium interit. Præstitisse sordes suas Pontificis elucidas relinquere: indignos enim esse quibus nostris operam ea in re suam commodent; cum Lutherum, Zuinglium, Calvinum, aliosque Protestantium Doctores, soleant atrocibus convitiis proscindere, quibus illorum memoriam, quantum in se est, toti mundo odiosam reddant (23).'

(22) Ibid.

Marefius, who refuted Curcellæus, does not deny, that These Judgments were passed, nor does he say, that People were in the wrong in so doing. But, on the contrary, he confirms, to the utmost of his Skill, the Opinion of those, who said, that Blondel composed that Book, on purpose to please the Roman Catholics. 'Nec potuit id consilium Blondelli non displicere bonis inter Protestantes, quibus monitri quid alere visa est præpostera hæc diligentia in agenda causa Adversariorum, ac si ipsimet ei pares non essent (24). - - - Nor could this Undertaking of Blondel be otherwise than displeasing to good Men among the Protestants, who thought this preposterous Diligence in defending the Cause of the Adversaries, as if they were themselves unequal to it, something monstrous.' He relates (25) a Passage of the Sieur Coignard, an Advocate of Rouen, who wrote against Blondel, and who said, that most of the Reformed were strangely surprised at This Author's Design, and that their Opinion was, that he had a Mind to make a shew of his Learning, or to insinuate himself into the Favour of Great Persons. See, below, the Remark [P]. The Church of Rome is full of People, who judge in the same manner of those, who confute the Legends; They are called Heretics, or Favourers of them; so that, on both sides, a Man, who does not design to confirm himself, by his Searches and Studies, in all the Opinions of his Communion, exposes himself to great Inconveniences.

(23) Id. ibid.
pag. 314.

(24) Marefius,
ubi supra, pag.
321.

(25) Ib. ibid.
pag. 313.

Blondel's Treatise, concerning Pope Joan, appeared at several times, and in two Languages. In the Year 1647, they printed, at Amsterdam his Familiar Explication of the Question, Whether a Woman was seated in the Papal Chair of Rome between Leo IV. and Benedict III. After his Death, Curcellæus caused the same Work to be printed in Latin at Amsterdam, in the Year 1657, but much larger. This is the of Title it; De Joannæ Papiæ, sive famosæ questionis, an scæmina ulla inter Leonem IV. & Benedictum III. Romanos Pontifices media fuderit, aversæ. Curcellæus says, that the Author kept his Manuscript above nine Years by him, and that, when he first began it, he thought of nothing less, than of printing it (26). He had only the Complaisance to examine a Matter, upon which one of his Friends had consulted him; but, at last, he submitted to the earnest Solicitations of his Friends, who assured him, that This Work would very much please the Curious in Ecclesiastical History. Marefius affirms, that Blondel denied, that he had a hand in the Impression of his Book, and that, by such a Protestation, he endeavoured to lessen the Scandal, and to avoid the Censure of the Synod. Quam (promulgationem) tum etiam Blondellus ut se in se infamem excusabat, ad offensionem elevandam, & censuram synodicam cautius declinandam (27).'

He adds, that the Manuscript was not directly sent into Holland; but from Paris to London, and from London to Amsterdam: All which was by way of Precaution against the Censures, which were to be feared: Ut si lis ulla super ejus editione suo Autori moveretur, eadem præsto esset excusatio qua bodie utitur Dallæus. To speak the Truth, I do not believe, that This Work was put to the Press without the Author's Consent and Knowledge. Mr Ménage relates a thing, which makes for our Purpose, and which shews, that he did not well remember the chief Circumstances; for he was ignorant of the French Edition. 'I was the occasion, said he (28), of printing David Blondel's Treatise concerning Pope Joan. At first he had only written a Discourse in French, which he lent me, and which I kept some time. I lent it afterwards to Mr Nabli, who kept it near a Year. David Blondel came afterwards to ask it of me; but I would not give it

SOME matters of fact concerning David Blondel's Treatise about Pope Joan.

(26) Corcell.
ubi supra, pag.
314.

(27) Marefius,
in Refutat. Pre-fat. pag. 324.

(28) Ménage,
pag. 344. Edit.
Holl.

was invited to succeed him in the Professorship of History, by the Curators of the Illustrious School of Amsterdam. He went thither in the Year 1650, and continued to study with his usual Application; which, together with the change of Air, drew many Indispositions upon him, and made him lose his Sight. It is affirmed, that, in this Condition, he dictated two Volumes in Folio, concerning the Genealogy of the Kings of France, against Chifflet (o). It is said, that he undertook this Work at the Request of the Chancellor Seguier. There were some morose Persons in Holland, who endeavoured to make him suspected of Arminianism [K], and who blamed the Religious and Political Considerations, which he published it him at first, because I feared he would suppress it. I told him it was a Piece, which deserved to be printed, and that, probably, he intended to deny it the Public; but he assured me so positively, that he would cause it to be printed, that I gave it him again. Accordingly he got it printed in Latin; but he made it quite another thing than it was before. It is reported, that, on the first News Salmasius had of this Book of Blondel, he cried out, Let it be brought me: I will destroy it with one Blast of my Mouth.

(o) They are in Latin, and were printed at Amsterdam, in 1654.

Cum primum ejus Fama ad Claudium Salmasium diffusissimæ eruditionis, ut omnes sciunt, viri aures pervenisset, excidit ipsi ut parum confidat diceret: tradatur mihi liber; ego illum uno balitu diffabo (29). Blondel sent him the Original of his Latin Work, and required no other Condition, but that it should be published entire, either at the beginning, or the end, of the Answer. Salmasius accepted this Condition, and lived six Years after; but, though he had promised to answer it, he did not; and nothing was found among his Papers, which concerned the Refutation of Blondel

(29) Corcell. ubi supra, pag. 324.

(30) Id. ibid. Maresius owns Salmasius's Promise. Id. non prestitit Salmasius cujus sper fecerat amicis & mihi sepe. ubi supra, pag. 326.

(30). The same Corcellæus, who tells us all this, affirms, that Rivetius had written to him, that he questioned, whether any solid Answer could be made to Blondel: Valde se dubitare an bene ei responderi posset, & cum lictoris cordati satisfactione. An Advocate of Rouen, whose Name is Coignard, answered the French Book, the very same Year that Blondel died. Maresius answered the Latin, a Year after it was printed, and inserted it entire in his Answer; which is a plain Proof, that he did not perceive the great Difficulties, which perplexed Rivetius, or that he thought he had fully removed them. For a Man is never so imprudent as to publish the entire Work, which he answers, when he is persuaded, that he cannot answer several Difficulties; in such a Case, he makes choice of what he pleases in the Writings of his Antagonist, and pretends not to have seen That, which he knows not how to answer. There are many Books, against which nothing would be said, if it were necessary to insert them at length in the Answer to them (31). It is not long since Mr Spanheim, Professor in Divinity, wrote a Book, to re-establish Pope Joan (32). He was not discouraged by the Difficulties, which perplexed Rivetius and Salmasius. It may be said of his Book, and of That of Maresius, that, if they cannot convince all sorts of Readers, that the History of Pope Joan is true, they may at least convince them of their Authors Ability and Learning.

(31) Mr Arnould was of opinion, that his Book, entitled, Le Renversement de la Morale, ou de cette Nature. See the Novv. de la République des Lettres, Nov. 1654. Art. 11. p. 975.

(32) This Book, translated into French, by Mr Lenfant, Minister of Berlin, was printed at Amsterdam, in 1691, and reprinted at the Hague, in 1720, by the Care of Mr Des Vignoles.

(33) Sarrav. Epist. 178. pag. 181. Edit. Utrecht.

One of Sarravius's Letters informs me, that Blondel having, at the Request of some Persons, examined the Question about Pope Joan, found, that the common Opinion was fabulous, and composed a Latin Book on That Subject; which some approved, and others condemned: The latter pretended, that a Protestant made himself infamous, when he opposed the common Opinions of his Party. Quasi probrosum foret viro Protestantium Partibus addito quidquam attulisse, quod vulgatas suorum opiniones convelleret (33). Blondel had some regard to the panna Fears of weak Minds, and put his Work into Sarravius's Hands, that he might refuse it to some Persons, who might have a Design to publish it against his Will. He examined This Question again in the Year 1639, because a Report was spread, that he confessed, at large, the History of Pope Joan, in a Book which was printing at that time. It was That of the Pope's Supremacy. Not to be at the trouble of turning over all the Sheets of such a large Book, They enquired of him concerning This Report. He answered, that he did not handle This Question in the Work, which was then in the Press; but, that they might know what his Opinion was, he composed a French Treatise, shorter than the Latin, and which soon came into the Hands of several Persons. Salmasius saw it at Paris, in the Year 1641. Sarravius refused to declare how this Work was sent to the Bookseller Blau, who published it at Amsterdam in 1647, but he declares, that the Author said, that That Business had been managed without his Knowledge. Certe auctor affirmat se inconsulto, quidquid id est, procuratum fuisse (34). He adds, that, after the Publication of That Book, some praised Blondel's Ingenuity, and others almost loaded him with abusive Language (35): The most moderate taxed him with Imprudence. Some of Salmasius's Letters, wherein he promised to patronize the Tradition, which Blondel had rejected, and to restore it speedily and easily, comforted Those, who regretted the loss of an Argument, which, in their Opinion, overthrew the Church of Rome. Recreasti animos eorum quibus dolebat eripi sibi telum, ut arbitrantur, acutissimum, quo Roma in capite feriretur (36). Sarravius was one of those, who were pleased with this new Design of Salmasius; but he warned him to take great Care of what he was about. Note, That he sent him Blondel's Latin Treatise, and that he acquainted him, that Chamier, Peter du Moulin, and Bochart of Caen, three of the most learned Ministers of France, believed, that the Story of Pope Joan was fabulous. He did not forget to say, that du Moulin, who might have jested admirably well on this History, had never employed his Wit about it. Multa certe cum scripsit (Petrus Molinæus) quibus Romanum suggillaverit pudorem, ab ista tamen scemina semper manum abstinuit: & poterat tamen vir non infacetis alicujus liberalis joci inde captare occasionem. I believe, one might add Mr Basnage to those three famous Ministers, who took the Story of Pope Joan for a meer Fable. See what he wrote upon it, giving an Historical Account of the Reasons of each Party (37), and you will apprehend what his Thoughts are.

VOL. II.

(34) Sarravius, ubi supra.

(35) Alit pæne optimo viro conviciari. ibid.

(36) Id. ibid.

(37) Basnage, Hist. de l'Eglise, Tom. I, pag. 408, & seq.

[K] Some morose Persons endeavoured to make him suspected of Arminianism. There are many Persons in Foreign Countries, who have a wrong Notion of the Dutch Liberty, and the French Servitude (38). They are in the right to say, that the Tribunal of the Spanish Inquisition is abhorred in Holland. But, nevertheless, there are many jealous, suspicious, Persons, and Inquisitors, who take notice what Friends a Man has, and who build a thousand rash Judgments upon it, which they impart to many Persons from House to House, and chiefly to Those, who may either serve or hurt, according as they are prepossessed for or against. Poor David Blondel fancied, that, going from France to Amsterdam, he should pass from Servitude to Liberty; and did not know that he was going to put himself under the Eyes of certain Spies, who would make it a heinous Crime in him to hold Correspondence with an old Friend (39), who had contributed to his Vocation, and whose Acquaintance was of great use to him in an unknown Country. He knew not that Those Spies would report all he should say, and that a wrong Interpretation would be put upon certain things, which might escape him in Conversation; so that he would be loaded with Slanders, and accounted a Man, who conspired against the State, and Church. I advance nothing but what I have read in the Writings of a famous Divine, who has taken the Pains to inform the Public of These many Slanders: Quod illi Apologiæ (40) prologum galeatum præfixit & marv Blondellus - - - multum detrivit de ipsius exultatione apud plerisque, ac si meditatus fuisset in gratiam Remonstrantium EVER-

(38) A great many Persons imagine, that no one dares speak his Mind in France, and yet they speak and write very freely. How could our News-Writers know what they publish about France, if the Inhabitants of that Country did not write their Thoughts with the greatest Freedom? They talk more freely still, than they write.

(39) That is, with Corcellæus, an Arminian Professor.

(40) He means a Piece of Mr Dau-16, concerning Universal Grace.

G

SIGNEN

(p) This appears from a Letter, which David Blondel wrote to him, April 20, 1645. It is to be found at the beginning of the French Book concerning Pope Joan.

(41) See what the same Author says, in the Preface to The Free and Charitable Considerations on Blondel's Authentic Acts.

(42) See the following Remark.

(43) Marefius, Exercit. iii. de Gratia, n. 22.

(44) Quæ omnia dici & jactari in illum eo mihi ægrius accidit quod summa mihi cum ipso necessitudo semper intercessit. Ibid.

(45) Dallæus in vindictis Apolog. Part III, cap. viii. pag. 451.

(46) Spizælius, in Intellec. Literato, p. 693, &c.

(47) Curcellæus in Prefat. Apolog. pag. 309.

(48) Marefius, in Refutatione Prefat. pag. 309, 310, 311.

Some Mistakes about our BLONDEL.

lished during the War between Cromwell and the Dutch [L]. He died the sixth of April, 1655, aged Sixty four Years. He had two elder Brothers, both Ministers; one's Name was Moses, and the other's Aaron. MOSES BLONDEL was Minister at Meaux, and afterwards at London, and published a Book of Controversy, which shewed, that he had Learning [M]. It is said, that his Knowledge was not useless to his Brother [N]. He was living in the Year 1645 (p). It was he, who STONEM doctrinæ publicæ in his Ecclesiis (41); Aliis observantibus intimam illam & jugem quam cum D. Curcellæo familiaritatem coluit ex quo vixit in Belgio: Aliis ad animum revocantibus liberiores quædam voces ipsius in sententiam Augustini & Synodum Dordracenam: - - - Aliis indignantibus quod iusto profundius se immiscuerit negotiis hujus Reip. (42) in qua erat recentior hospes (43). — Blondel's prefixing a Preface to This Apology injured his Character with many Persons, who considered him as attempting to subvert, in favour of the Remonstrants, the public Doctrine in These Churches. Some took notice of his Intimacy with Curcellæus since his Residence in Holland; others recollected some free Expressions of his concerning the Opinion of St Austin, and the Synod of Dort. And there were some, who were angry that he intermeddled too far in the Affairs of This Republic, upon so short an Acquaintance. I omit many other ill Reports, which the same Author collected to his great Grief, as he says (44), and yet so carefully, that Mr Daillé reproaches him very much for it, after having refuted them one after another. Hæc sunt quæ Epicrita contra clarissimam optimi & eruditissimi viri famam, aut finxit ipse, aut à malevolis plebeisque ingeniis excogitata magno studio conquirenda & corradenda in publicam hominum lucem edenda putavit; quæ quam sint putida, & ad id, quod agit, conficiendum inepta, omnes jam intelligent. - - - Nunc quo nomine appellabo illam Epicritæ diligentiam, qua is quisquiliæ & nugæ, partim futilis, partim falsas, pleræque dubias & incertas, aut ipse commentus est, aut ex otiosorum hominum circulis atque rumusculis studiosissime collegit hoc animo, ut persuaderet eximium Dei servum, & post emensos in Christi vinea labores & terris nuper in cælos receptum, hoc antequam moreretur egisse ac meritum esse ut publicam Ecclesiæ, in qua degebat, doctrinam everteret (45)?

— These are the scandalous Reports, which This Writer either invented himself, or carefully collected from the invention of malevolent Persons, against the Reputation of this Great Man, and which he thought fit to publish to the World; the Absurdity of which all Men now see through. Now what shall I call this Diligence in inventing, or collecting from the Circles of the Idle, or Common Fame, such trifling Stuff, partly false, and partly uncertain, and published with a View of persuading the World, that That excellent Servant of GOD, after his Labours in the Vineyard of CHRIST received up into Heaven, had, before his Death, attempted publicly to subvert the Doctrine of the Church, in which he lived? Since the Death of Blondel, Things are much worse, and chiefly since certain factious and haughty Men, come out of France, would make themselves formidable by some Attempts towards an Inquisition. See how a Minister of Germany (46) laments David Blondel's Misfortune, who, though a mild and peaceable Man, and notwithstanding the Services he had done the Cause, was, nevertheless, exposed to a thousand Revilings, both in his Life-time, and after his Death.

[L] And blamed the Religious and Political Considerations, which he published during the War between Cromwell, and the Dutch.] We have seen, in the preceding Remark, that his Enemies drew from thence one of their Proofs of his pretended Conspiracy against the Church. His Apologist pretends, that it was out of Hatred to the States of Holland, that Blondel's Considerations were blamed (47); but Marefius answered him, that That Work contained several things, which could not but displease the States of That Province, and which displeased many good People; and that, besides, it contained many Invectives against the Members of the Parliament of England, and against those Princes, who, instead of revenging the Death of King Charles I,

made Leagues with Cromwell (48). This is as much as to say, that, if Blondel had lived two or three Years longer, he would have run the hazard of finding himself accused of a Crime against the Government for having wrote a Libel against the Commonwealth of England; I say, a Libel, which was a severe Censure of the Union, which reigned, after This Minister's Death, between Holland and England.

[M] MOSES BLONDEL was a Minister at Meaux, and published a Book of Controversy.] The Book is entitled, Jerusalem au Secours de Geneve: It was printed at Sedan in the Year 1624. The Author justifies the Opinion of the Protestants concerning the Apocryphal Books, by the Testimony of the Jews, and of the Fathers. The famous Controversist Peter Veron accuses Blondel of Plagiarism. John Reynolds an Englishman, says he, composed a great Book in Quarto, containing about Six hundred Leaves (49), entitled, A Censure of the Apocryphal Books of the Old Testament, against the Papists, and chiefly against Robert Bellarmine MDCXI. - - - Out of the Pieces of That great Volume was compiled the Book of Blondel, then Minister of Meaux, on That Subject. He entitled it, Jerusalem & Rome au Secours de Geneve (50). I cannot tell, whether Veron believed, that this Blondel, Minister of Meaux, was David Blondel; but he was the Cause, that Chifflet took the one for the other. Before Chifflet published his Reply to the great Volume of Blondel, he paved the way for it by a small Piece of thirty Pages, under the Title of Imago Francisci Everfioris Davidis Blondelli Ministri Calvinistæ. Clypei Austriaci liber prodromus. He rails much at Blondel, who had not spared him, and accuses him of Plagiarism. He pretends, that it is an old Sin in him, and refers him to Father Veron's Words, which we have just now seen. Blondellum Neoclides furaciorum, Bouchets, Dominico, ac Tenuis, totum inquitare nihil novi est; antiquum obtinet dum plagiarium agit; non ignorat hæc Pileæ, non Tytigiæ. Recordetur tyrocinii sui sædus dies, cum apud Meldenses ministellum agens Genevæ suæ ab Hierosolymis & ipsa Roma suppetias frustra quaesivit, de quibus Francisci Veronis, &c (51). He was therefore persuaded, that his Adversary was That Minister of Meaux, who wrote the Book entitled, Jerusalem au Secours de Geneve; but This is to ascribe to David Blondel what belongs only to his Brother Moses. The Mistake of the Abbot de Marolles is less considerable than That. He gives Blondel the Name of Daniel, instead of David. It is in the Enumeration of the Authors, who presented him with their Works, or who spoke honourably of him. He says, that Blondel made him a Present of his Book concerning Pope Joan, having made use, adds he, of a considerable Observation, which I imparted to him one Day in the late Mr du Puy's Closet, on That Subject. He says the same thing in his History of France, and shews in what That Observation consisted.

[N] His Knowledge was not useless to David Blondel.] Here is what I find in the Professor of Groningen. Cæterum inde apud nostros nostri Sæculi Photius dictus est Blondellus, quod ex suis & sui fratris, Moses Blondelli, viri pientissimi & diligentissimi, laboribus, veterum Pontificum Epistolæ Decretales, quas jamdum tamen nemo sanus volebat admittre, in suo Pseudo-Isidoro & Turriano vagulantibus, suam in veterum Canonum notitia peritiam abunde comprobasset, & insuper diligentissime evolvisset Canones & Constitutiones Synodorum Nationalium Reformatarum, ejusdem Moses fratris sui adjutus industria: cui comprobandæ id proferre possum quod habeam in meo Museo, ex manu Moses Blondelli, præter excerpta quædam Patrum Græcorum & Latinorum, & Bellarmini opusculum de Scriptore. Eccl. variis notis manuscriptis elucidatum, Disciplinam Ecclesiæ Gallie

(49) It contains above 800 Leaves.

(50) Veron's Fifth Controversy about Canonical Books, Part II, chap. vi, n. 3.

(51) Chifflet. Imag. Francisci Everfioris.

who gave the Manuscript, from which the Book concerning Pope Joan was printed (q). I have forgot to observe, that Amand Flavien is a fictitious Name, which David Blondel gave himself in a little Book about Liberty of Conscience, which he opposed to the Bull of Innocent X, against the Peace of Munster. Nor have I spoken of the great Endeavours the Catholics used to draw our Blondel into their Communion. A Minister, who did not love him, pretended, that it did him no credit. His Thought deserves some Examination [O]. He maintained also, that Blondel had a Pension from the Court of France, which diverted him from refuting Baronius [P].

He

(12) Maresq. ubi supra, pag. 253.

‘Galliae nitidissime Scriptam, variis Scholiis ex Synodorum Nationalium decisionibus illustratam’ (52). — Blondel was by us called the Photius of our Age for his great Skill in the ancient Canons, which he shewed in his Pseudo-Isidorus & Turrianus vapulantes, in relation to the Decretal Epistles of the ancient Popes, which yet no thinking Man would admit; in which he was assisted by his Brother, Moses Blondel, a most pious and diligent Man; as also in turning over the Canons and Constitutions of the National Synods of the Reformed Churches; to prove which I can produce a Manuscript of Moses Blondel, besides some Extracts out of the Greek and Latin Fathers, and a Work of Bellarmin concerning the Ecclesiastical Writers, illustrated with several Manuscript Notes; and the Discipline of the French Churches most beautifully written, and illustrated with several Scholia taken from the Decisions of the National Synods. Observe, that this Professor intimates, that it was not necessary to shew the Falsity of the Decretals. To this let us add these Words of Mr Baillet: ‘As to the Falsis Isidorus, Father Sirmond called Mr Blondel a Breaker of open Doors; by reason of the Heat, with which he pursued these two Authors, whose Defeat was neither difficult nor very considerable, since so many Catholic Critics had already discovered Isidorus’s Impositions, and the Proceeding of Turrianus had been hissed at, and censured, by the most judicious among our Writers before him (53).’ Rivet speaks much more advantageously of this Book of Blondel (54).

(53) Baillet. Jugem. des Sav. Nom. 265.

(54) See Rivet Oper. Tom. II. pag. 1079.

(55) Corcell. In Praefat. Apolog. pag. 338. See, above, the Remark [C].

(56) Maresq. in Refutat. Praef. pag. 338.

Whether a Woman deserves praise for rejecting immodest Proposals: And a Man for rejecting Temptations to change his Religion.

[O] His Thought deserves Examination.] Among other Things, Corcellaeus had said, in David Blondel’s Praise, that The Catholics admired his Learning so much, that they offered him a Mitre, while he was a single Man; and afterwards a good Post either at Court, or in the Parliament, if he would abjure his Heresy (55). Maresq. replies, that such a thing does not deserve Praise, as well because the Papists bait their Hooks at all times, and in all Places, as because a virtuous Woman will not praise herself for having rejected an immodest Proposal. Sed nec ad laudes ipsius pertinere mihi videtur quod cum libenter corrupissent Pontifici, cum horum hamus ubique pendeat, nec soleat honesta matrona suis laudibus accensere quod impudicis sollicitationibus quondam resistit (56). This last Maxim is not absolutely true; it must be viewed on a certain side, not to appear false. It is a Dishonour to a Woman, that any Proposals of Love should be made to her; for it shews, that They had no very good Opinion of her Virtue; and, therefore, any Woman, who boasts of having resisted unchaste Sollicitations, discovers, at the same time, that she has not been so tender of her Reputation as she should have been, or that she knew not how to inspire all the Respect, which a virtuous Woman deserves. In this Sense, the Maxim of David Blondel’s Censurer ought to be admitted. It will be granted me, without doubt, that of two Women, equally beautiful and charming, and engaged in the World, she, who has never had any dishonest Proposal made to her, would have more Reason to boast, than she, who has often repulsed the Tempter; for it would be a Proof, that the latter has not imprinted such a Character of Prudence on her Conduct, as may persuade a Man, that he would be very ill received, and that it would certainly be in vain to set up for a Lover. No finer Praise can be given to a Minister of State, than to tell him he is like Cato, of whom no one durst ask an unjust Thing. Scoppius made use of this Thought in praising a Cardinal. * Erga amicos porro quamvis eximia & constanti voluntate esse soleas, cum tamen, cum quid momenti majoris petere instituerint, religionem adhibere soles, ut non temere etiam qui te causa sua omnia velle sciat, vel sibi quicquam, vel amicis, ausu pollulare quod te tribuere vel indulgere minus dignum videatur, eaque re in te conveniat, quod de Catone Tullium dixisse legimus: de te felicem M. Porci, a quo rem improbam petere nemo audeat (57). — Though you are always ready to serve your Friends, yet no one dares ask for himself, or others, what is improper for you to give; in which we may apply to you what Cicero said to Cato; Happy Marcus Porcius, of whom no one durst ask an unreasonable Thing. But let us turn the Tables, and we shall see, that the Professor of Groningen has not justly censured Corcellaeus. Generally speaking, it is not true, that a virtuous Woman ought not to think herself worthy of Praise, for having often resisted dishonest Sollicitations. Every Family, which can name such, or such a Woman, who has refused the Offers of some great Financier, or Prince, thinks itself crowned with Glory (58). The strongest and most frequent Temptations are the best Proofs that a Woman is Honest and Virtuous, and worthy of Esteem. Some Relations inform us, that the most virtuous Woman in Spain are very glad to be alone with a Man, who desires the last Favour of them, and that they take it very ill if he does not. Not that they will grant it him, but they take Delight in refusing such earnest Requests. After all, there was reason to praise Blondel for the very thing, which Maresq. censured. The French Catholics would not have used so many Promises, if they had not taken him for a Person of great Merit. There is a great Difference between a Minister, to whom Honours are offered, if he will change his Religion, and a Woman, who is courted with Presents. The Action, which is proposed to the Minister, is not bad according to the Principles of those, who propose it; and he is not required to do it whilst he believes it to be an ill thing (59): He is exhorted to instruct himself, with a Promise, that if he can undeceive himself, the Pains he shall take to seek, and find, the Truth, shall be largely rewarded. But what is proposed to a Woman is a bad Action, both according to her own Principles, and according to the Principles of the Tempter. So that she cannot be tempted without an Affront offered; that is, without believing her very capable of committing a Thing, of which she knows the Obscenity: Therefore Maresq.’s Comparison is not just; for there is no Injury done to a Man in believing him capable of seeing his Errors, and acknowledging the Truth; or which is the same thing, in soliciting him to change his Religion. I am sure, that, if Maresq. had wrote the Panegyric of a Minister, who had refused many great Advantages, which the Catholics had offered him, he would have drawn from it the Subject of a fine Elogy, and would not have scrupled to praise it as a very noble Exploit. Observe, by the by, how Pyrrhonism prevails in most Disputes. There are many Maxims, which are true on one side, and false on the other. They are made use of by turns, either for one’s own Cause, or against an Adversary: But is this the way to attain to Certainty? See, besides this, in relation to the Praise, which a virtuous Woman deserves, either for having never been solicited, or for having resisted wicked Sollicitations, the whole Remark [D] of the Article JUDITH.

[P] It has been said, that Blondel had a Pension, and that This diverted him from refuting Baronius.] Maresq. declares, that Blondel told him, that

(q) The same Letter says so.

(57) Scoppius. Epist. Dedicat. Elementor. Philosophiae Stoicæ Moralit ad Cynthium Cardinalem S. Georgii.

(58) See Molière’s George Dandin.

(59) I speak only of honest Converters.

(r) Ancillon, Mélange Critique, Tom. I. pag. 407.

(60) Mares. in Refutat. Praef. pag. 305.

(61) Ib. pag. 313. See also the Preface to his Epistola Theologica adversus Joh. Dallaei Apologiam.

(62) Mélange Critique de Littérature Tom. I. pag. 407, 408.

(63) She died at the Hague in February 1699.

(64) Of whom I speak in Remark [L] of the Article BORE, and more fully in Remark [F] of the Article WILHEM.

‘He had a singular way of studying; he lay on the Floor, and had round about him the necessary Books for the Work he had in hand (r).’ He, who informs me of this, tells it for certain Truth: He says also, that the anonymous Author, who wrote the Free and Charitable Considerations on the Collection of Authentic Acts, compiled by Mr Blondel, was one Gautbier, a Minister near Rochele. This Collection displeased the Divines, who had opposed Mr Amyraut. I have seen a Letter full of Complaints on this Subject [Q]. I shall give an Extract from it.

that he was importuned by the Enticements of the World (60). He adds, that Demery, Super-intendant of the Finances, paid this Minister a Pension, and that this Pension obliged him to publish his Pope Joan. ‘Nec dubium quin Blondellus in sua Papissa Moderationis laudem sibi comparare studuerit, praeteritum quo tempore eum in suis stipendiis ex annua pensione habebat supremus Aerario Praefectus (61). — Blondel, in his Pope Joan, certainly aimed at the Reputation of a moderate Writer, especially at the time when the Super-intendant of the Finances, paid him a Pension.’ ‘Ubi (Lutetiae) tamē nihil minus quam Baronio vacavit; sed conjuncta D. Demery, summi Praefecti Aerario Regio, pensione, cum Ecclesiarum stipendio, animum appulit ad ea, quae ab illa professione honoraria, inter Reformatos, satis remota erant. Quae etiam offensionem fuisse multis piis & bonis viris, mihi abunde constitit cum essem Lutetiae. Unde natum consilium de ipso in Belgium, si pote foret, transmittendo, quo sic & illis sumptibus sibi inutilibus Ecclesiae liberarentur, & ipse expediret ex Austria & Saeculi infestationibus, quas & sibi graves & importunas esse, apud me tum satis aperte professus est. — Where however (at Paris) he thought but little of Baronius; but, enjoying a Pension from Demery, Super-intendant of the Finances, together with a Stipend from the Churches, he applied himself to Studies very remote from that honorary Profession among the Reformed. That this gave Offence to many pious and good Men, I was fully convinced when I was at Paris. Whence arose the Design of sending him, if possible, into Holland, that the Churches might be freed from an unnecessary Expence, and Blondel himself be extricated from the Temptations of a Court and of the World, which he very frankly confessed to me, at that time, were stronger than he could well resist.’ If this Author had been asked, How he knew that Demery paid Blondel a Pension? he would have answered with a Hear-say.

Mr Ancillon informs us of a strange Particular: ‘I know from him, that the President de Mesmes, tho’ a very good Roman Catholic, gave him a yearly Pension of twelve hundred Livres, to write against the Pope’s Supremacy, and that a Counsellor of the Parliament of Paris, a very good Roman Catholic too, whom he named to me, but whose Name I have forgot, gave him a Pension of Six hundred Livres on the same Account, and that, to satisfy these two Gentlemen, he composed that great Volume in Folia, of the Pope’s Supremacy, which serves for an Answer to the Book, which Cardinal du Perron wrote against James I King of Great Britain (62).’ Either these two Magistrates had only the Name, and out-side, of Roman Catholics, or their Pensioner betrayed them; for the Interests of the Calvinists cannot be more strongly maintained, than Blondel has maintained them in his Work of the Primacy.

[Q] I have seen a Letter full of Complaints against his Collection of Authentic Acts. It was written by Mrs Mary du Moulin Daughter of Peter du Moulin (63). Mr de Wilhem (64) did me the Favour to communicate the Original to me; it is dated from Delft the Twenty fourth of June 1655. It appears by this Letter, that the two Persons, whom Blondel had most abused, were du Moulin, and Rivet, ‘to whom nevertheless he professed himself a great Friend, and by whom he was sincerely beloved, as may be proved by the good Offices, which he had received from them, and by the Acknowledgments which he made for them. Several Dozens of his Letters might be produced, which he wrote to Monsieur Rivet, wherein he calls him Father, his faithful Friend, his Protector, and Benefactor, and one might easily think, that he spoke the Sentiments of his Heart; for he was indebted to him alone for the Post, which extricated him from the Inconveniences and Dangers, wherein the most judicious thought him involved, when he was at Paris, surrounded with great Men, and busy about their Genealogies. This good Soul, who was continually upon his Guard against Scandal, thought it necessary to extricate him from those Snares, that his Talents might be employed more usefully. He made use of all his Credit to compals his Aim (65), wherein he met with so many Obstacles, that a less constant Friend would have been discouraged; and I am witness of the Troubles and Fatigues, which he suffered on that Occasion; and, though he was too much used to be paid with Ingratitude, yet he never feared any such thing from him, who appeared so thankful, and who wanted his continual Support in a Place where he had not the good Fortune to please at first; all which may be seen in his Letters, which are in the Hands of Rivet, the Son.’ A little lower, in the same Letter of Mary du Moulin, we read these Words. ‘He had very few Friends in This Country, except among the Arminians, whose Confident he was from the very beginning; nor was his Manner of Life prudent enough to acquire him the Esteem of the Wife of this Country; the extravagant Vanity of his Wife would have been a sufficient Obstacle to it.’ Afterwards she enlarges on the Praises of Rivet, and assures us, that the Memoirs, which he left, of his Life, contain a true Account of what passed in relation to these Matters of Controversy, after the National Synod of Tonneins, in 1614, where he was Secretary, and by which his Moderation may be easily known. ‘I wish, says Mrs du Moulin, that this satirical Piece may not fall into my Father’s Hands; for I should fear his infirm Age would be too much shocked with Blows, that cannot be received as Balm, and that have nothing of the Faithfulness of Friendship.’ There is no doubt, but that Rivet used all his good Offices to have Blondel in Holland; for it appears by Sarravius’s Letters, that he was desirous to promote That Affair, and that they shewed him the Importance of it. ‘Utinam vero cogitare velletis de Blondello nostro, qui hic plane ad alienum scribit & vivit arbitrium. Posset istic, honorariae fungens professionis munere, singulis annis singulos Annalitz Tomos confodere, & alia, quae mortali nemo queat praestare, ad Historiae Ecclesiasticae purissimum intellectum. Idem scribo Riveto: hoc agite: nos adiutorem habebitis (66). — I wish you would think of our Blondel, who lives here, and employs his Pen, at the Will of other People. With the Character of Honorary Professor, he might there, each Year, confute a Volume of the Annalists, and contribute to the clearing up of Ecclesiastical History. I write the same to Rivet: you shall have my Assistance in effecting This.’

Note, that Mr Ancillon observes, that the Author of the Free and charitable Considerations on the authentic Acts, which were printed at Groningen in the Year 1658, with a Preface of Maresius, treats Mr Blondel very ill (67): Which, though common enough, is at the bottom a scandalous thing; but the worst is, that That Author, and Blondel, do not agree in their Accounts. The same Disagreement has appeared between the Narrative of Rivet, and That of Mr Amyraut. These Gentlemen might be excused for not thinking alike on difficult matters, and for explaining the System of Grace differently; But ought they not to agree when they relate Matters of Fact? What can one think, when it appears, that they confute each other in their Historical Narratives of what passed before their Eyes? Can one believe, that it is only a Defect of Memory? Is not a Man tempted to say, that one, or other, of them acts insincerely, or rather that there is some Artifice and Trick on both sides, and that

(65) That is, to procure him an Invitation to Amsterdam.

(66) Sarravius, Epist. 166. ad Salmst. pag. 170. See also the 194th Letter, which was not written by Salmstius to Sarravius, as is said, at the beginning, but by Sarravius to Salmstius.

(67) Ancillon, Mélange Crit. Tom. I. pag. 408.

that each relates what is for his own Advantage, and suppresses the rest? This contrariety in Matters of Fact prevails every where. We saw a famous instance of it, the last Year (26), in the Relations concerning Quietism. (68) That is in the Year 1698.

BLONDEL (FRANCIS), Professor of Physic in the University of Paris, was a very learned Man; but his Knowledge was indigested [A]; and, besides, his Prejudices against Chymistry, and Antimony, filled the Faculty with Troubles and Divisions. Guy Patin, though he agreed with him concerning Antimony, yet speaks of him as a litigious Man, and a bad Writer [B]. Perhaps no one has more ingeniously or more pleasantly characterized this Physician, than the Sieur Lamy; but, as he had been persecuted by him, it must be considered whether Passin has not too great a share in the malicious Turn, which is observable in his Description of Blondel [C]. Nothing shews more powerfully how little this Doctor was loved or esteemed, than to see in what manner his Death was mentioned in the Mercurie Galant, Sept. 1682 [D]. Not one obliging Expression attends This News, to lessen the Blemish, which is cast on the Memory of the Deceased. I cannot tell whether the Books, which he promised the Public, are printed [E].

I must

[A] His Knowledge was indigested. Our Monsieur Blondel is a very learned Man, but 'he writes in an obscure and intricate Style.' Thus Guy Patin speaks of him in his four hundred and fifth Letter (1). He says, in another place, that Father Theophilus Raynaud's Style is worse than That of Lipsius; Redolet Lipsianum, quo tamen est multo deterior (2); and 'that no Author, at this day, writes so, except it be perhaps Monsieur Blondel, our Dean, who, tho' he is one of the most Learned Men in the World, affects this kind of barbarity, & eadem scabie laborat cum Tertulliano (3).' See some other Testimonies of his indigested Studies in the Remark [C].

[B] Patin represents him as a litigious Man, and a bad Writer. Our Monsieur Blondel — is a litigious Man, and a Caviller, and loves to go to Law: he had rather go to Law, than compose and end Quarrels: he has a Law-Suit with Thewart le Camus, who is another litigious fellow; he is printing a Case in his Defence; there are as yet but two Sheets printed; he told me, there would be eight. He makes great Complaints of the First President, whom he took, as he says, for his Friend: I know not what to make of the nonsense of these Pettifoggers. As soon as the Case comes out, I will send it you, as also a Book, which he promises, de Vomitu, Stibique veneno, in which he will prove, that Antimony is a Poison, since it causes Vomiting (4). — This Man loves the Law too much; but it is great pity; for he is a very learned Man (5).

[C] It must be considered, whether Passin has not too great a Share, in the malicious Turn, which is observable in his Description of Blondel. There being many Readers, who desire to find, in a Dictionary, not only an Abridgment of Mens Lives, but also what is said of their Manners and Character; I think I shall not be blamed for transcribing some Passages out of Mr Lamy's Book. 'He is one of our most ancient Doctors, says he (6), speaking of Blondel, and passes for a learned Man with some. He has read much, and has a happy Memory. He can decide very well how a Greek Word in Hippocrates and Galen is to be read. He idolizes them in such a manner, that he will hear of nothing but what they have said, and is better pleased with old Errors, than new Truths. He knows the Names of Plants, like the Gardeners. He knows their Virtues after the Galenic manner. He measures the degrees of Cold and Heat in them, with an exactness, which surprizes every Body. He cultivates many of them very carefully. He is so averse to Chymistry, that he cannot hear a word of it without exclaiming against it. He has a very great Inclination to teach, without any Interest, and without being obliged to it. I assure you, that I have seen him take the pains to come every Day from St Denis's Gate to our Schools, for a single Scholar, who left him at last because he was not learned enough to understand him, and because the Hebrew and the Greek, of which his Discourse was full, were Languages not all, or but little, known to him. It is true, this Gentleman is very curious in Etymologies, and endeavours to collect, in his Treatises, all that he formerly read. Inasmuch that, in a Book, which he wrote about vomiting, and Emetic Remedies, he inserted a Preface concerning Chymistry; and, to find the Author of it, he went back as far as the Times, which preceded the Flood, and made a Query, Whether Tubal-Cain was not the Inventor of it; because it is said of him, in the fourth Chapter of Genesis, that he was an Artificer in Brass and Iron.' Mr Lamy adds, that Dr Blondel accused him, in a full Auditory, of advancing an Heresy, because, as he was disputing against a Thesis, wherein the Motion of the Heavens was maintained, he objected, that the Rapidity of the Primum Mobile would be incredible, since, according to the System of Copernicus, the Equator of the Earth moves as fast as a Cannon-Ball. The Accused answered, 'That there might be an error in the Supposition, which he made; but that it could not be said, that there was any Heresy in it, since it is not a Point of Religion to be able to calculate well.' Dr Blondel replied, 'That it was not a matter of Physic; I granted it, says Mr Lamy, and, thereupon, a Doctor taking my part, told him, That since the Proposition was inserted in the Thesis, I might dispute against it. Well then, replied Mr Blondel, let him prove, that the Earth turns round; but let him prove it medicinally. I confess, I could not do it, and I was forced to stop there. An ingenious Student of Physic, who never had any Quarrel with Dr Blondel, nor any reason to impute any thing upon him, assured me, that he once said, in our Schools, that all those, who make use of the Chinchina (or Cortex Peruvianus) commit a mortal Sin, and that they make an implicit Pact with the Devil. And, to shew, that the Cure, which is obtained by That Remedy, is magical; it ought to be observed, said he, that it works on all sorts of Tempers, and that, after a certain Time, the Disease returns, which has been acknowledged by all those, who have wrote against Magicians, to be the true Character of a Diabolical Cure.'

[D] His Death was mentioned in the Mercurie Galant. These are Mr de Vixé's Words: 'The Faculty of Physicians of Paris enjoys, at present, a great Repose by the Death of Dr Blondel. He was the only one, who remained obstinately bent against the general Approbation of Antimony, the good Effects whereof he opposed, having so much troubled That learned Company for thirty Years, that they seemed to be always divided. As it is likely, that his Opinions will die with him, there is reason to hope, that Union and Peace will again be established among so many civil Persons (7). It is certain, that, in many places, the Death of one Professor is more effectual for the Restoration of Peace, than the Mediations of an hundred Assemblies: But can any one be sure, that This great Disturber of the Public Repose will not soon be succeeded by others? These kind of People have no end; uno avulso non deficit alter. Since Mankind must be unhappy in this World, these sort of Persons are necessary, They are essential Parts of Civil Society. [E] The Books, which he promised the Public. In April 1657, his Treatise de Pleuritis wanted but three Months of being finished (8). The Author was come to the Chapter de Purgatione, which

(1) Pag. 200, of the third Volume of the Geneva Edition.

(2) Patin, Letter 173, pag. 65, of the 2d Vol.

(3) Ibid. This Letter of Patin is dated April 27, 1663. Blondel was made Dean of the Faculty of Physic, Nov. 2, 1663. Patin, Letter 124, Tom. I. pag. 483.

(4) Patin says so in his 405th Letter, pag. 200, of the 2d Vol.

(5) Ibid. pag. 203. See also the 290th Letter of the 2d Vol. pag. 543.

(6) See the 4th Letter prefixed to his Anatomical Discourses, printed at Rouen 1675.

(7) Mercurie Galant, Sept. 1682, pag. 23, 26.

(8) Patin, Letter 113, Vol. I, pag. 430.

I must not omit, that the great Care he had taken to make himself Master of Grammatical and Critical Learning, and to acquire a wild Erudition, did not hinder him from storing himself with the most profound Cunning of a malicious Persecutor [F], and from knowing how to conceal the Violence of his Temper under That Cover. He pretended to oppose Novelties, only out of Zeal for Truth, and for the Glory of God. He must not be confounded with another FRANCIS BLONDEL, a Physician, who wrote a Book on the Baths of Aix la Chapelle, entitled Thermarum Aquisgranensium & Porcetanarum Descriptio: congruorum quoque ac salubrium usum balneationis & potationis elucidatio. It was printed at Aix, in the Year 1671, in 12mo.

was to be a general Method, and to contain fine and uncommon things de orgasmo Hipp. and upon the Explication of the Twenty second Aphorism, Sect. 1. Here is what Patin says in another place: 'The second of November, in the Morning, we made a new Dean, to wit, Monsieur Blondel, which the Antimonian Flock is very much astonished at, and sorry for. He is thought to be the Author of the Altophanes, a curious Piece, as you know, against Antimony, and the chief Antimoniales, and principally against Guenaut, des Fougerais, Rainsfant, Mauvilain, S. Jacques, and Thevart (9). See the Remarks [B] and [C], concerning the Treatise de Vomitu.

(9) Letter 124, dated Novem. 8. 1658. Vol. I. p. 483.

(10) Lami, Letter 4. before his Discours Anat.

[F] He acquired the Cunning of a malicious Persecutor. If any one is not satisfied with the following Testimony, I cannot help it. 'To finish my first Draught, says Mr Lamy (10), I will tell you, that he values himself much on Integrity; that he seems to trample all worldly Interests under foot, in order to maintain our Statutes in force; that all he says, or does, is always grounded up on a very laudable Motive, and that he never does any one harm, but out of Charity.' Dr Blondel was one of the eight Examiners, which were appointed Mr Lamy; and he desired one of them to pretend business, and not to be at the Assembly; and then he stopped the Decision, under pretence, that they were but seven. He shewed some Remarks, larger than Mr Lamy's Book, which tended to hinder the Impression. He said, that Mr Lamy's Opinions were against Galen, against the Statutes, and against the Holy Scripture. The absent Examiner was so much desired to come on a set-day to the Assembly, that he would have been actually there, if Dr Blondel had not sent him word, that there would be no Conference. Mr Lamy went early to the Place of Conference, which was at Dr Blondel's House; he waited two Hours, and was very much tired to hear him say nothing, though never so trivial, without calling Hypocrates, Plato, and Aristotle to witness. Dr Blondel being told, that some body asked for him, he went out of his Chamber, and came in again a little while after, to tell Mr Lamy, that the Doctor, whom they stayed for, sent word, that he could not come. He blamed That Gentleman's Negligence very much, continues Mr Lamy, who failed always to come to the Place of Assignment, and gave me so much trouble. ----- See the Honesty and Integrity of this Gentleman, who has always God and the Laws in his Mouth to justify his Actions. When it was thought that all these shifts were at an end, he made use of this; he presented his Remarks, and by an Artifice, which cannot be sufficiently detested, he brought some Propositions, separate from others, which resisted them, and which, in truth, could not pass alone. This raised a Contest; the places of the Book were read; and, after much noise, it was resolved, that the Book should pass, provided the Faculty of Divinity approved of it. This was sufficient for Blondel to obtain his Ends; for the Divines, who read the Book, would neither subscribe to, nor against, it: And Mr Lamy would not engage to prove to them, that his Book did not contain any Heresy. Upon what a Sea should I embark? says he: I should enrage it's Waves in such great numbers against me, that they would infallibly swallow me up, though unjustly. The Multitude, destitute of Judgment, would think they fought for the Interest of Heaven, and should offer a pleasing Sacrifice to God, if they made me the Victim of it.

BLONDEL (FRANCIS), The King's Professor of Mathematics and Architecture, was very much esteemed for the Knowledge he had acquired in all that belongs to That Profession. He had been Governour of Lewis Henry de Lomenie Count de Brienne; and he accompanied That young Lord, who had already obtained the Reversion of the Office of Minister, and Secretary of State; I say, he accompanied him in his Travels, which began in the Month of July, 1652, and ended in the Month of November, 1655. The Latin Relation of it has been twice printed [A]. He had moreover some considerable Employments in the War, both by Sea and Land; and he managed some Negotiations with foreign Princes; inasmuch that he attained to the Dignity of a Marshal de Camp, and to That of Counsellor of State. He had the Honour of being chosen to teach the Dauphin Mathematics; and it is He, who gave the Draught of the new Gates erected at Paris, since

[A] The Latin Relation of it has been twice printed. The first Edition is of the Year 1660, and contains only Thirty nine Pages in 12mo. The second was procured two Years after by Charles Patin, and contains Ninety six Pages in 8vo; the Index Geographicus (1), which was added to it, being comprehended in it, and without reckoning many Latin Verses, which the most excellent Poets composed in praise of the young Lord, who performed These Travels. But if, on the one hand, many things were added to the second Edition; on the other, a very singular Passage was cut off from it. It is That, where the Author reports, that, in crossing the Forests of Westgothia on Horseback, they stopped a while at Lincopen, to look upon a Column of Stone, wherein there was a Hole designed for a use, which cannot decently be expressed in Vulgar Language: but here is the Latin of it. 'Vestgoticis silvis equitantes induti, Lin-

(1) Made by Nicolas Sanson.

copiaz, ob loci religionem non omittendæ, tantillum substitimus: ibi cippus lapideus, pertusus, explorandæ maritorum membris: qui pares foraminis, approbantur, impares excluduntur conubiali toro: inde matrimonia aut sunt aut cadunt, pro modulo peculii (2). The Preface to the second Edition informs us why This Passage was suppressed. 'Unum te moneo, huic Editioni, cui nihil deest, voluisse Lomenium aliquid deesse; quod scilicet in Westgoticis silvis, per errabunda vestigia, morosæ viæ pellendis tædiis juveniliter luserat, sapientiore ætate & pudorem suppressisse (3). Take notice of one Thing; viz. that Lomenius would have This Edition, which is very compleat, to be imperfect in one Particular, and that discreeter Age, and Modesty, conspired to suppress what he had jocosely related, to take off from the Tedioussness of a Journey through the Forests of Westgothia.' The Reason of the Suppression

(2) Ludov. Henrici Lomenii Itinerar. pag. 13. Edit. 1660.

(3) Ibid. in Prefat. Edit. 1662.

since the Dutch War of 1672, and of all the Embellishments, which have been added to That Capital City of the Kingdom (a). He wrote also some of the Inscriptions, which are to be seen on Those new Gates; for he was as well versed in the Knowledge of good Literature, as in Geometry; as he made appear by his Comparison of Pindar and Horace. He has been Director of the Academy of Architecture, and a Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences. We have many Books of His [B]. He died, the first of February, 1686 (b).

(a) See the Description of the City of Paris, printed in 1684.

(b) De Witte, in Diario Biograph.

Suppression is a very good one, since the thing was not related, because That Custom was actually observed in That Place, but only as a witty Conceit invented during the Fatigues of a troublesome Journey. So that the Readers had been deceived, and, besides, had been presented with a very obscene Account, and which was very injurious to the Inhabitants of That Country; and consequently there was all the Reason in the World to strike out That Part of the Relation. If any one should ask me, ought it to have been left out, if the thing were true? I would freely answer, that we must distinguish between Books and Books, and between Authors and Authors. There are some Persons, whose Character requires an extraordinary Gravity, and who deserve praise for making a scruple to relate a true Story of this Nature; and there are some Books, wherein it would be no ways proper to insert such Facts: But I do not think, that a Layman, who writes the History of a Country, or the Relation of his Travels, is obliged to be silent about a public Custom, under pretence, that it is ridiculous, obscene, and of an ill example. If you lay down a contrary Maxim, you will find, that it will be necessarily concluded, and without many gradual Consequences, that the Labour of Historians is bad, and that their Profession ought to be placed among the unlawful and pernicious Arts; for it is impossible to write History, without relating infamous and abominable Actions. Let us remember, that the most rigid Critics do not blame the Historians, who mention all the Particulars of a villainous Murder, or of a horrid Treason: and that they would not blame those, who should truly say, that, in some Towns, they choose, for their Burgomasters, those, who have practised such and such brutish ways of making themselves drunk, that unless a Man has been able to bear such a Trial, he is not made a Consul, &c. They only condemn the Relations, which mention some Customs contrary to Chastity: For example, They would condemn a Writer, who should give the Particulars of the Practice of the Congress, which has been at last so wisely abolished by the Parliament of Paris; and They do not consider, that Their Criticisms fall upon the ancient Fathers, who very ingenuously represented the horrid Impurities practised among the Pagans and Heretics. However it be, I will venture to say, that, if the Column of Stone, mentioned in the Travels of Mr de Lomenie, had actually served as a Standard to judge of the Validity or Invalidity of Marriages by; it might not only have been related in the first, but also in the second Edition; and that, therefore, the only true reason of suppressing it in the second, is, because it was a meer Fable. I maintain, that, supposing such a thing was practised by public Authority, Mr Blondel had all manner of right to inform his Readers of it. Nay, I maintain, that some Inquiries might have been made about the Original of this Custom, and inserted in an History; I say, one might have inquired into the Inconveniences, which had occasioned this manner of distinguishing Those, who were incapable of Marriage, from Those, who were fit for it; what sort of Processes there were, before, between Husbands and Wives; what Consultations were held to prevent them, and to invent this foolish Remedy; for, in short, the History of Men, of their Follies and Extravagancies, and of the infinite Varieties, which are to be found in the Laws, and Usages of Nations, are not things, of which the Readers ought to be frustrated, and from which we can reap no benefit. It will not be amiss to consider, whether what has been said of Philosophers may not be applied to Legislators: It has been said, that there is nothing so absurd, but has been maintained by some Philosophers (4). Huetius inserted, in the Relation of his Journey to Stockholm, the ridiculous manner of electing the Burgomaster of a certain place called Hardenburg. He says, that, on the Day of the Election, the Burgers place themselves round a Table, and lean their Chins, furnished with a long Beard, upon it; after which, a Loufe is fairly put in the Middle of the Table, and he, into whose Beard the Loufe creeps, is chosen Burgomaster. My Translation is so negligent, that I must set down the excellent Verses of The Author:

*Mox Hardenbergam serâ sub nocte venimus:
Ridetur nobis veteri mos ductus ab ævo.
Quippe ubi deligitur revoluto tempore Consul,
Barbati circa mensam statuantur acernam,
Hispidaque imponunt attenti menta Quiritis:
Porrigitur series barbarum defuper ingens.
Bestia, pes, mordax, fuenta inter crescere sordes,
Ponitur in medio; tum cujus, numine Divum,
Barbam adiit, festo buic gratantur murmure Patres, Atque celebratur subiecta per oppida Consul (5).*

(4) Nescio quomodo nihil tam absurde dici potest, quod non dicatur ab aliquo Philosophorum. Cicero de Divinatione lib. ii. cap. 63. Nemo agrotus quicquam somniat tam infandum quod non aliquis dicat Philosophus. Varro in Eumenid. apud Nonium voce infans, pag. 56.

(5) Huetius, in Itinere Suecico, pag. 7. Edit. 1602.

I cannot tell whether the witty Conceit, which Mr Blondel inserted in his first Edition, was grounded on some Jest of the Inhabitants of the Country. It may be, that some, considering the Hole of That old Column, seriously inquired into the Reason of it (6), and that others, being used to jest upon every thing, invented what he said. It is well known, that silly Jestors will tell, in their free Conversations, I know not how many Stories concerning Complaints of Disproportion, brought before the Courts of Justice by married Persons; and that they falsely suppose, that the Lawyers, who plead such Causes, do not deny the Disproportion, and are contented to maintain reciprocally, that the fault is not to be imputed to their Client, but to the adverse Party; and that they make use of Gestures or Signs, when Words may seem too impudent. Sweden might have had such Jestors, who occasioned the Story, related by Mr Blondel.

(6) The learned Suarez, Bishop of Vaison, wrote a very learned Dissertation De foraminibus lapidum.

[B] We have many Books of His. Notes on Savo's Architecture; A Course of Architecture, in three Volumes, in Folio; A Course of Mathematics; The Art of throwing Bombs; The History of the Roman Calendar; A new way of Fortifying Places, &c. I must not forget to observe, as to this last Work, that The Author, having presented it to the King his Master, his Majesty would not suffer it to be published, before the Fortifications, which he caused to be made in divers places, according to this new Method, were finished; it not being just, that Strangers should have the Benefit of it before That time. For the same reason, the Impression of the Art of throwing Bombs was put off till another Time, when the Author shewed the Manuscript of it to his Majesty, in 1675 (7). This Precaution has been of no use to those of Dieppe, this present Year 1694.

(7) See as well for this, as for the Body of the Article, Mr Blondel's Book, or the Extracts published by the Journalists. See the Acta Eruditorum in 1684. pag. 225. in 1685. pag. 164. 438. Novel de la Rep. des Let. 1684. pag. 427. & 745. Edit. 2.

BLONDUS (FLAVIUS), born at Forli in Italy in the Year 1388 [A], applied himself so closely to polite Learning, and with such Success, that, going to Rome at a time, when learned Men were more scarce, than They have been since, he

[A] He was born in the year 1388. I infer this from his Epitaph, in which we read, that he lived Seventy five years, and that he died the fourth of

June 1463. Vossius relates it, as taken from the Description of Rome, by George Fabricius (1). Father Labbe, in his Thesaurus Epitaphiorum (2), and

(1) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 536.

(2) See Pope Blount Censura Autor. pag. 323.

he immediately met with Patrons even among the Cardinals, who recommended him to Pope Eugenius IV., and procured him the Place of Secretary to that Pope (a). He was continued in this Employ by the Successors of Eugenius, down to Pius II., in whose Pontificate he died, on the fourth of June, 1463. He composed several Books (b), and, among others, an History, from the Year 400 down to 1440 (c). He does not come up to That Purity of Style, which appeared in some Historians of the XVIth Century, nor does he deserve any great Credit; for however sincere we may suppose him to have been, we must consider, that he followed deceitful Guides (d), and that he had more in view the collecting a great Number of Facts, than examining into the Truth of them [B]. It would, however, be ungrateful and unjust to deny, that his Labours have been of use to the Learned World, and to forget the Difficulties he encountered, being almost the First, who attempted to restore the Roman Antiquities. Though he had the Charge of a Family, he behaved like a true Philosopher with respect to Riches: he did not endeavour to acquire them, and would not leave any Portion of Inheritance to his Sons (e) [C]; for, finding them grown up, and able to take care for themselves, he left all he had to his Daughters. They, who would know the several Judgments passed upon his Books, may consult the Eponymologium of Magius (f), Hankius de Scriptoribus Rerum Romanarum (g), and the Censura celebriorum Autorum of Sir Thomas-Pope Blount (h). Some pretend we ought to call him Blondus Flavius, and not Flavius Blondus. These two Names are of the same Signification.

(a) Boissard in Iconib. apud Pope Blount. pag. 327.

(b) See the Titles of them in Moretti.

(c) See Voss. de Hist. Lat. pag. 583.

(d) See in Pope Blount, pag. 328. the Passage of Gifanius.

(e) He left five, who were all Learned, according to Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital. pag. 478.

(3) See Hankius ubi supra, & Tom. I. pag. 202, & Magius in Eponymolog. pag. 135.

(4) See Hankius ubi supra, & Tom. I. pag. 202, & Magius in Eponymolog. pag. 135.

(5) Sandius seems to have done it. Not in Vossium de Hist. Lat. pag. 219.

(6) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 585.

(7) Sandius in Not. in Vossium de Hist. Latinis.

(8) Magri Eponymolog. pag. 135.

(9) Jo. Gobelius Comment. Pii II. lib. xi. p. 310.

(f) Pag. 134.

(g) Tom. I. pag. 202. & Tom. II. pag. 343.

(h) Pag. 327, 328.

Schraderus, in his Italian Monuments (3), relate it after the same manner. Others relate it as if it gave Blondus but Seventy one years of Life (4); but This, I believe, proceeds from an Error of the Press, copied several Times, which we ought not to take the advantage of, to support what Paul Jovius has said, that he died at the age of Seventy years (5). I shall occasionally remark a like Mistake, which occurs in Vossius: The Printer has put cccccclviii instead of cccccclxiii (6); for the question is about the year, which John Gobelius points out, in speaking of the Death of Flavius Blondus. Now Vossius knew very well, that this year is the Sixty third of the XVth Century. Sandius has not observed this Fault (7). Magius, in giving an account of the Epitaph, and wherever else he speaks of the year of Blondus's Death, puts 1363, instead of 1463 (8).

[B] He had more in view the collecting a great number of Facts, than examining into the Truth of them.] The Author of the History of what passed in the Times of Pius II passes this Judgment on him. 'Blondus Flavius — ab Honorio Arcadioque Cæsaribus (quo tempore inclinasse Romanum Imperium memorant) usque ad ætatem suam Universalem scripsit Historiam. Opus certe laboriosum & utile, verum expolitore emendatoremque dignum. Procul Blondus ab eloquentia prisca fuit, neque satis diligenter quæ scripsit examinavit; non quam vera, sed quam multa scriberet, curam habuit (9). — Extant & alia Blondi Opera non parvæ utilitatis, quamvis cautè legenda sunt, ne falsa pro veris accipias; in pluribus enim errasse deprehenditur (10). — Blondus Flavius — wrote an Universal History, from the Emperors Honorius and Arcadius (at which time the Roman Empire began to decline) down to his own Time. The work is certainly laborious, and useful, but wants polishing and correcting. Blondus does not come up to the ancient Eloquence, nor did he carefully examine what he wrote, being more solicitous how many, than how true, the Facts were, of which he wrote. — There are extant other Works of Blondus of great use; but they must be read with Caution, lest you take for true what is false; for he is detected of Error in many Things.

[C] He did not endeavour to enrich himself, nor would leave his Son any portion of his Inheritance.] Let the Author, whom I quote in the preceding Remark, go on. 'Mortuus & Romæ pauper, ut Philosophum decuit; familiam bene institutam reliquit utriusque sexus. Patrimonium quod habuit tenue dotium causa inter Fæminas divisit; Masculis præter doctrinam bonosque mores nihil reliquit. Id morienti sat fuit ejus ætatis filios dimisisse, qui sibi ipsis consulere possent (11). — He died at Rome poor, as became a Philosopher; He left a well regulated Family both of Sons and Daughters; The small Patrimony, he had, he divided among the Females, leaving the Males nothing but Learning and Good Manners. It was satisfaction enough to him upon his Death-bed, that his Sons were of an Age capable of providing for themselves.'

(10) Idem ibi.

(11) Idem ibi.

BOCCACE (JOHN), one of the most polite and learned Writers of his Age, was born at Certaldo [A] in Tuscany, in the Year 1313. His Father, though a poor Peasant, burthened with a Family, designed him for something above his Birth: This he resolved upon, after having observed, that the Child's Physiognomy and Inclinations promised much. He designed him for Trade, and put him to a Florentine Merchant, who carried him to Paris. Boccace served this Master six Years, and was well beloved by him; for he understood keeping Accounts [B]; but

(1) Giuseppe Betussi, in the Life of Boccace.

(2) It is called Elia.

(3) Boccace, in the Treatise of Rivers, at the Word Elia.

(4) Betussi ib.

[A] He was born at Certaldo.] Betussi, who is here my Author, affirms it (1); several others say the same; but I do not know how to reconcile This with a Passage of Boccace. It is That, where he mentions the River, which runs near the Castle of Certaldo (2). 'I willingly celebrate, says he (3), the Memory of That Castle, which was the place of the Nativity, and Abode, of my Ancestors, before the City of Florence received them into the Number of its Citizens.' Would he speak thus, if he was born there? Betussi could not be ignorant of This Passage; for he translated, into Italian, the Treatise from whence I have taken it. Perhaps, if he had attended to it, he would not have said, that the City of Florence gave Boccace the freedom of a Citizen. Quello per le sue degne virtù fu fatto cittadino Fiorentino (4). Would not this Gift have been superfluous to a Man, whose Ancestors were Floren-

tines? Sabellicus pretends, that Boccace was of Florence, and of the Family of Certaldo; Florentinus Certaldæ domo (5). Let not these Difficulties trouble you, since Boccace affirms, in the Epitaph, which he composed for himself, and which is on his Tomb, that he was born at Certaldo.

[B] Boccace — was well beloved by his Master, for he understood keeping Accounts.] This Love did not continue. Boccace being more fit to be a Wit, than a Bookkeeper, was disgusted at Trade, and neglected his Master's Business, who, being displeased with his Conduct, sent him back into his Country. Egli odiando tale esercizio, & poco curando i negotii del Padrone, da lui fu licenziato, & rimandata alla patria (6). I wonder more at this Merchant's patience, than at his sending him away: I say, I wonder, that he could keep a Youth six Years, who aspired only to Poetry; an Inclination

(5) Sabellicus lib. ix. apud Betussi, ibid.

(6) Benvvenuto da Imola apud Betussi, in vita Boccacii.

but he grew weary of this Employment; and, as he shewed an aptness for Study, They made him change his Occupation, and learn the Canon-Law, as being a Calling, which might enrich him. He lost almost as much time in this second Employ, as in the first; it did not please him, and he thought of nothing but Poetry; his Father's Orders, the Reproofs, and Exhortations, of his Friends, did not check his natural Inclination to versify, and philosophize [C]. It was in vain to tell him, that it was not the way to make his Fortune, and that he would deceive the Hopes, which the good Man, his Father, had conceived, to find himself one Day at ease by the Help of such a Son: Notwithstanding all this, he continued to have an Aversion to the Lawyer's Trade. However, he could not free himself from this unpleasant Study, 'till after his Father's Death; he was forced to put a Restraint upon himself till That Time: But, as soon as he attained to Independency, he totally renounced his former Occupations, and gave himself over to the Reading of the Poets. He put himself under the Discipline of Petrarch; he fought tion much less agreeable to This Master's Interest, than the reading of the Complait Merchant, and the knowledge of a Banker's Trade.

Cent francs au denier cinq, combien font ils?
vingt livres.

Cinq & quatre font neuf, otez deux, reste sept. (7).

(7) Boileau, Sat.
viii. ver. 184,
214.

Add an hundred Francs to five Deniers, what is the Sum Total? Twenty Livres. — Five and Four make nine; take away Two; there remain Seven.

These are the Sciences, with which young Boccaccio ought to have been in love, if he would have continued in his Master's Favour. But, on the other side, it was a good sign of his becoming a Poet, to see him have an aversion to such Calculations.

Romani pueri longis rationibus assem

Discunt in partes centum diducere. Dicat

Filius Albini, si de quincunce remota est

Uncia, quid superat? poteras dixisse, Triens: heus,

Rem poteris servare tuam: redit uncia: quid sit?

Semis. Ad hæc animos ærugo & cura peculi

Cùm semel imbuerit, speramus carmina fingi

Possit linenda cedro, & levi servanda cupressu (8)?

(8) Horat. de
Art. Poet. ver.
325.

Our Roman Youth is bred another way,

And taught no Arts but Those of Usury;

And the glad Father glories in his Child,

When he can subdivide a Fraction.

Can Souls, who by their Parents, from their Birth,

Have been devoted thus to rust and gain,

Be capable of high and generous Thoughts?

Can Verses, writ by such an Author, live?

Lord Roscommon.

(C) His Father's Orders - - did not check his natural Inclination to versify.] Consult him in the fifteenth Book of the Genealogy of the Gods:

'Fastidiebat hæc animus, says he (9), adeo ut in neutrum horum officiorum, aut præceptoris do-ctrina aut genitoris auctoritate, qua novis mandatis angebatur continuè, aut amicorum precibus seu objurgationibus inclinari posset, in tantum illum poëtica trahebat affectio. — I disliked them so much, that neither the Precepts of a Teacher, the Authority of an urgent Father, nor the Intreaties or Reproofs of Friends, could incline me to either of these Employ: so fond was I of Poetry.' What he adds concerning the Inclination, which he had from his childhood, to Fictions, is curious: 'Nec

ex novo sumpto consilio in poësim animus totis

tendebat pedibus: quinimò à vetustissima dispo-sitione ibat impulsus, nam satis memor sum, nondum

ad septimum ætatis annum deveneram, nec dum

fictiones videram, nondum doctores aliquos adve-ram, vix prima literarum elementa cognoveram,

& ecce ipsa impellente natura fingendi desiderium affuit, & si nullius essent momenti, tamen aliquas stiliunculas edidi, non enim suppetebant tenellæ ætatis officio tanti vires ingenii (10). — Nor was it a new Inclination, that turned my Thoughts

volubly to Poetry, but a Disposition of long standing;

VOL. II. N^o. XXXII.

(9) Boccacius,
de Genealog.
Deorum, lib. xv.
apud Papyr. Mac-
donem, Elog.
Tom. II. pag.
123.

(10) Id. ibid.

'for I very well remember, that, before seven Years
'of Age, when as yet I had seen no Fictions, had 'applied to no Masters, and scarce knew my A, B, C,
'I had a Natural Talent for Fiction, and produced
'some trifling Tales, my tender Age not being arri'ved to such a strength of Genius.' He observes, that he soon acquired the Reputation of a Poet,
and even before he knew the Rules of the Art;
and he complains of his Father, who, thinking of nothing but what is profitable, would not suffer him to apply himself to That Study. 'He is the 'cause says he, that I am neither a Merchant
'nor a Canonist, as he wished me to be; and that 'I have lost the Advantage of signalizing my self
'in Poetry.' 'Mirabile dictu, cum nondum no-
'vissem, quibus seu quot pedibus carmen incederet,
'me etiam pro viribus renitente, quod nondum sum,
'poëta ferè à notis omnibus vocatus fui: nec du-
'bito dum ætas in hoc aptior erat, si æquo genitor
'tulisset animo, quin inter celebres poëtas unus
'evasissem: verum dum in lucrosas artes primò,
'inde in lucrosam facultatem ingenium flectere
'conarer meum, factum est, ut nec negotiator sim,
'nec evaderem Canonista, & perderem poëtam esse
'conspicuum (11).' It is easy to imagine the old

Man's Trouble: he was not rich, and he found, (11) Id. ibid. pag.
189.
that he had a Son capable of advancing himself; but,
instead of finding in him any Inclination for gainful Employments, he saw his Mind wholly bent upon Philosophy and Poetry: which are things generally contrary to the Acquisition of Riches. 'Pia-
'cendogli sommamente leggere e intendere i buoni
'poeti, a quali era molto inchinato, e in tutte le
'sue attioni la vita philosophica imitando. Nondi-
'meno questo suo proposito gli era non impedito,
'ma quali vietato dal padre, il quale si perche era
'male agiato, come ancho perche giudicava gli studi
'della humanità e Philosophia congiunti con la poësia
'potergli dare poco utili, desiderava e voleva che
'si mettesse ad altra professione, per lo mezzo della
'quale potesse sostentar se e dare a jutto a lui (12).' (12) Petrus, vi-
This puts me in mind of a Passage of Mr Boileau. ti di Boccaccio.

Fils, frere, oncle, cousin, beau frere de Greffier,
Pouvant charger mon bras d'une utile hasse,
J'allay loin du Palais errer sur le Parnasse.
La Famille en pâlit, & vit en fremissant
Dans la poudre du Greffe un Poëte naissant.
On vid avec horreur une Muse effrenée
Dormir chez un Greffier la gresse matinée.
Dessors à la richesse il salut renoncer (13).

(13) Boileau Epître v. ver. 112.

My Father, Brother, Uncle, Registers,
My Cousin, Brother-in-law, with equal Cares,
Held the same Post, and I the same with theirs.
Soon weary of the musty Rolls, I fled
The Court, and turned to brighter Things my Head.
I sought the Nymphs, that haunt the Anion Floods,
And early stray'd in the Parnassian Woods.
The Family beheld, with rage and Scorn,
A Poet in the dusty Office born.
To them the lawless Muse with borrow'd snor'd
On Scrolls, o're which with so much gain they por'd.

OZELL.

[D] He

fought every where for other Masters, and, not having a sufficient Revenue to maintain himself, he sold his Patrimony, and exhausted it in such a Manner, that he stood in need of the Charity of others [D]. He caused Homer to be translated into Latin for his own use, and procured a Professorship at Florence for a Grecian, to explain That Poet [E]. He did not addit himself so much to Poetry, as to neglect other Studies: He undertook also to read the Bible; but, being an old Man, he only run it over, and thought, that, God having called him to the Culture of Poetry, he ought to dwell on That [F]. The Republic of Florence honoured him with the Freedom of a Citizen(a), and employed him in public Affairs, and particularly to negotiate the Return of Petrarch. They sent him to him; but Petrarch not only did not return to Florence, but made Boccace also resolve to leave That Place, considering the Factions, which divided it. I believe it was with no great Difficulty he inspired him with This Design; for Boccace was a Man, who loved Quiet, and would not join with any Faction. A Person, who is thus inclined, acts but a mean part in a divided City. Having left Florence, he rambled over

(a) See the Remark [A].

(14) It was without doubt the Monk Barlaam.

(15) Betussi, ib.

(16) Boccacius, de General. Deor. lib. xv. cap. 6. See Pappyrus Maffio, Ellog. Tom. II. pag. 195.

(17) Betussi, ib.

(18) Don Eugenio Gamurrini, Abbate Casinese, istoria genealogica delle famiglie nobili Toscane Umbre, in the Journal des Savans, Fevr. 7. 1678, pag. 58, of the Dutch Edition.

(19) Boccacius, de General. Deor. lib. xv. cap. vii. apud Pappyrus Maffionem, Ellog. Tom. II. pag. 191, 192.

[D] He fought every where for other Masters, and exhausted his Patrimony in such a manner, that he stood in need of the Charity of others.] He went into Sicily, to hear the Lectures of a Calabrian (14), who had the Reputation of being very learned in the Greek Language (15). He praises very much Andalus de Nigro, a Native of Genoa, who had taught him Astronomy (16). We shall see, hereafter, that he was acquainted with a learned Man of Theffalonica: the following Words shew that he was reduced very low; 'Ma non posendo il po- vero poeta col debile patrimonio, che quasi gia se n'era andato lungamente piu negli studi continuare, come disperato se ne stava quasi per pigliare novo partito & senza dubbio farebbe stato a cio confretto dalla necessita: ma il divino Petrarcha, che molto l'amava, incominciò sovenerlo in diverse cose, ajutandolo secondo i bisogni di denari, e provedendogli di libri, & altre necessarie cose: onde sempre egli lo chiamò padre e benefattore suo (17). This informs us, that, if Petrarch had not supplied poor Boccace with Money and Books, and such like Assistances, the latter must have been obliged to give over his Studies, by reason of his Poverty, and to take some other course. Note, that Petrarch bequeathed him, by his Will, fifty Florins for a Winter-Suit, that he might follow his Studies commodiously (18).

[E] He procured a Professorship for a Grecian.] This Man was of Theffalonica, and his Name was Leontius Pylatus. Let us see what Boccace says of him: 'Ego, Leontium Pylatum à Venetis occiduum Babylonem quarentem à longa peregrinatione meis flexi consiliis, in patria tenui, illum in propriam domum suscepì, & diu hospitem habui: & maximo labore meo curavi ut inter doctores Florentini studii susceperetur, ei ex publico mercede apposita. Fui equidem ipse insuper, qui primus meis sumptibus Homeri libros & alios quosdam Græcos in Hetruriam revocavi, ex qua multis antè sæculis abierant non redituri. Nec in Hetruriam tantum, sed in patriam deduxi. Ipse ego fui qui primus ex Latinis à Leontio Pylato in privato Iliadem audivi. Ipse insuper fui, qui ut legerentur publicè libri Homeri operatus sum: & esto non satis plenè perceperim, percepi tamen quantum potui: nec dubium si permansisset homo ille vagus diutius penes nos, quin plenius percepissem, sed quantulumcumque ex multis didicirim, nonnullum tamen præceptoris demonstratione crebra integrè intellexi, eosque prout oportuum visum est, huic operi miscui (19). — My Advice prevailed upon Leontius Pylatus, who was going from Venice to Rome, to lay aside the thoughts of so long a Journey; I kept him at home, I took him into my own house, and entertained him a long time: afterwards I procured him a Professorship at Florence. It was owing to me, that the Books of Homer, and other Greek Authors, were brought back into Hetruria, which they had left, never to return. I was the first, among the *Latin*s, who privately heard the Iliad of Homer from the mouth of Leontius Pylatus: I was besides, the Person who procured that Homer's Books should be publicly read; and, granting that I did not thoroughly understand him, I understood as much as was in my Power: and I doubt not but I should have had a fuller Knowledge of him, if that rambling Fellow had staid longer among us. However some Things I had a clear conception of, and inserted them in This Work, as Opportunity offered.' He quotes him in several places of the Genealogy of the Gods; not that This Pylatus had written any Books; but Boccace had heard him say many things, which he preserved in his Collections. We shall see, in the following Words, part of This Greek Doctor's Character. It may easily be concluded from them, that he was a Pedant: '*Leontium Pylatum Theffalonicensem virum, & ut ipse asserit, Barlae auditorem, persæpè deduco; spectu horridus homo est, turpi facie, barba prolixa, & capilitio nigro, & meditatione occupatus assidua, moribus incultus, nec satis urbanus homo, verum, uti experientia notum fecit, literarum Græcarum doctissimus, & quodammodo Græcarum historiarum atque fabularum artiumque inexhaustum, esto Latinarum non satis adhuc instructus sit. Hujus ego nullum vidi opus, sanè quicquid ex eo recito ab eo viva voce referente percepi. Nam cum legentem Homerum, & mecum singulari amicitia conversantem ferè tribus annis audivi, nec infinitis ab eo recitatis, urgente etiam alia cura animi, acrior suffecisset memoria, nisi in schedulis commendassent. (20). — I often consult Leontius Pylatus of Theffalonica, who was, as he himself tells me, an Auditor of the Monk Barlaam: He is of an hideous Aspect, has a long Beard, black Hair, and ever buried in Thought: Unpolite, but very learned in the Greek Tongue, as Experience shews: I allow, indeed, he has, at yet, very little knowledge of the Latin. This Man never wrote any Thing, and whatever I recite from him passed in Discourse between us. For I heard him read Homer, and conversed freely with him almost three Years; nor could I have remembered the many things, I have heard from him, my mind being taken up with other cares likewise, had I not committed them to Writing.*

[F] He undertook also to read the Bible, but, being an old Man, he only run it over.] Let us set down a Passage of Betussi. 'Diede quell' opre maggiore che per lui si potesse alla poesia, & ancho si pose a studiare nelle sacre lettere; ma essendo hoggimai quasi vecchio, si come testimonia egli stesso nell' ultimo d'i presenti libri (21) dicendo. Cætera facultatum studia, & si placeant, quoniam non sic impellerent, minime secutus sum. Vidi tamen sacra volumina a quibus, quoniam annosa est ætas, & tenuitas ingenii disuasere, destiti, turpissimum ratus senem, ut ita loquar, elementarium nova inchoare studia, & cunctos indecensissimum esse id attentasse, quod minime arbitreris perficere posse. Così non molto in questo studi si fermo, anzi lasciandogli da parte attese alla sua cara poesia: alla quale da i cieli era chiamato, si come continuando segue dicendo. Et ideo cum exissimem Dei beneplacito me in hac vocatione vocatum, in eadem consistere mens est (22). — He gives this as his reason, at the end of the second Book. I followed not other Studies, how pleasing soever, because the bent of my Inclination lay another way. Indeed I just looked into the sacred Volumes, but desisted, on account of my Age, and want of Talents, thinking it shameful for an old Man to set about new Studies, and unbecoming all Persons to attempt what they cannot go through with.

(20) Boccacius, ibid. cap. vi. apud eund. pag. 193.

(21) Betussi, ubi supra.

(22) Viz. de General. Deor.

over several Places of Italy, and stopped at last at the Court of Naples, where King Robert gave him a very good Reception. He fell greatly in love with That Prince's Natural Daughter (b), which made him stay a considerable time at Naples. He made also a long Abode in Sicily, where he had a good share in Queen Joan's Favour. He returned to Florence, when the Troubles were somewhat appeased, but could not like the Course of Life, which he must have led there. For which reason he retired to Certaldo, where, far from the Noise of the World, he spent his Time in Study, according to his Fancy. He always loved Liberty; which was the Reason, why he would never put himself into the Service of any great Lord, though he was desired to do it by many. His applying himself too much to Study, occasioned an illness in his Stomach, of which he died at Certaldo, in the Year 1375. He was buried there in St James's and St Philip's Church. He was of an amorous Complexion, and yet he would never marry, and left but one natural Child (c) [G]. He composed many Books [H], some learned and serious, and others of Tales and Gallantry. It is chiefly by the latter, that he immortalized himself [I].

(b) See the Remark [N], of the Article NAPLES, (JOAN I., Queen of).

(c) Taken from his Life, written by Giuseppe Betussi da Bassano. It is prefixed to the Italian Translation of Boccaccio's Riscio De genealogia Deorum, written by the same Betussi.

He

* with. Thus he continued attached to his favourite Poetry, as he goes on to tell us; esteeming therefore, that God had called me to this Study, I determine to pursue it. This is observable. He believed, that, even in his old Age, he ought to apply himself chiefly to Poetry, and that it was the Talent, which God had intrusted him with, and the Ministry, to which Heaven had called him. He followed the Maxim, quam quisque noverit artem, in hac se exerceat, every one should exercise the Trade he understands.

[G] He was of an amorous Complexion, and yet he would never marry. Let us quote Betussi again. 'Fu medefimamente molto inchinato all' amore & libidinoso, & non poco gli piacquerò le donne, come che di loro in molti luoghi dell' opere sue ne dicessè quel peggio che dire si potesse: tuttavia di alquante nelle scritture sue sotto finto nome ne fa honorato ricordo — non lascio di se heredi legittimi: perche non hebbe mai moglie, solamente di lui rimase un figliuolo naturale senza piu (23). — He was likewise very amorous, and lustful, as appears from the many wanton Passages in his Works — He left no legitimate Heirs, having never been married, and but one Natural Son.

[H] He composed many Books. An Abridgment of the Roman History from Romulus till the Year of Rome 724, with a Parallel of the seven Kings of Rome, and of the Emperors, till Nero, inclusive. This Work was printed at Cologne, in the Year 1534, in 8vo. The History of illustrious Women, printed at Bern, in the Year 1539, in Folio. The Genealogy of the Gods, with a Treatise of Mountains, Seas, Rivers, Lakes, &c. This work was printed at Basil, in the Year 1532, in Folio, with the Notes of James Micillus. De casibus virorum illustrium: This Work began with Adam, and ended with John King of France, taken by the English in the Year 1356. It was printed at Paris, in Folio, by the care of John Thierri, of Beauvais: I do not know in what Year, and consequently I cannot tell whether This Edition be later than That of Ausbourg, 1544. This Book was translated into Italian, Spanish, English, and French, at Paris, 1578, in 8vo: the name of the Translator is Claudius Vitart. I wonder Vossius spoke of most of these Works, as if they were only in Manuscript (24). As for the Books, which are ascribed to Boccaccio, de vihoris Sigismundi Imperatoris in Turbas; de heresibus Boemorum; de capta Constantinopoli; de Tartarorum victoria in Turbas (25); they seem to me chimerical; and some of them certainly are so. Let us say something of Boccaccio's Italian Compositions. He wrote il Philocolo, ea Fiammetta, l'Ameto, il Labirinto d'amore, la vita di Dante (26); il Decamerone, of which I am going to speak, &c. All these Books, and most of the Latin, have been translated into French long since (27). As for his Italian Verses, I shall only say, that he wrote many, and that he did not shew a great Talent in them. Per dire il vero, lo stile volgare in verso non gli fu troppo amico (28). Nevertheless, he was one of the Triumvirs, or three Princes of the Poets of That Age; it is true, he had only the last Rank given him in the Poetical Triumvirate; the first was given to Dante, and the second to Petrarch (29). Note, that the Thebeside of Boccaccio was a Poem of a new Invention, which is much to his Credit; for none but great Wits can trace out new ways, unknown to others. Scrisse la Thebeside sopra in ottava rima, nella cui si contengono i fatti di Theseo, & fu il primo inventore di tale testura perche per innanzi non mi ricordo io havir trovato ch' altri la usasse (30). Let us not forget, that he acknowledged his inferiority: for having seen Petrarch's Sonnets, and Songs, he resolved to throw his Poems into the Fire. Petrarch writ a Letter to him to dissuade him from that design (31). Betussi stops there; but, he should have said also, that Boccaccio actually burnt his Italian Verses, after having seen that they came not near those of Petrarch. See the Author that I quote (32).

[I] It is chiefly by the latter, that he immortalized himself. This ought especially to be understood of the Decameron, which is a Collection of an Hundred Novels, wherein there are very diverting Adventures of Love, and many roguish Tricks played to Husbands. That Work has been translated into several Languages, and re-printed a thousand times. It is by that Book that many People, who would have been ignorant of the other Writings of This Author, know that Boccaccio was an Ornament of his Age, a fine Genius, an excellent Author, a Virtuoso, &c. Paul Jovius makes this Remark: 'Obsolescent & aegre quidem vitae spiritum retinent libri de Genealogia Deorum, varietateque Fortunae, & de fontibus accuratè potius quam feliciter elaborati, quando jam illae decem dierum fabulae, Millesiarum imitatione in gratiam oblectandi oculi, admirabili jucunditate compositae, in omnium nationum linguas adoptentur, & sine ulla suspitione interitus, applaudente populo, cunctorum operum gratiam antecedant (33). — His books on the Genealogy of the Gods, and the variety of Fortune, and on Fountains, composed more accurately than happily, grow obsolete, and hardly live, while his ten Days Tales, writ for Diversion, in imitation of the Milesian Tales, with admirable pleasantry, are adopted into all Languages, and without any objection, and with the applause of the World, are received more favourably than any other of his Works.' There are some Protestants, to whom the Decameron is not disagreeable; they find in it Railleries against the Monks, and the Popish Devotions. In eo fabulis & historiis centum papale regnum, confessionem auricularum, Sanctas, lipanolatricum, purgatorium &c. acerrime perstrinxit, perversitatis Papae non ignarus (34). Doubtless this is the reason why some Catholic Authors call him impious: 'Boccacius Hetruscorum Cicero, fabulator jucundus, & eloquens sermone patrio, sed Latini parum peritus, Theogoniae non admodum accuratus, & Mythologiae non satis idoneus enarrator, in omnibus obsecutus, IMPIUS, & verficulator ineptissimus (35). — Boccaccio, the Cicero of Tuscany, a pleasant story Teller, and eloquent in his own Language, but not well skilled in the Latin, not very accurate in his Theogony, nor a nice explainer of Mythology, every where obscene, IMPIOUS, and a paltry verficier.' You see he is also accounted obscene. The Gentlemen of Port-Royal reproach him with the same thing. It ought to be observed, say they (36), 'That there are some Passages in That Author, which shew plainly, that he was less scrupulous of breaking the Rules of Purity of Port Royal,

(30) Id. ibid.

(31) Id. ibid.

(32) Petrarcha Epist. ad Boccacium lib. v. re. rum seniliam apud Papyr. Maffonem, Elog. Tom. II. p. 191.

(33) Paulus Jovius, Elog. cap. 6. pag. 23.

(34) Bernegger. Idol. Lauret. pag. 128, & seq. apud Tho. Pope Blount, Censura Author. p. 308.

(35) Balthasar Bonifacius, Hist. Ludicae, lib. xv. cap. 3. pag. 432, 433.

(36) Baillet, Jugem. des Savans, n. 206. des Critiques Grammaticiens. He quotes the Preface to the Italian Grammar of the Gentlemen of Port Royal.

(23) Betussi, ubi supra.

(24) Vossius de Hist. Lat. p. 527.

(25) Pocclantius de Scrip. Florentinis, pag. 92. Betussi in vita Boccacii. See also Gesner in Biblioth. fol. 370.

(26) It was printed at Rome, in 1544, in 16mo, and at Florence 1576, in 8vo.

(27) See the Bibliothecque Francoise of Du Verdier was-Privas, at the word John Boccaccio.

(28) Betussi, ubi supra.

(29) Id. ibid.

He is taxed with Plagiarism [K]. I shall make a Remark on the Care, which the Inquifitors of Manners, which we have received from God himself, than of offending in the least against those, concerning the Purity of Language, which proceed only from Caprice, or the Will of Men.

(37) Bullart, Académ. des Sciences, Tom. I. p. 263.

Let us see what Mr Bullart observes, concerning That Book. 'The most considerable of his Compositions, says he (37), is the Decameron; which, having been received with applause by all Italy, was likewise so favourably entertained by Foreign Nations, that each desired to have it in their own Language; and it was the more eagerly sought after, because endeavours were used to suppress it; and it was censured, for speaking too freely and satirically against the Monks. Boccace published it in the Year One thousand three hundred forty eight, at a time when the City of Florence was laid waste, and made almost desert, by a raging Pestilence. It may be reckoned among the finest of Pieces, which are writ for Amusement, and have some mixture of the profitable and delightful. Petrarch, having read it over, found so many beauties in it, that he took the pains to translate a Piece of that fine Work into Latin for his own diversion, which was the incredible Patience of Grifolide towards her Husband the Marquis of Sa-luces. Petrarch dedicated his Latin Translation of the Story of Grifolide to Boccace, and told him, that, in running over the Decameron, he had observed, that the Author had been obliged to reprove certain Satirists, who could do nothing but find fault with what they would not, or could not do: Animadverti alicubi librum ipsum canum dentibus laceffum, tuo tamen baculo egregie, tuaque voce defensum. Nec miratus sum: nam & vires ingenii tui novi, & scio expertus esse hominum genus, & insolens & ignavum, qui quicquid ipsi vel nolunt, vel nesciunt, vel non possunt, in aliis reprehendunt, ad hoc unum docti & arguti. Sed elingues ad reliqua (38). — I observed somewhere, that the book itself has been attacked by Dogs open-mouthed, but excellently defended by your Voice and Cudgel. I do not wonder at it, for I know the strength of your Genius, and know likewise by experience, that there are a sort of Men, that are both insolent and lazy, who blame, in others, what ever they themselves either know not, or will not or cannot, do. In this single thing they are learned, and sharp; for any thing else, they have not a word to say. He adds, that he excuses the lascivious Passages on account of the Writer's Age, the nature of the Subject, and the Character of the Persons, who would read such a Work: 'Si quid lascivie liberioris occurreret, excusabat ætas tunc tua dum id scriberes, filius, idioma, ipsa quoque rerum levitas, & eorum qui lecturi talia videbantur: resert enim largiter quibus scribas, morumque varietate sibi varietas excusatur (39). — If any thing occurred a little too loose, your age at the time of writing of it, the Style, the Idiom, as also the levity of the subject itself, and of those who were likely to read it, serves to excuse it: for it is a great matter to whom you write, and variety of style is excused by variety of manners. Nothing can be more equitable than this; Whoever pretends to judge of a Book, ought to go by this Rule; to consider the Author's Age and Profession, the nature of the Subject, and for what sort of Persons he writes; for That, which would be intolerable in a Dogmatical Work, is not so in a Work designed for Diversion. However, the obscenities of the Decameron did not hinder the wisest and most virtuous Princes of France from ordering it to be translated into French; for it was in obedience to the most illustrious Margaret de Valois, Queen of Navarre, that Antony le Maçon (40) translated it into That Language. Du Verdier Van-Privas takes notice of five Editions of That Translation (41), without mentioning either That which I make use of, which is That of Paris by Martin le Jeune 1559, in 8vo, or That of Paris by Oliver de Harly 1569. He observes that the same Book had been translated long before by one Laurens. Note, that there is an Italian Edition of the Decameron (42), to which Francis Sansovin prefixed a Preface, and the Author's Life. A new French Translation of This Work, with Cuts, was published at Amsterdam in the Year 1697.

(38) Petrarcha apud Papyr. Massonem, Ellog. Tom. II. p. 198, 199.

(39) Id. ibid.

(40) He was a Native of Dauphiné, Treasurer of the Wars, and Secretary to the Queen of Navarre, the only Sister of Francis I.

(41) Du Verdier Biblioth. Francoise, pag. 72.

(42) At Venice 1549, in 4to.

The Translator, owns, in the Preface, that he has unfolded the Graces of the Original, that he has dressed them according to our fashion, that he has abridged several things, and avoided Repetitions; 'That he has often altered not only whole Periods, but also the Plan of the Work; that he has only taken the essential part of the Novel, and that, to avoid the Preambles prefixed to each Story, he thought fit not to name the Interlocutors, and to omit the distinction of the Days; that, when he met with any licentious Passages, he took a particular care to wrap up things in such a manner, that the Fair Sex might laugh without blushing.' He hopes there will be no cause to complain, that he has spoiled any thing by too scrupulous a Circumspection. But many people are persuaded, that every one, who is able to read the Decameron in Italian, will dislike a Translation so different from the Original, and will rather chuse to make use of the old ones, than of this; and Translators, when, instead of translating literally, they take the liberty to cut off, and alter, whatever they please, meet with as heavy censures from these People, as your good Toppers daily bestow on a Vintner, who seldom has any thing in his Cellar but mixtures, wherein Art destroys Nature.

Perhaps no Body has exclaimed more against Boccace than Vannozzi. He pretends, that reading the Decameron has made so many Courtizans, that a Man would be astonished, if he knew the number of them. 'Al fuoco, al fuoco, cries he (43), si fatti volumi, spengasi il seme una volta di coli maligna Zizania. Chi potesse contare quante puttane ha fatto il Decameron del Boccaccio, rimarrebbe stupido, & senza senso; Che cose dicano di lui duo Fiorentini favi, & letterati amendue, leggasi in due lettere, una di Francesco Petrarcha tra le latine, & una di Bartolomeo Cavalcanti tra le vulgari, & intenderallo. Ma che occorre cercar piu oltre di quello, che n'habbia giudicato la tanta inquisitione dannandolo? Non si può negare, che l'opera del Decameron, non sia stata di notabil giovamento alla lingua Tosca, della quale egli è veramente Maestro; ma per conto delle materie, & delle cose narrate da esso, in quel suo novelliere, non si può dire, quanto, & quale sia stato, & perseveri tuttavia, il danno, che se ne sente. — To the fire, to the fire, with such foolish books; destroy at once the seeds of these malignant Tares. If a Man could but tell how many Whores Boccace's Decameron has made, he would be amazed and stupified. What two Florentines, both of them wise and learned Men, say of him, may be seen in two Letters, one from Francis Petrarch in Latin, the other from Bartholomew Cavalcante in Italian; but what need we look any further? Has not the holy Inquisition condemned it? It cannot be denied, that the Decameron contains notable helps to the Tuscan Language, of which he is truly a Master: but, as for the matter contained in the Novels there related, no body can tell what damage it has done, and daily does, without being observed. There are, in this Letter of Vannozzi, several other Testimonies of his Zeal against Books of Love Intrigues.

[K] He is taxed with Plagiarism. It is said (44), that his Book, de genealogia Deorum, was taken from a piece of the same kind done by the Civilian Paul of Perugia, Library-keeper to King Robert (45). But, since he confesses, that he took many things out of it, and particularly those he put out under the Name of Theodotius (46), it ought not to be imputed to him as a Crime. He is not so excusable as to what he has taken out of another Author, and out of Vibius Sequester's Book of Nominibus Fluminum, Fontium, Lacuum, Nemorum, Paludum, & Gentium (47); for he never quotes him. 'Boccacius in opere de genealogia Deorum Fulgentii mythologiam, etiam cum non citat, graviter exscripsit, adeo ut ex Boccacio in non paucis emendari Fulgentius potuerit (48). — Boccace, in his Book on the Genealogy of the Gods, has grossly copied the Mythology of Fulgentius, even when he does not cite him, so that Fulgentius might be corrected out of Boccace in several Places. It is a question, whether he is the true Author of the Ameto, and of the amatoria visiones (49). Thomasius has not put him

(43) Bonifacio Vannozzi delle Lettere Miscellanee, Vol. I. pag. 550.

(44) Leand. Albertus Descript. Ital. pag. 101.

(45) He was King of Naples.

(46) Boccac. de Geneal. Door. lib. xv. cap. 6. See Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 525, 526.

(47) See Vossius de Philologia, cap. xi. n. 20. pag. 57.

(48) Faber in Decad. n. 95.

(49) Leand. Albert. ubi supra pag. 76.

Inquifitors have taken to place his Decameron in the Lift of forbidden Books [L]. His Labyrinth of Love had been lately tranſlated [M]: that Book is a Proof of his diſorderly Engagements with the Fair Sex, and of the Troubles they were attended with. I do not queſtion but there are a great many particular, and very curious, things concerning Boccace, and his Books, in the Iſtoria della volgar poeſia, published in the Year 1698, in 4to, by the Abbot Giovanni Mario de Creſcembeni. I have not that Book, which would be very uſeful to me, neither do I know any Body that has it. Some ſay, that Boccace was either the Author or the Approver of the Book De tribus Impoſtoribus (d). I would here ſupply one Omiſſion, which is, that it would be a very great Error to take the Adventures related in his Decameron for Truth. Some of them may perhaps be founded on Realities, which he was acquainted with, to which he only added the Ornaments; but the greateſt Part are the Productions of Wit, and invented at different times; one of his beſt Tales is extant in Apuleius [N].

(d) Mareſchal de Joanna Paſſia,
pag. 196.

in his Lift of Plagiaries. Vannoſſi takes notice that the Decameron is full of Plagiariſm. 'In un libro di Nouelle, & di bel parlare gentile, anteriore al Boccaccio, & di doue egli cauò alcune delle riſpoſte da lui nel ſuo Decameron, o Principe Goleotto, che vuol dire Principe de' Ruſſiani, ſi legge queſta coſi puntualmente, Et de verbo ad verbum deſcritta (50). — In a book of Tales and polite ſpeaking, prior to Boccace, and from whence he took ſome of the things he has put in his Decameron, or Prince Goleotto, that is the Prince of Ruſſians, you may find ſeveral Paſſages which he has copied exactly, even word for word. Having quoted the Words of the Author, who lived before Boccace, he obſerves that the Copyiſt had corrupted his Original in a ſcandalous manner. The Perſons, mentioned in the Copy, are Clergymen, who loſe their Virtue: thoſe of the other Author, were Lay-men, who had forſaken their evil ways. 'Jo ho copiato qui queſta nouelleſta, dal ſuo detto libro, acciò ſi noti il peggioramento, che n'ha fatto il Boccaccio, traſferendola tra le ſue, che è quella a punto di Maſſetto da Lamporecchio tanto peggiorata, & coſi ſcandalosamente alterata, come guidicherà chiunque la ſapia: attribuendo à perſone ſacre il Boccaccio quella colpa, che dal ſuo anteriore fu aſcritta à perſone profane, & dove quelli fà di cattive douentar buone le ſue; il Boccaccio fà di buone douentar cattive le noſtre (51). — I have copied this Tale from the book above-mentioned, to ſhew the injury Boccace has done them by tranſferring them into his; that this, particularly, of the Maſſetto di Lamporecchio, is made ſo much worſe and ſo ſcandalouſly altered, as whoever underſtands it muſt judge, Boccace attributing to ſacred Perſons, what, by his Predeceſſor, had been aſcribed to profane ones: and whereas the other made his wicked Men become good, Boccace makes our good Men turn wicked.

(50) Vannoſſi
Miſcel. Let. Vol.
I. pag. 580.

(51) Id. ibid.

[L] The Inquifitors have placed his Decameron in the Lift of forbidden Books. Mr Arnould obſerves 'that the Books of the Pagan Poets, full of ſo much filth, which may incline the Readers to ſin, have not been forbid, for this one reaſon, becauſe they are neceſſary for ſome Perſons to learn the Latin Tongue . . . and therefore they, who made the Rules of the Index, did not believe, that, by any poſitive Law, it ought to be forbidden, that young Perſons, who are Maſters of their Reading, to whom thoſe Books are much more dangerous than to Children, ſhould read the infamous Paſſages of Martial, Juvenal, Horace, Petrarch, Apuleius, &c. Not but that they thought, that moſt of thoſe who read them did ill; but becauſe others, who are ſufficiently confirmed in Virtue, ſo as not to be affected with thoſe bad Ideas, and to mind only the neatneſs and elegance of the Greek and Latin Tongue, may read them innocently, it was thought expedient to keep to the Law of Nature, and to leave thoſe things to every one's Conſcience, and to the Judgment of the Directors and Confefſors. The like was done with reſpect to Boccace's Decameron. Becauſe the Italians find the greateſt delicacy of their Language in it, the Licentiouſneſs of his Stories did not hinder it from being left in every Body's Hands, provided it was corrected. And I have been told, that that Correction conſiſts only in changing, in the ſcandalous ſtories, the Words Monks and Nuns for others. But ſince things, which may be a Temptation to Impurity, are the more dangerous, when they are related in a pleaſant Style, it is not a thing, that does much honour to the Chriſtian Religion, to leave a Book, ſo dangerous in that reſpect, in every Body's Hands, becauſe it is writ very politely, whiſt many others are forbid, wherein there is more to be learned; and the danger infinitely leſs. I ſpeak, comparing ſo many forbidden Books with that of Boccace, which is not forbidden (52). All this Diſcourſe is very judicious, and has ſomething in it would almoſt make one believe, that, provided the Clergy be not concerned in the matter, they do not care much what harm the reading of Boccace may do.

[M] His Labyrinth of Love, has been lately tranſlated: That Book is a proof of his diſorderly Intrigues with the fair Sex, and of the Troubles they were attended with. The French Tranſlation, printed at Paris in 1699, was immediately re-printed at Amſterdam: It bears the Title of Boccace's Dream, and is an Invective againſt Women. The Author writ it when he was angry with a Widow, whom he had loved, and who had played him an ill Trick. He, who tranſlated that Work, has taken more liberty even than the new Tranſlator of the Decameron. He has left out many things, which he has filled up with Stories, Fragments, and Verſes, compoſed either by his Friends, or by other Writers of our Time. Mr de Beauval ſays, 'That it is no ways a regular Tranſlation of Boccace's Dream, but an ill, injudicious, Collection of Boccace's Dream, and of all that the Moderns, long ſince Boccace, have ſaid about Women (53). Another Journaliſt is yet more ſevere: he ſays, 'That the Supplements make the whole piece monſtrous, and quite deſtroy the Oeconomy of it. Nothing appears more out of it's place in a Book of Boccace, who lived above Three hundred Years ago, than Verſes of Mademoiſelle de Scuderi, Reflexions of Mr de la Bruyere, Maxims of the Duke de la Rochefoucault, and Pieces of a yet later date (54). Note, that the Tranſlator advertiſes us, that 'he has left out . . . many things that Modesty would not bear; but that he has preſerved Boccace's Devotion, becauſe he thought he ſhould have too much diſfigured his Work, if he had deprived him of that, after taking away his Obſcenities. He takes notice, that it is the uſual way of That Author to mix Morality and pious Thoughts among Trifles.

I obſerve, that, generally ſpeaking, no Writers ſlander the Fair Sex ſo much as thoſe who have moſt frequented, loved, and idolized them; and therefore Women ought to mind their Slanders but little: They are proofs of their Dominion; they are the Murmurings of a Slave, who feels the weight of his Chains, or who, being at Liberty, fees the marks of his Servitude remaining on his Body.

[N] One of his beſt Tales is extant in Apuleius. 'Tis that of the Woman that hid her Gallant under a Tub. Beroald has remarked the ſame. — Joannes Boccacius, ſays he (55), eloquio vernaculo diſtiſſimus, candidiſſimus, argumeto & ſtylo lepidiſſimo, ſeſſiviſſimoque, inter quas Apuleianam hanc inferuit, tranſpoſuitque commodiſſime, non ut Interpres, ſed ut Conditor; quam feminæ noſtrates non ſurdis auribus audiunt, neque invitate legunt — John Boccace, a very eloquent Man in his Mother Tongue, compoſed an hundred Tales on very merry ſubjects, and in a moſt pleaſant and witty Style, among which he has inſerted this of Apuleius, and tranſplanted it nicely, not as a Tranſlator,

(52) Difficulté
propoſées à Mr
St. vaert, Part
IX. pag. 324.

(53) Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Savans, March,
1699, pag. 128.

(54) Bernard.
Nouvelles de la
Rep. des Lettres,
April, 1699,
pag. 476.

(55) Philip Bo-roald's Notes on the 9th Book of Apuleius's Golden
Aſs, p. 297, 298. Edit. Baſil
1597 in 3vo.

(c) In the 2d Volume of his
Tales, pag. 196.
Edit. Amst.
1685, in 8vo.

stator, but as the original Author, which the Women of our Time bear and read with a deal of Pleasure. Mr de la Fontaine has also given us this Tale, under the Title of the Cooper (56), but he has not taken notice that he borrowed it from another Author. He sometimes points out the Fountain he draws from; I wonder he has not always done so.

(a) I have seen a French Translation of the 1st Century, printed at Paris, in 1615, in 8vo: the Translator calls himself Fougasse.

(b) Niclus Ery-thraeus Pinacoth.
iii. pag. 223,
speaking of the Book entitled,
Pietra del para-gone politico.

(c) Moreri is one of them.

BOCCALINI (TRAJAN), born at Rome, was a very fine Genius in the beginning of the XVIIth Century. He was too much given to Raillery and Detraction, and took a new and pleasant Turn to criticize what he pleased; which was to feign, that Apollo, holding his general Court on Parnassus, heard the Complaints of all Persons, and did justice according to the Exigency of the Case. This produced the Ragguagli di Parnasso, which have been translated into several Languages (a), and well relished by the Public. He fell into the common Fault of those who delight too much in Satire; that is, he must needs level his Detractions at Thrones, and crowned Heads, and attacked chiefly those which made then the greatest Noise in Europe. He attacked the Court of Spain; and that in a manner the more poignant, as he pretended to shew, that the Monarchy of that Name was not so powerful as was imagined, and that it's Strength might easily be undermined by certain ways which he pointed out (b). This has been thought the Occasion of his Death. The Spaniards complain heavily of his slandering them [A]. See in Moreri how he was killed. This Man, who censured every Body, and who found so much fault with the Government, made it appear, that his Theory, and his Practice, did not well agree together [B]; for the Jurisdiction, which he exercised in some places of the Ecclesiastical State, was no ways conformable to the Rules of Equity and Justice. People were going continually to Rome to complain of him; which occasioned many malicious Reflexions, as well against the Advocates and Physicians, as against the Divines [C]. Those who have been pleased to say, that he was meditating political Discourses on Tacitus (c), when he was murdered [D], were not [A] The Spaniards complain heavily of his slandering them. Hear what one of their Authors says on this subject. 'De nuestros tiempos ser notados por de genio critico y maldiciente, Francisco Berna, Poeta contra los de su nacion Italianos: Trajano Boccalini, discursista paradoxo contra toda la na-cion Espannola. — In our time are noted for their Critical and Satirical Genius, Francisco Berna an Italian Poet against those of his own Nation;

' Trajano Boccalini for his Paradoxical Discourses ' against the whole Spanish Nation.' These are the words of John Vitrian, in his Notes on Philip de Comines (1).

(1) Chap. I.
Letter (F), pag.
3.

[B] His Theory and his Practice did not well agree together. See what Niclus Erythraeus said of it. 'At qui se aliis Reip. bene gerendae ducem ac magistrum profectur ac praestat, in iis oppidis, quorum illi administratio commissa fuerat, regendis, suis ipse praecceptis non paruit, sed multa, ut ajunt, commisit, quae ab illorum rationibus essent aliena. Quamobrem fiebat, ut Romam crebrae de ipsum injuriis querimoniae deferrentur (2). —
But he, who professed himself, and really was, a Master and Guide to others in the good Administration of Government, in governing these Towns committed to his management, never obeyed his own Rules, but acted in many things quite contrary to them, so that frequent complaints were carried to Rome of his injustice.' It is but too common for those who write Political Books, and even good ones, to shew but little Capacity when they happen to be promoted to great Offices. So true is it, that the application of Rules is more difficult, than the Art of discoursing well of them!

(2) Pinacoth. I.
pag. 272.

[C] This occasioned many malicious Reflexions as well against the Advocates and Physicians as against the Divines. Niclus Erythraeus pretends, that this occasioned a Proverb, importing, that there are three sorts of Men, who make almost no use of the Laws they prescribe to others. No body swerves more from the Law in Practice, than a Lawyer; no Body observes the Regimen of Health, less than a Physician; no Body fears the remorse of Conscience less than a Divine. You will find, in the Original, the Exception which the Author has made. He does not relate the thing as jesters commonly do. They say, That the Lawyers, who advise others so much to go to Law, do seldom go to Law themselves; That Physicians, who prescribe so much Physic to their Patients, take but little themselves;
and that Divines, who set down so many Articles of Faith for others, believe but few themselves (3). There are the Latin Words of Niclus Ery-thraeus. 'Quamobrem fiebat, ut Romam crebrae
' de ipsius (Boccalini) injuriis querimoniae deter-

(3) See the Cour-tous of Balchas.
Castiglione pag.
295.

rentur, ac locus proverbio fieret, quo dicitur, tria esse hominum genera, qui nihil fere legibus, quas ipfi aliis imponunt, utantur, nimirum Jurisconsultos, medicos, atque theologos: nulli enim magis in negociis ab jure, ab aequitate, discedunt quam
J. C. nulli tuendae valetudinis rationem minus servant quam medici, nulli conscientiae aculeos minus metuunt quam theologo. Itaque qui justitiam, valetudinem, & conscientiam amittere sata-gunt, juris doctorum, medicorum, theologorum que amicitias colant: quod tamen de iis tantum intelligendum, qui ea studia non serio ac sedulo, verum in speciem, & dicis causa, profitentur (4).
— So that frequent complaints were carried to Rome, of his [Boccalini's] Injustice, and Occasion was given for a Proverb, which says that there are three sorts of Men, who scarce make any use of the Laws they prescribe to others; to wit, the Lawyers, Physicians, and Divines: For no Body swerves more from Law and Equity in Business than the Lawyers; no Body observes the Rules for preservation of Health less than the Physicians; no Body fears the Stings of Conscience less than the Divines. And therefore whoever has a mind to get rid of Justice, Health, and Conscience, need but associate with Lawyers, Doctors, and Di-vines: but this is to be understood only of those who profess these Studies, not seriously and diligently, but only in shew and for form sake.

(4) Niclus Ery-
thraeus Pinacoth.
I. pag. 272.

[D] On this Reflection, which by the way is Panurge's, lib. iii. cap. 29. of Rabelais, Benjamin Priolo formed one of his Maxims, mentioned by Mr Bayle, Remark [K] of the Article Priolo.
REM CRIT.]

[D] It has been said that he was meditating Political Discourses upon Tacitus, when he was murdered. They should have said, not only that those Discourses were composed; but also, that they had been printed twice at Geneva. To set a great Value upon those Editions, People have been made to believe, first, That the Manuscript of that Work was a very rare Piece. Secondly, That the Senate of Venice had carefully kept the Original, till they made a Present of it to the Queen of Sweden.
Thirdly, that with great Charges, and much Trouble, they had found means to get a Copy of the Manuscript, given to that Princess by the Senate of Venice. Meer Knavery. That Manuscript was handed about every where, Twenty Years before that Queen's coming into Italy. There are at least thirty Copies of it, in several Libraries of Italy.
The Author presented this Work himself to divers Persons, and particularly to Cardinal Barbarini at Rome, and to the Procurator Morosini at Venice.
The Cardinal presented his Copy to the Academy not well informed. He left some Children [E]. He has been numbered among the Plagiaries [F], and some Faults have been committed in that Point, as I have shewn in one of my Remarks (d).

(d) See the end of the Remark [F].

of the Humorists, and it was transcribed by several People. The Copy of Morsini has been as often transcribed; so that it was not difficult to buy Copies of it. The Governor of an English Lord bought one of them, and parted with it to a Bookseller at Geneva, who printed it (5). About the same time, a German Gentleman brought another Copy of it from Italy, and gave it to a Professor of Tubingen, whose Name was Mr du May, who added some Remarks to it, and sent it to Mr Leti at Geneva. Mr Leti got it printed by the Sieur Widerbold, and intitled it, Bilancia Politica, and added a third Volume to it, to which he put his own Name (6). That Book of Boccalini has not been esteemed: Mr Amelot de la Houffaye speaks very slightly of it (7).

(5) It was the Sieur de Tournes.

(6) All these particulars are taken from a Memorial that comes from good hands. I keep the Original by me.

(7) In the critical Discourse prefixed to his Morals of Tacitus, and to his Translation of the six first Books of Tacitus's Annals.

(8) This appears by the Epistle Dedicatory.

[E] He left some Children. I have his Pietra del Paragone Politico, or Political Touchstone, printed at Paris, in the Year 1626, in 8vo, and dedicated to Cardinal de la Valette. It is Boccalini's Son, who dedicated that Work to this Cardinal: The Epistle Dedicatory is dated from Paris the tenth of April 1626 (8). That which surprises me is to see that that Work is looked on as a Posthumous one, for I have seen an Edition, of the Year 1615, of Boccalini's Book intitled, Pietra del Paragone Politico. This would make me conjecture, that the Work, dedicated to Cardinal de la Valette, was a Continuation, or a Second Part, of the Pietra del Paragone Politico. I desire those who have leisure, and many Editions in Hand, to verify the thing. Mr Giv had published his French Translation of that Work of Boccalini, before the Author's Son published it in Italian, in the Year 1626. The Latin Version of the same work, made by Ernest John Creutz, was printed at Amsterdam in the Year 1642, in 12mo, under the title of Lapis Lydius Politicus.

[F] He has been numbered among the Plagiaries. This Term seems to me improper, because Boccalini is not accused of having stole the Labours of other Men, but of having lent his Name to hide the true Author. It is said, that he imitated certain Persons, who, to free their Ecclesiastical Patron from the shame of having got a Servant-Maid with Child, take it upon themselves, and marry her, being resolved to own all the Children that may come from the same Quarter. 'Tis pretended, that Cardinal Cajetan is the true Author of the Books which came out under the Name of Boccalini (9); and if you enquire, Why Cardinal Cajetan diverted himself of his Right in favour of another; They will answer you, That he did it to have the pleasure of censuring and biting, without prejudicing his Dignity, or raising himself any Enemies. I cannot believe this to be true; I believe only that Boccalini did like Terence: he communicated his Thoughts to the Cardinals, who protected him (10), and made use of their Advice, and of the Thoughts they suggested to him. He thought that the Opinion People would have, that he was assisted by such Persons, would be an Honour to him: 'twas just the Taste of Terence. 'Quemadmodum Terentio malevoli objiciebant, ipsum, in fabulis faciendis, Scipionis Africani, Lælii qui dictus est sapiens, & Furii Pii, opera uti, assidueque cum illis una scribere; ita etiam de Trajano fama distulerat, in his actis referendis homines nobilissimos socios & adjutores habere. Verum id tibi non minus laudi ducebat, quam Terentius, qui gloriosum sibi putabat, id quod malevoli quasi maledictum vehemens existimabant, ac fit verisimile hæc cum illis eum communicasse, quibus, ad notanda & animadvertenda aliorum vitia, eadem esset voluntas atque propensio (11). — As malevolent Persons objected to Terence, that he had the Assistance of Scipio Africanus, Lælius, who was called the Wife, and of Furius Pius, and daily wrote with them; so likewise Fame gave out concerning Trajan, that he had some of the Prime Nobility for his Companions and Assistants, in relating these Acts. But he accounted That no less Praise to him, than Terence did, who esteemed That a Glory to himself, which his enemies looked upon as a most vehement reproach; and it is very probable he might communicate these things to them, who had the same will and inclination to observe and advert on the Faults of others. Some for want of taking sufficient notice of the order of Time, have said, that Cardinal Cajetan, who disputed against Luther, wrote the Ragguagli del Parnasso, and the Pietra del Paragone. Mr Chevreau imputes that fault to John Rhodius, a Danish Physician, and to Peter Scavinius; but he is mistaken; for they meant another Cardinal Cajetan; and he refutes them by a bad Reason: Boccalini, says he (12), who was the Son of an Architect of Rome, was murdered at Venice by order of the Spanish Ambassador. Is this a Proof that he could not lend his Name to a Book of Cardinal Thomas de Vio, who disputed against Luther? Note, That Nicivius Erythraeus affirms, that Perenda, who had been Secretary to Cardinal Henry Cajetan, helped Boccalini to compose the Ragguagli (13).

(9) Scavinius, n. 39. affirms it, apud Rhodium de Auctoribus fuppositis, pag. 42. Morhofius Polybl. p. 81. mentions that opinion. See Placcius de Pseudonym. pag. 165; & Deckerus de Script. alep. pag. 253, 254.

(10) He dedicated the 1st Century of the Ragguagli in 1612, to Cardinal Borghese, and the second in 1613, to Cardinal Cajetan.

(11) Nicivius Erythraeus, inacothe. III. pag. 222.

(12) Chevreau, Hist. du monde liv. v. cap. iv. p. 185, of the Dutch Edit. 1687.

(13) Pinaothe, III. pag. 131.

BOCHART (MATTHEW), Minister of the Holy Gospel at Alençon in the XVIIth Century, published some Books [A], which gained him the Reputation of a Learned Man. That which he composed against the Sacrifice of the Mass brought him into Trouble, as Mr Daille observes: A Missionary, thinking it more proper to bring him before the Secular Judges than to answer his Arguments, began a Contest at Law with him for giving the Ministers the Title of Pastors (a). There is no reason to question the thing; but it is very manifest that Mr Daille did not well remember the Circumstances [B]. Matthew Bochart has sometimes been

(a) Daille Rapport à Adam & Cotibry. Part II. pag. 109.

[A] He has published some Books. The chief of his Works, are, a Treatise against Relics, and a Treatise against the Sacrifice of the Mass. He wrote also a Dialogue on the Difficulties which the Missionaries raised continually against the Protestants of France, by reason of what had passed in the National Synod of Charenton, concerning the Toleration of the Lutheran Errors. That Dialogue having fallen into the Hands of the Elector Palatine, he thought it proper to incline the Princes of the Confession of Augsburg, to endeavour the Re-union of the two Protestant Churches (1); and accordingly he shewed it to them during the Assembly of Frankfort. This good News being come to the Author's Knowledge, drew from him a Latin Book, intitled Diallacticon, which he dedicated to that Elector. It was printed at Sedan in the Year 1662, and contains a Project of Re-union between the Lutherans and the Calvinists.

(1) Epist. Dedit. ad Dalla. Matth. Bochart.

[B] A suit at Law was commenced against him for giving the Ministers the title of Pastors — Mr Daille did not well remember the Circumstances. I need no other proof for it, than Mr Daille himself. He says, That the Missionary, being put to a non-plus by Matthew Bochart's Book against the Sacrifice of the Mass, brought an Action against the Author, in the Year 1657; but he owns, in one of the Tables of his Book, that the Treatise against the Sacrifice of the Mass was printed at Geneva in the Year 1658. He observes in the four hundred and seventeenth Page of the first Part of his Reply, that this excellent Treatise of the Sacrifice of the Mass (2) was published but three Years before. What he says, toward the end of his Preface, is a certain proof that he composed his Reply in 1661. So that it cannot be true, that the Missionary, who went to Law with Matthew Bochart in 1657, found that way more proper, than been confounded with his Cousin Samuel Bochart [C], of whom I am going to speak.

(2) He praises it much in that place.

than to refute the Book of the Sacrifice of the Mass. Moreover, Mr Dailly declares, that he does not know, that, before the Law-Suit, begun against Mr Bochart in 1657, any Complaint was ever brought against the Ministers for filling themselves Pastors. And yet, immediately after, he makes mention of a Decree of the Parliament of Rouen, given 22, or 23, Years after the Year 1633, when the Ministers of Charenton filled themselves Pastors of the Reformed Church of Paris in the Approbation of a Book (3). That Decree of the Parliament of Rouen was doubtless made upon the Complaint brought against the Minister Bochart; for otherwise, Mr Dailly would contradict himself: And therefore, it is not true, that the Law-Suit against that Minister, fell in the Year 1657. So that Mr Dailly must be mistaken, both as to the time the Suit was commenced, and as to the Book that gave occasion for it. He is mistaken again upon another account, since it is certain, that, in the Year 1633, the General Agents of the Clergy of France complained, that Mr Aubertin had printed a Book, wherein he took the Title of Pastor of the Reformed Church of Paris, and wherein his Colleagues, Messirezot, Drelincourt, and Dailly, signed in the Approbation, the two first, Pastors of the reform'd Church of Paris, and the last, Minister of the Holy Gospel of the said Church (4). On that Complaint, the Privy-Council made a Decree, the fourteenth of July 1633, importing, that Mr Aubertin should be arrested, and that his Colleagues should be summoned to appear, with an Injunction to the Ministers, to take no other Title upon them, than what was given them by the Edicts (5).

[C] Has been sometimes confounded with his Cousin Samuel Bochart. Mr le Fevre, Doctor of the Sorbonne, has quoted the Diallaſticon of our Bochart in his Reply to Mr Arnaud for the defence of his Invincible Motives. I believe he will not take it ill, if I judge that he took it for a Work of Mr Bochart of Caen. If he had known that two Ministers of that Name have writ Works of Controversy; or, if at least he had known that the Author of the Diallaſticon is not the same Bochart, who made himself admired in the Common-wealth of Learning by his Phaleg, &c. he would never have quoted the Author of the Diallaſticon, with this Elogy of the Learned Bochart (6), as he has done more than once. It were in vain to say, that the Minister of Alençon was a learned Man, and that Mr le Fevre might have called him so without any Exaggeration, or Flattery; I am sure, that no intelligent Readers will ever be persuaded that this Remark is ill-grounded.

(4) See the Collection of Edicts for the Clergy.

(5) See the Remark [B] of the Article AUBERTIN.

(6) Pag. 27, 129.

(3) It is Mr Dailly's Apology.

(a) They are in the new Edition of his works 1692.

(b) Tunc nisi memoria me fallit hospitabatur Parisiis apud avunculum Petrum Molinæum. Then if my memory fail not, he lodged with his Uncle Peter du Moulin. Steph. Morin. de Bocharto, & ejus scriptis.

(c) They are in the above-mentioned Edition.

(d) Puto me didicisse quod Sal-murii audiverit Cameronem, & eo præfide thesæ theologicæ defunderit. Morinus ibid.

(1) It was in the presence of Francis I. he opposed the Concordate.

BOCHART (SAMUEL), Minister of the Word of God at Caen, was one of the most learned Men in the World. He was of Rouen, and of a very good Family [A], and was born in the Year 1599. He made early a very great Progress: one may judge of it by the Forty four Greek Verses which he composed in Praise of Thomas Dempster (a), who published them in 1612, in the Front of his Roman Antiquities. At that time he studied under that learned Scotchman, and it is likely that he lodged then in the House of the Famous Peter du Moulin, Minister of the Church of Paris, who was his Uncle by the Mother's Side (b). He went through his Philosophy at Sedan, where he maintained public Theses, in the Year 1615, which gained him great Honour, not only because he answered the Arguments well, but also by reason of some Verses which he added to them, very artificially suited to the Figure of a Circle (c). It is thought that he studied Divinity at Saumur under Cameron (d), and it is well known that he followed him to London, when the Civil War had destroyed that Academy. He made no long abode in England; for it is known that he was at Leyden about the latter end of the Year 1621, where he applied himself earnestly to the Study of the Arabic Tongue under Erpenius. He found a Professor of Divinity in that University, who conceived a very particular Esteem for him, and gave him public Marks of it in the Year 1629, by dedicating his Catholicus Orthodoxus to him [B]. I mean Mr Rivet, who was at that time married to a Sister of our Bochart's Mother. Mr Bochart, being in France, was soon made a Minister there, and presented to the Church of Caen. The first thing remarkable, which he did there, was to maintain a long Conference with Father Veron, in which he came off with an entire Victory. That Man, provided with a special Mission from the Court to dispute, and as it were invested with the Office of a warranted Controvertist all over the Kingdom, challenged Mr Bochart the fourth Day of September 1628, and did not cease to make a Noise, till he had obtained a Day and Place to enter publicly into the Lifts with him. The Dispute was managed in the Castle of Caen, in the Presence of a great many Persons of both Religions. The Duke of Longueville, Governour of the Province, came thither as often as his Affairs permitted him, and Commissioners were appointed

[A] He was of a very good Family.] His Father RENE BOCHART du Menillet, Minister of the Reformed Church of Rouen, was Great-Grandson of JOHN BOCHART Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris in 1490, and Grandson of JOHN BOCHART, who pleaded so strongly for the Pragmatic Sanction (1), and Son of STEPHEN BOCHART, who made the Branch of Menillet. Moreri's Dictionary shews the Relation that was between our Samuel Bochart, and the Bochart Campigni's, who have exercised so many fine Offices in the Gown.

[B] Rivet dedicated his Catholicus Orthodoxus to him.] Mr Rivet dedicated that Book to four Persons, viz. to Peter du Moulin Minister and Professor at Sedan; to William Rivet Minister of Taillebourg; to John Maximilian de Langle Minister of Rouen; and to Samuel Bochart Minister of Caen. He praises the last for his Dispute against Veron, in which, says he to him, you shewed him that he was ignorant in Greek and in Hebrew, and put a bridle on his impudent Sophistry, which he has endeavoured to shake off by telling many Lies (according to his custom) about his imaginary Victories; but wise Men have not been deceived by them, and you have discovered his Vanity by your Answer. This may serve for a Supplement to my Relation of that Dispute, taken from Mr Morin. By this it appears, that Veron ascribed the Victory to himself. In the same Year, 1629, Mr du Moulin dedicated his Antibarbare (2) to Mr Bochart. The latter had given him notice of a mistake, which was, that du Moulin, having promised that Treatise of Controversy, in the Table of the Novelty of Papery, had forgot to publish it.

(2) So that Book is intitled, and not l'Anti-barbare, as in the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library, pag. 452, and in Mr Baillet n. 176. §. 6. of the Anti-appointed on both sides to be present. The Dispute lasted from the Twenty second of September to the third of October, and the two Disputants went through almost the whole wide Field of Controversies in Nine successive Meetings which they had. The Acts of this Dispute, well attested and collated, were published on both sides; but Mr Bochart added several things of his own, which the turbulent Spirit of his Antagonist would not let him put in order on the Spot; he added also the Dispute concerning the Eucharist, and Celibacy, which they had agreed to examine, but had not gone through with them, because Veron quitted the Field (e). This Minister's Reputation, the Foundation of which was laid at that time, increased very much in the Year 1646, by the Publication of his Phaleg, and his Canaan [C], wherein he treats, I. Of the Dispersion of Mankind caused by the Confusion of Languages: And, II. Of the Colonies, and Language of the Phenicians. The Enquiries which he must have made, in order to compose those Works, and some others, and which obliged him to search into all the ancient Authors, and the most hidden Treasures of the Oriental Languages, had this Relation to his being a Minister, that he engaged in them by degrees, only because he had undertaken to preach on Genesis; for when he came to the second Chapter he was obliged to explain the Situation of the Terrestrial Paradise: The following Chapters engaged him to examine the Origin of Nations, and a great many other Passages required that he should write on the Animals, Plants, and precious Stones, mentioned in the Bible. If he had lived long enough, he would have left complete Treatises on those matters, but he could only finish that concerning Animals. It was printed at London in 1663, under the Title of Hierozoicon. His Collections on the Terrestrial Paradise, on Plants, and precious Stones, were not found in a Condition, after his Death, to make any thing of them. Every body knows that the Queen of Sweden invited him to her Court [D], and that he went thither in the Year 1652. It is not necessary to speak in particular of several Pieces which were published by him at different times, and redounded to his Reputation. For example, in the Year 1650, he published a Letter about the Authority of Kings, and about the Institution of Bishops and Priests. He published one in 1661, against the Jesuit la Barre, concerning the Toleration of Lutheranism decided in the National Synod of Charenton; and another in 1663, wherein he shewed, by many learned Reasons, that there is no likelihood that Aeneas ever came into Italy. He died at Caen, May 16, 1667, having lost his Speech and his Senses all of a sudden in the Academy that met at the House of Mr de Brieux. His Papers are in the Hands of Mr de Colleville, Son of his only Daughter (f), and formerly a Counsellor in the Parliament of Normandy. Among those Papers there are a great many Sermons written with Mr Bochart's own Hand, viz. those which he preached on Genesis,

[C] His

(e) Adversarius vadimonium deseruit. Steph.
Morinus, ubi supra.

(f) She was married to a Counsellor in the Parliament of Normandy, called
Mr de Colleville.
It was the name
of a Lordship:
the name of the Family was le
Sueur.

(f) She was married to a Counsellor in the Parliament of Normandy, called
Mr de Colleville.
It was the name
of a Lordship:
the name of the Family was le
Sueur.

[C] His Reputation increased much in the Year 1646, by the Publication of his Phaleg, and his Canaan. These are the Titles of the two Parts of Mr Bochart's Geographia Sacra. A Printer of Reputation was sent for to Caen (3), in order to have that Work more correct, and the sooner printed. If we may believe those who re-printed it at Frankfurt in 4^o, in 1681, the Edition of Caen is full of faults, from which they boast to have purged theirs: ab infinitis erroribus, quibus exemplar Cadomii impressum repletum erat, purgatum. To their Edition they joined two of Mr Bochart's Letters, one concerning Episcopacy, and the Right of Kings, written to Dr Morley Chaplain to King Charles II of England; and the other to Mr Segrati, on the Question, Whether Aeneas ever came into Italy (4). The first of those two Letters was printed in 1650, as I have already said. Spizellus knew nothing of it; for after having quoted one of Sarravius's Letters, which shewed, that it would be a piece of Injustice not to publish that fine Production of Mr Bochart; He adds, that it was notwithstanding still unpublished (5). I know nothing of the Edition of the Geographia Sacra, mentioned by Sir Thomas-Pope Blount, as made at Caen in Falso, in the Year 1651, and I believe, there never was such an Edition. As for the Hierozoicon, (which is the Title of the Volume de Animalibus Sacrae Scripturae) it was re-printed at Frankfurt in the Year 1675, and an Abridgment of it was made in the Year 1690, which was printed at Franeker. The Author of that Abridgment is an Hungarian, named Vesfius. [D] The Queen of Sweden invited him to her Court. I have heard a thousand foolish Stories of this Journey of Mr Bochart; as for Example: That one Day, in the Queen's Library, he was suddenly asked this Question, What do you think of a certain Book called the Bible? It is pretended that he took the thing with as serious a Tone, as he ought, and VOL. II.

made a large Discourse on the Marks of Divinity which shine in the Scripture; but that the Standers by did but laugh at it. They add, that the Abbot Bourdelot had made the Queen believe, that Mr Bochart played admirably on the Flute, but that he would not play before her Majesty, except she absolutely commanded him; and that, thereupon, the Queen, without giving any ear to his repeated protestations of Ignorance, absolutely required him to play on it, and that he obeyed her Commands. I have heard a great many People say these things, and others of the same nature; but on a close enquiry I cannot find any thing to render them credible. Nevertheless, I mention them here, that those, who hear these idle Stories, may give no credit to them. Mr Huet, the present Bishop of Avranches, who went with Mr Bochart into Sweden, has given a very pretty Relation of that Journey (6). I have cited it in Remark [B] Citation (6) of the Article (FRANCIS) BLONDEL, the Mathematician.

This Remark was finished, when the Menagiana fell into my Hands, where I found these Words; 'It was a fine sight to see Mr Bochart play at Shuttlecock with the Queen of Sweden! The Queen having pressed him one Day to play at it with her, he laid down his Cloak and played. His Friends laughed at him for it, and told him, that he ought absolutely to have refused it (7).' I find there also, that the Queen had resolved to be at a Meeting, where he was to read some Part of his Phaleg; but that Mr Bourdelot, to deprive him of that Honour, felt the Queen's Pulse, and told her, that she was out of order, and must take Physic. So that she kept her Bed that Day. If there had been any ground for the Story of the Flute, it would have been in the Book I have just now quoted.

(6) It is in Latin Virg.

(7) Menagiana, pag. 147. of the 8. th Dutch Edition.

(3) His Name was John Jan-non. See Steph. Morin. in Dis- fert. de Bocharto & ejus Script.

(4) See the Nouv. de la Repub. des Lettr. for July 1684, art. iv.

(5) Spizellus in infel. literat. p. 923. Note, that in the Errata he says he had seen it in the Frankfurt Edition of the Geographia Sacra 1674.

[E] Some

(p) De clarissimo Bocharto & omnibus ejus scriptis.
--- Of the famous Bochart and all his writings.

(b) Colomies in his Gallia Orient. which he dedicated to him. ---
Thomas Pope
Blount, Censur.
celebr. Author.
Spizelius, in in-
fel. literat. pag.
916, & seq.

MORE: criticized for something he had said concerning
Mr LE MOYNE.

ness, from the first Chapter to the eighteenth Verse of the nineteenth Chapter. As many of this great Man's Manuscript Differtations as could be found, have been collected and added to the new Edition of all his Works, published in Holland in the Year 1692 [E]. Mr Morin formerly a Colleague of Mr Bochart, and now Minister of the French Church at Amsterdam, and Professor of the Oriental Languages in the Illustrious School of the same City, has joined a Discourse to that Edition (g), which I have made use of in composing this Article. They who have a mind to see the Encomiums that have been bestowed upon Mr Bochart, may find them in the Authors which I refer to (b). His Learning, vast as it was, was not his chief Excellence; he had such a Share of Modesty as was infinitely more to be esteemed than all his Learning. And accordingly he enjoyed his Reputation with great Tranquillity, being free from those unhappy Quarrels which so many learned Men draw upon themselves by their Pride, and the Vehemence of their Stile. I never heard of a certain Treatise which Mr Menage ascribes to him [F].

[E] Some Differtations were prefixed to the new Edition of all his Works: --- in 1692. Moreri was not altogether in the wrong, to give some hopes that Mr le Moynes would publish Mr Bochart's Manuscripts; for it is certain, that he had such a design, but not having all the leisure necessary for such an Undertaking, he committed the care of it to Mr de Villemandy, promising to assist him with his Advice, and to supply him with many of Bochart's Letters and Differtations. Death hindered him from performing his Promise. But on the other hand, it is certain, that Moreri is grossly mistaken in that Article, both when he says, that all the Manuscript Treatises of Bochart were in the Hands of Mr le Moynes; and when he says, that a troublesome Business had obliged Mr le Moynes to leave the Kingdom. It is notorious that he did not go out of France without leave from the Court; and that it was his fault that he did not continue in his Church of Rouen, which did all they could to retain him. He only left the Kingdom to take possession of a Professorship of Divinity that had been offered him long before at Leyden. It is true, that, in 1674, a vexatious Suit was commenced against him, occasioned by a young Gentlewoman of the Protestant Religion, who having left her Father, who was a Catholic Counsellor in Parliament, had fled into England; but it is also true, that, after some Months Imprisonment, he was fully re-established in his former Condition.

[F] I never heard of a certain Treatise which Mr Menage ascribes to him. It were to be wished, that Mr Bochart had published his Collections on so curious a Matter, as that mentioned by Mr Menage. It turns upon certain things that are to be found, but once in Writers. 'Multa esse in libris Juris, ut libros ceteros taceam, singularia atque ut Grammatici Græci loqui amant μνηρην, five ἀπαλ εἰρημύνα (quo titulo librum audio scripsisse Samuel Bochartum) quis nescit (8)? --- Who does not know, that there are many things in Books of Laws, to mention no other, which are singular, and as the Greek Grammarians call it μνηρην, or ἀπαλ εἰρημύνα, i.e. once mentioned? I hear that Samuel Bochart has written a Treatise with that Title.

(8) Menag. Javis Civilis amonit. cap. XL. p.
99, 100.

(a) Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg.
pag. 461.

(b) He gives an account of them in his Notes on the CXLVIIth
Psalm.

BOCHIIUS (JOHN), a good Latin Poet, and Secretary of the City of Antwerp, was born at Brussels the Twenty seventh of July 1555 (a). He went through his first Studies at Lire, and in the City of Aeth, and distinguished himself from his School-fellows. He excelled chiefly in Poetry, so that he might be called the Virgil of the Low Countries [A]. He was admitted into the House of Cardinal George Radzivil, by which means he had an Opportunity to study Divinity at Rome, when Bellarmine explained the Controversies there. Bochiuss attended his Lectures constantly. He travelled afterwards into several Countries; he visited Poland, Lithuania, and Moscow, not without grievous Inconveniencies, and great dangers (b); for, as he went from Smolensko to Moscow, the Cold was so violent that his Feet were quite frozen. They had begun to talk of cutting them off, when one of the Czar's Surgeons found that they needed not come to that Extremity: The Remedy which he made use of would not perhaps have performed the Cure, if another accident had not happened. Bochiuss had got himself carried to the Livonian Quarters, and was there when the great Duke Basilides came with an Army to plunder the Country [B]. Bochiuss being struck with fear fled where he could, and, after having been stript and beaten, he escaped from the Soldiers hands,

(1) Val. Andreas, Biblioth.
Belg. pag. 461.

[A] He might be called the Virgil of the Low-Countries. I must set down the very words of Valerius Andreas, to shew the better with what Precipitation Moreri compiled his Dictionary. 'In poetica palmam cæteris facillè præripuit, adeo ut alterum Belgii nostri Maronem nominare liceat (1). --- In Poetry he far excelled all others, so that he may be called the Virgil of the Low-Countries.' In the Copy which I make use of, the first Letter of the Word Maronem is not well printed: so that if it be not carefully observed, it may easily be taken for a V. I fancy that Moreri's Copy had the same fault, and that so he read Varonem instead of Maronem. Whereupon, he remembered that Varro was accounted the most learned of the Romans, from whence he concluded, that since Bochiuss was firnamed the Varro of the Netherlands, he ought to say of him, that he was famous for his Erudition, that he made a wonderful progress in the knowledge of learned Languages, and in all sorts of Literature, and that he improved in all the sublime Sciences of Controversy, of the Civil and Canon Law, and of Scholastic Divinity. Francis Swertius, who loved, and knew him very particularly, bestows no praise upon him, that can give us such a Notion of him. Melchior Adam and Valerius Andreas, who praise him a little more, are also far from saying any such thing. The latter does not so much as say, that he was firnamed the Virgil of the Netherlands; but only, that he deserved that Title.

[B] Bochiuss had got himself carried into the Livonian quarters, when Basilides came with an army to plunder the Country. The reason, or pretence, of that Violence, was, That the Patriarch of the Muscovites complained to the Czar, that the Germans (under which Name those of Livonia were also comprehended) enervated the Courage of the Muscovites, and made them spend a great deal of Money on divers sorts of Drinks which they fold them. 'Qua si Germani, in quibus Livones, deliciis Moschos corrumperent, collique variis potus generibus pecunia emungerent, & masculos animos enerva- rent (2).'

(2) Melchior
Adam, in vita
Philos. p. 493.

[C] He

hands, and returned the next Day to his Quarters. That Exercise very much hastened the Effect of his Remedies. After he returned into his own Country, he made a Poem, which pleased the Duke of Parma so well, that he procured him the Place of Secretary of Antwerp. That Poem was a Panegyric on the Duke of Parma, on the taking of That City. He composed afterwards divers Court Poems [C], and at last made David's Psalms the chief Subject of his Pen. He died before the Impression of what he had done in them was finished (c) [D]. It was the thirteenth of January 1609 (d). He published his Life of David in 1608. He left but one Daughter. A Collection of his Epigrams, Elegies, and other scattered Poems was printed at Cologne in 1615; to which are added all the Verses that could be found of his Son John Afcianus Bocbius, who died in Italy in the Flower of his Youth. Francis Swertius, who took care of that Edition, informs us, that his good Friend John Bocbius was unhappy in a Wife, which, says he, is often the Fate of Great Men (e).

(c) Melchior Adam, in vita Philof. p. 498.

(d) Idibus Jan. Id. ibid. Val. Andreas ubi supra. Moreri renders it the 15th of January; which is wrong.

(e) Matrimonio implicitus fuit n n usquequaque felici ac concordis quod fere viris magnis communi. Swert. Athen. Belg. pag. 398.

[C] He composed divers Court Poems. Thus I call, for Example, the Description of the Honours done to the Governours of the Netherlands, when they took possession of their Government. That which he made upon the Journey and Installation of Albert of Austria, and of his Spouse the Infanta Isabella Clara Eugenia, was not printed in the Year 1595, as Valerius Andreas affirms; for they did not make their Entry till 1599.

(3) Id. ibid.

[D] He died before the Impression of what he had done on the Psalms was finished. Melchior Adam asserts it twice together in plain Terms (3). Nevertheless it might be questioned, if we should refer ourselves to Francis Swertius, who makes no manner of mention of any Books of Bocbius printed after his Death, except a Collection of divers Poems. Besides, he observes, that the Physical, Moral, Political, and Historical Observations of Bocbius, which are doubtless his Work on the Psalter, were printed in the Year 1608. But when I consider, that Valerius Andreas, whose Work is without comparison less faulty than that of Francis Swertius, ascribes to Bocbius a Book entitled, Observationes Physicæ, Ethicæ, Politicæ & Historicæ in Psalmos & Græciæ Latinique Autoribus, without noting the Year of the Impression, I cannot think, that the Year 1608, marked by Francis Swertius, is right, and consequently, I am of opinion, that it is best to keep to Melchior Adam's Narrative, as if the Author of the Athenæ Belgicæ had said nothing.

BODEGRAVE, a Village of Holland on the Rhine. I only speak of it to correct Moreri's Dictionary, wherein we find it is a Borough famous for the Victory, which the French obtained there over the Dutch in 1672. Which is a Falsity [A]. Baudrand is quoted for it, which is another Falsity [B].

[A] Moreri says it is a Town famous for a battle ----- which is a Falsity. There never was any Battle or Skirmish at Bodegrave, between the French and the Dutch. All that can be said, is, that about the latter end of December 1672, the French drew up a considerable Army to penetrate into the Heart of Holland by the favour of the Ice, but that a great Thaw, that happened suddenly, obliged them to give over their Enterprize. Their Vexation at that Disappointment, carried them to extreme Cruelties against the Inhabitants of Bodegrave, which was one of the Posts they had possessed themselves of, and were forced to abandon. The Particulars of their Barbarities are to be found in a Book published by Mr Wicquefort, on that Subject (1).

(1) Itinéraire, Avis fidèle aux véritables Hollandais.

[B] ----- Moreri cites Baudrand, which is another Falsity. For Mr Baudrand does not say, that the French obtained a Victory over the Dutch, in that Place: He says only, that the Dutch were ill treated there by the French; ubi Belgæ multo male habiti fuerunt à Francis anno 1672. Perhaps I have already said but too often, that a Translator, who ventures to paraphrase, or to depart never so little from his Original, ought to be thoroughly acquainted with the Matter in question. Without which, he exposes himself to mistakes so much the more blameable, because upon that account many People impute them to those that are very innocent of them; I mean, to the Authors translated. An hundred Examples of this Disorder might easily be shewn.

BODIN (JOHN), a Native of Angers, one of the most able Men that were in France in the XVIth Century, studied the Civil Law at Toulouse (a), and having taken his Degrees there, he read Law Lectures with great Applause of his Auditors (b). — At that time he designed to settle himself at Toulouse in the Quality of Professor of the Civil Law. And with this view, in order to get the good will of the Toulousains, he made his Oration de Instituenda in Republica juventute, which he dedicated to the People and Senate of Toulouse, and recited publicly in the Schools of that City. It has also been said, that, with the same Design, he made the Epitaph of Clementia Isaura (c) [A] engraved at Toulouse in 1557, under the Statue of the said Clementia. But at last he preferred Pleading to the Civil

(a) Ménage, Remarques sur la vie de Pierre Ayrault, p. 141.

(b) See his Latin Letter to Pibrac, prefixed to his Republic.

(c) Who inscribed the Floral Games of Toulouse, as is falsely pretended.

[A] It has been said ----- that he made the Epitaph of Clementia Isaura, engraved ----- under her Statue. Mr Ménage asserts it in his Illustrious Men of Anjou (1); but Catel says, in his Memoirs of the History of Languedoc, that Bodin, who is thought to be Author of that Epitaph, was not so; but that Martin Gascon was the Author of it. Thus Mr Ménage has expressed himself. Let us see Catel's Words: 'No Body doubts but the Inscription on the Pedestal of the said Statue is new, and done in the Year 1557; though it is uncertain by whom; for some say, that it was Bodin, who writ the Book on the Republic, when he was a Student at Toulouse; Others say, that it was an Advocate named Dutil; but I believe, it was an Advocate called

(1) Ménage, Remarques sur la vie de Pierre Ayrault, p. 141.

Mr Martin Gascon, born in the Isle of Rhodes, who was Capitoul that Year, and a very good Latinist, according to the Testimony of the Learned Physician Ferrier, who in a small Poem, which he published concerning the excellent Men of Toulouse, speaks thus of the said Gascon:

Ipseque de longis regionibus inclita fama Gasconum adduxit Rhodium, Ciceronis alumnus (2).

Their spreading Fame has brought from distant Rhodes

Gascon, great Tully's Scholar.

(2) Catel, Mémoires de l'Histoire du Languedoc, pag. 407.

[B] Loyfel

Civil Law, and left the School of Toulouse for the Bar of Paris. Loyfel and Sammarthanus say, that he had no great Success in his Pleading [B]. And doubtless this was the Reason that made him leave the Bar, to apply himself to the Composing of Books, wherein he succeeded admirably well. His first Performance was his Commentary upon Oppian's Books on Hunting, and his Translation of those Books into Latin Verse. He is accused of having been a Plagiary there [C]. I shall give the List of his other Books [D] in a Remark, and shall not forget what concerns his Heptaplomeres, which never was printed, and wherein it is said, that

[B] Loyfell and Sammarthanus say, that he had no great success in his pleading. See, above, the words of Anthony Loyfel (3), to which add this Passage of Sammarthanus: 'Neque vero quam scriptis comparaverat existimationem presentia sua minuebat, si quando in familiari hominum congressu de quacunque re proposita diserte copioseque disputaret. Quo magis mirandum est, hominem ea facultate præditum inter nobiliores curiae Parisiensis advocatos locum obtinere non potuisse: præsertim cum æquales haberet Brissonios, Pascios, Pithæos, & alios complures, ingenii laude præstantes viros, qui amenioribus etiam disciplinis incumbere, nec eo minus celebriter in fori luce verarentur (4). — Nor did he, by his presence, lose any of the Credit, he had obtained by his Writings; for, in familiar Conversation, he would dispute elegantly and copiously on any subject proposed. Which makes it the more wonderful, that a Man endowed with such Faculties could not obtain a Place amongst the first Rate Advocates in the Court of Paris. Especially as he had for his Contemporaries, the Brisson's, the Pascius's and Pithæus's, and several other Men, eminent for great Parts, who applied themselves to the pleasantest Studies, and were not therefore the less famous and eminent in the Court.'

[C] He wrote a Commentary on Oppian: he is accused of having been a Plagiary there. 'James Bongars pretends, in one of his Letters to Conrad Ritterbusius, a Commentator and Translator of Oppian, that Bodin had composed that Work out of the Writings of Turnebus, which seems very unlikely; since Bodin was not inferior in Learning to Turnebus; and in 1555, when Bodin printed his Oppian, for which he had obtained a Licence in 1553, Turnebus was still living; for he died not before the Year 1565. However, Turnebus himself complains, at the end of his Edition of Oppian of 1555, that his Emendations on that Author had been stolen from him. Septem ab hinc annis, leviter emendaveram Oppianum de Venatione, partim animi conjectura, partim libri veteris ope. Eas emendationes quidam usurpavit, & sibi donavit: quas tamen non putabam tanti, ut in furtivis rebus esse deberent. Eas à nobis vindicatas & recuperatas esse, nemo conqueri debuit: nam rerum furtivarum, lege, æterna est auctoritas. — Seven Years ago I made some slight Emendations on Oppian's Book of Hunting, partly by conjecture, and partly by the Assistance of an ancient Book. A certain person has made use of these Emendations, and put them off for his own; 'tis true, I did not think them of so much Value, as to be worth stealing. Yet no Body ought to blame me for claiming and taking them again: for, by Law, I have a perpetual Right to things that have been stole from me. Which probably ought to be understood of Bodin. On the other side Bodin complains in his Method of History, that a Grammarian had made use of his Commentary upon Oppian in an ungrateful manner. Quos ego de Venatione libros, cum Latino versu & Commentariis illustrassem, quidam Grammaticus, quantum libuit de meo labore detrahens, iterum pervulgavit. — Which Books on Hunting, after I had illustrated them with Latin Verses and Notes, a certain Grammarian, extracting from my work what he thought fit, has published again. In the same Year 1555, William Morel printed the Translation in Latin Verse of Oppian's Books de Piscations, and Oppian's Books de Venatione in Latin Prose: and 'tis likely Bodin meant that Translation of Oppian's Books de Venatione (5). Note that Bongars's Letter, quoted by Mr Menage, is to be found in the Eighty second and Eighty third Pages of the Gallia Orientalis. It is dated from Frankfort the fourth of April 1600. Mr Colomesius's Father received a Copy of it in the Year 1648. He that sent it him had it from Mr Gronovius, the Father, who had transcribed the Original at Nuremberg in the Year 1632, in the House of Nicolas Ritterbusius the Son of Conrad. There are many things disadvantageous to Bodin in that Letter. That which concerns his Plagiarism is conceived in these Terms: Jam edidisse illum lectiones Turnebi in Oppianum pro suis, nemo nostrorum ignorat (6). — Now we all know that he published Turnebus's Readings on Oppian for his own. Note also, that Mr Menage has given but a weak reason to justify him. It is grounded on Bodin's being not inferior in Learning to Turnebus. I believe, that, take all together, he is in the right; for without doubt Bodin was better skilled in the Civil-Law, Politics, and Modern History, than Turnebus; but he was inferior to him in Critical and Philological Learning; now the Book in dispute belongs to that kind of Knowledge.

[D] Here follows the List of his other Books. He published his Method of History in the Year 1566, and his Discourse on Coins, together with his Answer to the Paradoxes of Maletroit, concerning the advance of the Price of every thing, and the means to remedy it, in the Year 1568. His Republic was printed in Folio in the Year 1576, and several times afterwards in 8vo (7), and got him a very great Reputation. Mornac speaks of it in these terms:

Jani Bodini Gallicam Rempublicam
Qui viderit, majus nihil fatebitur
In erudita luce præci sæculi.
Gallis hic, olim quod Quintus Tullius.

Whoever reads John Bodin's Republic in French, will own, that the bright Learning of the Antients produced nothing greater. He is to the French, what Tully once was to the Romans.

The President Thuanus speaks no less advantageously of that Work; tho' he speaks less advantageously of the Author, accusing him of Vanity, which he calls the Vice of the Anguevins (8). Oppian magnum de Republica Gallicæ publicavit: in quo, ut omni scientiarum genere, non tincti, sed imbuti ingenii fidem fecit, sic nonnullis, qui recte judicant, non omnino ab ostentationis innato genti vicio vacuum se probavit. — He published in French a large work, concerning a Commonwealth, in which as he gave proofs of a not superficial, but solid, Skill in all kinds of Learning. So he shewed to a few, who judge well, that he was not free from the innate fault of his Nation, Vanity. These great Encomiums on Bodin's Republic, put me in mind to impart to my Readers, what I heard Mr Naudé say once: That Aristotle's Rhetoric, Scaliger's Poetic, Charron's Wisdom, and Bodin's Republic, were, of all Books, those that were writ with most Art. In 1578, Bodin published his Tables of the Law, intitled, Juris universi Distributio. They were printed at Lyons by John de Tournes, for James Dupuy Bookseller of Paris. In the Dedication of his Method of History, he makes mention of that Work in these Terms: Juris universi formam sic adumbravimus in Tabula quam tibi exhibuimus spectandam, ut ab ipsis causis summa genera, generumque partitionem ad infima deduceremus: ea tamen ratione, ut omnia membra inter se apta cohererent. In quo verissimè à Platone dictum intellexi, nihil difficilius ac divinius, quam recte partiri. — I have sketched out

(3) In the Remark [A], of the Article (PETER) A. Y. RAULT, Citation (1).

(4) Sammarth. Eleg. lib. iv. pag. 92, 93.

(5) Colomesius's Gallia Orientalis, pag. 83. See also Richerus. Letters, pag. 203.

(6) See Colomesius's Gallia Orientalis, pag. 83. See also Richerus. Letters, pag. 203.

(7) See the Remark [N], Citation (48).

(8) Menage is mistaken; for Thuanus means the French in general, and not the Anguevins in particular.

(5) Menage, ubi supra, pag. 142.

he set forth many impious things. 'His Reputation for a learned Man, and a fine Genius, excited the Curiosity of Henry III [E], who loved Men of Letters, and was pleased with their Conversation (d). Henry III therefore sent for Bodin; and as his Conversation was delightful (for he had read much and remembered all that he had read) Henry was mightily pleased with him. He had at first so great an esteem for him, that he imprisoned John de Serre, who had wrote an abusive Libel against Bodin, forbidding him on Pain of Death to publish that Piece (e). But his Favour was of no long Continuance. His Enviars soon did him such ill Offices with the King as took off the Regard he had for him. Seeing himself courted at that time by Francis of France, Duke of Alençon and Anjou, Brother of the Kings Francis II, Charles IX, and Henry III, he went to him. The Duke of Alençon made him Secretary of his Commands, one of the Masters of the Requests of his Palace, and Chief Justice in Eyre *, and carried him into England and Flanders, as one of his chief Counsellors. While he was in England, he had the Satisfaction and Honour to see his Books of the Republic, which the English had translated into Latin, publicly read in the University of Cambridge [F]. This obliged him to translate them afterwards into Latin. — The History of Flanders takes notice that it was he, who advised the Duke of Alençon to seize Antwerp. After the Death of the Duke of Alençon, which happened a little after the Enter-

(d) Menage, ibid. pag. 145.

(e) See the Remark [O], Citation (69).

* See the Abbot le Laboureur, pag. 385, of his 11d Vol. of Memoirs of Castellau.

the form of the whole Civil-Law in the Table I presented for your perusal in such a manner, that I have deduced the highest Genera from their very causes, and followed the Division of the Genera to the very lowest Species. Yet so as that all the Parts aptly cohere. I experienced the Truth of this Saying of Plato, that nothing is harder or more divine than to divide aright. Afterwards in 1579, he published his Demonomanie des Sorciers, which he dedicated to Christopher Thouan, first President of the Parliament of Paris; at the end whereof, he added a Refutation of the Book de Lamiis writ by John Wierus, Physician to the Duke of Clever. In 1576, he had published a Relation of the States of Blois. That Relation was printed, but without the Author's Name. And a little before his Death he wrote his Theatre de la nature universelle. Besides all these Books he wrote a Dialogue concerning Religions, which has not yet been printed, intitled Hep-tapleron, sive de Abditis rerum sublimium arcanis. In that Dialogue he gave the advantage to the Jewish Religion; which made many People believe, that he was a Jew. — In the sixth Chapter of his Method of History, he makes mention of his Book de Decretis. Sed hæc uberius in libro, de Decretis differimus. — But I have spoken more at large of these things in a Book de Decretis. That Book is not printed. He ordered by his Will (of which I have seen the Original) that his Books de Imperio, & Jurisdictione, & Legis Actionibus, & Decretis, & Judiciis, should be burnt, which was done before his Death in his presence. Augur Ferrier de Toulouse, a Physician and Astronomer, and John de Serre of Montpellier, and Peter de l'Hospital wrote against him. He answered them under the Name of René Herpin, who was a Man of the City of Angers (9). Mr Teissier ascribes to him the French Version of the Latin Speech, made by Charles des Cars, Bishop of Langres, to the Embassadors of Poland in the City of Metz, in the Year 1573 (10). 'Et Consilium de principe recte instituendo, & paradoxon quod nec virtus ulla in mediocritate, nec summum hominis bonum in virtutis actione consistere possit, & historica narratio protectionis & inaugurationis Alberti & Isabellæ Austriæ Archiducum, & eorum in Belgio adventus (11). — Advice for the good Education of a Prince, and a Paradox that there is no Virtue in Mediocrity, nor the chief Good of Man in the Exercise of Virtue, and an Historical Narration of the Journey, and Inauguration of Albert, and Isabella, Arch-Duke, and Arch-Duchess, of Austria; and their arrival in the Low-Countries.' He is mistaken as to this last Book; for Bodin died before that Journey of the Arch-Duke Albert and the Infanta Isabella Clara Eugenia.

As for the Manuscript which Mr Menage calls Hep-tapleron, &c. of which Mr Huet spoke in his Demonstratio Evangelica, as of an abominable Book (12), I refer to the News from the Common-wealths of Learning (13), to avoid repetitions. Mr Teissier is mistaken when he says, that Mr Diecman published that Work of Bodin at Leipsic (14). He ought to have said, that many Particulars concerning that Book, are to be found in a Schediasma inaugurale &c. An Inaugural Oration on the Naturalism of sundry Persons, but especially John Bodin, published by Mr Diecman, at Kiel, in the Year 1683, and reprinted in the Year following at Leipsic in 12mo, and at Jena in 4to 1700.

[§ 'Tis known that Bodin followed the Duke of Anjou, into the Low-Countries. Busbeck, in the fifteenth Epistle of his Embassy to France, says, that of three different Accounts, which appeared in 1583, immediately after the attempt of that Duke upon Antwerp, the second, which was in French, and in form of a Letter, went for Bodin's. REM. CRIT.]

[E] His Reputation for a learned Man, and fine genius, excited the Curiosity of Henry III. Thouan relates this in a manner very glorious for Bodin. 'Dum hæc scriberet à Rege Henrico III, qui literatis disceptationibus per otium oblectabatur, ad familiare secretum cum plerisque aliis viris doctis sæpius est admixtus, magnamque laudem ex iis reportavit, quippe qui ingenium in numero haberet, & paratum ad omnia, quæ proponerentur pulcherrimarum rerum copiam qua pollebat acrimonia effunderet (15). That is to say, according to Mr Teissier's Translation: 'Whilst he was composing that Book, King Henry III, who, at his leisure Hours, took delight in the Conversation of the Learned, discoursed several times with him in the presence of some Learned Men, and those Conferences procured him great Honour; for having a ready Wit, and all the Treasures of his Mind as it were in present Money, he produced a prodigious number of curious Things, which his excellent Memory supplied him with extempore.' This Narrative of Thouan contains an Anachronism, which Mr Menage should have rectify'd, but on the contrary has adopted. Thouan pretends, that Bodin continued still in favour with Henry III, when that Author was about his Demonomanie. He supposes also that Bodin, when he found himself out of favour, apply'd to the Duke of Alençon, and obtained an honourable Post in his House. This is confounding times. He had not undertaken to write the Book intitled de la Demonomanie des Sorciers, but in consequence of a Judgment that had been given against a Witch, to which he had been called the thirtieth of April 1578 (16), and he was Master of the Requests, and Counsellor to the Duke of Alençon, in the Year 1571 (17). Hereafter (18) we shall see a Passage of Thouan, which will inform us, that Bodin's Conduct in the States of Blois, in the Year 1576, lost him the King's favour.

[F] The Satisfaction and Honour to see his Books, of the Republic, read in the University of Cambridge. I have often observed, that, in order to reduce within due bounds, the Ideas which Authors give of the glorious Prosperity of Persons they speak of, it is necessary to consult, that very Man, on whom they be-

(13) June 1684. Art. iii.

(14) Teiss. Adit. aux Elog. pag. 250. Edit. 1696.

(15) Thouan, lib. exvii. p. 77.

(16) Bodin, Preface to his Demonomanie.

(17) Id. de Republica, lib. i. cap. x. pag. 255. Edit. Uriel. 1603.

(18) In the Remark [I].

(9) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 142, 143.

(10) Du Verdier vau-Privas mentions it, pag. 654, of his Bibliothèque Française.

(11) Teiss. Adit. aux Elog. Tom. II. p. 249.

(12) Mr Menage in the Life of Ayrault, pag. 143, cites three Passages out of it.

prize upon Antwerp, Bodin finding himself frustrated in his Hopes resolved to retreat. He retired to Laon, where he married the Sister of a Magistrate [G]. He had an Office in the Presidial Court of That City [H], and it was probably on account of that Office, that he was deputed in the Year 1576, by the third State of Vermandois, to the States of Blois: though, in his Account of those States, he styles himself only Deputy of the third State of Vermandois (f). He shewed there a very good Disposition to maintain the Rights of the People [I], and he believed that to be the Reason why he did not obtain the Office of Master of Requests, which had been designed for him. He had the Courage strenuously to oppose those who would have had all the King's Subjects forced to profess the Catholic Religion (g). He represented vigorously, that That Request was a Violation of the Edicts, and that such a Violation would necessarily produce a War, which had been so often fatal to all the Kingdom. The Freedom, wherewith he represented this, raised him many Enemies; wherefore perceiving that there was a Combination to make that Petition pass, and that by reason of the fatal Blindness of the King and his Counsellors, those who might have prevented that ill Resolution, durst not say any thing, he abstained from proposing his Opinion, which was prejudicial to himself, and could do no good to the Public (h). Some Cities complained, that he had gone beyond his Commission, by opposing that Request; but the King's Council, who examined those Complaints, discharged him (i). Every body knows, that in the (f) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 146.

Raguagli

(g) Thuanus, lib. lxxiii. pag. 183. ad ann. 1576. See the Remark [I].

(h) Thuanus is guilty of a Contradiction, and has refuted this himself: See the end of the Remark [I].

(i) Ex Thuanus lib. lxxiii. See the Remark [I].

(19) That is, to translate his Republic into Latin.

(20) Bodinus Epist. Dedicat. Libror. de Republic. the Latin Edition.

(21) Sammarth. Eleg. lib. iv. pag. 93.

(22) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 146.

(23) Id. ibid. pag. 147, 148.

flow so much Glory: and then we find that tho' he is not sparing of his own Praises, yet what he says is sufficient to rectify the Hyperboles of his Historians. Bodin will not be so clear an instance of this, as I could wish; however, I may say, that his Expressions are not so distinct as those of Sammarthanus. See here what he says: 'Tamesti nova occasione ad id (19) maxime impulsu essem, cum Londini Olybium Gallum hominem in privatis illustrium virorum aedibus; alium item apud Cantabriges in ipsa Academia difficili ac molesta ratione Anglis Rempubliam nostram interpretari comperissem (20). — Tho' I was principally moved to it on a new occasion, having understood that Olybium a Frenchman explained my Republic in private Families of great Men at London; and another Person at Cambridge, in the University itself, after a difficult and troublesome Manner.' Those who know that there are private and public Lectures in the Colleges of the Universities of England, will find that Sammarthanus goes beyond Bodin; for he says positively, that Bodin's Republic was explained at Cambridge in the public Auditories: 'Quem (Andium ducem) in Angliam secutus, cum illic E SUGGESTU PUBLICO sua scripta juvenibus enarrari comperisset, ex hoc inusitata gloriola proveniunt non mediocrem vigiliarum suarum fructum sibi visus est collegisse (21). — When he followed him [the Duke of Anjou] into England, finding that his Writings were explained to the youth at THE PUBLIC LECTURES, he thought he had reaped an extraordinary fruit of his Lucubrations, in this small Crop of uncommon Glory.' Mr Menage has followed the same Notion. [G] He retired to Laon, where he married.] He married Frances Trouillart, the Widow of Claudius Guyart, Comptroller of the King's Demesnes in Vermandois, and Sister of Nicolas Trouillart the King's Attorney in the Bailiwick, and Presidial Court of Laon. The Contract of his Marriage is dated February 25, 1576 (22). This date shews, that it is necessary to rectify Mr Menage's Narrative. I have followed it, but it was with a design to shew the defect of it in this place. Mr Menage supposes that Bodin went into England, and into the Low-Countries, with the Duke of Alençon, before the Year 1576; he will have it also, that the Duke of Alençon's Death happened before the same Year; but it is a great falsity. That Duke went into England in the Year 1579. He returned thither in the Year 1582. He attempted to make himself Master of Antwerp in the Year 1583, and he died the Year following. Menage should not therefore have said, that Bodin, being frustrated in his hopes after the Death of That Prince, retired to Laon, and married there; but that he returned home to Laon, where he had married in the Year 1576. Note, that he had three Children by his Wife, two Sons, Elias and John, and one Daughter. He out-lived Elias, and John died young and unmarried. The Daughter fell distracted, was never married, and lived above Eighty Years (23).

[H] He had an Office in the Presidial Court of Laon.] Thuanus says in the Hundred and seventeenth Book of his History, that he was Lieutenant-General there. Mr Menard says in his Illustrations of Men of Anjou, that he was the King's Attorney there. Mr Joly in his Notes upon Loyse's Dialogue concerning the Advocates of Paris, and Mr de Mezeray in his History of France, both of them say that he was the King's Advocate there. Sammarthanus in the Elogy of Bodin, says in general, that he was a Magistrate there. It is certain, that he was the King's Attorney there in the room of his Brother-in-law, the Sieur Trouillart. He says in his Will, that he is one of the poorest Attorneys of the King of France (24). Observe, That Thuanus supposes that he had not the Lieutenant-General's Place till after the Death of the Duke of Alençon.

[I] He shewed a very good Disposition to maintain the Rights of the People.] To use the words of Mr Mezeray. He remonstrated there with the Freedom of an old Gaul, that the Funds of the Royal Demesnes belonged to the Provinces, and that the King had only the use of them. King Henry III did not take this ill, saying, that Bodin was an honest Man. See Bodin's Relation. He also remonstrated there, that the Deputies of two Bodies could decide nothing to the prejudice of the third: And upon his Remonstrance, the Deputies of the Ecclesiastical Order, and of the Nobility, who had been of the contrary Opinion, changed their Mind: which made King Henry III say, that Bodin was that Day Master of the States. See the seventh Chapter of the third Book of Bodin's Republic (25). See also the Latin Letter which he wrote to Pibrac, prefixed to the French Editions of his Republic, and you will find there what follows: 'Res ipsa planum fecit, me in legatione ad Gallias conventus pro populi commodis adversus potentiorum opes, non sine capitis mei periculo, dimicavisse: ac primum omnium me bella civilia, popularis fundi calamitas, renovarentur, acerrime restituisse: deinde authorem fuisse ne quis è numero legatorum cooptaretur, qui populi rogationibus judicandis interesset: contra quam ab omnibus ordinibus, una omnium voce decretum erat, cum res ipsa popularis ac speciosa videretur, esset tamen à populi commodis valde aliena: ego ad collegium pontificum & patricios ire jussus, ordinis nostri decreto, illos à proposita susceptraque sententia deduxi. Cum verò prædita publica sub hasta vendere, & quidem alienatione sempiterna, ac tributa duplicare specie levandæ plebis propositum esset, idque modis omnibus tentaretur, nos tanto studio intercessimus, ut cum nihil obtineri potuisset, Rex ipse Homaro Burdegalenium Præfide, Dureto Præfide Molineorum, Ripuario Aquitanias findico, ac plerique aliis audientibus dixerit, Bodinum ab ejus commodis non modò dissentire, verumetiam collegarum voluntates ac studia à se avertere consueffe. Si tamen procurator regius tunc fu-

(24) Menage, ubi supra.

(25) Id. ibid.

Raguagli of Boccalini, he was condemned to be burnt, as an Athiest, notorio Atbeista, for having said in his Books on a Republic, that Liberty of Conscience ought to be granted to Sectaries (k). 'The Abbot le Laboureur, says in the 'Three hundred Eighty fifth Page of the second Volume of his Cashebau, that 'he had been Lieutenant-General of the Table of Marble (l). It is certain, that in the 'time

(k) Raguagli di Parnasio, Centur. i. cap. lxxiv. pag. 195.

(l) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 146.

issem, non aliter sentirem: quia necesse est si lien intumescat, ut caput ipsum, ac cætera membra contabescant; quid igitur facere deuit plebis legatum? Cum autem nullis illecebris flecti potuissim, omnes penè Viromanduorum ciuitates, quæ me absentem, & certè repugnan-tem, communibus suffragiis elegerant, literis quo-rundam persuasæ, procuratores ad conventus mi-serunt, ut Bodinum, si fieri posset, à suscepta legatione revocarent, quasi qui duplices in Republica religiones tueretur: sed non prius pro-curatorias tabulas in comitio aperuerant, quam summa cum ignominia explosi fuere. Ex eo ta-men quantum detrimenti meis rationibus alla-tum sit, satis intelligunt, qui sæpius audierunt libellorum in regia magistrum me designatum à Principe antea fuisse. — The thing itself shows plainly, that, during my deputation to the States of France, it was not without hazard of my Life, that I had contended for the Privileges of the People against the Power of the great, and first that I made a strong resistance, against renewing the Civil-Wars, the destruction of the Peoples substance; then, that I was the occasion that no body was chosen from among the Deputies, to be present at judging the Bills of the People, contrary to what had been resolved by the Unanimous Voice of all the States; the thing seeming specious and popular, but being in reality contrary to the Interest of the People. I being ordered by a Decree of our State, to go to the College of Ecclesiastics, and to the Nobility, brought them over from their former Resolutions. And when it was proposed to set the Public Lands to sale, and alienate them for ever, and double the Taxes, on pretence of easing the common People, and all means were tried to bring this about, I opposed it so earnestly, that, when nothing could be done, the King himself declared in the presence of Homar, President of Bourdeaux, and Duret, President of Molin, and Ripuar, Syndic of Aquitain, and several others, that Bodin was not only himself averse from his Interest, but also used to turn the inclinations of his Colleagues against him. But, tho' I had been the King's Attorney, at that time I could not have been of another mind:
because if the Spleen grows too big, the Head itself, and other Members, must of necessity pine away: what then could a Deputy of the People do?
But when I could not be moved by any Allurements, almost all the Cities of Virmandois, who had chosen me by common Suffrage in my absence, and against my Will, persuaded by letters from certain Persons, sent their Attornies to the States, to recal Bodin if possible from the Office he had undertaken, as one who was for two Religions in the State, but their Letters of Procurator were no sooner opened in the Assembly, than they were rejected with the greatest Ignominy. What detriment this was to my affairs is well known to those who have often heard that I was before nominated by the King, to be Master of Requests in his Palace.

(26) Thouanus,
lib. lxxiii. p. 187.

What Thouanus says, concerning these same things, is most glorious for Bodin. He says, That the Resolutions of the States having been presented to the King, it was proposed to the Third State, to appoint Twelve Commissioners to assist at the Examination, that was to be made of those Resolutions in the King's Council (26). This was approved at first; but when the thing was examined again, Bodin was of Opinion, that no such thing ought to be done, and advised his Colleagues not to nominate any Deputy, and to oppose the Deputations which the Clergy and the Nobility intended to make.
He was sent to the other two Houses, and shewed them by several Reasons how dangerous it was to commit the Decision of what had been asked by the three States of the Kingdom to a small number of Persons; that tho' the Commissioners should be proof against Bribes, yet the King's Presence might intimidate them, and the Solicitations and Cabals of the Courtiers seduce them. He was answered, he made a Reply, and at last gained his Cause by the firmness wherewith he gave them to understand, that the Third State would oppose their Deputations. Henry III was vexed at this, and bore Bodin an ill-will for it. Itaque Rex Bodinum, quem unice diligebat, & ob raram eruditionem

'ac multam varium rerum experientiam, dum
'cibum caperet, libenter audiebat, ab eo tempore
'non tam benigno vultu dignatus est, quod ordi-
'nib. prioris sententiæ mutandæ auctor extitisset,
'& ea in re quantum ad circumagenda ordinum
'ingenia momenti haberet, minus grato regi ex-
'perimento docuisset (27). — Bodin was a par'ticular Favourite of the King, and he loved to hear 'him when he was at Table, for his extraordinary
'Learning, and great experience in various things;
'but, from this time, he looked less favourably on
'him, because he had persuaded the States to change
'their former Opinion, and shewed in that affair,
'by an experiment, no ways pleasing to the King,
'of what consequence he was to sway the dispositions
'of the States. That Prince caused it to be represented to the States that he was under a necessity of alienating part of his Demesnes; 'Necessitate, quæ potentissimum telum est, urgente, id licere contenderet, quippe cum conllet, salutem populi supremam legem esse debere (28). — He insisted,
'that since necessity, that most powerful weapon, ur'ged, the thing might be done; because it was cer'tain, that the safety of the People ought to be 'the supreme Law; but they rejected that Proposal, and it was Bodin chiefly, who brought them to that Resolution; for the most considerable Deputies being corrupted with promises were already wavering. 'Pessimum de dominio affectatæ necessitis obtentu alienando commentum, Bodino præ-cipue auctore (nam præcipui jam promissis cor-rupti nutabant) evanuit, quod si locum tunc ha-buisset, sub principe profuso misere dilapidatum fuisset (29). — That wicked contrivance of alie-nating the Royal Demesnes, on pretence of feigned necessity, came to nothing, chiefly by the means of Bodin, (for the most considerable being corrupted with promises were already wavering) if the design had succeeded at that time, miserable waste would have been made under that profused Prince. The same Bodin stoutly opposed the Cabals of the Party of Messieurs de Guise, who would have had the War against the Huguenots (30) resolved on. We may infer from this that Mezerey is mistaken, when he asserts, that the King praised Bodin for opposing the alienation of the Demesnes. He confounds two things which he should have distinguished. Bodin's Conduct was approved by the King's Council, when some Cities complained that he had opposed the Proposal of not suffering two Religions in the Kingdom; 'Homines à factiosis subornati venerunt, qui Bodinum contra mandata sua intercessisse dicerent, quibus in consistorio regio audistis, nihilominus pronunciatum est, Bodinum ni-hil nisi rectè fecisse (31). — There came
'Men suborned by the factious, who said that Bo-
'din had interposed contrary to his Orders; they 'had a hearing in the King's Council, but never'theless it was declared, that Bodin had done na-
'thing amiss; this happened before the two Affairs which we have just now read in the passage of Thouanus, and which made Bodin lose King Henry III's favour. Let us also observe a Contradiction of Thouanus. He says, Page 183, that, when Bodin perceived that his Remonstrances against the Combinations of those, who were for infringing the Edicts of Pacification, would be in vain, he abstained from speaking about that matter. 'Cum
'videret homo futuri providus conjuratione facta
'eò animos inclinare, & fatali Regis ac consiliari-
'orum ejus cæcitate effici, ut ab illis, qui pro-
'hibere poterant, præpostera prudentia in ea re
'dissimularetur, hujusmodi publicis sibi pernicio-
'sis

(27) Thouanus,
lib. lxxiii. p. 187.

(28) Id. ibid.

(29) Id. ibid.
pag. 183. col. 1.

(30) Id. ibid.
col. 2.

(31) Id. ibid.
pag. 183.

(m) Menage, ib. pag. 147.

(n) Dated from Laon the 29th of January 1590. Id. ibid.

* time of Charles IX he was the King's Attorney, in a Commission for the Forests of Normandy [K].* He had been a Protestant, yet in 1589 he persuaded the Inhabitants of Laon to declare for the Duke of Mayenne [L]; remonstrating to them, that the Rising of so many Cities, and of so many Parliaments in favour of Messieurs de Guise, ought not to be called a Rebellion, but a Revolution (m); and at that time he printed a Letter on That Subject (n). — He died of the Plague at Laon, in 1596 — in his Sixty seventh Year [M],* and was buried in

(32) Id. ibid.

* sis & in publicum nihil profuturis admonitionibus deinceps abstinuit (32) — When, he who was a Man of great foresight, perceived that, by Combination amongst them, they all leaned that way, and that the fatal blindness of the King, and his Council, made those who could have hindered it, out of a preposterous Prudence, dissemble in the matter, he abstained from such public Remonstrances, which were burlesque to himself, and not like to profit the public. But in Pag. 188, he tells us that this same Civilian vigorously opposed the Faction of Messieurs de Guise, even when the Resolutions of the States had been presented to the King, and it seemed that the Commission of the Deputies was expired. The Opposition was concerning the design of renewing the War against the Protestants. The Partisans of the Duke of Guise had gained the Clergy and the Nobility; those two Bodies had several private Meetings to put off the Proposals of Peace. Bodin, who, because the Deputies of Paris were absent, was then at the head of the Third State, opposed those practices with great Courage (33); and when they told him that the thing had been thus resolved upon in the States, and that the Assembly had no longer any Authority; he answered them boldly, you are then a company of Rebels, since you acknowledge that your Deputation is ended, and yet you do not leave off meeting together: But I am of another Opinion, we may yet present a Petition to the King; the Assemblies wherein they treated of the Peace at Rome, were not required to be so solemn as those wherein the beginning of the War was in agitation: Et cum illi ita in comitiis conventum dicerent, & postulatis semel Regi oblatis nullas ordinum partes esse, quippe exilinctis mandatis, audacter respondit, in perduellionis criminibus ipso incurrere, qui cum potestatem agendi vel propria confessione non habeant, tamen cotidie conventicula celebrant, verum se aliter censere, & licere adhuc Regi supplicare. Nam ut &c (34). It was necessary that I should shew Thuanus's contradiction; for he had considerably lessened Bodin's Reputation without any Reason.

(34) Id. ibid.

[K] He was the King's Attorney in a Commission for the Forests of Normandy. * Master John Bodin, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, persuaded King Charles IX, that the Right of Tiers and Danger, was a general Right over all the Forests of Normandy, and took the care of that Inquiry upon himself, as the King's Attorney for the Reformation. There was hardly any Family in the Province, but what he proceeded against. He himself says in his Writings, that he made Four hundred Cases ready for Trial: And he carried the matter so far, that there was nothing wanting for the Execution of his Design, but the actual Dispossession of all those, who had any Forests. All Normandy was in commotion at his Undertaking, and the Parliament met, several times, about that matter: They appointed Deputies; and the Nobility followed their Example. At last the King was moved with their Complaints, and convinced by the Reasons which were represented to him. And to put a stop to that Search, which had lasted several Years, he made an Edict in the Year 1571, whereby he ordered the Alienation of the Rights of Tiers and Danger, which belonged to him, on the Forests of Normandy; and he acknowledged by that same Edict, that those Forests were but few, and that the Revenue which he drew from them, was inconsiderable. Bodin, who could not yield, opposed the registering of it: But the King set forth a Declaration, whereby, without having any regard to his Opposition and Protestations, which he declared void, he ordered it to be put in execution (35). I thought this Passage deserved to be set down at length: First, Because it contains a fact that is curious, and but little known. Secondly, Because it serves to discover Bodin's Temper, I mean, his Ardour, his Activity, his Vigilance, and his Steadiness.

(35) Gréard, défenses pour les particuliers qui possèdent des bois en Normandie, contre la prétention des Droits de Tiers & Danger, apud Menage, ubi supra, p. 146, 147.

He himself tells us some Circumstances of his Proceedings, which will confirm the thing. * And I remember, that Charles IX having ordered his Letters Patents, in the Year MDLXX, for a general Regulation of the Waters and Forests in Normandy, which drew after it the Cognizance of the finest part of his Demesne, the Presidents and Counsellors of the Parliament of Rouen were forbidden to take any Cognizance of it: And altho' they used all possible Endeavours to prevent that Prohibition, yet they at last agreed to it, after I had presented to them several Repeated Commands from the King, and sued xxii Counsellors, and the first President severally for Cafes resulting from the Commission, and the whole City of Rouen, for the Rights which they claimed against the King, and which was the Reason why I obtained the Prohibition (36).

[L] He had been a Protestant; yet, in 1589, he persuaded the Inhabitants of Laon to declare for the Duke of Mayenne. Mr Menage says, that he discovered that Bodin was a Protestant, by one of his Letters to John Bautru des Matras, a famous Advocate in the Parliament of Paris (37). Mr Colomies published part of that Letter in his Gallia Orientalis (38). It is as clear as day, that it is a Letter from a good Huguenot: It is not dated; it appears only that it was written after the first Civil War; I mean, that which was ended in the Month of March, 1563. Thuanus says, that the League, having sent Orders to Laon, not to acknowledge King Henry III any more; Bodin, who had been a Protestant, and who was never since an Enemy to the Reformed Religion, praised the Conduct of the League, and by the Bishop's Advice made a Speech to the People, and removed the Scruples and Fears of the Inhabitants (39). He did not scruple to call the King a perfidious Man, and an Hypocrite, nor to foretel him mischief; he is, said he, the Sixty third King of France, and he shall be the last: as the Climacterical Year Sixty three is commonly the last of Human Life. In this manner he stirred up the City of Laon to join with the Leaguers: He writ a Letter on that (40) Subject, which was printed (41). Thus the Nicodemites do sometimes more harm than an open Enemy; they know that they are suspected, and therefore for fear of being undone, if they do not remove those Suspensions, they shew more Zeal for the prevailing Party, than those who have already given sufficient Proofs of the same Zeal. Observe these Words of Thuanus; Videri regem huic regno Francico fatalem, & ultimum ex ea familia fore. — The King seemed fatal to this Kingdom of France, and would be the last of that Family. What did Bodin mean by this Prognostication? Did he pretend that Henry III should be the last King of the Branch of Valois? He needed be no great Prophet to foretel that, of a Prince, who was the only one remaining of that Branch, and was married to a young Woman that was barren. Did he pretend that no Prince of the third Race should ascend the Throne after Henry III? In that case the Event has given him the lie; and yet Thuanus makes a great Account of Bodin's Predictions. * He repaired that (42) Fault by an admirable Prediction of the unhop'd for Issue of those Troubles; for though there was no likelihood of a Peace, he published before-hand both the Year and the Month wherein it would be concluded, and the Event answered what he had foretold (43).

[M] He died — — — in 1596 — — — in his Sixty seventh Year. He says in his Will, dated the

(36) Bodin de la Republique, lib. iii, cap. ii. pag. 381. See also the 17th Chapter of the 17th Book, pag. 1031.

(37) Menage, ubi supra, pag. 147.

(38) Pag. 76. § 6.

(39) Thuan. lib. xciv. pag. 262. ad ann. 1589.

(40) To President Brisson.

(41) Thuanus, lib. xciv. p. 262.

(42) He meant the Fault which Bodin committed, by saying many things that were injurious to King Henry III, and to the King of Navarre.

(43) Id. lib. cxvii. pag. 771, cited by Teiffier addit. Tom. II. pag. 247.

in the Church of the Franciscans in the same City, as he had ordered by his Will (o). He had been a Carmelite in his Youth, if we may believe Thuanus; but Mr Baudry, Advocate in the Great-Council, and Grand Nephew of Bodin, told Mr Menage several times, that Thuanus had been misinformed in That Particular (p). It seems to me, that there is as much Exaggeration in the Praises which Gabriel Naudé bestowed upon Bodin, as Injustice in the Contempt which Cujacius, Scaliger, and some others have treated him with [N]. Possévin is not the only Man, who accuses

(44) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 147.

(45) At Moreri, Hofman, Bacholercus in Indice Chronol. p. 682. Paul Freherus in Theatro, p. 395, & Saldenus Ot. Theol. p. 797: who does not know that our Bodin is the Author of the Diablogues de abditis rerum sublimibus arcibus.

(46) Thuanus, lib. xvii. pag. 771.

(47) Menard, cited by Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 147.

† In lib. de studiis.

‡ In Iudicio librorum Bodini.

(48) Naudé Apolog. des grands hommes, cap. vii. pag. 127.

(49) Naudé, Advis pour dresser une Bibliothèque pag. 96.

(50) See above, Citation (9).

(51) Pag. 513, & seq. in Edit. Rotterodam. 1691, in 4^{to}.

(52) It was in 1576. Bongars was lately come from Germany to study the Civil Laws under Cujacius.

(53) Taken from Bongars's Letter to Conrad Rittershausen, published by Colomæus, in his Gallia Orientalis.

the seventh of June, 1596, that he was above Sixty-six Years of Age (44); which confutes those who say, that he died in the Year 1585 (45), and those who affirm that he lived above Seventy Years (46), or that he lived but Fifty-five Years (47). Note, that the Epistle Dedicatory of his Universæ Naturæ Theatrum, is dated from Laon the Twenty fifth of February, 1596. This is a little mortifying to those who place his Death in the Year 1585.

[N] As much Exaggeration in the Praises which Gabriel Naudé bestows on him as Injustice in the Contempt which Cujacius, Scaliger, and some others have treated him with.] Naudé made this Judgment of Bodin, in a Book which he published in 1625. 'This

'first Man of France, John Bodin ----- after having, with a wonderful quickness of Wit, accompanied with a solid Judgment, treated of all Subjects Divine, Natural, and Civil, would perhaps have forgot that he was a Man, and would infallibly have been taken by us for a Superior Intelligence, if he had not left some Marks and Foot-steps of his Humanity in his Demonomanie, which was, as the late most Serene King of Great-Britain well observed †, majori collecta studio quam scripta judicio: collected with more pains than wrote with Judgment. Perhaps the Reason of it is, Because that great Genius, who understood the Holy Language very well, applied himself, more than was requisite, to the Doctrine of the Rabbies and Talmudists, quibus, as the Jesuit Possévin observes ‡, hoc libro tam videtur additus, ut ad eos sapienter recurrat quam ad Evangelium (48). — To whom he seems so addicted that he often recurs to them in this Book, than to the Gospel. In 1627, Naudé published his Advice how to erect a Library, and observed that if there be any Question about Bodin's Republic it must be inferred, that it ought to be taken in, because the Author was one of the most famous and renowned Men in his Age, and who, among the Moderns, treated first of that Subject, because the matter of it is very necessary, and very much sought after at this present time, and because the Book is common, translated into several Languages, and printed almost every five or six Years (49). Add to this, what he said to Mr Menage (50), and what he published in his Bibliographia politica (51), where he does not seem to be in cool Blood when he praises Bodin, but rather to be seized with the most violent Rapture, that ever railed the Hyperboles of Poets to the Skies. It being a book which may easily be had, and the Passage concerning Bodin containing many Lines, I refer my Readers to it, and shall copy nothing out of it.

Now let us speak of Cujacius's Contempt. We are informed by a Letter from Bongars, that Cujacius having heard that he was censured in Bodin's Republic, and not being able to find that Book at the Book-sellers, he borrowed it of Bongars (52), and some Days after, he declaimed against Bodin, above two Hours. That Lecture of Cujacius was sent to Bodin, and obliged him to put a Latin Epistle before the Second Edition of his Republic, wherein he treated Cujacius roughly. But he made good use of his remarks, for he left out in that Edition all that Cujacius had censured, eorum quæ Cujacius notaverat in ista altera editione nec volum reliquit nec vestigium (53). Cujacius answered in the Thirty eighth Chapter of the eighth Book of his Observations, and made use of the Anagram Andrius sine bono, to denote his Antagonist. See Mr Menage, who observes besides, that Bodin had abused Cujacius without naming him, in these Words of the Preface to his Method of History. 'Hostium aspectum ferre non magis possunt, quam is qui in Scholis Biturigum tanta cum gloria florebat: id est, strabo inter cæcos acutissime cernebat. Cum in forum venisset, de levissima questione consultus obmutuit: non sine acerba Riandi reprehensione (54). — They can no more bear the sight of an Enemy than he who flourished with so much Glory, in the Schools of Bourges; that is, an owl among Bats could see clearest. When he came into the Court, being asked a very trifling question, he was speechless: For which he had a very severe reprimand from Riandus. Observe by the by, that Moreri, and several others, who say, that Bodin was called Andrius sine bono, because of his Poverty, are mistaken, Cujacius made no Allusion to Bodin's Fortune in that Anagram; he only considered the Qualities of his mind. A certain Author gives out, that Queen Elizabeth made use of that Expression, speaking to our Bodin, and he quotes Burgoldensis (55). He is mistaken in his Quotation, for Burgoldensis says only, that she called him Badin. 'Homo iste sine bono, sine Badin (uti illum Elizabetha Angl. Regina appellavit.) licitum esse putat suorum popularium dignitatem honesto mendacio tueri in sua Methodo Histor. c. 4 (56). — That Man without good, or Badin [Trifler] (as Elizabeth Queen of England called him) thinks it lawful to keep up the dignity of his own People, by an honest lye, in his Method of History.' Another Author pretends, that the disadvantageous manner in which Bodin has spoke of Women, in the fifth Chapter of the sixth Book of the Republic, drew upon him 'a very sharp Jest ----- Queen Elizabeth, who had otherwise some esteem for him, was pleased to send for him into England, on purpose to send him back with these Words; Bodin, when you see me, learn that you are but a Badin (57). A Doctor of Louvain says, that when Bodin was at London, to negotiate the Marriage of his Master Hercules Duke of Alençon (58), the Queen used to call him Master John Badin: Pro Bodino solebat eum Regina Magistrum Joannem Badinum appellare (59). 'Tis not improbable that the Queen might call him so; for at that time the Court was not less fond of Puns than the People; but it is false, that That Prince sent for him over on purpose to mortify him by such a sorry Joke. He was at London in the Retinue of his Master the Duke of Alençon. He was there also in quality of Envoy from the same Duke.

VOL. II.

What Scaliger said of Bodin, was very disobliging. 'Bodinus patrem Jul. Scaligerum falso ignorantia Matheseos arguit, ipse indoctissimus valdeque jejunos, cum quicquid a multis annis doctrinae consequutus est, transcripserit ex aliorum laboribus, imo & ex meo libello in Varronem de lingua Latina, cujus paginas integras suas fecit sur impudentissimus, & in unum velut chaos congestit, plurima scribens quæ ipse non intelligit. Denique librum de Methodo legendæ historiæ inscripsit, in quo nihil minus quam eâ de re tractat ut titulo suo nullo modo respondeat oratio, quod quidem Verrius Flaccus notavit in Originibus Catonis, quæ nihil minus inquirunt quam Italiæ origines. Porro si quis velit in illum scribere, Je lui dresserai tout son fait: neque enim mihi honoris loco ducam aliquid proferre quod meo nomine circumferatur (60). — Bodin falsely accuses my Father Jul. Scaliger of Ignorance in the Mathematics, being himself very unlearned, and dry, for whatever Learning he has pursued for many Years, he has transcribed out of the Labours of others, even out of my Book, on Varro de Lingua Latina, whole pages of which the impudent Thief has made his own, and thrown together like a Chaos, Writing many things which he does not understand. In short, he entitles one of his Books The Method of Reading History, in which he treats of nothing less than that matter, so that his Discourse has no relation at all to his Title.

(o) Id. ibid. pag. 143.

(p) Id. ibid. pag. 141.

(44) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 144.

(55) Diceman, de Naturalismo, pag. 2.

(56) Burgold, notitia rerum Imperii Romani Germanici. Part. I. pag. 33.

(57) Ancillon, Mélanges critiques, Tom. II. pag. 5.

(58) Mr Crenius, Animadv. Part. II. p. 93: has no reason to find fault with this Name and this Title.

(59) Libert, Fromondus, Meteorolog. lib. v. cap. i. art. iv. pag. 240.

(60) Scaligerana prima, pag. 30, 31.

(q) See the end of the Remark [O].

accuses him of having wrote many things contrary to Religion [O], and some Persons suspected him of Magic (q), or affirmed that he died a Jew (r). Note, that as Verrius Flaccus observed of the Origines of Cato, which treat of nothing less than the Antiquities of Italy. If any body would write against him, I'll furnish him matter for him, but do not think it consistent with my Honour to publish any thing against him in my own Name. You see that he calls him a most ignorant Man, and that he would think it a dishonour to answer him. What Arrogance is this! and how ill becoming learned Men, tho' it is very common among them! Let us appeal from this Judgment of Scaliger to that of Tuanus, and if we will not grant that Bodin was an exact and judicious Writer, let us confess however that he had a great Genius, a vast Knowledge, and a prodigious Memory and Reading. The Works, by which he got so much Glory, needed not that he should borrow any thing from a Commentary on Varro; they were not such as could receive any lustre from thence, and there is reason to believe that Scaliger and Cujacius would not have been able to produce what he did with so much Strength at the States of Blois.

(r) See Citation
[66].

[O] Possevin is not the only Man, who accuses him of having writ many things - - - - - contrary to Religion.] Let us in the first place quote his Panegyrist Naudé, who observes, that those who have writ against Bodin's Republic, were only Pygmies attacking Hercules; so that this Author having nothing to fear from that side, ought only to dread the Censures of the Church. 'Scio equidem, Fabium Albergatum hominem Italum, & Serrium, ac Augerium Ferrerium, Gallos (61), magnis conatibus, & libris ad id consequendum editis, periculum illi ac ruinam intentasse: sed eventus docuit eundem fuisse istius pugnae eventum, quem Pygmaeorum cum Hercule: ut non jam ad miniatas alicujus Attici aut Hyperattici ceras trepidare debeat, sed ad Ecclesiae solius judicium; cujus censuris quoniam vehementius urgetur, quam inimicorum argumentis, hinc est, quod ipsius libri evolvi minime debeant, nisi obtenta prius & hunc & quolibet auctores politicos legendi facultate (62). — I know that Fabius Albergatus an Italian, and Sirrius and Augerius Ferrerius, two Frenchmen, laboured with all their Might, and published several Books on purpose to bring him into Danger, and to ruin him, but the Event shewed that the Success of this Battle was the same with that of the Pygmies against Hercules, so that now he has no need to stand in Awe of the Writings of any Critic or Hypercritic, but only of the Judgment of the Church; and because her Censures bear harder upon him than the Arguments of his Adversaries, therefore his Books ought not to be read without a Licence first obtained for reading both him and all other Political Authors. A little lower he blames him for having too much exposed the Interests of the true Faith, and in that regard he approves of Possevin's Complaints. 'Quibus (quasi) siomibus certe compescendis dirigendis ad finem Religionis Christianae praeceptis ac instituto contentaneum, sane haud necesse erit diversas inter se Religiones committere; quemadmodum non sine dispendio verae pietatis superioribus annis fecere, Petrus de Alliaco Cardinalis & Episcopus Cameracensis, in opusculo quodam astrologico de tribus sectis; Hieronymus Cardanus in libris suis de subtilitate; & Joannes Bodinus, composito, sed nondum edito, (atque utinam nunquam edatur) de rerum sublimium arcanis ingenti volumine; quod equidem, Jesuitam Possevinum non perperam de ipso judicium tulisse, argumento esse potest validissimo certe manifestissimoque (63). — For restraining which [questions] and directing them to an end agreeable to the Precepts and Institutions of the Christian Religion, it will not be necessary to compare different Religions one with another, as has been done heretofore, not without Damage to true Piety, by Cardinal Petrus Alliatus Bishop of Cambray in an Astrological Treatise, concerning the three Sects; Cardan in his Book de Subtilitate; and John Bodin in a large Volume, de Rerum Sublimium Arcanis, writ by him, but not yet published (as I wish it never may), which is a strong and manifest Argument that the Jesuit Possevin had formed no wrong Judgment of him. The Author of the Book de justa Reip. Christianae in reges impios & haereticos auctoritate, accuses Bodin of indifferency about Religion, and of being a Favourer of the Protestants. Unius viri indifferentiis, & Protestantibus non iniqui testimonio comparationem hanc transigam (64). The Jesuit Martin del Rio maintains, that the Demonomanie of Bodin is full of Errors, and that in the very Edition of Antwerp, which was published as corrected, there remained many dangerous things, and which shew the doubtful Religion of the Author; Manent multa noxia, & quae ambiguum auctoris fidem satis testantur, nocereque legentibus possunt (65). Wherefore, adds he, that Book was justly placed by the Inquisition of Rome in the Catalogue of prohibited Books. He promises to make it appear, that the Theatrum universae Naturae, of the same Author, contains some Doctrines so contrary to Divinity, that they may at least be called erroneous, and altogether rash. Let us observe that his Republic had the same fate at Rome, as his Demonomanie, tho' certain things had been inserted in the Italian Translation, which some officious Friends thought proper, to preserve Bodin's reputation of a good Catholic (66). His Method of History, and his Theatre of Nature had no better fate with the Inquisitors. Here is something terrible: 'Those that get into the Pulpit here, tell Stories, de-claim against Bodin, for a whole Sermon, and tear him in pieces, without calling to mind that the Villain was a Leaguer, and died a Jew, without mentioning JESUS CHRIST in his last Words, which I have in Verse (67). This is to be found in a Letter of James Gillot to Scaliger, dated from Paris the ninth of February 1607. That which Mr Dicman found in a Manuscript, and which he inserted in his Book de Naturalismo, is yet more terrible. Naudæus in ἀποστολική Gallicae ex MS. laudati Patini mecum benevole a Viro Nob. communicato, de hoc opere, &c. — Naudæus in a French Abstract from the Famous Patin, kindly communicated to me by a Nobleman, concerning this Work, 'It is a Book well writ, says he, but very dangerous, because he laughs at all Religions, and concludes at last, that there is none: neither had he any himself: He died like a Dog, without any sense of Piety, being neither Jew, Christian, nor Turk. Another uncertain Author in Patin's Manuscript, says, Bodin was a strange Fellow in point of Religion. He died of the Plague at Laon in 1596, being pretty old, and said not one word of JESUS CHRIST when he died (68). I cannot tell whether those that preached against Bodin in the Pulpits of Paris in the Year 1607, had heard any thing of the Dispositions which he shewed when he died, or of the pernicious Doctrines of the Heptaplemeres. Scaliger could not apprehend from whence their Fury proceeded. He writ to Charles l'Abbé, towards the end of the Month of February 1607, the following Words: 'Illud velim ex te scire, quare Pontificii tam acerbè quotidie in Bodinum declament. Certe quod mancipium ambitionis fuerit, propterea odio illis esse eum non crediderim. Aliam subesse causam necesse est, quam ex te scire velim. Hujus igitur tam inopinati odii causam, & quare hominem pridem mortuum canes ex tumultu eruant, neque ejus manes quiescere sinant, à vobis expecto (69). — I desire to know from you, why the Papiests declaim so violently, every Day, against Bodin. Certainly I cannot think they hated him, because he was a Slave to Ambition. There must be some other Reason at Bottom which I would gladly know. I therefore expect to hear from you the Reason of this so unexpected Hatred, and why the Dogs tear, from the Grave, a Man long since dead, and won't suffer his Ashes to be at Peace. I must not forget that as soon as Bodin's Republic came out, some Preachers exclaimed against him. Read his Latin Letter of the thirtieth of March 1581, at the

(61) Note, that Bodin in the beginning of René Herpin's Apology, mentions not only one O. status Vasco (it is he whom Menage calls, above, Citation (9) Peter l'Hottail) but also an Andreas Frankebergerus Saxo, who had wrote against his Republic.

(62) Naudæus Bibliogr. polit. pag. 23, 24.

(64) Naudæus ibid. pag. 33.

(64) G. Guillel. Rossius de justa Reip. Auctorit. &c. cap. iv. n. 3. pag. 194. Edit. Antwerp, 1592.

(65) Del Rio, Diss. Magic. lib. i. cap. iii. p. 23.

(66) Lofcher de latrocinio in script. publ. p. 41. apud Dicmannum de Naturalismo, p. 4.

(67) French Epistles written to Scaliger, pag. 439.

(68) Dicmannus de Naturalismo, pag. 12.

(69) See Colomelius's Gallia Orientalis, pag. 86.

that, tho' he declared freely enough against those who maintain that the Authority of Monarchs is unlimited [P], he displeased the Common-wealth Men. I believe it was (among other Reasons) because on the one hand he maintained, that there were some Absolute Monarchs in Europe, and on the other, That it does not belong to any Subject in particular, nor to all in general, to attempt against the Honour, or the Life, of such Monarchs, either by violent means, or in a juridical way, though they should have committed all the Wickedness, Impieties, and Cruelties that can be named the beginning of René Herpin's Apology, and you will find that he observes two things in it, the one that de Serres, who had published a great deal of abusive Language against him, had been severely punished for it; the other is, that tho' those that slander a Man in the Pulpit, are as guilty as those that offend him in their Writings, yet there are some Preachers, who stain his Reputation, and that of divers other good Men, with impunity. 'Serranus ille qui inaudito genere scribendi, ac probris inusitatis libellam complevit, ipsius principis iussu penas graviores dedit, quam optare potuissent. Ac tametsi eodem scelere obligantur, qui publicis in concionibus nomen cuiusquam læserunt, videmus tamen legibus solutos, non modò meam, sed etiam optimi cuiusque exultationem impune violare, qui prudenter ferendum putat, quod auferri non potest (70).'

(70) Apologie de René Herpin, fol. 2. verso.

But, among the Roman Catholics, none has expressed more warmth against this Civilian, than the Jesuit Possévin. See with what desire of finding fault he scans the Method of History, and with what turns of Sophistry he puts an ill Construction upon the Propositions that may have a good sense. His great grief is, that Bodin speaks of Luther, Calvin, and Melanchthon, in civil Terms, and that he would have some bounds set to the Papal Power (71). But above all, see the little book wherein Possévin gives his Judgment of quatuor Scriptores, Philippo la Nua, Jo. Bodino, Philippo Mornæo, & Nic. Macchiavello (72). He pretended, that Bodin's Works contained a great number of Errors, Heresies, and Impieties (73).

(71) Possévin in Biblioth. selecta lib. xvi. cap. ix. pag. 269, 270. Tom. II.

(72) It was printed at Rome in 1592, and at Lyons in 1593.

(73) Teissier, Additions aux Eloges de Mr de Thou, Tom. II. pag. 248.

(74) Grotius Epist. ad Cordesum apud Colomnesium in Gallia Orient. pag. 85.

(75) Meric Casaubon, apud Diceman ubi supra, pag. 5.

(76) Diceman de Naturalismo, pag. 6.

(77) Joh. Henricus Ursinus in S. Jeremie Virga vigilante & Olea succensa, pag. 40. apud Th. Crenium Animadv. Philolog. & Hist. Part. II. p. 176.

The Protestants have not been silent about this Writer's Errors; for, to say nothing of Grotius, who declares, that Bodin had very much staggered his Faith by keeping Company with the Jews (74). We may cite Meric Casaubon, who confesses, that he knows not what to think of this Man's Religion, whether he ought to reckon him among the Catholics, or among the Protestants (75). The Lutheran Minister, who informs me of this, carries his doubts much farther, and seems very much disposed to believe that at last Bodin lost all sense of Christianity (76). He endeavours particularly to convict him of having reduced all to Natural Religion. Another Lutheran Doctor has observed, that there are, in John Bodin's Physics, divers things which ought to be abhorred by Christians (77). He observes also, that they are set forth under the Name of Theodorus, and that another Person under the Name of Mytagogus answers somewhat coldly, nothing ought to be rashly affirmed on such difficult Subjects, de tam arduis nil temere esse affirmandum. And indeed I find that Bodin's Mytagogus, Page 222 of the Theatrum Naturæ, Edition of Hanaw 1605, makes this Answer; 'De rebus tam arduis & à communi sensu remotis nec temere quicquam affirmare, nec leviter cuiquam assentiri velim: mihi satis est certissimis argumentis & ad assentiendum necessariis demonstrasse cometas non esse incendia ab exhalationibus concepta. — In such sublime matters, and so remote from common Sense, I would neither rashly affirm any thing, nor easily assent to any body's Opinion: it is enough that I have shown, by unquestionable, and necessarily conclusive Arguments, that Comets are not Flames, kindled from exhalations.' This Answer relates to a very strange Opinion which Bodin had mentioned just before under the Name of Theodorus, viz. That Comets are Spirits, who having lived innumerable Ages on Earth, and being at last come near Death, celebrate their last Triumph, or are brought again into the Firmament as shining Stars. This is attended with Famine and Pestilence, &c. because the Cities, and the People, lose the Governors and Chiefs, who appealed the Wrath of God. It is necessary that I should set down his Words. 'Democriti sententia in mentem mihi recurrat, ut existimem cometas esse illustrium virorum mentes, quæ posteaquam innumerabilibus seculis viguerunt in terris, tandem obitura, ut omnia quæ oriuntur occasum minantur, extremos peragunt triumphos, aut in cælum stellatum quasi splendida sydera revocantur: ac propterea sequuntur famæ, morbi populares, civilia bella, quasi civitates ac populi ducibus illis optimis & gubernatoribus qui divinos furores placabant, deferrentur (78).'

It is plain, that there is a fault in the Words illustrium virorum; or that Bodin gives those Words a very particular Sense; for the common signification, Illustrious Men, does not agree with what follows, that is, with those innumerable Ages of Life upon Earth, which Bodin ascribes to the Spirits which he mentions. He means therefore Genii or Angels, and he supposes them subject to Death. Vossius skipped two or three very essential Words, in relating this Passage, Viguerunt in terris. Yet he finds an Impiety in it: 'Ubi quod animas mori ait, says he (79), id si non aliud voluit dicere quam verba videntur sonare, sane impietate summa non vacat. Tolerabilis quod ait heroum animas in sidera revocari. — In saying that Spirits die, if he did not mean something else, than what the Words seem to import, it is great Impiety. 'Tis more excusable that he says, the Souls of Heroes are called back to the Stars.' This Omission is in the Edition I make use of, which is that of Germany in 4to. It is also in that of Amsterdam in Folio 1668; for Mr Crenius, who relates this Passage of Vossius (80), with the omission of viguerunt in terris, quotes the Edition of Amsterdam.

(78) Bodin, in Theatro Naturæ lib. ii. pag. 221, 222.

(79) Vossius de Orig. & Prog. Idol. lib. iii. cap. ix. p. 774.

(80) Crenius Animadv. Philolog. & Hist. Part. II. p. 175.

Let us end with these Words of Thuanus, which inform us, that it was believed, that John Bodin was a Magician: 'Postea & Dæmonomaniam Gallice itidem scripsit, in qua dum materiam ab aliis tantopere agitatam adversus Joannis Wieri plerumque sententiam, enucleatus retractat, magicæ rei ac vetitarum istiusmodi artium crimen minime effugit (81). — Afterwards he writ his Dæmonomania in French likewise, in which, while he treats more explicitly of a matter so much tossed about by others, chiefly against the Opinion of Joannes Wierus, he did not keep clear of the Crime of Magic, and such like forbidden Arts.'

(81) Thuan. lib. cxvii. pag. 77.

[P] He declared freely enough against those who maintain, that the Authority of Monarchs is unlimited.] He maintained, that Monarchs cannot impose Taxes, without the Consent of the People, and that they are more obliged to observe the Laws of God, and those of Nature, than their Subjects, and that the Covenants, which they make, impose the same Obligation on them as on their Subjects. He says, that most Civilians had taught the contrary, and that he was the first who durst oppose the Opinion of those, who wrote about the means of extending the Rights of the King. These are his Words: 'Miror tamen esse qui putent unius potestati tribuere me plus aliquantum, quam deceat sortem in Republica civem: cum alibi sæpe, tum verò libro primo, capite octavo, nostræ Reipublicæ, eos ego qui de jure fisci ac regalibus amplificandis scripsere, sententias primus omnium, & quidem periculosisimis temporibus refellere non dubitarim, quod Regibus infinitam supraque divinas & naturæ leges tribuerent potestatem: quid autem magis popolare quam quod scribere ausus sum, ne regibus quidem licere, sine summa civium consensione, imperare tributa? aut illud quanti est quod item tradidi principes arctiori vinculo divinis ac naturæ legibus teneri, quam qui sub imperium subiecti sunt? illos etiam pactis conventis perinde ut alios cives obligari? contra quam tamen omnes pene juris scientiæ magistris docuere (82). — But I wonder there are any who think, that I attribute more to the Power of a single Person, than a brave Citizen, (82) Bodin. Epist. ad Vidom Fabrum in limine operis Gallicæ de Republica.

(s) Bodin, de la
Republ. lib. ii.
cap. v. pag. 302.

(t) Tobias Ma-
girus Eponymol.
pag. 137, & seq.

(u) Sir Thomas
Pope Blount
Cens. Author.
pag. 524, & seq.

named (s) This Opinion does not seem to agree with the Doctrine, which he had also maintained, that the Power of those Monarchs is limited, and that they are obliged to govern according to the Laws; but after all it appears, that in both those Doctrines he aimed at the Public Good, the Peace and Tranquillity of the State [2]. The Germans complain much of him, and use him ill. See many Passages upon this in the Collections of Magirus (t), and in those of Sir Thomas-Pope Blount (u). Consult also the Speech of Thomas Lansius against France (x). Nevertheless some of the Germans own he had a sublime Wit and Judgment, and very great Erudition.

(x) Pag. 327,
302.

'Citizen in a State ought to do; when in several Places, and particularly in the eighth Chapter of the first Book of my Republic, I before any one else, and That in the most dangerous times, ventured to refute the Opinion of those who had writ on the Right of Taxation, and for enlarging the Prerogative; because they had attributed to Kings an infinite Power, above the Laws of God and Nature; and what is more popular than that I dared to write, that it was not lawful, even for Kings, to impose Taxes, without consent of the People? Or this, that I also laid down, that Princes are more strictly bound to observe the Laws of God and Nature, than Subjects, and that they are bound by Covenants as well as other Citizens? Though most Doctors of Civil-Law have taught the contrary.' If he had said no more, he would not have offended the Republicans; but because he maintained on the other side, That Subjects ought not to depose a lawful Monarch, who governs tyrannically, many Persons were offended at his Doctrine. He tells us the Reason, which moved him to maintain that Opinion, which is, that he saw, almost every where, People in War against their Princes; and because a vast number of Writings were dispersed in all Parts, which, by maintaining, that Kings may be deposed, and the Succession of Crowns regulated as it pleases the People, served only to shake all the Foundations of Society. He thought therefore, that his Duty obliged him to oppose those Maxims, which he judged so pernicious. 'Sed cum viderem ubique subditos in principes armari, libros etiam, veluti facies ad rerum publicarum incendia, palam proferri, quibus docemur principes divinitus hominum generi tributos, tyrannidis obiecta specie, de imperio deturbare, reges item non à stirpe, sed à populi arbitrio peti oportere: easque disciplinas, non solum hujus imperii, verum etiam rerum omnium publicarum fundamenta labefactare: ego boni viri, aut boni civis esse negavi suum principem quantumvis tyrannum ulla ratione violare: hanc denique ultionem immortalis Deo aliisque principibus relinqui oportere: idque cum divinis & humanis legibus ac testimoniis, tum etiam rationibus ad assentiendum necessariis, confirmavi (83). - - - But observing Subjects every where armed against their Princes, and that Books, like Firebrands to consume States, were publicly set forth, whereby we are taught, that Princes, who are given to Mankind by God, may be de-throned on pretence of Tyranny, and that Kings are not to be taken by Descent, but by the Pleasure of the People, and that these Doctrines shake the Foundations, not only of this Kingdom, but also of all other States. I denied it to be the part of a good Man, or a good Citizen, to offer any violence to his Prince, how tyrannical so ever. Lastly, that this revenge ought to be left to God and other Princes: and I confirmed it by Laws and Testimonies, both Humane and Divine, and also by undeniable Reasons.' Note, That intending to say, that the Protestants had a hand in those sort of Writings, he does it in a very moderate manner, clearing Luther and Calvin: these are his Words: 'It would be time lost to answer the frivolous Objections and Arguments of those, who hold the contrary Opinion: But, as he who doubts whether there is a God, deserves to feel the Punishment of the Laws, without using any Arguments; so do all those, who have called so clear a thing in question, and even published in printed Books, that Subjects may justly take up Arms against a Prince that is a Tyrant, and put him to Death in any manner whatsoever, although their most Eminent and Learned Divines hold, that it is never lawful to kill, nor so much as to rebel against one's Sovereign Prince, unless there is a special and un-

(83) Id. ibid.

† Mart. Luth.
Calvinus in Joanem, & in Infir. cap. ult.
lib. iv. §. xxxi.

'deniable Command of God for it; as we read of Jehu †, who was elected by God, and anointed King by the Prophet, with an express Command to destroy the Race of Ahab (84). He shews, in another place, some Moderation towards those of Geneva, tho' he thought he had occasion of complaint against them, for the Edition of his Book published in their City. He does not come to Particulars, nor say like Possévin, That those of Geneva altered many things in that Work (85), but keeps within general Terms. If you understand Latin, you will be convinced of it: 'Alterum reprehensionis genus est eorum qui apud Genevates secundam editionem Reipublicæ nostræ promulgarunt: quam vel typis mandare, suisque civibus ad in-tuendum proponere minimè debuerant, vel auctoritatem à calumnia vindicare: si meminissent legis illius quæ à S. P. Q. Genevate lata est Nonis Jun. MDLIX. qua sanctissime vetitum est, secundo capite, in eos scriptores invehi quos interpretèrè. Quid autem à me scriptum est quod vel à privati cujusquam dignitate, vel ab illius Reipublicæ majestate sit alienum? at etiam laudavi quæ ab illis sunt laudabiliter instituta. Quæ verò reprehensione digna putarunt, abundè, ut nobis quidem videtur, & suo quisque loco & ordine refutavimus, cum ea qua decuit animi temperantia, quam in illius civitatis scriptoribus plerique populi desiderare solent (86). - - - Another kind of reproof I have had, from the Publishers of the second Edition of my Republic at Geneva: which they either ought not to have put to the Press, and exposed to the perusal of their Citizens, or else to have vindicated the Author from slander: if they had remembered a Law, made by the States of Geneva on the fifth of June 1559, whereby, in the second Chapter, it is strictly forbidden to reflect on those Writers you interpret. But what have I writ, to the prejudice of either the Dignity of any private Man, or the Majesty of that Commonwealth? Nay, I have commended their Institutions that are laudable. But what they thought worthy of blame, I have, as I think, abundantly refuted, every thing in it's proper place and order, with that due temperature of mind, which most People find so much wanting in the Writers of that City.' Take notice, that he makes a great distinction between the Subjects of a Tyrant, and Foreign Princes; for he does not approve that Subjects should take up Arms to deliver themselves from Tyranny; but he approves that their Neighbours should come and deliver them from it. There is a great difference between saying, that a Tyrant may be lawfully killed by a foreign Prince, and that he may by a Subject. And as it is very glorious, and proper for any one, to defend by force the Estates, Honours, and Lives, of those who are unjustly oppressed, when there is no way to Justice open, as Moses did, seeing one of his Brethren abused and beaten, and that there was no way to get him Right: So it is a most noble and magnificent thing for a Prince to take up Arms, in order to revenge a whole Nation unjustly oppressed by the Cruelty of a Tyrant; as the great Hercules did, who went all over the World to exterminate those monstrous Tyrants, and was deified for his great Exploits: So did also Dion, Timoleon, Aratus, and other generous Princes, who were stiled the Chastizers and Correctors of Tyrants (87). Richeome makes many Reflections on this Passage of Bodin, in the thirteenth Chapter of his Examen Categoriue de l'Anti-Coton (88).

[2] It appears that, in both these Doctrines, he aimed at the Public Good, the Peace and Tranquillity of the State. He maintained the first, when he saw Henry the Third's Flatterers or Creatures propose such things as might create great Abuses, to the oppression † Kings iv. cap. vi, & x.

(84) Bodin de la Republique, lib. ii. cap. v. pag. 305.

(85) Genevates Bodinum reprehendentes in libris ejusdem de Republica plerique immutaverunt. Possévin. Biblioth. Tom. II. p. 263.

(86) Bodin, Epist. ad Viduum Fabrum.

(87) Id. de Republica, lib. ii. cap. v. p. 300.

(88) Pag. 113, & seq.

Erudition. See the same Collections. He was likewise censured by the Italians, as appears from the Political Discourse of Fabio Albergati, whose Method did not please Bonifacio Vanozzi. See the first Volume of his Letters (y). A very ingenious Answer was made to Bodin in England [R], to shew him that he had wanted Prudence in his Discourse. He had so good a Constitution of Stomach, that in all his Voyages he never was Sea-sick [S]. His Opinion about Comets was somewhat strange. See the Remark [O].

of the People; and he maintained the second, when he saw France full of Factions, and torn by Civil Wars, which gave birth to a great number of Manifestos, and other Books, in which the most essential and fundamental Laws of Government were undermined. The Power of the People was asserted, in common Discourse, and in print, as freely as if it had been in a Democratical State, and Endeavours were used to exercise that Power; for a Translation of the Crown was designed. Nay, Assassins were approved, who, under pretence of Tyranny, attempted upon the Lives of Monarchs. This could not but produce the most dreadful Desolations. Wherefore Bodin shewed himself very well affected to the Public Good, by opposing such a Licentiousness. Qui regias opes & honores popularibus commodis posthabui, idem scriptis ac sermonibus execratus sum eos qui tyrannidis specie suo principi manus afferre, deque regibus populi suffragio creandis rogationes promulgare, & e manibus legitimorum principum sceptris violententer extorquere conantur.

(89) Bodin. Epist. ad Vidum Fabrum.

(89). — I who postponed the King's Wealth and Honours to the Public Good, did likewise, both in writing and Discourses, detest those who endeavour, on pretence of Tyranny, to lay hands on their Kings, and promote Bills for creating Kings by the Suffrage of the People, and to wrest Scepters out of the hands of lawful Princes. He had the misfortune to contradict himself after the Death of Henry III; for he sided with the League; but the Fall of a Sinner does not spoil the good Actions that he has done.

[R] A very ingenious Answer was made to Bodin in England. Bodin being in England, along with Mr de Mompensier, made himself odious to the English, and foolish to the French, by his Curiosity. Being at Dinner at an English Lord's House, he fell on the Pretensions of Princes to the Crown of England, and said, that a certain Prince was presumptive Heir to it, if he was not excluded, as being born out of the Country, by a Law whereof he never knew the Author, or the Original, nor could ever learn where it was to be found. You may find it, answers the English Lord, on the back of the Salique Law. A Repartee, which silenced this Prater, and gave him to understand, that it is not proper for Strangers to scan the Secrets of a State. This is what we read in the Eighty second Page of Mr Colomieu's Gallia Orientalis; he cites these Words as taken out of the Two Hundred and thirty seventh Page of the second Volume of the History of Henry IV, written by Peter

* Whosoever is born out of England, can lay no Claim to the Crown of England. See Thuanus's History.

Matthieu. I have consulted my Edition (90), and found there, not Bodin being in England along with Mr du Mompensier, but a learned Man, who had followed the late Monsieur in his Voyage to England (91). I am certain, that That learned Man is our Bodin; but it would be wrong to say, that he went into England with Mr de Mompensier; he went thither with the Duke of Alençon, who in Peter Matthieu's time might have been styled seu Monsieur (the late Monsieur). Mr Menage does not agree with that Historian, as to the Circumstances. The motive, says he (92), of the Duke of Alençon's Voyage into England, was his Marriage with Queen Elizabeth. Bodin discoursing one Day with an Englishman on that Subject, the Englishman told him, that the Marriage would never be; Strangers being excluded by a Law from the Royalty of England. Bodin, who was well versed in all the English Laws, as also in those of all other Kingdoms, asked the Englishman bluntly, where that Law was to be found? The Englishman answered as bluntly, That it was to be found on the back of the Salique Law: Which has since passed among us for a Proverb. I have this particular from Mr du Puy. Note, that there are two Citations in Peter Matthieu, and Mr Colomieu; takes notice but of one (93).

Bodin informs us, That he was sent into England in the Year 1581, by his Master the Duke of Anjou (94), during the sitting of the Parliament, where it was forbidden to speak of the Queen's Successor, on pain of High-Treason; that he harangued the Queen, and proposed to her the Adoption of the King of Scotland, and afterwards a Marriage. Deinde Lenoxiae principis connubio & artificissima fœderis conjunctione. Hæc mea fuit ad reginam oratio (95).

[S] In all his Voyages, he was never Sea-sick. He relates this himself in his Theatrum Naturæ. How comes it, says he, that the Sea excites a Vomiting and a Loosiness? He answers, That this is not general, and that he was seven times on the Sea, and even in a violent Storm, without finding any such thing. Id quidem insuetis navigare, nec tamen omnibus contingit: septies mari Oceano vectus, nihil tamen ejusmodi passus sum, etiam si sævisima procella jactatus, ac ruptis velis extrema pericula subierim: vidi tamen qui sanguinem vomerent (96). I need not mention the Physical Reason he gives; but the personal Fact of which he informs us, seemed to me worthy to be mentioned: it is part of his History.

(9) Pag. 103, & seq.

(90) That of Geneva 1620, in 8vo.

(91) Matthieu, Hist. of Henry IV. in the ad Narration of the 6th Book, pag. 527.

(92) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Arnauld, pag. 143.

(93) The other is, Voy l'Ambassadeur de M. Hotman.

(94) The same with the Duke of Alençon.

(95) Bodin. de Rep. lib. vi. p. 1132.

(96) Bodin, in Theatro Naturæ, lib. ii. pag. 196, 197.

BOI, commonly called IL SIRACUSANO, the Syracusano, was a very famous Player at Chess, and very much considered in the Court of Spain under King Philip II. He received many fine Presents from That Prince. He received also many from Pope Urban VIII, and it was his own Fault that he did not receive a good Bishopric of him; for it was offered him (a), but he would not be a Clergyman. Having had the Misfortune to be taken by Corsairs, and to see himself reduced to Slavery, he found means to make those Turkish and savage Men tractable by his Skill at Chess. They admired him for it, treated him civilly, and exacted no other Ransom from him but the Lessons he gave them for some Months on That Game (b). We shall speak of another excellent Gamester at Chess in the Article GIOACHINO GRECO. It were to be wished that those two great Masters had given us some regular Treatise concerning That Game; but we have only some Fragments of the one, and some manners of playing by the other, which are not sufficient to make a formal Study of it. — Nevertheless a Collection has been made of what was found most proper to be put in use, and it has served to make a Book on That Subject (c) [A].

(a) What an abuse! and what a fine way to attain to Episcopacy!

(b) Taken from a Letter inserted in the Mercurio Galant, August 188, and December 1693.

(c) Mercurio Galant, December 1693, pag. 109.

[A] His Lessons and those of Gioachino Greco on Chess have been collected, to make a Book on that Subject. The Author whom I quote, speaks of it, as of a Work ready to come out. By joining, says he (1), to what has been taken from those two famous Gamesters, the Knowledge which has been had from others, and the Observations which have been made, either by playing, or seeing others play at it; out of this whole matter a regular Body has been composed, which contains the Practical Science of Chess. I inform you, that it is going to be published as a singular

(1) Letter inserted in the Mercurio Galant, August 1688, and December 1693.

* singular Work in it's kind, and the Copy has * to play at it with his Royal Highness the Duke
 * been a long time in the Hands of one of the * of Chartres.
 * best Chess-Players in France, who has the Honour

BOISSARD (JOHN JAMES), born at Bezançon in the Year 1528, composed several great Collections, which are of Use for understanding the Roman Antiquities. He himself took Draughts of all the ancient Monuments he could find in Italy; he had an incredible Passion for That Study, as appears plainly by what happened to him in Cardinal Carpi's Garden [A]. He designed to go into Syria, but a violent Fever which seized him at Metz before That Invasion; but as it was known, satisfied his Curiosity for Antiquities in the Islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, and in the Morea, and after his Recovery he continued to visit the Places in the Neighbourhood of Metz. After he returned into his own Country, he was Governor to the Sons of Antony de Vienne, Baron of Clermont, and travelled with them into France, Germany, and Italy. He had left the Antiquities, which he had collected with so much trouble, with his Sister at Mombelard, and had the Misfortune to lose most of them, when the Lorrains ravaged the Franche Comté. He preferred only those which he had sent to Metz before That Invasion; but as it was known, that he intended to give the Public a great Collection on that fine part of Literature, many Draughts, and Sketches of old Monuments were sent him from all Parts. He had settled himself at Metz, where he died the thirtieth of October 1602 (a). His Works are much valued by Antiquaries [B], and are grown very scarce. He made Latin Verses [C]. It appears from a Passage, which I shall quote elsewhere (b), that he was in the Service of Cardinal Caraffa.

(a) Taken from Martinus Hankius, de scriptoribus rerum Romanarum, Tom. I. cap. 76. He says, that he took it in part from two Letters of Boissard, prefixed to his Antiquities.

(b) In one of the Remarks of the Article PAUL IV.

[A] He had an incredible Passion for that Study, as appears plainly by what happened to him in Cardinal Carpi's Garden. That Garden was full of ancient Marbles, and situated on Mount Quirinal. Boissard came into it one Day with his Friends, and strayed from them on purpose, and hiding himself in some of the Walks let them go home. He spent the remainder of the Day in copying Inscriptions, and sketching old Monuments, and the Gates of the Garden being shut, he remained there all the Night. The Cardinal finding him the next Morning busy at that Work, could not imagine how a Stranger came into his Garden at such an unreasonable time; but when he knew on what account Boissard had been there all Night, he ordered him a good Break-fast, and permitted him to copy and draw all the rare Pieces in his Palace (1).

[B] His Works are much valued by Antiquaries. His Roman Antiquities, divided into six Parts, make four Volumes in Folio. They contain a great many Prints, those of the two first Volumes engraved by Theodorus de Bry (2), and those of the other Volumes, by the two Sons of that Theodorus (3). Moreover, Boissard published the Lives of One hundred ninety eight Illustrious Persons, with Cuts of them in Copper. That Work is divided into four Parts in Quarto, which were printed at Francfort; the first, in the Year 1597, the second, and the third, in the Year 1598, and the fourth in the Year 1599 (4). His Treatise de Divinatione & Magia præfigitis, was printed after his Death. I omit his Emblems, &c.

[C] He made Latin Verses. I have not the Edition of Metz 1589, in 8vo, which is in the Catalogue of the Library of Oxford, I have only that of Basil 1574, in 12mo. It contains three Books of Epigrams, three Books of Elegies, and three Books of Letters. If those Verses do not deserve all the Praises which Borricius bestows upon them, neither do they deserve the Contempt which some have expressed of the Verses which James Boissard put under the Cuts of his Illustrious Men (5). Gruterus inserted this Author's Poems in the Deliciae Poetarum Gallorum.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) Id. ibid. Tom. II. p. 392.

(5) See Baillet, Jugens. sur les Poëtes, n. 1353.

BOLEYN or BULLEN (ANNE), Wife of Henry VIII, King of England, was of a better Family on her Mother's Side, than on her Father's, being Daughter of Thomas Boleyn, who was only a Knight, and of a Daughter of the Duke of Norfolk (a). She was born in the Year 1507, and was carried into France at seven Years of Age by Henry VIII's Sister, Wife of Lewis XII. She did not return into England when that Queen retired thither after the Death of her Husband, but staid in the Service of Queen Claudia, the Wife of Francis I, and after the Death of That Princess, she went to the Duchesse of Alençon (b). The Year of her Return into England is not well known; some will have it to be in the Year 1527 (c), others in the Year 1525 (d). Thus much is certain, that she was Maid of Honour to Queen Catherine, and that the King fell in love with her. She behaved herself with so much Art, that, by refusing to satisfy the King's Passion, she made him think of marrying her. That Prince, deceived by her Artifices, thought he should never enjoy her unless she was his Wife; which engaged him to push forward the Affair of the Divorce, and to execute it at last with all the Pomp every body knows. That, which would be very praise-worthy on another Occasion, is Anne Bullen's chief Crime: her refusing to comply with an Amorous King, unless he would divorce his Wife, is a much more enormous Crime than to have been his Concubine. A Concubine would not have dethroned a Queen, nor taken her Crown nor her Husband from her; whereas the crafty Anne Bullen, by pretending to be chaste and scrupulous, aimed only at the Usurpation of the Throne, and the Exclusion of Catherine of Arragon, and her Daughter, from all the Honours due to them. However Henry VIII married her privately the fourteenth of November 1532 (e), without waiting for a Sentence against his Marriage with Catherine of Arragon; and as soon as he perceived that his new Wife was with Child, he made his Marriage public, and caused Anne Bullen to be declared Queen of England on Easter-Eve 1533 (f), and to be crowned the first of June following (g). She was brought to bed the seventh of September (h), and continued to be much beloved by the King,

(a) Mr. Leti's History of Elizabeth, Tom. I. pag. 47. it therefore mistaken, when he says that she was the Daughter of the Lord Clinton.

(b) Burnet, History of the Reformation, Tom. I. Book II. pag. 44. of the 2d Edit. Lond. 1631.

(c) Id. p. 110.

(d) Le Grand, Hist. du Divorce de Henri VIII. Tom. II. p. 31.

(e) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 126.

(f) Ibid. p. 130.

(g) Ibid. p. 131.

(h) Of a Daughter, who afterwards was Elizabeth p. 134.

till the Charms of Jane Seymour had fired That Prince's Heart in the Year 1536 (i). Then his Love for his Wife was changed into violent Hatred; he believed her to be unchast; and caused her to be imprisoned, and tried [A]. She was condemned to be either burnt or beheaded (k); her Marriage was declared void [B], because she confessed that she married the King when she was engaged by a Contract with Earl Peirce (l). She was beheaded the nineteenth Day of May

1536

[A] Henry VIII caused her to be tried. Sanders says, that Anne's own Father was one of those that condemned her. Doctor Burnet had related the same thing on the credit of Dr Hoylin; but he retracted it in the Additions (1). He found the Record of the Tryal, but among the Judges found not the Earl of Wiltshire. So Anne Bullen's Father was stiled at that time. It is remarkable, that This Queen was indicted of High-Treason, for that she had procured her Brother and other four to lie with her, which they had done often; that he had said to them, that the King never had her Heart, and had said to every one of them by themselves, that she loved him better than any Person whatsoever, which was to the Slander of the Issue that was begotten between the King and her. And this was Treason according to the Statute made in the Twenty sixth Year of this Reign, so that the Law that was made for her and the Issue of her Marriage is now made use of to destroy her (2). The Bishop of Amelia goes farther than Sanders; for he says, that Thomas Bullen prefided at the Tryal of his Daughter. Poenæ ministri filiae fortuna patrem dedit, qui forte capitalium rerum Judex adversus eam capitis sententiam tulit (3). What he says, that all those who were accused of having lain with her, confessed it on the Rack, is contradicted by Dr Burnet, who observes, that but one confessed it. He was a Musician whose Name was Smeton: He owned that he had lain three times with the Queen (4). It is observable, that, in the long Reign of Queen Elizabeth, no Endeavours were used to justify her Mother. The Catholics have taken advantage of it, but they are answered, That they should rather praise and admire Elizabeth's Prudence, and that of her Ministers (5). She would have weakened her Right by endeavouring to defend it, and certain things relating to Anne Bullen must have been owned, which would have been prejudicial.

(1) See the Additions and Corrections of the 1st Part of the History of the Reformation, n. 1. of Part. I. p. 303.

(2) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. pag. 202.

(3) Gratianus de causis viror. il. Indrium, p. 209.

(4) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. pag. 202.

(5) Ibid. p. 207.

(6) He had been a Franciscan, and not a Capuchin. He left his Order very young.

(7) Thevet, Cosmographie universelle, lib. xvi. cap. v. fol. 657. verso.

(8) Ibid. fol. 209.

Esteem, as much as any of her Predecessors. He excuses her also for having introduced Calvinism into her Kingdom.

[B] Her Marriage was declared void. The Author of the History of the Reformation of England informs us I. That the Lord Peirce had told Cardinal Wolsey, that he had given his Word to Anne Bullen before Witnesses, and that his Conscience would not suffer him to call it in (9). II. That when that Lord was pressed during the Queen's Tryal, to declare that there had been a Contract at that time between him and Anne Bullen, he took an Oath in the presence of two Archbishops, That there never was any Contract, or Promise of Marriage, between him and that Lady, and to make that Oath more solemn, he received the Communion in the presence of divers Counsellors of State; and wished, that the receiving of that Sacrament might be his Damnation, if he had been in any Engagement of that nature. III. That the Queen owned nothing during her Tryal concerning her pretended Engagement with that Lord; but when she was condemned, she confessed, that there had been a Contract between her and Peirce; and being brought before the Ecclesiastical Court the seventeenth of May, she declared, that there had been a Just impediment to her Marriage with the King, and that therefore the Marriage could not be valid (10). IV. That upon her Confession the Sentence of Divorce was pronounced (11). V. That the Original of that Sentence was burnt; but what has now been said of it is repeated in a Law made by the Parliament a little after to regulate the Succession. VI. That the two Sentences which were pronounced against the Queen, (for Adultery, and a Precontract) are so opposite to each other, that at least one of them must have been unjust. For if that Prince's Marriage with the King was null from the beginning, she was no ways guilty of Adultery; since that invalidity hindered her from being Henry's lawful Wife. If the Marriage was lawful, it was unjust to make it void; and if it was not lawful, the Queen's Condemnation is plainly contrary to Equity; and it cannot be maintained, that That Prince's failed in her Duty to the King, since she was not then obliged to keep her Faith to him. Many Remarks might be made on this; but I shall be contented with these three: I. The Lord that denied, with an Oath, and with the Sacrament in his Hand, that there had been any Engagement between him and Anne, was a great Impostor either at that time, or when he declared, that he had given his Faith to that Maid (12). If his Oath be preferred before the other Declaration, it must be said, that the Queen when just ready to die deposed falsely, that she had been engaged with that Lord; if she was capable of lying in that juncture, it cannot be said for her Justification, that she always protested her Innocency, even on the Scaffold; for a Woman, who, being ready to appear before God, does not scruple to tell a falsity, which makes her Children illegitimate, may full as well deny a Truth that loads her with Dishonour. And we have here a choice Fact, among divers others of the same kind, which shews, that Historical Pyrrhonism may be proof against the Oaths and Protestations of dying Persons. II. The Art of Historians is remarkable: they make use of a Fact, when they can draw any advantage from it, and they deny it when they find themselves incommoded by it. When it is to be proved, that Anne Bullen did not press Henry VIII to Divorce the Queen, it is of use to shew that she intended in good earnest to be married to the Lord Peirce. It is then requisite to own her Engagement. But if on the other side some Body should tell us, that by that Engagement her Marriage with Henry VIII became void, and that therefore Queen Elizabeth was illegitimate,

(9) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 196.

(10) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 202.

(11) Ibid. p. 203.

(9) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. p. 203.

(10) Ibid. pag. 203.

(11) Ibid.

Whether the Oaths of dying Persons ought to be taken for Proofs.

(12) See Dr. Burnet, Part. I. Book iii. pag. 203.

The same Fact denied and owned at different times according to the different Occasions of the Historian.

(m) Ibid. p. 205. 1536 (m), and preserved her good Humour on That Occasion [C]. Some Catholic Historians have given themselves a prodigious Liberty of lying against her; as well through Vexation at the Schism which she occasioned, as because they were willing to dishonour Queen Elizabeth by that means. They are some of those inconsiderate Satirists, of whom I have already had occasion to speak, who instead of insisting only upon true matters of Fact, have engaged themselves in Slanders which may be easily confuted. [D]. Their blindness is the more inexcusable, because even tho' Catherine's Divorce had been just; then it must be said, that this Engagement is a meer Story, and Peirey's Oaths and Communion must be insisted on. III. No Arbitrary Power did ever go beyond that, which the Parliaments of England exercised in the XVI Century. All that the Nation could do in the most authentic manner to annul the Marriage of Henry VIII, with Catherine of Arragon, was done; their Daughter Mary was therefore illegitimate, and yet she was acknowledged for Queen, as a legitimate Child of Henry VIII. All that was necessary to annul the Marriage of the same Prince with Anne, was likewise done; Elizabeth, their Daughter, was therefore illegitimate; and yet she was acknowledged for Queen, as a legitimate Child of Henry. The Original of the Sentence of the Divorce was burnt, because they were not willing that a piece so disadvantageous to Queen Elizabeth should be preserved. Observe well, that, in Hereditary Kingdoms, it is a Fundamental Law, That Bastards should be postponed to all the legitimate Relations of the Royal Family.

THE PARLIAMENT of England exercising arbitrary Power.

[C] She was beheaded — and preserved her good Humour, at that juncture.] In the time of her Imprisonment, she acted very different parts; sometimes she seemed devout, and shed abundance of Tears, and then, all on a sudden, would break out into a loud Laughter (13). ----- As soon as the Judges, who came to examine her, were gone, she fell on her Knees, and melting in Tears, cried many times, LORD JESUS have mercy upon me, and at the same time broke out into a Laugh (14). Some Hours before her Death she said, that the Executioner was very handy, and, besides, she had a very small Neck (15). At the same time she felt it with her Hands, and laughed heartily. Tho' Gratian is not favourable to her, yet he owns that she died with great Resolution, and that she took care to spread her Gown about her Feet, that she might not fall indecently: Postremo genibus positus ultimos quoque pedes quo bonissimus procumbere veste contexit (16). The Poets say the fame of Polyxena: The Historians observe it of Julius Cæsar: See the Remark [H] of the Article OLYMPIAS. I question much, what the same Author reports, that when she was brought to the Place of Execution (17), she fell into a great Passion at the People who shewed her no respect, and told them, that in spite of their Teeth, she was, and died, their Queen.

Cum ē carceribus in aream, quæ perampla est ante Arcem, produceretur, quò omnis multitudo concurrerat ad spectandam necem ejus, quam nuper demisse adorare consueverant, nec transeuntem ullo honore dignarentur; illa, ne tum quidem obliata superbia, contumeliosissime eos compellens convicio increpuit, esse morituramque se Reginam eorum ferens, disrumprentur omnes licet (18). — When she was brought out of the Prison into the Court, before the Tower, which is very large, where a Crowd was gathered to be Spectators of her Death, they couchsafed not, as she went along, to pay the least respect to the Person, whom they had not long since used humbly to adore: she not forgetting her Pride even then, addressing herself to them, most contumeliously upbraided them, telling them, that in spite of their Teeth she was, and should die, their Queen.

[D] The Catholics have loaded her with Slanders, which may be very easily confuted.] For Example; is there any thing more easy to be confuted, than the Story which so many Persons have copied from Sanders? viz. That Anne was Henry the VIIIth's Daughter; that her Mother brought her into the World two Years after the departure of Thomas Bullen, on his Embassy to France, to which the King nominated him, only that he might enjoy his Wife more freely, in the absence of her Husband; that Thomas Bullen at his return into England, hearing of his Wife's ill Conduct, summoned her before the Official of Canterbury for Adultery, and sued for a Separation (19); that the King ordered him to stop all his Proceedings, and to take his Wife into favour again; that he obeyed, but not till she had owned to him, that the King was the Father of the last Daughter of which she was brought to Bed (20); that at fifteen Years of Age Anne Bullen was debauched by her Father's Steward, and by his Chaplain; that she was sent afterwards into France to a Lord, who educated her as a Maid of great Quality; that she behaved herself at the Court of France with so little Modesty, that she was called the English Hackney, and that, because Francis I had a share in her Favour, she was called the King's Male; that, during the Love of Henry VIII for that Lady, Thomas Wiat, one of the chief Lords of the Court, came before the Council to depose, that he had lain with her, 'at a time when he did not believe, that the King thought of honouring her so far as to marry her;' That Henry not believing that Deposition, 'Wiat offered to make the King an Eye-witness of the Favours 'he should receive from that lewd Woman;' That Wiat was called an impudent Fellow, and forbid the Court.

Doctor Burnet makes use of three Arguments, against this. I. Sanders reports those things only on the credit of a Piece, which no Body ever saw; that is, The Life of Sir Thomas More by Reginald. II. They begun too late to object them. III. There are some impossibilities in that Account. See here the second of these three Reasons at length. 'If those things were such as Sanders reports them, how comes it that at the Death of Anne Bullen, 'no body was either complainant enough to the King, or Enemy enough to that unhappy Princess, to publish her Infamy, which on other Accounts could not be unknown? For such a Woman as Anne Bullen's Mother's being with Child two Years after her Husband's departure, who was sent on a considerable Embassy; her Husband's suing for a Divorce in the Archbishop of Canterbury's Court, and causing his Wife to be summoned there, are such Circumstances as the World does not forget so soon. On the other side, Anne Bullen's being in so ill Repute; her suffering herself first to be debauched in her Father's House; her ill life in France afterwards; and her being kept by two Kings, are other Circumstances which cannot be very secret. Besides, when the Records of the Archbishop's Court were yet extant, it was offered to the Public to make it appear, that there was nothing in those Records like the Prosecutions which Sanders speaks of. Lastly, All the Writers of those Times, as well those on the Pope's, as on the Emperor's side, keep a profound silence about those things; which they had never failed to publish, if they had been true, or if they had come to their Knowledge. But eighty Years (21) after somebody or other takes it in his head to forge a History full of Impostures; Or, at least, published it, because it was then more safe to tell Lies, all those who might have been able to discover the Truth being dead (22). As for the third Reason, I only relate it in short. Thomas Bullen could not be sent Ambassador by King Henry VIII, before the Year 1509. Anne must therefore have been born in the Year 1511, and debauched in her House in the Year 1526. Where shall we then find the time when she was with a great Lord in France, and afterwards at Court? Where shall we find that licentious Life which got her the name of The English Hackney? I say, Where shall we find that time, since she was returned into England in the Year 1526? Sanders can never be justified: His best Apologist, Mr le Grand, (19) Sanders's Schisme d'Angleterre, lib. 2. pag. 17. of Mauvoix's Translation, Edit. Amsterdam 1683.

(20) This Narrative of Sanders has been altered by some. Gratian says, that Thomas Boleyn was absent three Years. Others say that at his Return he found his Wife with Child, and that the King confessed to him, that it was his doing. See Burnet's History of the Reformation, and Varillæ's Hist. de l'Heret. lib. ix. p. 261.

(21) Limitations ought to take place in this sort of Causes when-ever the Accusation is of such a nature as to be easily known, and when the occasions of producing it have not been wanting, and yet it was never mentioned. See hereunder the Remark [K] of the Article BOL-SEC.

(22) Burnet's History of the Reformation, p. 42. See at the end of the 1st Vol. his Refutation of Sanders No 21, where you will find this second Reason more at large including the particulars of Wiat's Offers, &c.

(13) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 198.

(14) Ibid. Book II. pag. 199.

(15) Ibid. Out of a Letter of the Lieutenant of the Tower, pag. 204. 205.

(16) Gratian. de casibus viror. illust. p. 270.

(17) The open place which is before the Tower, according to him.

(18) Gratian. de casibus viror. illust. pag. 269.

because they might have satisfied their flandering Humour, without exceeding the Bounds of faithful Historians [E]. It is pity that the good Fortune they have had to find a great number of obliging Transcribers and Readers should inspire so many others with the Boldness to imitate them. Sanders is the only Authority of all the Authors who have defamed Anne Bullen, and particularly of Mr Moreri. Those who say, that the Protestants ought to blush for being so much obliged to That Queen, who was of their Religion, would do well to declare first of all, that they are very much vexed at the Services the Empress Irene did to the Cause of Images (n).

Consult Mr de Larrey in the first Volume of his History of England, where you will find the Reasons pro and con clearly set down, and our Anne as much justified as the Laws of History could permit.

Grands, forsakes him here. 'As I do not pretend to palliate his Faults, says he (23), I confess plainly, that he is too passionate against Anne Bullen; that no Author that I know, besides himself, has said, that she was Daughter of Henry VIII, or that she had led such a disorderly Life.' Sanders affirms, that she was beloved by the King in the Year 1526. Now, before she was beloved by that King, she had been debauched at her supposed Father's at fifteen Years of Age; she had lived in France; she was returned into England; and she was taken in as Maid of Honour to Queen Catherine. She was therefore at least near Twenty Years of Age in 1526, so that she was born in the Year 1506, three Years before King Henry VIII ascended the Throne, and five Years before any of That Prince's Embassadors could have been two Years in his Embassy. It has been found that Anne was born in the Year 1507, and therefore, according to Sanders, Henry VIII must have sent Thomas Bullen Embassador in the Year 1505, and he must have been at that time deeply engaged in an Adultery. Now the first of these two Facts is false; for Henry was not yet King; and the other is not to be believed of a Youth who was but fourteen Years of Age. Add to this, that Thomas Bullen was not sent on his Embassy till the Year 1515. And 'tis to be observed, that, Dr Burnet having urged all these Reasons in refuting Varillas (24), we have not seen in the Reply of the latter any Proof, or any solid Remark in Sanders's favour. I ought not to pass over in silence what concerns Wiat's Deposition. Dr Burnet has spoke more amply of it in a Work of a later date than his History of the Reformation. First of all he shewed how much such a Deposition is contrary to all likelihood, and then he maintained that Wiat was never out of Favour; but was employed in Foreign Embassies till he died (25). He quotes an Original Piece, wherein Wiat's Son attests, that his Father was Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to King Henry, all the while That Marriage with Anne Bullen lasted, and yet neither did he in discretion retire out of the Court, nor did the King seem jealous, or the Queen offended at him. That his Father was afterwards Embassador for several Years in Charles Vth's Court (26).

The Jesuit, who published three Volumes of the Revolutions of England, seems to me very reasonable in his account of Anne Bullen: I shall set down what he says of her, by which it will appear, that those who have refuted Sanders, have not laboured in vain. Sanders relates several things of Anne's Birth and Behaviour before Henry fell in Love with her, which are not easily to be believed, nor supported by any convincing proof. He says, that she was Henry's Daughter; that she had a Sister whom that Monarch debauched; that she had prostituted herself almost from her Childhood to the Steward and Chaplain of Thomas Bullen, who passed for her Father; that when she was at the Court of France, Francis I, and his Courtiers, dishonoured her in such a manner, that she was publicly called by infamous Names: But these are things which the Protestant Writers exclaim against, and have some reason to deny. But that of which she cannot be cleared is, that, by counterfeiting the virtuous Woman, she gave Henry some hopes that she would marry him, if he could bring about that monstrous Divorce which Wolsey proposed to him, and that thereby she contributed to the Injustice done by That Prince to his lawful Wife, and to all the Evils which followed upon it. The Tragical End that her Incontinency brought her to, which was proved by a legal Tryal, made it appear that the Catholick Writers might say, without judging rashly of her, that she was Chaste only when she was Ambitious (27).

V O L. II.

[E] They might have said enough ill of her, without exceeding the bounds of faithful Historians.] The Bishop of Meaux urges no other Facts to defame this Queen, than what are owned by the Protestants: By these he proves her guilty of an immodest Gayety, of indiscreet Liberties, of an irregular and licentious Behaviour. A Modest Woman, says he (28), not to say a Queen, was never seen to suffer herself to be so little respected, as to have such Declarations made to her as were made to this Princess, by Persons of all Conditions, even of the meanest. Nay, she was pleased with, and gave occasion for them; and was not ashamed to tell one of her Gallants, that she perceived he deferred marrying, in hopes to have her after the King's Death. All these things are acknowledged by Anne, and she was so far from looking on those bold Lovers with an evil Eye, that it is certain, without diving farther into the matter, she treated them the better for it. ----- At the time she was taken, while she was at prayer to God, melting in Tears, she was seen to break out into Laughter like one distracted: The Words which she spoke in her Transport against her Lovers, who had betrayed her, shewed the disorder she was in, and the trouble of her Conscience (29). ----- By a shameful compliance Anne acknowledged a thing which was not true, viz. that she had married Henry in the Life-time of the Lord Peirce, to whom she was contracted before, and by declaring against her Conscience, that her Marriage with the King was void, she involved her Daughter Elizabeth in her own shame (30). I do not see, that any one can reasonably complain, that the Bishop of Meaux, in the alternative of two Crimes of Anne Bullen, has pitched upon the greatest, out of Animosity; for it is a great deal more likely that Anne was not contracted to that Lord, than that she was; and, consequently, she deserves much more to be accused of a false Oath, whereby, when just ready to appear before God, she unjustly declared her own Daughter a Bastard, than to be accused of Retraction as to a Promise of Marriage.

A Protestant Historian (31) has lately published the first Letter which Anne writ to the King. Nothing can be more contrary to Modesty; she declares her Passion there without any discretion, and offers herself to the King without any exception; for she adds that Clause to the Words, most obedient Servant, with which she subscribes the Letter. That Historian should have added this Reason to those, that hindered him from believing what the Earl of Aylebury had read in some Manuscripts; viz. That the King having courted That Maid twelve Years, did not know her till after his Marriage (32). But I must observe by the by, that those Manuscripts seem to be very uncertain; there is no likelihood that Henry VIII began to love this Lady in the Year 1519. It is best to believe nothing of it, nor of a Passage in the Forty seventh Page of That Author, viz. that Anne went into France at fifteen Years of Age, when the Princess of England was married to Lewis XII. According to this, she must have been born in the Year 1499, and not, as Camden says, in the Year 1507. It is very strange, that we should so little know at what time she was born, at what time she went out of England, and returned thither, considering that she was a Person who rose to the Royal Dignity in so extraordinary a manner.

P

[A] He

(n) See Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. pag. 206.

(23) Le Grand, Hist. du Divorce de Henri VIII. Tom. II. p. 47.

(27) Father d'Orleans Hist. des Revolutions d'Angleterre, Tom. II. p. 427.

(28) Histoire des Variations, lib. vii. n. 20. p. 302.

(24) See Dr Burnet's Refutation of Sanders, n. 21.

(25) Critical Remarks on the 9th Book of Mr Varillas's History, pag. 87.

(26) A Defence of the Critical Remarks on Varillas, pag. 107, 108.

(29) Ibid. p. 303

(30) Ibid. p. 304

(31) Leti, Hist. de la Reine Elizabeth, Tom. I. pag. 60 Amsterdam Edit. 1694

(32) Ibid. p. 52

BOLES LAUS, the first of that Name, was the first King of Poland. His Father the Duke Miecslaus, having embraced Christianity, desired the Title and Dignity of King from the Pope; but did not obtain it. His Son found much more facility with the Emperor Otho III, after having received him splendidly at Gnesna, where that Emperor had been in Pilgrimage to venerate the Body of St Adelbert [A], who had been martyred in Prussia four Years before (a). It was in the Year 1000, that Otho performed that Pilgrimage. The Honours he received from Boleslaus obliged him to shew him his Gratitude by conferring the Title of King upon him [B]. He dressed him in his own Garments, and gave him the Insignia of the Empire, and particularly the Sword and the Golden Ball with the Cross. Boleslaus had very good Qualities, he was Liberal to the Church, and very Valiant. He repulsed the Bobemians into the Heart of their own Country; he chastised the Moravians, and made them Tributaries; he punished the Idolatrous Prussians, who had martyred St Adelbert, whose Body he redeemed; he re-established Stopolcus, Duke of Russia, who had been deposed by his own Brother Jaroslais, &c. He married Judith, the Daughter of Geisa, Duke of Hungary, by whom he had Children (b).

(a) See Calvisius.

(b) Taken from the Voyage de la Reine de Pologne, by le Laboureur, pag. 139, 140.

[A] He received the Emperor Otho splendidly at Gnesna, where he was come in Pilgrimage, to venerate the Body of St Adelbert. The Emperor Otho III was pretty much addicted to those kind of Devotions. After having punished Crescentius and his Anti-pope in the Year 998, he went to Ratisben in his return from Italy, and made a Vow to go in Pilgrimage into Poland to the Tomb of the holy Bishop Adelbert. ----- At his return from Poland, he went to Aix with his Sister Adelaide to visit the Tomb of Charlemagne, and to be also at a meeting of Bishops (1). Being returned into Italy, his first care was to put St Adelbert's Hand in St Bartholomew's Church in the Island of the Tyber, with divers other Relics of holy Martyrs, as also the whole Body of St Bartholomew, which he caused to be brought from Benevento -----

The same Year, being moved with a serious Repentance for having caused the Consul Crescentius to be put to Death against his Word, he religiously performed the Penance enjoined him by St Remwald, and went on Foot to Mount Gargan, and other holy Places (2).

(2) Id. ibid. p. 143.

[B] Otho conferred on him the Title of King. Baronius ascribes this to Pope Sylvester II, and grounds himself on this, That, a little after Otho III's Pilgrimage, the Poles solicited the Pope for the Title of King. Doubtless, they did it ad majorem cautelam. ----- For the greater Safety, and for fear of exasperating that Court, which would not allow the Emperors the Right of erecting Kingdoms. However that be, the Poles attribute the first Institution of their Royalty to Otho III (3).

(3) Le Laboureur, Relation du voyage de Pologne, pag. 139, 140.

BOLSEC (JEROME), would have been altogether buried in Oblivion, if he had not made himself famous by some satirical Books, which the Monks and the Missionaries quote still [A], though it must be acknowledged, that they do not speak so often of them as they did about the end of the XVIth Century, and in the beginning of the XVIIth. What is to be found concerning this Man in the Books of the Protestants is as follows. Jerome Bolsec was a Carmelite of Paris, who, having preached somewhat freely in St Bartholomew's Church, forsook his Order, and fled into Italy to Renata of France, Duchess of Ferrara (a). There was the common Sanctuary of those who were persecuted for the new Opinions. He set up for a Physician, and married quickly, but did something or other for which he was expelled (b). He went to Geneva as a Physician; but finding that he did not distinguish himself to his Satisfaction in that Profession, he set up for Divinity, and dogmatized at first in private on the Mystery of Predestination, according to the Principles of Pelagius, and afterwards had the Boldness to make a public Discourse against the received Opinion. As soon as his Conversation with certain Persons, to infect them with his Pelagianism, was known, Calvin went to see him, and censured him mildly: Afterwards he sent for him to his House, and endeavoured to reclaim him from his Error; but this did not hinder Bolsec from delivering in Public an insulting Discourse against the Decree of Eternal Predestination

(a) Paulo liberius in divi Bartholomaei fano concionatus esset, in Italiam abjecta cuculla profugisse, ibique repente Medicum factum uxorem duxisse. Beza ad Claud. de Xaintes, Apolog. altera, Oper. Tom. II. p. 345.

(b) Quum --- in Italiam profugisset, inde quoque decepta Ferrarienti Ducissa pulsus. Id. in vita Calvin: Oper. Tom. III. p. 374.

[A] He made himself famous by some satirical Works, which the Monks and the Missionaries quote still. A Multitude of Persons have given out, both in Sermons, and Books, that Calvin was branded with the Flower-de-luce, &c. without any other proof for it than the Testimony of Bolsec. I should not wonder if some Painter had done that Writer the honour to compare him to Homer, I mean, to make a Picture, where Bolsec should have appeared Vomiting, and surrounded with a great number of Priests, Monks, and Lay Controversialists, greedy of the Crudities, which he vomited, and swallowing them with so very eager an Appetite, as even to lick the Floor; for it is certain, that they have made the same use of those Ordures, as the Poets who came after Homer did of his Inventions (1).

(1) See Ælian, lib. xiii. var. Hist. cap. xxii.

(2) Manilius, lib. ii. ver. 8. speaking of Homer.

Cujusque ex ore profusus

Omnis posteritas latices in carmina duxit, Annemque in tenues ausa est diducere rivos, Unius fecunda bonis (2).

2

From whose Fountain
Posterity have drawn most plenteous draughts,
Poets have dared the River to divide
Into small streams, and gathered all their Wealth
From Homer's single Store.

See how Fortune sports with things; some Circumstances are sufficient to make the Fate of a Scoundrel equal to that of the greatest Men, and the most brutish Follies as much respected as the finest Productions of Human Wit. What a shameful thing is this! What Ovid said of Homer might have been applied to Bolsec.

Adjice Mæoniden, à quo ceu fonte perenni
Vatum pieriis ora rigantur aquis (3).

(3) Ovid. Amor lib. iii. Eleg. ix.

Add Homer too, who, like a constant Spring,
Our Poets with Pierian Draughts supplies.

[B] He

tion. It is thought that he was the bolder, because he imagined that Calvin was not among his Auditors. He had such a Thought because he did not see him in his Place. The Reason was, Calvin not coming till after the Sermon was begun kept himself hid behind the Crowd. But as soon as Bolsec had ended, he shewed himself, and confuted him so strongly by Scripture, by St Augustin, and by Reason, that Bolsec was the only Person that was not ashamed of his being overcome in that manner [B]. That was not all: One of the Magistrates, who had Power to imprison People, was present in that Assembly, and immediately exerted his Power; he called Bolsec a seditious Fellow, and sent him to Prison. The Cause was discussed very fully, and at last, with the Advice of the Swiss Churches [C], the Senate of Geneva declared Bolsec convicted of Sedition and Pelagianism [D], and as such banished him from the Territory of the Republic, on the Penalty of being whipped if he should return thither. This was done the Twenty third of December 1551. He retired into a neighbouring Place, which depended on the Canton of Bern, and raised so many Troubles there, that they banished him out of all the Territories of that Canton [E]. He returned into France, and applied himself

[B] He made a Discourse on Predestination --- which Calvin refuted so strongly, that he was the only Person who was not ashamed of his being overcome in that manner. By Beza's manner of relating this affair, it seems as if Bolsec made a Sermon; but the Letter, which Calvin writ to the Swiss Churches in the Name of the Church of Geneva, clears the Fact, and shews that Bolsec only censured and refuted a Sermon that was then preached upon the Grace of the Holy Ghost. Tandem virus suum nuper (4) aperto gutture evomuit. Nam cum pro more nostro unus è fratribus illum Joannis locum exponeret, ubi pronuntiat Christus ex Deo non esse, qui verba Dei non audiunt, dixissetque, quotquot Spiritu Dei renati non sunt, pervicaciter usque in finem Deo resistere: quia peculiare sit obedientiæ donum, quo Deus suos electos dignatur: Surrexit nebulo ille, ac dixit falsam & impiam opinionem, cujus auctor fuit Laurentius Valla, nostro seculo exortam esse, quod Dei voluntas rerum omnium sit causa. Hoc autem modo peccata & malorum omnium culpam in Deum transcribi, & illi assignari tyrannicam libidinem qualem Poetæ veteres in suo Jove commenti sunt. Postea ad alterum caput descendit, non ideo salutem consequi homines, quia electi sint, sed ideo eligi, quia credant: nec reprobari quonquam nudo Dei placito, sed eos tantum, qui se communi electione privant. In hac quæstione agitata multis, & atrocibus convitiis in nos invecitum est. Præfatus urbis re audita eum duxit in carcerem, præsertim quia tumultuose plebem hortatus fuerat, ne se decipi à nobis sineret. Nunc ad Senatum delata est causæ cognitio: ubi errorem suum non minori obstinatione quam audacia tueri perrexit (5). --- Latebentem aperit os suum, et in last disgorged his Venom. For when, according to our Custom, one of the Brethren was expounding that Place of John, where Christ declares, that they are not of God, who do not bear the words of God, and said, that they who are not born again of the Spirit of God, do obstinately disobey God to the end; because the Gift of Obedience is a peculiar Favour conferred by God on his Elect: That Wretch rose up and said, that a false and impious Opinion, first broached by Laurentius Valla, had sprung up in our time, that the Will of God is the Cause of all things: That by this all Sins and the blame of all evil was transferred to God, and a tyrannical Will ascribed to him, such as the old Poets feigned of Jupiter. Then he came to another Point, viz. that Men do not therefore obtain Salvation, because they are elected, but are therefore elected because they believe: And that no Man is reprobate by the bare Decree of God, but only those who deprive themselves of the common Election. In discussing this Question, he inveighed against us with many bitter Reproaches. One of the Magistrates of the City hearing the matter committed him to Prison, chiefly because he had, in a tumultuous manner, exhorted the People not to suffer themselves to be deceived by us. Then the Affair was brought before the Senate, where he continued to defend his Error with no less Obstinacy than Assurance. As for the manner, how Calvin confuted him, read these Words of Beza: Illum tot verbi divini testimoniis, tot Augustini præsertim locis, tot denique tamque gravibus argumentis, confutavit perculit, obruit, ut omnes præter ipsummet perfrictæ frontis Monachum ipsum vehementer paderet (6). --- He answered, overset, and confounded him with so many Testimonies from the word of God, with so many Passages chiefly out of St Augustin, in short by so many and so weighty Arguments, that every Body was miserably ashamed for him, except the Brazen-faced Monk himself.

[C] With the Advice of the Swiss Churches --- I have already related a long Passage of the Letter which was written to them to consult them. The beginning of that Letter is thus: 'Erit hic Hieronymus quidam, qui abjecta monachi cuculla, unus ex circumforaneis medicis factus est, qui fallendo, & frustrando, tantum sibi impudentiæ acquirunt, ut ad quidvis audendum prompti sint, ac parati. Is jam ante octo menses in publico Ecclesiæ nostræ cœtu doctrinam de gratuita Dei electione, quam ex verbo Dei acceptam vobiscum docemus, labefactare conatus est. Ac tunc quidem qua fieri potuit moderatione sedata fuit hominis protervia. Postea non destitit locis omnibus obstrepere, ut simplicibus fidei hoc caput excuteret. --- We have here one Jerome, who left the Monks' habit and turned itinerant Doctor, which sort of People, by their Practice of deceiving, and making fools of Mankind, acquire such a Stock of Impudence, that they are ready and fit to attempt any thing. This Man about eight Months ago, in a public Assembly of our Church, endeavoured to overthrow the Doctrine of God's free Election, which we teach with you from the word of God. At that time the Man's Insolence was stopt, with all possible Moderation. Yet he still persisted, making a noise every where, in order to beat off the Simple from this Article of Faith.'

[D] The Senate of Geneva declared him convicted of Sedition and Pelagianism. Mr Drelincourt has (7) published the Extract of a Letter which Mr Lullin, Counsellor and late Syndic of the Republic of Geneva, writ to him. It appears by that Letter, that Bolsec's ill Life contributed to his Banishment. These are the Contents of that Extract: 'By a Sentence given after his Answers and Confessions in the Prisons of this City, the Twenty second of December 1551, and published with sound of Trumpet, and which I have read in our Registers, he was condemned to perpetual Banishment, on the penalty of whipping, for his Scandals, Impieties, and his ill Life.' Beza's words are: 'Causa multis disputationibus agitata, Senatus Helveticarum etiam Ecclesiarum sententiam percontatus illum tum ut seditiosum, tum ut mere Pelagianum 23. Decemb. publice damnatum urbe expulit, sustinuerat poenam minatus, si vel in urbe vel in urbis territorio esset deprehensus (8). --- The Cause being examined, after many Debates, the Senate (having also asked the Judgment of the Swiss Churches,) on the Twenty third of December, sentenced him to be banished the City, as a seditious Person, and a meer Pelagian, on Penalty of being whipped if he were caught any more, either in the City, or its Territories.'

[E] He raised so many Troubles in the Canton of Bern, that they banished him out of all the Territories

(6) Beza in vita Calvin. Oper. Tom. III. p. 374.

(4) The 16th of October 1551, according to Beza in vita Calvin.

(5) Vid. Epist. cxxxiii. Calvin.

(7) Defensio de Calvin, printed at Geneva in 1667. pag. 150, 151.

(8) Beza in vita Calvin. p. 375.

himself to the Protestants first at Paris, and afterwards at Orleans [F], and shewed a great Desire of being promoted to the Ministry, and of being reconciled to the Church of Geneva; but the Persecution that arose against the Protestants made him resolve to take up his first Religion, and the Practice of Physic. He went and settled at Autun, where he acted the easy Husband in favour of the Canons of That Place, and shewed a most violent Passion against the Reformed Church (c) [G]. That Consort, of whom he was so little jealous, was his second Wife (d). He changed his Habitation often (e); he lived at Lyons in the Year 1582, as appears by the Title of a Book which he caused to be printed then at Paris against Beza. He died not long after; for he was not living in the Year 1585 [H]. The Book I have just now mentioned is intituled, The History of the Life, Doctrine, and Behaviour of Theodorus Beza, called the Spectable, great Minister of Geneva (f). It was preceded by the History of the Life, Actions, Doctrine, Constancy, and Death of John Calvin, heretofore Minister of Geneva, which was printed at Lyons in the Year 1577 (g). Those two Histories are altogether unworthy of Credit, as well because they were written by an Author full of Resentment for the Affronts he had received [I], as because he is found manifestly guilty

(c) Beza in vita Calvini Oper. Tom. III. pag. 374.

(d) Id. ad Claud. de Xaintes Apolog. altera, pag. 345.

(e) Medicinam Callipoli ad Ararim tam feliciter facere quam olim Theologiam exerc. it. Ibid. I think this Callipolis is Belleville in Beaujolais.

(f) Du Verdier Biblioth. Francoise, p. 566.

(g) Id. ibid.

ritories of that Canton.] He was one of those who boldly accused Calvin of making God the Author of Sin. Calvin, to prevent the impressions, which such Complaints might make on the Gentlemen of Bern, caused himself to be deputed to them, and pleaded his Cause before them. He was so fortunate, that tho' they would not pass Judgment on his Doctrine, nor decide whether it was true or false, yet Bolsec was ordered to depart the Country (9).

[F] He returned into France, and applied himself to the Protestants - - - at Orleans.] It was at the National Synod held in that City in the Year 1562. In the Acts of the National Synod that was assembled the Year following at Lyons, we find him among the deposed Ministers. He is there called Infamous, an Impostor, and an Apostate (10). This shews that the Synod of Orleans, deceived by his feigned Show of Repentance, admitted him to the Holy Ministry. Nevertheless it does not appear by Beza's Narratives, repeated in divers places of his Works, that Bolsec was ever a Minister. See his Ecclesiastical History, in the sixth Book, Pages 34, and 35; but correct the Word Bolsec there, which the Printers have put for Bolsec. See also the Life of Calvin in French (11).

[G] He went and settled at Autun, where he acted the easy Husband in favour of the Canons, and shewed a most violent Passion against the Reformed Church.] I make use of an Expression less harsh than that of Beza; but he writ in Latin. 'Ubi contra quam sperarat Ecclesias affligi animadvertit, repetita medicina ad hostes Evangelii manifesta defectione (uxore quoque Canonicis Augustodunensibus prostituta) transivit. Unde nunc etiam quibus potest maledictis veritatem proscindit' (12). — When, contrary to his Expectation, he found the Churches were distressed, he took to Physic again, and openly went over to the Enemies of the Reformed Church, and even prostituted his Wife to the Canons of Autun. Where he now wounds the Truth with all the Reproaches he is Master of. What meanness! What baseness! morally speaking a Man had better be subject to the disquiet of Jealousy; the judgment of the Public, however corrupt, falls much heavier on voluntary Cuckoldom, than on the infirmities of a jealous Husband. Neither Bolsec's indigence, nor the Profit which he might draw from his indulgence to the Canons of Autun, would have excused him even with those Persons, who make profession to jest upon every thing. People will laugh at, and jest equally upon, a Husband, who gives his Wife no liberty, and upon one who lends a helping hand to the Pleasures she is minded to take; but after all, they will have as much contempt and indignation for the latter as Juvenal had:

Cum leno accipiat mœchi bona si capiendi
Jus nullum uxori, doctus spectare lacunar, Doctus & ad calicem vigilantis stertere naso (13).

The Wife by her procuring Husband sold;

For tho' the Law makes null the adulterous Deed
Of Lands to her the Cuckold may succeed.
Who his taught Eyes up to the Ceiling throws,
And sleeps all over, but his wakeful Nose.

DRYDEN.

[H] He was not living in 1585.] 'Beza in his Answer to Genebrard, printed at Geneva in the Year 1585, says of Bolsec in the Seventy fifth Page. 'Add as many false Stories as you please, taken from that Carmelite, who forsook his Order, and who is an infamous Man, having been banished thrice, and changed his Religion four times; and who, after having aspersed the Dead and the Living, died in Despair.' This you may read in the Defence of Calvin done by Mr Drelincourt (14). But I have read the quite contrary in the Book of another Minister. 'These Witnesses, says he (15), are more to be credited, than those whom the Bishop produces, which are Bolsec and Arenius; the first of whom greatly lamented and wept in a full Synod, for having so wickedly aspersed the memory of so great a Man, and faithful Servant of God.' But this ought not to hinder any body from giving credit to the Passage mentioned by Mr Drelincourt; for it is likely that the Minister of Fontenay meant only the steps, which Bolsec made in the Synod of Orleans, with great humility, in the Year 1562. If he meant no more than that, he does not confute the Objection, seeing the Life of Calvin, published by Bolsec, did not come out till fifteen Years after that Synod of Orleans.

[I] His two Histories of Calvin and Beza are altogether unworthy of Credit, &c.] Mr Drelincourt lays a great stress upon that Argument. He sets forth the Reasons which Bolsec had to hate Calvin: he says, that Calvin, having convicted Bolsec of his Errors in a full Assembly, excommunicated him at last with the advice of the whole Consistory: he adds that Calvin was deputed with some others from Geneva, to inform the Potent Republic of Bern of the Life and Morals of this wretched Bolsec (16). So that Calvin may be looked upon as the chief Promoter of the two Sentences of Banishment pronounced against Bolsec, the one at Geneva, and the other at Bern. As for what concerns Beza, he drew Bolsec's Indignation upon himself by the diffamatory things he had published against him in very hard Terms. Mr Drelincourt gives some proofs of it. 'In the Year 1551, says he (17), there came into this City one Jerome Bolsec, some time before a Carmelite of Paris, who from a Divine became suddenly a Physician, or rather a Quack, who, to put himself forward, thinking himself to be in his Cloister, and not in a Church of God, of which he knew nothing but by hearsay, begun here and there, and also in a full Congregation, to reflect upon the Doctrine of Providence and Eternal Predestination. Beza calls this Bolsec a Villain, an Impudent Man, and a Wolf in disguise; and after having represented in what manner Calvin convicted him of his Errors, he says, That the Monk could not tell what to answer,

(14) Pag. 102.

(15) Peter de la Vallade, Minister at Fontenay le Comte, in the Apology for the Epistle of the Ministers of Charenton, opposed to the Book that Armand John du Pleffis, Bishop of Lucon, had produced against them, chap. xxii. pag. 298.

(16) Drelincourt, Defence de Calvin, pag. 101.

(17) Id. ibid. pag. 135. He takes this from the Preface that Beza prefixed to Calvin's Commentary on Joshua, printed in 1564.

(13) Juven. Sat. I. ver. 55.

guilty of Calumny in the most heinous Points [K]. There is now hardly any Writer of Reputation, but will acknowledge that this Author is not to be credited [L].

soer, and had nothing left but a Monkish Impudence. To which he adds, Which he shewed even before the Court the Twenty third of December, when Sentence of Banishment was pronounced against him, with sound of Trumpet, as usual. But it is no wonder; for his impudence has ever since made him odious to every Man of Understanding, seeing he is condemned by his own judgment, as will appear by evidence under his own hand, whenever there is occasion for it. For this wretch, who had deserved Punishment for a seditious Act, being mildly treated by the Magistrates, in hopes that he might in time be cured of his Sophistical Ignorance, after he had given so much offence, and done so much harm to the neighbouring Churches, finding himself thrice banished from the Territories of the Lords of Bern, and grown at last intolerable to every body, gave glory to God, acknowledging his Faults, and particularly his evil Conscience, in a full Synod of all the French Churches held at Orleans in the Year 1562. So that something was hoped from him. But being since seized again by a like evil Spirit, he is returned to his first Errors, and being shunned by every body, as he deserves, is, wherever he goes, an Example of the Wrath of God against those who resist the Truth. Mr Drelincourt recites two other Passages of Beza (18). I shall add to all this, that Beza caused Calvin's Letters to be printed in the Year 1575, among which there is a thundering one against Bolsec (19). Thus all things have their use in this World. The keen Stile of these two Reformers does them great Service here. It shews that Bolsec must needs have been very angry, to see him give such provoking accounts of the II, that had been done him, and that therefore what he published in the Year 1577, and 1582, must be full of a Spirit of Repentment, which ought to render all his Stories suspected of falsity. Never man had more need than he of a formal Process and juridical Proof to confirm what he says.

[K] He is found manifestly guilty of Calumny, in the most heinous Points. He has given out, that Calvin was convicted of the Sin against Nature, at Noyon, and condemned only to be branded with the Flower de Luce; his Bishop having interceded for him to moderate the Punishment. Now there was never a Romance more fabulous than this, and Bolsec must have been a Man of unheard of Impudence to dare to produce such Stories in the Year 1577, that is to say, Forty three Years after Calvin had left Noyon (20). The Laws of Limitation were never so valid as in this Business. Prescription, which in other cases serves only to stop proceedings, without absolutely deciding the Point in Question, is here an invincible Proof against the Accuser. He lays his Action after Forty three Years as expired; it cannot be admitted: Prescription has barred him, and besides convicts him of Calumny: for if the Crime of which he accuses Calvin was true, they would not have staid so long to make it publick. Calvin, in open War with all the Monks, and Ecclesiastics, always with Sword in hand either to attack them, or to defend himself, (for it was a sharp and desperate fight) I say, Calvin, who occasioned irreparable losses to the Church of Rome, was not a Man in whose favour the sentence of the Flower de Luce would have been suppressed for Forty three Years together. Immediately on the beginning of his Ministry at Geneva, it would have been published in the most authentic and legal Form, it would have been translated into all Languages, and posted up at every corner of the Streets. This is plain to any body that will use common Sense; besides, the falsity of this Story has been so demonstratively proved by Mr Drelincourt, that perhaps greater Evidence was never produced in a Question relating to a matter of fact. Bolsec is therefore most evidently a Calumniator as to the most heinous of his Accusations; and therefore he deserves no credit about the rest. Semel talus semper præsumitur malus in eodem genere mali. — He who is once bad is always presumed bad, in the same kind of Evil. I am not ignorant that he alleges an Act, which he says he had seen in Bertelier's hands, but that does not clear him. It was a supposititious Piece, and he that publishes such Pieces is no less a Calumniator than he that forges them. It is observed, that he forbore to speak of it till Bertelier was dead (21); an evident sign, either that he boasted falsely to have seen that Act in Bertelier's hands, or that he knew that he who shewed it durst not run the hazard of being publicly contradicted. See the Article BERTELIER; he and Bolsec were of the same Faction at Geneva against Calvin.

When I spoke above (22) of Bertelier's pretended Commission, I omitted a Reflexion which comes now into my mind. If he had been sent to Noyon by the Republic, it must have been before the Year 1552, for he was excommunicated that Year. At the end of eighteen Months he endeavoured to be re-inflated, but could not succeed, because Calvin opposed it: He brought himself into trouble soon after upon another account, the issue whereof was that he fled, and, not appearing to the Summons, he was condemned to Death for Contumacy, the sixth of August 1555. It is impossible, with all the Chicanery imaginable, to find a proper time for his pretended Deputation, between the day that he was excommunicated, and that wherein he was condemned to Death; and consequently he never was at Noyon with Orders to inform himself of John Calvin's Life, if he was not there before the Year 1552. Now this seems to me a convincing proof that he was not deputed before the Year 1552. If he had been at Noyon before that Year, he would have had the Original Proofs of Calvin's Flower de Luce, when that Minister excommunicated him, and used his utmost Endeavours to lay him under that note of Infamy. Would he have had so little Wit, as not to inform the whole Town, that That great Zealot, who excommunicated others, bore the Infamy of a hot Iron on his back? Would he not have challenged him to his Face to shew his Shoulders? Would he not by that means either have triumphed over his Enemy, or slackened his Persecution? Let any body put himself in Bertelier's place, and he must confess that on such an occasion the discovering of Calvin's Infamy would have been unavoidable. If any body should tell me that Bertelier certainly discovered the Mystery, but that no regard was had to his Recrimination, by reason of Calvin's great credit, I should think it a very incredible Story. What! in a Democracy, would not the Judges dare to make any Proceedings, when an accused Person, who has a public Office, some Relations, and some Friends, summons his Accuser to shew his naked Shoulders, and maintains to his Face, that the marks of the Flower de Luce are to be seen there, and that he has brought the Proofs of it to the Republic, in consequence of a Commission, which was delivered to him? Will the Judges, instead of enquiring into the matter, stifle it, and forbid it to be spoke of? They are not so foolish in a Democracy as to oppress one of their Subjects so grossly. But suppose the Magistrates, being tender of Calvin's Reputation, threaten'd those who should make any Complaint against him; I am sure it will be granted me, that this could not suppress the memory of that Incident in private Families, and prevent it's coming to the Ears of Calvin's Enemies. How comes it then that Blandrata, Alciatus, Gentilis, Gribaldus, and so many other Heretics, whom Calvin expelled from Geneva, and whom he persecuted without mercy wherever they fled, never said a word of these Recriminations of Bertelier? This blow cannot be warded off. I know not whether this Reason was ever alleged against the Promoters of the Calumny that Bolsec published first.

[L] There is scarce any writer of Reputation, but will acknowledge that This Author is not to be credited. It were sufficient to instance Mr Maimbourg, who was not of a Temper to let go his hold without good Reasons; yet having mentioned some Reasons alleged by the Protestants to refute Bolsec's Accusation, (21) Rivet, O. per. Tom III. pag. 99. 477.

A NEW Refutation of the pretended Act of Bertelier.

(22) In the Remark [C] of the Article BERTELIER.

(18) Pag. 137, 138. He takes them from Calvin's Life.

(19) Viz. the 133d. I have quoted two Passages of it, one in the Remark [B], the other in the Remark [C].

(20) He left it, for good and all, in the Year 1535 according to Drelincourt, Defence de Calvin, pag. 122.

La Croix du Maine makes him Author of some Books, which were wrote by another Hand [M], for which he falsely alledges the Testimony of Beza. Du Verdier Vau-Privas knew better, than he, our Bolsec's Writings. Besides the two Histories which I have mentioned, he ascribes to him 'the Mirrour of Truth, to Charles IX, 'and to the Princes and Lords of his Council, from the Judgment made by 'Solomon in his Youth, at the beginning of his Reign, by the Splendor and Reflexion of which Mirrour are discovered the true means to appease the Troubles 'and Seditions of the Kingdom of France.' It was printed in the Year 1562.

- (23) Maimb. Hist. du Calvinism, lib. iv. pag. 336.
- (24) Varillas Histoire de l'Herésie, liv. x.
- (25) Ibid. pag. 332, of the Dutch Edition.
- (26) Histoire de la naissance & progrès l'Herésie, liv. vii. cap. vii.
- (27) He quotes in the Margin Bolsec and Surinus among others. See Drelincourt in his Defence of Calvin, pag. 126.
- (28) Thesfor Chronologique ad ann. 1509. cited by Drelincourt in his Defence of Calvin, pag. 128.
- Accusation, concerning Calvin's pretended Flower de luce, he has these words, Since our Protestants will have it so, I am willing not to believe that Infamy of the Author of their Sect (23). He had owned before, that Bolsec wrote a Satire, and a continued Invektive, rather than an History. This witness is worth a Thousand others, unus instat omnium: and might suffice, but, for super-abundant proof, I add Varillas, who gives a large account of Calvin's Life and Morals, without seeming to know that there ever was such a Man as Bolsec in the World (24). He affirms nothing of the Flower de luce, but says only that there is something to be seen in the Registers of Noyon, which in all likelihood gave occasion to Conrad of Slussemburg, a Lutheran Minister, to write that Calvin had been whipped and branded with the Flower de luce, in his own Country, and to the the famous Jesuit Leonard Lessius to compose an Apology, with a design to justify Slussemburg in that Point (25). This is a cunning turn: Varillas will not quote Bolsec, a discredited Author, he chuses rather to quote a Lutheran Minister. This is less surprizing than to see Florimond de Remond reject that Calumny of Bolsec, and confess that he is too passionate an Author. I omit many things designedly, says he (26), because I am afraid, Hatred has sometimes prevailed upon them more than Truth; for they have defamed him horribly (27). The Mendicant Peter de Saint Romuald acknowledges the same Truth; he confesses that whatever Jerome Bolsec, and Jamés Lingey a Scotchman, have writ of Calvin is suspected of too much Passion against him (28). In the Year 1583, Papyrius Masso writing Calvin's Life, and speaking very ill of him, did not vouchsafe to mention the story of the Flower de luce, and called those wretched mobbish Authors, who reproached that Minister with Lewdness. Is it not strange that the great Cardinal de Richelieu, in one of the best Books of Controversy that has been published on the part of the Church of Rome, should be less scrupulous, and less nice, than Peter de Saint Romuald, Florimond de Remond, and Papyrius Masso, and that he should give out, as a true matter of Fact, the Story of Jerome Bolsec, which begun then to be laid aside by the Millionaries? See the Article BERTELIER, Remark [D].
- I cannot end this Remark without mentioning some Mistakes of Varillas. I. The Lutheran Minister's Name is Conrad Schlussemburg. II. He mentions only what he had read in printed Books. Hæc publicis scriptis Calvino objiciuntur (29). III. Leonard Lessius composed no Apology to justify that Minister; he justified himself as well as he could (30), when he was accused of having advanced (31) two Calumnies against Calvin, whereof one was concerning the Flower de luce. I add further, that Varillas was not ignorant of what Bolsec had published, but he scrupled to quote him: 'That of Jerome Bolsec, a Physician of Lyons, is written in such a passionate Style, that a Reader of never so little Moderation, will find fault with it from the first Page. 'It is full of many ill Actions, which are only grounded on that Physician's Authority, which I do not think to be sufficient. The Calvinists, in their Answers to him, accuse him of very great Ingratitude, on account that Calvin had received him in his House, and kept him several Years as his Secretary, and that, notwithstanding all this, he became his greatest Enemy, out of meer Inconstancy, or out of Spite, because Beza had insinuated himself more than he into Calvin's Friendship (32). I do not question, but that we have here a new Mistake of That Author. No body, that I know of, did ever reproach Bolsec with Ingratitude on that account. Such a Reproach was made to the Civilian Baudouin; it was he that served John Calvin as Secretary: but Bolsec never had that Function, nor such a Landlord. I should be much surprized if any body should shew me the contrary.
- [M] La Croix du Maine makes him Author of some Books, which were written by another Hand.] Those Books are, a Treatise of the Providence of God: A Treatise of the Old and New Man, first written in Latin under the Name of Theophilus, which he intituled, Theologia Germanica: A Treatise under the Name of Martin Bellie, which he caused to be printed in Latin and in French, to which Beza made an Answer; and a Translation of the Bible out of Latin into French. Beza, as La Croix du Maine says, relates this in his Life of Calvin (33). La Croix du Maine is guilty of two Mistakes. Those Books were not written by Bolsec, and Beza ascribes them to Sebastian Castilio, and not to him. Many Remarks would be necessary to rectify this Matter.

(29) Schlussemburg, Theolog. Calvinist. lib. ii. fol. 72.

(30) In the Appendix to the Treatise de Antichristo.

(31) In the Consultatio, que Fides & Religio fit capefenda.

(32) Varillas Preface to Tom. I. of the History of Heresy.

(33) La Croix du Maine, Bibliothèque Française, pag. 169.

BOMBASIUS (PAUL), a Native of Bologna in Italy, gained Esteem by the Profession of Philology, about the beginning of the XVIth Century. He taught the Latin and Greek Languages at Naples [A], and gave such proofs of his Capacity

- (1) Erasm. in Ciceroniano, p. 72. See also the 18 Adage of the 18th Century of the 18th Century of the 18th Century.
- (2) Bombasius, Epist. iv. lib. xi. pag. 548. inter Erasmianas.
- (3) Cardinal

[A] He taught — at Naples. I follow the Author I have quoted, but I am not without fear that he mistakes; for Erasmus does not speak one Word of the Professorship at Naples, but he speaks only of that at Bologna. I shall recite his Words, because they contain part of Bombasius's Character. 'Equidem exosculor Paulum Bombasium prorsus aurei pectoris hominem, quo vix alius unquam vixit amico amicum, sed valetudini parcens non admodum indulgit stilo. Mox ut erat animi minime abjecti, fordidorum competitorum improbis contentionebus offerendus (nam Bononiæ publico salario Græcæ profitebatur) ad Reip. negotia sese contulit: tandem accitus Romam augere rem maluit, quam literis infensescere (1). — Truly I reverence Paulus Bombasius, a Man of a most noble Heart; than whom scarce ever a more friendly Man lived, but in consideration of his health he wrote not much. Presently, as he was of no abject disposition, taking offence at the base contentions of his sordid Competitors (for he was Professor of Greek at Bologna, with a public Salary) he betook himself to Affairs of State: at last being sent for to Rome, he chose rather to improve his Fortune, than spend his Days in Learning.' These Words of Erasmus inform us, I. That Bombasius was a good Friend. II. That to preserve his Health, he composed but few things. III. That having a noble and generous Soul, he grew weary of a Professor's Life, by reason of the Quarrels, which the fordid Jealousy of his Rivals exposed him to. IV. That he concerned himself with the Affairs of his Country, when he was invited to Rome. He says, that Chance, rather than his Will, or the offer of a better Fortune, made him leave his Professorship. Me à literaria professione non tam mea voluntas, vel (ut tu suspicaris) fortuna melior avocavit, quam incertus ille, cui plerique tam mala quam bona debentur, casus eripuit (2). Moreri makes him a Professor at Naples and at Bologna.

city there, that Cardinal Pucci would have him live with him, and made him his Secretary, with a good Salary [B]. He lived very easy at the Court of Rome, under the Protection, and by the Liberality, of That Cardinal; and was in a Condition to end his Days in Plenty, when the City of Rome was plundered under Pope Clement VII. He endeavoured to get into the Castle of St Angelo in his Master's Retinue, but he could not run fast enough, so that he was surrounded with Soldiers, who killed him barbarously (a). He was a great Friend of Erasmus.

(a) Taken from Pierius Valerianus de Literarum infelicitate, lib. i. pag. 22.

[B] Cardinal Pucci ----- made him his Secretary, with a good Salary.] Bombasius calls him the Cardinal of the four Saints. He wrote to Erasmus in the Year 1517, that against his Inclination he was obliged to deprive himself of the pleasures of Rome, to accompany that Cardinal's Nephew in his Nunciature to Switzerland (3). He tells Erasmus in another Letter (4), that he does not find himself very rich, but that he has Four hundred Crowns a Year, and therefore does not fear to see himself ever reduced to the necessity of taking up his former Profession again. 'Quamquam non ita mecum maligne agitur ut ad professoriam linguam rede-

(3) That Letter is the 23d of the 11d Book of Erasmus's Letters pag. 120. See also the 17th of the 11d Book.

(4) It is the XIIIth of the XVIIth Book pag. 756.

undum fore timesam. Nam reditus annuos ad CCCC. ducatos nullis sacris addictos, nec fortunæ sed industriæ meæ acceptos ferendos auxi, quos nunquam ex literario illo ocio sperare ac ne somnare quidem mihi licuisset. — Tbo' it is not so bad with me, that I am any ways afraid of being obliged to return to teach the learned Language again. For I have raised my annual income, not by my Fortune, but my Industry, to Four hundred Ducats, subject to no Payment to the Church, which I never could have hoped for, or even dreamt of, in the idle Trade of teaching.

BOMBERG (DANIEL), a famous Printer, born at Antwerp. His Article is very curious in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary. I shall only add two things: the one is that he was the first that printed Hebrew Books at Venice, and that he began to do it the Year 1511 [A]. The other, that he brought his Art to Perfection as to the printing of Hebrew, so that the Jews acknowledge, that since his Death the Hebrew printing has continually grown worse and worse (a). You will find the Critical History of his Editions of the Bible in Mr Simon (b).

(a) Taken from Bertolotti's Biblioth. Rabbinnica, Tom. I. pag. 34. He cites Ganz.

(b) Simon, Histoire Critique du Vieux Testament, pag. 512, 513.

[A] He began to print Hebrew at Venice, in the Year 1511. He began with an Edition of the Bible in Quarto. Afterwards he made many other impressions of it in Folio, in 4to, and in 8vo. He learned his Hebrew of Felix Pratensis, an Italian, who made him undertake an Edition of the Rabbinical Bible, that is, with the Commentaries of the Rabbies, which Bombert printed in Folio in 1517, and which was dedicated to Pope Leo X; but the Jews did not value that Edition, and Rabbi Jacob Haiim got another printed by the same Bombert in four Volumes in Folio, in the Year 1525 (1). ----- It is he that began the Impression of the Talmud in the Year 1520, which he did not finish till some Years after ----- in eleven Volumes in Folio (2). He printed the Talmud three times, and each of those Impressions cost him One hundred thousand Crowns (3). He printed Books to the value of above Four Millions of Gold (4).

(1) Chevillier, origine de l'imprim. de Paris, pag. 267.

(2) Id. ibid. p. 268.

(3) Scaliger, de la word Bombertus, pag. 34.

(4) Ibid. at the word Imprimerie pag. 121.

BONCIARIUS (MARC ANTONY), a Disciple of Muretus, wrote very polite Latin. He was of a very mean Extraction [A], and taught School all his Life-time at Perugia. He was born within six Miles of that City the ninth of February 1555 (a). He had for his Scholar his own Father, who, desiring to turn Jesuit at Forty seven Years of Age, was obliged to acquire some Learning, not being willing to be a bare Lay-Brother. Bonciarius lost his Sight (b), and was very much afflicted with the Gout (c). He died the ninth of January 1616 (d). Cardinal Ubaldo was his Patron (e). His Letters were printed at Marpurg in the Year 1604. One may find in them the Method he made use of to instruct his Father in a little time (f). There are other Books of his composing both in Verse and Prose [B]. He did not publish all that he designed to publish [C].

(a) Oldoinus, in Athen. Augusto, pag. 225.

(b) See Lancelotti da Perugia, Hogdidi, Part II. pag. 451. & Oldoini in Athen. Augusto, p. 227.

(c) Nicius Erythraeus Pinacoth. l. p. 98, 99.

(d) Oldoin. ubi supra, pag. 228.

(e) Du Saussai, continuat. Bel. larm. de Script. Eccles. pag. 78.

(f) Morhof. Polyhist. p. 237.

[A] He was of a mean Extraction. He informs the Public himself, that he was the Son of a Shoemaker, and the Grandson of a Carrier. 'Hic Perusii, à vulgaribus, ut ipse de se fatetur, opificibus ortus, cujus quippe avus coriariam, pater fustoriam in adolescentia fecerat, generis obscuritatem sui literarum splendore illustravit (1). — This Man, descended, as he himself owns, of mean Artificers at Perugia, for his Grandfather was a Carrier, and his Father a Shoemaker, in his Youth, illustrated the Obscurity of his Descent by the Splendor of his Learning.'

(1) Nicius Erythraeus Pinacoth. l. pag. 98.

[B] There are other Books of his composing, as well in Verse as in Prose. He wrote a Treatise de arte Grammatica: a Poem intitled, Triumphus Argutus, sive de sancti Perusii translatis, which contains four Books; Scraphidos libri tres (2). I do not find that he published any Greek Grammar, neither can I tell what Authority Moreri has to assert it. He would have been more in the right to have ascribed to him a Treatise of Rhetoric, though Nicius Erythraeus, the only Author he has quoted, says nothing of it. See the following Remark.

(2) Id. ibid. p. 99, 100.

[C] He did not publish all that he designed to publish. He says in his Letters, that he had taken upon him to write the Lives of all those, who had been eminent either in Arms or Learning (3) at Perugia for Four hundred Years past. He says in the Catalogue of his Works, at the end of his Rhetoric, that he wrote a Book intitled, Epicurus sive dialogus de antiqua Philosophia, wherein he shewed, that no antient Philosopher came nearer the Truth than Epicurus, and that none were farther from it than the Stoics. Gassendus and Nauddé had never seen that Book, which made Gassendus believe that perhaps it was never printed. 'M. Antonius Bonciarius Parisiensis Professor (4) ----- in catalogo Operum suorum (5) se composuisse librum testatur, cui titulum fecerit, Epicurus sive dialogus de antiqua Philosophia, in quo efficacibus argumentis & doctorum virorum testimoniis probatur neminem ex prisca Philosophia accessisse propius ad veritatem quam Epicurum, contra nullos ab ea longius recessisse quam Stoicos. Tamen ille quoque liber nunquam fortassis editus, nec nobis est visus nec amico nostro, quem vix tamen ulli rarissimi fugiunt (6). Gassendus has committed a gross mistake; Bonciarius taught at Perugia all his Life-time. He was therefore Perusinus Professor. The word Perusinus was easily changed into Parisinus, and Parisinus more easily still into Parisensis. It appears from hence that Faults of Impression may lead a learned Man into considerable Mistakes.

(4) See the end of this Remark.

(5) Gassendus has put in the Margin in fine Rh.

(6) Gassendus, de vita & moribus Epicuri lib. vii. cap. vii. p. 224.

BONFADIUS

BONFADIUS (JAMES), one of the most polite Writers of the XVIIth Century, was born in Italy near the Lake di Garda [A]. He was three Years Secretary to Cardinal Bari at Rome, after which, having lost all the Fruit of his Services by the Death of his Master, he went to Cardinal Gbinucci, and served him as Secretary, till a long Sickness took him off from that Employment. When he was recovered he found himself so disgusted with the Court, that he resolved to seek his Fortune by other means. He found nothing in the Kingdom of Naples, where he wandered a pretty long time: he went afterwards to Padua, and then to Genoa, where he read Public Lectures on Aristotle's Politics. He was ordered to make some likewise on his Rhetoric, and, because he succeeded well in it, he had a great many Scholars, who went to learn good Literature of him. His Reputation increased daily, so that the Republic of Genoa made him their Historiographer, and assigned him a very good Pension for That Office. He applied himself with all his Might to compose the Annals of that State, and published the five first Books, wherein he spoke too freely, and too satirically of some Families, whereby he raised himself Enemies, who resolved to ruin him. They caused him to be accused of the Sin against Nature, and, there being Witnesses to convict him of it, he was condemned to be burnt (a) [B]. Some Authors say the Sentence was executed according to it's Form and Tenor; but others assert, that, by the Sollicitations of his Friends, the Punishment was commuted, and that he was beheaded [C]. This happened in

(a) Ghilini, Teatro d'huomini illustri Tom. I. pag. 70.

[A] He was born in Italy near the Lake di Garda. Authors do not agree about Bonfadius's Country. Some say, that he was born at Salona upon that Lake; Salona ad Benacum natus (1); others call his Country Gazani, luogo picciolo della Riviera di Brescia (2). — A small place on the River Brescia. I believe they are in the right; for in a Letter dated from Gazano, wherein he describes that fine Lake, you will meet with these Words, libero mi starò nel mio Gazano. — I shall be free in my Gazano. This Letter was written to Plinio Tomacello, and is in the second Book (3) of Lettere volgari, printed at Venice Anno 1558. König is wrong in saying he was of Verona.

[B] He was accused of the Sin against Nature — and was condemned to be burnt. He was accused of having satisfied that brutish Passion with one of his Scholars. — Fu calunniato, che in dotto da simulato e pazzo amore, che ad un bellissimo giovanetto suo Scolare portava, con esso le fozze e impudiche sue voglie sfogasse; sopra di questa imputazione fu subito incarcerato, e da testimoni di sì grave e enorme eccesso convinto, fu condannato al fuoco, nel quale finì i suoi giorni l'anno 1551 (4). — It was laid to his Charge, that, instigated by an inordinate Passion for a very handsome Youth, his Scholar, he had gratified his foolish Inclinations with him, on which Accusation he was immediately sent to Prison, and, being convicted by Evidence of so great and enormous a Crime, was condemned to the flames, in which he ended his Days in the Year 1551. Thus Ghilini acknowledges the Justice of the Accusation. The Cavalier Marini has likewise acknowledged it: See the two Madrigals of his Ritratti, which Mr Menage quotes (5). Paul Manucius owns it likewise in the Poem that he addresses ad eos qui laborarunt pro salute Bonfadii (6). — To those who endeavoured to save Bonfadius. See how he speaks,

(5) Menage, Antibalilet, cap. lxxxix.

(6) You will find it in the Delicie Poetarum Italorum.

(7) See Ghilini ubi supra, pag. 71. & Mr Teiffier, Elog. Tom. I. pag. 131. Edit. 1696.

Lapsum erat miser in culpam Bonfadius, index Detulerat patribus, nec inani teste probat. Quid facerent legum custodes? legibus uti Coguntur.

— Unhappily did poor Bonfadius fall Into a Crime, for which before the Senate An Accusation was advanced, the Informer Produced his Evidence, and prov'd the Charge. What could the Ministers of Justice do? They're bound to put the Laws in Execution.

But others pretend, that Bonfadius was oppressed by Calumny. It is the opinion of Giovanni Matteo Tofcano in his Peplus Italiae (7), where we find what follows: 2

Haud minus intumuit nuper Benacus alumni Bonfadii, ac Musis, doctæ Catullus, tuis. Bis tamen infelix; rapuit nam Roma Catullum, Bonfadium letho das scelerate Ligur. Historia æternum ejus fera Genua vivis, Immeritum sævâ lege necare potes? Mitius est quod te spumanti vertice marmor Tundit; & es scopulis durior ipsa tuis.

Not less Benacus boasted of her Son Bonfadius, than of learn'd Catullus Muse. But twice unhappy she: Rome of Catullus Robb'd her, and wicked Genoa took the Life Of her Bonfadius; canst thou, Cruel Genoa, Thus sacrifice, to barbarous Law, the Man, Whose History has made thy name immortal? Milder the Waves, that beat against thy Shore, With frothy Tops: Thou harder than Thy Rocks.

Scipione Ammirato says nothing on either side, nevertheless he seems more inclined to question Bonfadius's Innocency. You'll see in the following Words, that the true Cause of the Persecution of this unfortunate Man, was, that he inclined the Youth to disapprove the Government that was then established. — Trovata che egli tirava la gioventù a governo contrario di quello che allora si era indurito, sotto colore d'impudici amori gli pose le mani addosso: e peravventura non trovato senza colpa, il condannarlo al fuoco. Del cat tivetto; per che fosse meno scusabile; si leggono ancor rime, lequal par che rendan testimonianza di cotesta sua inclinazione (8). — It being found that he inclined the Youth to a Government contrary to what was then established, he was seized on pretence of unnatural Lewdness, and being found perhaps not altogether blameless, he was condemned to the Fire: A wicked Man, for he was not excusable; some Verses are extant yet which seem to shew this Inclination in him. It is very likely, that he was guilty of the enormous Crime whereof he was accused, but that he would not have been punished for it, had he not done something else that exposed him to the Hatred of certain Persons.

[C] Others say he was beheaded. Boccacini, Ghilini, the Cavalier Marini, and some others, assert, that he was burnt: Scipione Ammirato says the same. Questo misero col fuoco in Genova vedemmo terminare l'infelice vita (9). But Thuanus is more to be believed, when he says that Bonfadius was beheaded. Ob rem latendam Genua — securi percussus (10). Read these Words of Mr Menage: — It is true, that he was condemned to be burnt, but, at the solicitation of his Friends, and particularly a great lie.

(9) Menage, Antibalilet, cap. lxxxix.

(10) Thuan. lib. xxvi. pag. 538. Note that König instead of Genoa, which is a great lie.

in the Year 1560 (b). Those who blame his Imprudence are in the right, and have fared the worse for imitating it [D]. There are some Speeches, Letters, and Latin and Italian Poems of his. The Day of Execution, he wrote a Note to Johann Baptist Grimaldi, to testify his Acknowledgment to the Persons who had endeavoured to serve him. He promised to inform them how he found himself in the other World, if it could be done without frightening them. He is not the only one that made such Promises [E]. He recommended to them his Nephew Bonfadino, who ticularly of young Grimaldi, his Punishment was changed; and he was only beheaded. This we learn from the Latin Poem of Paul Manucius, intitled, Ad eos qui laborarunt pro salute Bonfadii, printed in the Deliciae Poëtarum Italorum. Here is that part of the Poem, which concerns the change of that Punishment:

(b) Thuan. lib. xxvi. pag. 538. But Ghilini, Tom. I. pag. 70. places Bonfadino's Death in the Year 1558.

Exprimitur tandem hoc invito à Judice, vivus
Ne comburatur crepitanti deditus igni:
Tum se carnifici sævo Bonfadius ultro,
Mente Deum spectans, animo imperterritus offert.
Ille ministerio propter functurus iniquo,
Terribilis rigidam suspendit ad alta securim (11).

(11) Menage, Antibaillet, cap. lxxxix. pag. 357, 358.

*Thus from the unwilling Judge at last obtain'd, Tis to the crackling Flames he shall not be
A Victim given; then, Bonfadius, thou
To the fierce Executioner thy neck
Didst freely offer of thy own Accord;
He, sudden to dispatch his task unjust
And terrible, high rais'd his rigid Sword.*

[D] Those who blame his Imprudence are in the right, and have fared the worse for having imitated him.] I have Boccalini in view, who supposes that Bonfadius's complaints, coming out of the Flames (12), were rejected by Apollo, and that the God of Parnassus declared to him, that tho' he had been innocent of the Crime imputed to him, he would have been justly punished for having had the folly to blemish the Honour of some potent Families. It was represented to him, that a Judicious Historian imitates the Grape-gatherers and Gardeners; he forbears to speak of things, before time has ripened them, that is to say, till the Persons who have committed an ill Action are dead, and their Children are not able to revenge themselves on him that publishes it. 'Che i saggi virtuosì nello scrivere le historie molto prudentemente si consigliavano, all' hora che imitavano i vendemmiatori, e gli altri accorti de' frutti, i quali percioche conoscevano, che cosa poco grata havrebbono fatto a gli huomini, se dalle viti tagliando l'uva immatura, e da gli alberi staccando i pomi acerbi gli havessero portati al mercato quella necessaria pazienza havevano, che si conveniva anco gli historici di lasciar che il tempo conducesse i fatti, e le cose passate alla perfezione loro (13). — That the wise Artists in writing History, acted with a great deal of Prudence, when thus they imitated the Gatherers of Grapes and other Fruit; who, because they know it would not be grateful to gather green Grapes, and pluck unripe Fruit, and carry it to Market, wait with the necessary Patience: thus also should an Historian let time bring out facts, and things come to their Maturity.' Tacitus was instanced to him, who used the like Precaution, and chose rather to offend against the Laws of History, than to expose himself to danger. 'Che lo stesso gran Maestro de' gl' Historici saggi Tacito, all' hora che ne gli scritti suoi faceva mentione di quei Senatori grandi che Tiberio regnante poenam vel infamiam subire all' hora che posterì manebant. Tac. lib. 4. Ann. saggiamente alzava la penna della carta, piu tosto eleggendosi di offender le leggi historiche, che pregiudicare alla riputatione di quelle famiglie che non di altra cosa erano conosciute far capital maggiore, che dell'honore, stimando quell'huomo singolare ad un' historico esser cosa di troppo evidente pericolo, nimis ex propinquo diversa arguere. Tac. l. 4. An. (14). — That that Grand Master of wise Historians, Tacitus, when he mentioned in his Writings some great Senators who had suffered Infamy or Punishment under

(12) Dal fuoco tutto bruciato compare Giacomo Bonfadino. Boccalini Ragguagli di Parnasso, Centur. I. c. xxxv. pag. 108.

(13) Id. ibid. pag. 108, 109.

(14) Id. ibid. pag. 109.

Tiberius, while their Posterity still remained. Tac. l. 4. Ann. Wisely with-held his Hand, abusing rather to transgress the Laws of History, than Prejudice the Reputation of such Families, as were known not to stand upon any thing more nicely than on their Honour; this singular Man, for an Historian, judging it too dangerous to say any thing against them, while he was too near them.

Thus a Man knows the Maxims of Prudence better than he can practise them; for we have seen that Boccalini lost his Life for having spoken too freely against Spain (15). The Counsels which he ascribes to Apollo are doubtless very judicious. Nothing can be finer in the Theory than the Ideas of the Legislator of Historians; he commands them not to dare to say any thing that is false, and to be bold to say all that is true (16). But they are as impracticable Laws as those of the Decalogue in the State that Mankind is in. If it were proper to compare Human things with Divine, it might be said that the Legislator of the Historians has imitated the Legislator of the Jews: He supposed a State of Innocency, and not a state of Sin; he supposed That Free-will which is lost, and the great Strength that Man would have had, if he had persevered in his original Innocency. Observe on the other hand a great difference between these Laws, that are so a like. A perfect Wisdom is requisite to fulfil the Decalogue, and a Man must be foolish to the highest degree to fulfil the Laws of History. Eternal Life is the Reward of Obedience to the Decalogue, but Temporal Death is almost an unavoidable Consequence of obeying the Law-giver of the Historians.

(15) See Boccalini immediately after the Citations (b) and (c).

(16) Quis nescit primum esse historiam legem ne quid falsi dicere audeat, deinde ne quid veri non audeat? Cicerone de Oratore lib. ii. cap. xv. See the Preface to the first Edition of this Dictionary; Paragraph IV.

[E] He promised to inform them how he found himself in the other World. — He is not the only one that has made such Promises.] These are his Words: Se da quel mondo di là si potrà dar qualche segno senza spavento, lo farò. They are taken out of the Note that he sent to Giovanni Battista Grimaldi: You will find it entire in the Antibaillet (17). Mr Menage took it out of a Collection of Italian Letters intitled, Lettere di diversi Uomini illustri raccolte da diversi libri, printed in 8vo, at Trevi, appresso Fabrizio Zanetti, in 1603. The Barnabite Baranzani had made the same Promise, and did not perform it. I speak of it in his Article. It is pretended, that Marcellus Ficinus having promised the same thing, kept his Word: Read this passage of Peter de St Remuald. 'Marcellus Ficinus, a Priest of Florence, a great Platonic Philosopher, and a great Divine, died, and immediately his Ghost, in the form of a Cavalier clothed in white, mounted on a Horse of the same colour, ran full speed to the Door of Michael Mercatus, who was his intimate Friend, and likewise a great Platonic Philosopher, who was then studying by break of Day in his Closet, in a Town at a good distance from Florence, and cried to him, that the Discourses which they had together concerning the Life to come, were true; and having said this, ran away towards the place from whence it came, and quickly escaped his Friend's sight, who called to him to stay for him. This happened by reason of the Agreement made between them, under the good pleasure of God, that he that died first should come and tell the Survivor, whether things passed in the other life as Plato had written in his Book of the Immortality of the Soul. Cardinal Baronius says he had this Story from the Grandson of Mercatus (18). Note, That Baronius, relating this in the fifth Volume of his Annals, observes that Michael Mercatus, who had always lived exemplarily, and like a good Philosopher, raised his Virtue to a higher pitch after that Apparition; for he forsook the Study of Philosophy, and applied himself wholly to the Business of his Salvation.

(17) Menage, ut supra, pag. 357, 358. cap. lxxxix.

(18) Peter de S. Remuald Abrege Chronologique de l'Histoire, Tom. III. p. 251, 252. ad ann. 1499.

VOL. II. N^o. XXXIII.

R

tion.

who is perhaps the PETER BONFADIUS, who is Author of some Verses extant in the Gareggiamento poetico del confuso Accademico ordito. It is a Collection of Verses divided into eight Parts, and printed at Venice in the Year 1611.

(19) Baronius, ad ann. 411. n. 69.

(20) Id. ibid.

(21) Id. ibid.

tion (19). The Annalist adds, that the reciprocal Promise, which Marcellus Ficinus and Michael Mercatus made to each other, relating to the state of things after this Life, &c. was attested by divers learned Persons, and had often been related to the People by the Preachers. Haud inexplorata referam, sed quæ complurium eruditorum virorum scimus assertione firmata, immo & à religiosis viris ad populum pro concione sæpe narrata (20). It is pity that Michael Mercatus did not leave a juridical Attestation of it upon Oath, and registred in the Archives of Florence. He was much in the wrong that he did not do it. His Grandson Michael Mercatus, who told this Story to Baronius, was Prothonotary of the Church, and commendable for his Probity and Learning (21).

The place, where Seneca relates the Tranquillity of Mind, wherewith Canis Julius went to his Execution, is admirable. That good Man was condemned to Death by Caligula, and was not executed till Ten Days after his Condemnation. He passed them without any disquiet, and when it was told him that he must go to the place of Execution, he lost nothing of his Chearfulness. Why do you afflict yourselves, said he to his Friends? You enquire, whether the Soul subsists after our Death, I shall quickly know it. The Philosopher, who accompanied him, asked him, what he thought of at that Moment? I do design, answered Canis, to observe well, whether my Soul will perceive it's going out. He promised that if he learned any thing, he would come and see his Friends to declare his Condition to them. Tristes erant amici, talem amissuri virum. Quid mæsti, inquit, estis? Vos queritis, an immortales animæ sint: ego jam sciam. Nec deficit in ipso veritatem sine scrutari, & ex more suo questionem habere. Prosequebatur illum philosophus suus: nec jam procul erat tumultus, in quo Cæsari Deo nostro fiebat quotidianam sacrum. Quid, inquit, Canis nunc cogitas? aut quæ tibi mens est? Observare, inquit Canis, propius illo velocissimo momento, an sensurus sit animus, exire se. Promittique, si quid explorasset, circumiturum amicos, & indicaturum quis esset animarum status (22). Seneca does not tell us whether they heard any news of Julius in consequence of his Promise.

(22) Seneca, de Tranquillitate Animi, cap. xiv. p. 671.

SOME Considerations on the Nature of the Proof drawn from the Apparition of a Soul.

Perhaps the Reader will not be displeased to find here the discussion of two Questions, which naturally present themselves. The first is, Whether the Friends of this Julius had any good pretence to question the Immortality of the Soul, because they did not hear of him as he had given them to expect? The second is, Whether they would have had a good reason to believe the Immortality of the Soul, in case they had heard news of him by some Phantom.

I answer as to the first Point, That such a pretence for questioning the Immortality of the Soul, would be very bad; for tho' a very good reason might be given for the non-performance of Julius's Promises, by supposing that his Soul did no longer exist, it does not thence follow, that That Hypothesis can justly be used to shew the Causes of the non-performance of his Word. When a Phænomenon may be accounted for by three or four probable Suppositions, there is none that can form a Conviction. No demonstrative Proof can be given, but when the Hypotheses, different from that made use of, are either impossible, or manifestly false. Since then, supposing the Immortality of the Soul, good Reasons may be given why Julius did not return to tell his Friends in what State he was, the Hypothesis of the Mortality of the Soul may be very well rejected, notwithstanding that it may be very proper to explain that Event. It may with great reason be supposed, either that a Soul, separated from it's Body, remembers no more the Promise it made in this Life; or that, if it does remember it, it is ignorant of the Expedients requisite to perform it, or has not the liberty to put them in practice; either because it dares not, or will not disobey some Superior Cause, that forbids it to have any Commerce with Mankind. Let us say then, that Bonfadius's Friends would have argued very ill, if they had inferred the Mortality of the Soul from his not keeping his word with them.

The second Point is more nice; and first of all I make a distinction. If a Phantom, calling itself the Soul of Julius, had appeared to the Friends of that Roman, and had told them some News from the other World; they might in consequence of that have looked upon the Hypothesis of the Immortality of the Soul as very probable: but if they had taken that Apparition for a demonstrative Proof that the Soul of Julius did still exist, they would not have judged right; for as I have already said, an Hypothesis does not afford any demonstrative Proofs, when the matter of Fact, which it accounts for, may be accounted for by different Hypotheses. A Proof cannot be said to be demonstrative, unless it be made appear that the contrary is impossible, or manifestly false. Since then some possible Causes may be given of the Apparition of a Phantom, calling itself the Soul of such a Man, and performing certain Promises which that Man had made to his Friends; since, I say, this may be explained by possible Hypotheses, without supposing that the Soul of Man is immortal, it is plain, that Julius's Friends would not have philosophized with the utmost exactness, if they had taken such an Apparition for a demonstrative Proof that the Soul of their Friend was living. They might have been told, 'it is possible, that tho' the Soul of your Friend be dead, you may have seen a Phantom that told you what he had promised to come and acquaint you with. There are many Genii in the World that know what we do, and that can act on our Organs. One of them diverted himself with deceiving you, and made you believe that he was the Soul of Julius. We cannot prove to you by natural and convincing Reasons that this is true; nor can you prove it to be false. Do not go so fast then, do not draw a certain Conclusion; be contented to take it as a very probable Hypothesis.' Julius's Friends might have replied, that the Existence itself of those Genii is a proof of the Immortality of our Soul; for if those Genii are immortal, why should not our Soul be so too? It might be answered, That those Genii might have power to do many things in the stead, and under the Name, of the dead Soul of Julius, even tho' they were mortal. Are not all Men mortal? Do not all of them die, some sooner, and some later? Would that hinder them from deceiving Beasts, in the Supposition that I am going to make. Suppose that the Souls of Dogs should be persuaded that they subsist after their separation from the Body. Suppose that one Dog, in particular, has promised the rest to come and tell them how he finds himself after Death. Lastly, suppose that a Man knows that Promise, and the manner how the Dog has agreed to perform it. Is it not true, that That Man might easily do what would be necessary to deceive the other Dogs? He could shew them Phantoms; he could make Puppets bark, &c. If from thence the Dogs should conclude that their Souls are immortal, or at least that Men are immortal, would they not be mistaken? Any one, that reflects ever so little upon it, may easily apprehend that the invisible Spirits of the Universe, which the Platonists call Genii, might do all that the Art of Necromancy attributes to them, even tho' they were mortal; provided their Species was preserved, notwithstanding the successive Death of all the Individuals, as our Kind preserves itself, tho' all Men die. To say, that the Generation of Individuals is impossible among the Genii, is to decide rashly what is not, nor can be, known to us. The Infinity of Nature may contain a thousand sorts of Propagation that we are ignorant of. Note, That some Pagans believed the Mortality of the Genii.

Let us conclude from all this, That what is called the Return or Apparition of Spirits, is not strictly speaking, a necessary Proof (23) either of the Immortality of our Souls, or of the Immortality of the the Genii. I do not deny, that it is such a Proof of it, as one may prudently and reasonably acquiesce in; but I speak here of demonstrative Proofs: I speak of such Proofs as can only be eluded by Cavils, the Defenders whereof may be easily reduced to an Absurdity.

(23) These two Conditions ought to be carefully minded, I. Strictly speaking. II. Necessary Proof.

BONFINIUS (a) (ANTONY), a Native of Ascoli in Italy in the Marca d'Ancona, flourished in the XVth Century. He applied himself to the Study of Philology, with good Success. Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, having heard a Report of his Learning, sent for him. Bonfinius had the Honour to kiss that Prince's Hand at Reetz, a few Days before he made his Public Entry into the City of Vienna, which he had conquered (b). At this first Audience he presented several Books, which he had lately published [A], and had dedicated to that King, or to Beatrice of Arragon his Queen. The King read these Books with great Pleasure in his Camp, and was present with all his Court at a Speech made by Bonfinius in Vienna, the first Day of January; and having ordered the Books of that Author to be brought to him, he distributed them to his Prelates and Courtiers, and recommended them to their Reading; and he was so far from granting Bonfinius leave to return into Italy, that he retained him with a good Pension, and gave him several things to compose, and commanded him to follow him in his Armies (c). He ordered him to compose the History of the Huns: Bonfinius began to work upon it before the Death of that Prince (d), but it was by the Order of King Uladi-slaus that he wrote the whole History of Hungary. Though that Work cannot be looked upon as a finished Piece, yet it is certain that the Author deserves a Place among the good Historians [B]. He brought that History as far as the Year 1495. It contains four Decads, and a half, that is to say, Forty five Books. The Original of it was placed in the Library of Buda, and the Public saw nothing of it till after the Death of the Author. One Martin Brenner, a Transylvanian, got an imperfect Copy of that Work, and published thirty Books of it in the Year 1543. Sambucus found the other Fifteen, and published the whole Work in the Year 1568, revised and collated from the best Copies (e). I cannot say when, or where Bonfinius departed this Life; but I believe he did not return home, as many learned Men of Italy did, whom Matthias Corvinus had sent for into his Kingdom [C]. This Historian is accused of having been a Slanderer [D], and is blamed for hav-

(a) He calls himself Bonfinis in his History of Hungary.

(b) In 1485, according to Calvisius.

(c) Ex Bonfinio
Decad. IV. lib.
viii. pag. 463.

(d) Id. in Epist.
Dedicator.

(e) He published a better Edition of it in 1570, at Frankfort by Andrew Wechel.
The other was printed at Basil
by Oporinus.

[A] He presented to the King of Hungary several Books, which he had lately published. He himself informs us of it: He tells us, that three of those Books were dedicated to King Matthias. viz. The Translation of Hermogenes, and that of Herodian, and the Genealogy of the Corvinus; that two of them were dedicated to the Queen, one of which treated of Virginity, and Conjugal Chastity; and the other was an History of Ascoli: That, besides, he had dedicated a small Collection of Epigrams to the young Prince John Corvinus, to which he had prefixed a Preface that treated of the Education of a Prince (1). He adds, that having followed against his Will Matthias Corvinus to the Army, he translated Philophrastus for his Diversion. 'Castra sequi praeceperat Scriptoribus & philosophantibus inimica. Quod cum ille invitus facere cogeretur, ne ingrato in castris tumultu molestaque ocio uteretur, oblatum sibi Philophrastum tribus mensibus in Latinum transtulit (2). — He ordered him to follow the Camp, a disagreeable Place to Writers and Philosophers. Which he being forced to do, to avoid the Tedium of Idleness, in the Tumult and hurry of a Camp, Philophrastus falling in his way, he translated him into Latin in three Months.' I must say something of his Book concerning Virginity and Conjugal Chastity. It is written by way of Dialogue; Sambucus got it printed in the Year 1572. It is intitled, Symposium Beatricis. Matthias Corvinus, and his Wife Beatrice of Arragon, are very much praised in it: The Author takes notice in that Book of the particular Regard they had for him (3). The Congregation of the Index has condemned that Work.

[B] He deserves a place among the good Historians. Sambucus speaks thus in praise of Bonfinius: 'Quantum ingenio non ad hoc argumentum modo, sed ad omnem omnino Philosophiam, excelluerit, Dialogi ejus de pudicitia conjugal vulgo testantur, Herodianus, Hermogenes Latini: nec vino hauc opus est hederam. Praeterea tamen neque paucorum esse gentium historias copia & stylo patet (4). — What an excellent Genius he had, not only for this Subject, but for all kind of Philosophy, his Books on Conjugal Chastity, Herodian and Hermogenes in Latin, are an Evidence to the World: These Works need no Recommendation. I cannot omit, that the Histories of few Nations are equal to it in Style and Copiousness.' He adds, that Seldius was wont to say, 'Nullo se in scriptore post Livium & aequales ejus quam ipso hoc Bonfinio vacuas horas libentius ponere solitum. — He never spent his leisure Hours so agreeably in any Author, since Livy and his Contemporaries, as in Bonfinius.' In the Preface to the Dialogues is a Judgment no less favourable. 'Sambuci in Dialogorum Praefatione tale de Bonfinio judicium est, ingenio ad omnes res arduas & laudabiles excellisse, Styloque uti idoneo non ad historiam minus quam Philosophiam vel orationes (5). — Sambucus's Judgment of Bonfinius in the Preface to his Dialogues is this, that he excelled in Ingenuity in all difficult and laudable matters, and that he wrote a Style proper, as well for History, as Philosophy or Orations.

[C] I believe he did not return home, as many learned Men of Italy did, whom Matthias Corvinus had sent for into his Kingdom. Bonfinius tells us, that they returned home poorer than they came. 'Invitati etiam muneribus Poetae, Rhetores, & Grammatici, qui falsi opinione sua miseros longe multas quam adduxerint in Italiam redeunt (6).

[D] He is accused of having been a Slanderer. Matthias Corvinus accuses him of it; he fancies that his Pen was often directed by his complaisance to Matthias, whose Pensioner he was; but he observes, that That Prince was little spared himself. 'Ceterum ut Bonfinii laudes non sunt obscurae, ita dissimulare nequeo nonnihil ipsum officii sui interdum oblitum in mores privatos & vitam calumniose impotentiusque effusum: secus quam Livium, Salutium, Tacitum, Suetonium, in Romanos orbis dominos gentemque togatum fecisse constat (7), idque fortasse redempto a Matthia judicio & calamo ejus, quae rerum seriei nihil detrahunt. Nec Matthiae tamen peperit, quem impudentem, voluptuosum, theatris deditum, ambitiosum, serum, in adjungendis amicis praecipitem, in relinquendis facilem, adulatoribus benignum, immemorem beneficiorum, ausus sit dicere (8). — But as the Merit of Bonfinius is not obscure, so I cannot dissemble it, that he has sometimes a little forgot his Duty, and inveighed against the Lives and Manners of private Persons

(5) Vossius, ubi supra.

(6) Bonfin. Decad. IV. lib. viii. pag. 459.

MATTHIAS CORVINUS roughly treated by Bonfinius.

(7) It is nevertheless true, that most of these Historians do sparingly inveigh against the Vices and Disorders of Rome.

(8) Sambucus in Epist. Dedicator. Hist. Ungaric.

(1) Bonfin. rerum Ungaric. Decad. IV. lib. vii. pag. 463. Edit. 1690.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Vossius de Hist. Lat. p. 659.

(4) Sambucus in Epist. Dedicator.

ing used too many heathenish Expressions in his Stile [E]. His Notes on Horace are not good (f). Moreri's Faults here are more numerous than considerable [F].

(f) Bonfinio nullus ineptus magis, & dum ab aliis diffinitio studiose getit, Siculis gerris vana committitur. . . . No body trifles more than Bonfinius, who, out of a fondness of differing from others, writes the silliest Stuff imaginable. Hadrian. Junius Epist. I. where he gives his Judgment on the Commentaries upon Horace.

(g) Bonfin. Hist. Ungaric. Decad. IV. lib. vii. p. 459.

(10) Zeiller. de Hist. pag. 21.

Persons too reproachfully and weakly, contrary to the practice of Livy, Salust, Tacitus, Suetonius, towards the Romans, Masters of the World, and a Nation of Senators; perhaps Matthias bought his Pen and Judgment in these Cases, which no ways affect the Series of the Story. Nor yet did he spare Matthias, whom he has ventured to call impudent, voluptuous, a lover of Stage-Plays, ambitious, cruel, bawly in taking Friends, easy in leaving them, kind to Flatterers, unmindful of benefits. To this might have been added, that he lays, that Matthias invited all sorts of learned Men to come to him, without excepting the Magicians. 'Viro quaque arte præstantissimo undique disquisivit, conduxitque, Aronomos, Medicos, Mathematicos, Jurisque consultos dilexit. Ne Magos quidem & Nigromantes abominatus est: nullam artem contempsit unquam (9). — He sought out every where, and engaged the most excellent Men in every Art; he loved Astronomers, Physicians, Mathematicians, and Civilians; he had no Aversion even to Magicians and Necromancers; he never despised any Art.' A German, named Zeillerus, observes, that among other things People complained of what Bonfinius said of the unhappy Queen Gertrude: Taxatur etiam a quibusdam ejus Historia Ungarica, imprimis narratio de morte innocentis Reginae Gertrudis. Vid. Brunnerus Part iii. Annal. Boic. pag. 602 (10).

[E] And for having used too many Heathenish Expressions in his Stile.] The Jesuit Raderus is here his Accuser, as the same Zeillerus testifies. 'Matthæus Raderus, volum. ii. Bavaricæ sanctæ, pag. 191. hæc de eo scribit: Bonfinius profanus nimium & paganus scriptor, cum sanctos appellat Deos & numina; Dei matrem numen & Deam. Catholicæ religionis disciplina non novit nec colit nisi unum Deum & unum Numen. Bonfinius dum vult Latine, quod ipsum sincere non potest, scribere, superstitiose & profane, ne quid dicam gravius, loquitur. — Bonfinius is too profane and heathenish a Writer, for he calls the Saints Gods; and Deities; the Mother of God, a Deity and Goddess. The Doctrine of the Catholic Religion knows not, nor worships, any more than one God and one Deity. Bonfinius, while he endeavours to write Latin, which plainly he cannot do, writes superstitiously and profanely, to say nothing worse.' It must be acknowledged, that some Italian Authors have made themselves ridiculous, for scrupling, when they spoke of Christianity, to make use of any other Terms than what they found in the best Latin Authors (11): but I cannot approve Raderus's Nicety, or rather his Partiality. He thinks it strange, that Bonfinius should give the Name of Numen to the Holy Virgin; but is it not the stile of a great many Devotees, as Mr Drelincourt has proved demonstratively (12)?

[F] Moreri's Faults, on this Head, are more numerous than considerable.] He says, that Sambucus added five Books, which were not in the first Edition. He ought to have said fifteen. He says, that Bonfinius translated Hermogenes's Rhetoric; he should have said Hermogenes. He cites Vossius, lib. i. de Hist. Lat. he ought to have cited lib. iii. He quotes Miræus in Aust. he should have said, in Austario. He cites Raderus, tom. III. Bavar. Sanctæ, pag. 191. and immediately after Zeillerus. It may be affirmed, that he quotes him only on the Credit of Zeillerus. Now the latter marks the second Volume of Raderus pag. 191, and does not say that Raderus blames any thing else but the Paganism of Bonfinius's Stile. And yet, if we believe Moreri, that Jesuit censures many things in his History of Hungary. The fault that follows is worse. Moreri takes Bonfinius for a simple Man, who spoke things plainly, and without any design. Never was Criticism false than this. Bonfinius was no Fool: He was cunning, subtle, and worthy of his Country; and when he slandered any Body, or made use of certain Terms, it was not undesignedly. If I take notice of some mistakes, which are plainly Errors of the Press, 'tis for the sake of so many People, who have bought the many Editions of Moreri's Dictionary. It may be there are five hundred Persons, who believe very honestly, that Moreri has cited an History of Austria, written by Aubertus Miræus.

(11) See the Remark (B) of the Article BEM-BUS.

(12) See his Queries to the Bishop of Bayley.

BONGARS (JAMES), in Latin Bongarsius, born at Orleans, was one of the learned Men of the XVIth Century. He followed the prevailing Taste of those Times; that is, he applied himself to Critical Learning, and though he went not so far as your Lipsius's and Casaubon's, yet he acquired great Reputation by it, and perhaps would have equalled them in that Kind of Learning, if he could have spent all his Time in it, as they did; but State Affairs did not permit him. He was employed near thirty Years in the most important Negotiations of King Henry IV (a) [A], for whom he was several times Resident with the Princes of Germany, and afterwards Ambassador. The Letters, which he wrote during his Employments, are very much esteemed [B]. But to return to his Study of Critical Learning,

(a) See the Preface to his Letters, prefixed to the French Translation.

[A] He was employed for thirty Years in the most important Negotiations of King Henry IV. It is true that Bongars negotiated in Germany under the Reign of Henry III. but it was for the King of Navarre, and not for Henry III. Moreri has not made this distinction.

[B] The Letters, which he wrote during his Employments, are very much esteemed.] Tho' he did not, like Bembo and Manucius, reject all terms that are not in the best Roman Authors; yet his Stile is fine, clear, polite, and full of natural Charms; his Letters were translated, when the Dauphin began to learn the Latin Tongue, and it appears by the Epistle Dedicatory to that young Prince, and by the Translator's Preface, that it was thought nothing could be more proper for a Scholar of Quality than to read this Work of Bongars. Because by reading it, a Man learns, at the same time, both to express himself in noble terms about State Affairs, and to judge well of the Conduct of an Ambassador. Not only Words and Phrases are to be learned by it, but also the Course of the Affairs of those times, and many particular Facts, which still have some relation to the present time, and may be of greater use than any thing that is to be found in Cicero's Letters. We are more inclined to concern ourselves with the Affairs of our own Country and our own Age, than with those of the Ancient Romans: besides the latter were managed after a manner infinitely less agreeable to the present time, than that wherein things were managed in the last Age, and the beginning of this. All these Thoughts and many others, to the Praise of Bongars's Letters, are very well set forth in the Translator's Preface. Morhofius observes that the French Letters of Bongars were lately published at Paris. 'Post mortem ejus editæ fuerunt tum hæ Latinæ epistolæ, tum aliæ Gallica Lingua quæ nuper admodum Parisiis lucem viderunt (1). . . . After his Death, were published both these Latin Letters, and others in French, which are very lately come out at Paris.' He is in the right, if he means a small Book intitled, The Plain Secretary, or a Collection of divers Letters of the Sieur James de Bongars, &c. with the Instructions given him by the late Marshal de Bouillon. That Collection contains Thirty four Letters, which are inserted in the Edition of the Hague 1695. I ought not to forget that there reigns, throughout these Letters of Bongars, a certain Character of an honest Man, which prepossesses the Readers very much in his Favour.

(1) Morhof. in Polyhist. pag. 306. That Book of Morhofius was printed in 1688.

Notes

Learning, I must observe, that he published an Edition of Justin, which is very good [C]; he restored many corrupted Passages, and cleared many difficulties by his Notes; and in all this he shewed his Sagacity, his Erudition, and the Pains he had taken to consult good Manuscripts. He had a vast Knowledge of Books both Manuscript, and printed, and made a very great Collection of them. In 1603 he bought, jointly with Paul Petavius, the Manuscripts of Peter Daniel. His share of them fell at last to the Vatican Library [D]. The Library of Bern gained much by that of James Bongars [b], which he had very much increased, in 1604, with the broken Remains of that of Cujacius [E]. He died at Paris in the Year 1612, being Fifty eight Years of Age (c). His Death was new Matter of Grief to Casaubon [F]. The Emperor's Partisans endeavoured to prejudice France, by spreading certain Reports against this Agent [G]. He was of the Reformed Religion,

(b) See Father Jacob's Traité des Bibliothèques, pag. 226.

(c) Witte, Diat. Biograph.

Note, that the French Translation which I have mentioned was printed at Paris in the Year 1668, and re-printed in Holland soon after. A new Edition of it was published in the Year 1694, and it was said in the Title that it was corrected and enlarged. It was to deceive the Reader: this can be said, only of the Edition of the Hague 1695. Many mistakes of the Translator are corrected in that, and many things which he had cut off out of bigotry are restored (2). Note also, that Mr Spanheim, Professor of Divinity at Leyden, caused a Collection of our Bongars's Latin Letters to be printed there in 1647, to which he prefixed a Letter by way of Preface, which was inserted in the Edition of the Hague, 1695.

(2) See the Advertisement in the Edition of the Hague 1695.

[C] He published an Edition of Justin which is very good. I do not mind the Scaligerana, where it is said, that it was another James Bongars, and not he, who had published that Author. Every body ascribes that Work to the same Bongars, who negotiated in Germany for Henry IV (3); and besides, Scaliger speaks in that place so inaccurately, that there is reason to believe he had but a confused notion of what he said. It is twenty Years, says he, since the other Jacobus Bongarsius gave his Justin to Monsieur de l'Escale at Bordeaux. He must then have given it at the farthest in the Year 1558 (4), and the two Vassans must have heard Scaliger say this in the Year 1578. These two things are impossible; the first Edition of James Bongars's Justin is that of Paris 1581, in 8vo. The Vassans were not with Scaliger till after he was settled at Leyden in the Year 1593.

(3) See the Epistle Dedicatory of Grævius's Justin, and a Letter of Frederic Spanheim prefixed to those of Bongars.

(4) The Year in which Julius Caesar Scaliger died.

[D] His Manuscripts ----- fell to the Vatican Library. The curious will be glad to find here a Passage relating to the History of Libraries, taken from a Book of the Learned Father Mabillon. When, in the Year 1562, the Protestants plundered the Abbey of Fleury, they found there a great many good Manuscripts. Peter Daniel (5) making a dexterous use of the Interest he had with Cardinal Cbatillon Commendatory Abbot of that Abbey, got many of those Manuscripts from the Soldiers, and among others a Servius on Virgil, which he published in the Year 1600. After his death (6) his Heirs sold the Manuscripts for the Sum of 1500 Livres to Paul Petavius, and to Bongars. Paul Petavius's share was left to his Son Alexander Petavius, who sold it to the Queen of Sweden. That of Bongars was carried to Strasburg, where he made his residence: He left it by Will to one Granicet (7), who was his Landlady's Son (8). Gruterus, Library-Keeper to the Elector Palatine, persuaded that Prince to buy the Manuscripts which Bongars had left to Granicet, and thus they were carried to Heydelberg, and from thence to Rome (9).

(5) An Advocate at Orleans, and Bailiff of the Abbey of Fleury.

(6) He died in the Year 1603.

(7) I think it should be Gravisset, or rather Gravisset.

(8) She was of Lyons, and a Jeweller's Wife. Mabillon ubi infra.

(9) Mabillon, prefat. libri de Liturgia Gallicæ, published at Paris in the Year 1685.

[E] He had increased his Library very much with the broken Remains of Cujacius's Library. What he says upon this, in a Letter of the nineteenth of January 1604, shews so plainly the great Fondness he had for Study and Books, that I cannot forbear placing it here. 'Whilst I was on this Journey, I could not write to you, because I was wholly taking up with my Domestic Affairs, which it was necessary for me to put into some Order before my departure. In that very Occupation, the greatest of my cares has been to seek some Remains of Mr Cujacius's Library. Doubtless you will laugh very heartily, when you represent to your self that crowd of People that go to the Court as to a Fair, to make their Fortunes, and to endeavour to get Money from the King, and that at the same time a Courtier, as I am, who is not overstocked with Money, should go into by-places to bestow part of his Estate upon Books and Papers half eaten by Worms. By this you may see whether I am very covetous. When I am to buy Books, I value neither Pains nor Expence. Would to God I were free from business and at leisure to read them. Then I would neither envy the Riches of Mr de Rosny, nor the golden Mountains of the Perfians (10). [F] His Death was new Matter of Grief to Casaubon. That Critic's Letters testify that he was extremely obliged to James Bongars, and that he esteemed him very much. See particularly the Six hundred and ninety eighth, and the Six hundred and ninety ninth, wherein he speaks of his death. There he grieves because that good Man had not received at Paris the Funeral Honours that were due to him, and which infallibly would have been done him in Germany. 'Qui si in Germania diem ultimum obisset, habuissent docti viri rationem funeris ejus, & orandæ illius memorie pro meritis ingentibus tæ maxime (11).----- Who if he had died in Germany learned Men would have taken care of his Funeral, and adorning his Memory, agreeably to the great Merits of the deceased. Mr Colomies is mistaken when he says that Bongars died at Bern (12).

(10) Bongars, Letter 35, pag. 99. Edit. of the Hague 1695. See also the 47th Letter of Lingelheim.

(11) Casaub. Epist. ccxcviii. pag. 382. Edit. 1656.

(12) Colomies, Biblioth. choisie, pag. 189.

[G] Certain Reports were spread against this Agent. Cardinal d'Offat's Letters inform us of the matter. It is reported here, (this he writ from Rome to Mr de Villeroy the second of December 1600) 'That the King keeps a Gentleman with the Protestant Princes in Germany, named Bongars, who tells them, and those of their Sect, that the King, notwithstanding his Conversion, has not altered his Opinion in his heart, but only makes an outward show in order to enjoy his Kingdom peaceably, complying with the times as it is his Interest. I cannot believe that the said Bongars speaks in a manner, so contrary to Truth and Sincerity, for which the King ought to be commended, not only to the Catholics, but even to the Protestants, who otherwise could not trust him, nor would use their Interest for him: but I take it to be a Savoyard or Spanish Invention (13). That Cardinal had too much sense not to apprehend the prejudice this might do the King at the Court of Rome; therefore he thought it best to deny that Bongars had said any such thing. It was offered to be proved to him; let us see the consequences of those offers. 'Several Letters, says he, were put into my hands, written in Latin to a learned German here, named Gaspar Schoppius, some written by the said Bongars, and others by one Vesler who lives at Ausburg. I understood by all those Letters, that Schoppius had been a Huguenot, and that, having been converted in this City, he writ to his Friends that were Huguenots, and among others to the said Bongars, some sharp and injurious Letters, more fit to exasperate and harden them in their Opinion, than to gain and convert them, which Bongars somewhat relented, and answered him bluntly, but not without great Respect and Modesty: and in all those Letters there is not one word concerning the above said Discourse, nor any thing like it: So that the production of those Letters justifies him in my Opinion.

(13) d'Offat, Letter cxxi. lib. vi. pag. 595.

ligion; but there is reason to suspect from his Letters, that he had some Scruples about the Civil-Wars of the Protestants [H]. The Public is indebted to him for the Publication of several Authors, who wrote the History of the Expeditions into Palestine (d). I do not think that he was ever married: A French Lady, whom he was to marry, died on the very Day appointed for the Wedding, in the Year 1597 [I].

(d) That Work is intitled, Gesta Dei per Francos. It was printed at Hanaw in 1611, in two Vol. in Folio.

(e) Colomies Biblioth. choise, p. 189.

He studied at Strasburg in the Year 1571, and had an Anabaptist for his Tutor (e). He studied under Cujacius in 1576 (f). The Answer which he published in Germany to a Piece, wherein the bad Success of the Expedition of the Year 1587 was imputed to the French, who accompanied the Germans, was praised by Thuanus [K]. But that Answer, though never so glorious to the Author, is nothing, if pinion. But I find among the Letters of the abovementioned Velfer, that those which he said Bongars writ to the said Schoppius, passed through the hands of Velfer, who opened and read them and sent them afterwards to Schoppius; and there is one of Velfer's to Schoppius, wherein he suggests to him that in replying to Bongars he should reproach him with the Conversion of his King, and that he had said such and such things about it to the Protestant Princes of Germany. But it appears that this Velfer is an Enemy of Bongars, and partial to the House of Austria, as Schoppius was maintained by the late Cardinal Madruccio, who was so much for the said House, that the King of Spain had trusted him with the Secret of the Conclave, rather than his own Embassadors, or the Spanish Cardinals. So that I take this Imputation, and Charge laid on Bongars, to be a meer Calumny, contrived chiefly to prejudice the King (14). As for my self, I look upon that which Velfer would have had James Bongars reproached with, to be probable enough. There were but very few among the Protestants, who, during the first Years of Henry IV's Catholicism, were persuaded that he had altered his Opinion. His Envoy in Germany was not a Man who could easily imagine, that at the age of Henry IV, one may begin to believe Transubstantiation and what depends on it. It is therefore probable that he might have said, without thinking to tell a lie, that his Master's Conversion was a work of meer necessity, and like the Rifus Sardonius only from the Teeth outwards. But suppose that he judged otherwise; can it be thought that he would scruple to have recourse to an officious Lie, to prevent the Protestants of Germany from withdrawing themselves from Henry IV? Can it be thought that, in order to keep them in the Interest of France, he would have made a difficulty to tell them confidently, that the King was still a good Huguenot in his Heart, though he believed no such thing? It is just as when du Bellay made the same Princes believe that Francis I was not averse to the Reformation (15). Ay, will some say, but du Bellay was a Papist, and Bongars was a Protestant. What then? A Protestant Embassador is made like another; he makes the same use of Political Address that others do, and if he suffers himself to be bubbled, it is not out of Zeal, or out of any Scruple of Conscience. Take notice, that, according to the commonly received Notions of things, Bongars would have done nothing against the duty of a Man of Honour, in doing his Master good services by the Insinuations in question. The main thing was to take care that the Spaniards should know nothing of it.

(f) See below, Citation (51) of the Article B.O.DIN.

(14) Id. Letter cxlvii. lib. vii. pag. 602, dated from Rome the 2d of January 1601.

(15) See above, the Article BEL-LAY (WILLIAM du).

[H] He had some Scruples about the Civil-Wars of the Protestants. Mr Colomies made this Remark, and has inserted it in the One hundred and fiftenth Page of his Observationes Sacrae, printed at Rochelle in the Year 1679, and in the Two hundred and Twenty sixth Page of a Collection which he printed in England in the Year 1687. 'Christiansimè in hanc rem Jacobus Bongarsius, Aurelianensis, Henrici 4. ad Germaniae Principes olim legatus, vir pietate ac eruditione illustris, in quadam ad Joachimum Camerarium Joachimi F. Epistola: Hic, clarissime & prudentissime Domine, effundam in sinum tuum amicum & candidum, quæ me sæpe agitant, nec turbant tamen. Repete & nostros Duces qui armis suis Religionem prætulunt. Videbis viros vestros à Carolo V. captoque & affectu contumeliosis, privatos etiam bonis. In Gallia captum primo bello Condæum, tertio occisum: Amiralium semper victum; tandem trucidatum cum magna Procerum turba. In Belgio, Aurantium iidem globo prostratum. Certè judicare aliud non possum, quàm ingrata illorum arma Deo fuisse (16).—Most Christian-like to this Purpose, James Bongars of Orleans formerly Embassador from Henry IV, to the Princes of Germany, a Man famous for his Piety and Learning, in a Letter to Joachim Camerarius the Son. Here, most excellent and prudent Sir, I will pour into your friendly and candid Bosom what often moves but does not disturb me. Consider now our Generals who have made Religion a Pretence for their Arms. You will see your People beat, taken Prisoners, harrassed, and deprived of their Goods by Charles V. In France, in the first War Condé taken, in the third killed: the Admiral always beat, and at last murdered, with a great number of the Nobility. In the Low-Countries, the Prince of Orange killed with a Ball. Certainly I can judge no other than that these Arms were displeasing to God.' This Passage of Bongars is in his nineteenth Letter to Joachim Camerarius. It has been a little curtailed in the Paris Edition. See the Advertisement of the Edition of the Hague 1695.

[I] A French Lady, whom he was to marry, died on the very day appointed for the Wedding. Her Name was Odette Spifame de Chalange. They had been near six Years in love with each other, and had desired to be married: but the Journeys he was obliged to make for the King's Service prevented the execution of their mutual Desires during that time. Nuptias utrinque optatas peregrinationes meæ & regia negotia hactenus impediverunt (17). The King not permitting Bongars to come home to marry her, she was so obliging as to go with her Father to her Lover; they had agreed to marry at Basil. She came to Montbeliard in the middle of the Winter, and through many dangers: and understanding that Bongars could not come and meet here till eight days after she went to him as far as Strasburg. There it was resolved to perform the Ceremony of the Wedding; but the poor Lady fell sick eight days after, and died the fourth day of her sickness. Bongars was extraordinarily afflicted at it, as appears by his Letters. I have taken these Particulars from the Letter he wrote to John William Stuckius the eighth of February 1597; it is in the seventh Page of the Edition of Strasburg 1660, and in the Sixty sixth Page of the Edition of the Hague 1695. That Edition of Strasburg contains but a small part of James Bongars's Letters; but those from Lingelsheim to him were added to them; which I should have liked better, had not a great many Proper Names been left out, which hinders the Reader from understanding what Lingelsheim speaks of in those places, and makes one believe that those Passages were curious. I do not believe that Mr Morhof apprehended any thing, in the Advertisement to the Reader, which is prefixed to Bongars's and Lingelsheim's Letters (18).

(16) Colomies. Observat. sac. pag. 115, 116.

(17) Bongars. Epistol. pag. 7. Edit. Argentor. 1660.

(18) See the Article LINGELSHEIM, Remark [B].

[K] His Answer - - - concerning the Expedition of 1587 was praised by Thuanus. These are the Words of the great Historian. 'Donavus an no infrequent - - - librum Germanicâ linguâ edit, quo facti invidiam omnem à se amoluebatur, eamque in Navarri tarditatem, Bullionii imperitiam, & Gallorum Ducum imprudentiam, sive in distribuentis mansionibus malignitatem quæ Germanis tumultuandi occasionem dedisset, re-torquebat; idque captato tempore fecerat Dona-vius, if it be compared to that, which he had made to a Bull of Pope Sixtus, and which he had the Courage to post up in Rome. I have not read this any where, but in Mr Varillas, whose Words I shall recite [L], and I will make some Critical Notes upon them [M]. It was Bongars that published the Questions, which the Jesuit Cotton had drawn up to be put the Devil [N].

vius, cum Francofurtenses propediem Nundinae exiturae essent, ne ad scriptum responderi posset, interea volitaret illud per manus Germanorum, & nemine contradicte imponeres ea mentibus, quae haud facile postea eximi possent. Verum astu cognito, Jacobus Bongarsius juvenis ingenio & eruditione praestans, & Gallici decoris perquam studiosus, qui Navarri res istae procurabat, scripti exemplo ab amicis accepto, extemporaneo sed aculeato scripto contrario, quod & eadem festinatione typis mandari curavit, antequam Nundinae exirent, respondit, & omnem rei male gestae culpam primum — rejicit — deinde in (19) Thuanus, Restitutus pag. 70, 71.

(19). — Donau the Year following — published a Book in the German Language, in which he shifted all the blame of the thing from himself, and laid it on the Dilatoriness of Navarre, the unskilfulness of Bouillon, and the Imprudence of the French Officers, or their Malice in appointing quarters, which occasioned the Germans to mutiny; and he chose the time for publication, just before the end of the Fair of Franckfort, that no answer might be made to it, and in the mean time, the Book might be dispersed among the Germans, and (nothing being said against it) make such impressions in their minds, as could not easily be effaced. But the Trick being discovered, James Bongars, a young Man of excellent Genius and Learning, and zealous for the Honour of the French, who was charged with the Affairs of Navarre there, getting a Copy of the Piece from his Friends, replied in an extemporary, but stinging, Answer, which he got printed with like expedition, before the Fair was ended, and removed the charge of the ill Success first — then, &c. Note that these words are not to be found in the Editions of Thuanus, but they were in his Manuscript. See Thuanus Restitutus.

[L] He had the Courage to post up, in Rome, his Answer to the Bull of Sixtus V. I have not read this any where but in Varillas, whose Words I shall recite.] Having related the violent Proceedings of Sixtus V against the King of Navarre, and against the Prince of Condé, he adds, that the Bull of That Pope remained a long time posted up in the Field of Flora, till James Bongars, a Calvinist, and Citizen of Orléans, who was then at Rome, tho' at that time he was but seventeen Years of Age, resolved to revenge the Honour of France, aspersed in the two first Princes of the Blood, and acquitted himself of it in such an undaunted manner, that it deserves a place in History (20). — As he was very learned, he composed a very strong and satirical Answer to the Pope's Bull. He transcribed it himself, in form of a Placart, and taking the opportunity of a very dark Night, fixed it up near the Bull in the Field of Flora. He was so fortunate, that he was neither perceived, nor so much as suspected; and it would have been unknown to this time, if he had not spoke of it afterwards himself, and given convincing proofs of it. He appealed, in the Name of the two Princes, from the Bull of Sixtus V, who called himself Pope of Rome, to the Court of the Peers of France; he gave his Holiness the Lie, as to the crime of Heresy, whereof he accused them; and he offered to prove in their behalf, in a Council lawfully assembled, that the Pope was a Heretic himself: He called him Antichrist, if he did not submit to it, and declared a perpetual and irreconcilable War against him in their Name. He protested, that the wrong that was done to the Most Christian King, to the Royal Family, and to the three States of the Kingdom, would be revenged on the Court of Rome: To that end, he implored the assistance of all truly Christian Princes, and conjured all the Allies of the French Monarchy, to oppose the Pope's Tyranny, and the fatal designs of the League (21). Varillas affirms, that, tho' all the Accounts that he had seen of that Action, suppose that Bongars was then but seventeen Years of Age, he cannot be persuaded that a Writing, of that force, was the first Essay of so young a Man (22). He adds, I have enquired into the cause of that Error a long time (23), and what seems to me most likely, is, that Stephen de la Boisse had writ, being likewise but seventeen Years of Age, the famous Satire against all the Monarchs in the World, intituled le Contre-Un, and that this Satire had been at least as much admired for its Strength, as blamed for the Temerity of the Author; that la Boisse was a Catholic, and that the Calvinists, in order to set up a Man against him, that came near his Style, pretended that Bongars, who was of their Communion, was not older than he, when at Rome he defended the Dignity of the two first Princes of the Blood of France, with the utmost hazard of his Life. However Bongars staid not long there, and after he had repassed the Alps, (Pope Sixtus V not having been able to discover, that it was he who had treated him so ill) the Court of France gave him eleven solemn Embassies successively, of which he acquitted himself with great Honour. I have only seen the last, which is among the Manuscripts of Lomenie in the King's Library; it relates to the Treaties of Henry the Great for the Succession of Cleves and Juliers, and I think is in some manner sufficient to comfort the Public for the loss of the rest.

(20) Varillas, Hist. de Henry III. lib. ix. pag. 79. ad ann. 1585. Dutch Edition.

(21) Id. ibid. pag. 30.

(22) Id. in the Preface.

(23) Id. ib. fol. 7. verso.

[M] And I'll make some Critical Notes upon them.] I. He is to blame for not telling us whence he had his Account of this Action of Bongars. He could not be ignorant that our most celebrated Historians (24) take no notice of that Circumstance; so that it must be very secret; it was therefore requisite that he should discover how he had been more lucky than so many other Writers. II. I defy all the world to name any good Author, who says that Bongars was but seventeen Years of Age, when Sixtus V fulminated his Bull against the King of Navarre in 1585. Nay, I question whether any bad Authors have said it before Varillas. It is certain that Bongars was then in his Thirty first Year. III. Varillas should have said Stephen de la Boetie, and not Stephen de la Boisse. IV. The Contre-Un is ill defined, a famous Satire against all the Monarchs in the World. V. La Boetie was above seventeen Years of Age when he wrote that Piece. Thuanus observes that he wrote it in the Year 1548, when he was scarce nineteen Years of Age (25), and that he died in the Year 1563, not much above Thirty three Years of Age (26). VI. There was never a more fantastical Notion, than to imagine, that the Protestants lessened Bongars's Age, to have an occasion to boast that they had produced as admirable a Man, as la Boetie, among the Catholics. VII. There is a great deal of Exaggeration in the Eleven solemn Embassies, which the Court of France gave to Bongars, according to Varillas. They were most of them meer Deputations under the Character of Envoy, or Resident, and it ought to be remembered that the first Deputations did not proceed from the Court of France, but only from the King of Navarre. 'Ab eo etiam (Henrico IV) ad Germaniae Principes creperis rebus saepius missus, suam Regi fidem, candorem, & integritatem omnibus probavit, prolegati munere aliquoties, legati semel & quidem pro dignitate functus (27). — Being likewise several times sent by him [Henry IV.] to the Princes of Germany in critical Affairs, he gave proofs of his Fidelity to the King, and his Candour and Integrity to every body, discharging sometimes the Office of Envoy, and once of Ambassador, and that with due dignity.'

(24) Thuanus, Mezerai, Pertz, &c.

(25) Thuanus, Hist. lib. v. pag. 105.

(26) Id. lib. xxxv. circa fin.

(27) Frid. Spanhem. Epist. literis Bongarsii praefixa.

[N] It was he who published the Questions, which the Jesuit Cotton had drawn up to be put to the Devil.] Benedict Turretin, Pastor and Professor of Divinity at Geneva, examining the Reasons given by that Jesuit to justify his Conduct with respect to those Interrogations, had this Objection to answer. Some made them amount to thirty; some to forty, fifty, sixty, &c. Hence Father Cotton concluded that that they did not proceed fairly; and that it was a piece of Calumny. 'It may be, answered Mr Turretin (28), That some of them did not transcribe all the Questions; for every one is not so curious — but the Original Paper, from which that swarm of Interrogations proceeds, has the number which is printed in Latin and in French, and it was not forgotten in the Physiognomia Jesuitica. Now the above said Original was seen by a great number of illustrious Persons yet living, who can testify it; and moreover, he who got it printed with that Preface, was one of the King's Officers in an honourable Post, to wit, the late Monsieur Bongars, to whom Father Cotton having complained of the Publication of the Anti-Cotton; he made answer, That he was not the Author of it; but that he had indeed caused his Questions to the Devil to be printed.'

(a) Gery, Apologie des censures de Louvain, & de Douai, p. 50, 51.

(b) See Mr Simon, Nouvelles Observations, p. 495, 496.

(c) Id. pag. 495.

BONONIA (JOHN de), a Sicilian by Nation, Archdeacon of Palermo (a), Bachelor of the Faculty of Paris, and Chaplain to the Emperor Charles V, was Professor at Louvain in the XVIth Century. In the Year 1553 he was at the Assembly of Divines, who, at the Instance of that Emperor, examined whether a certain Country, which he does not name, and in favour of which a Translation of the Scripture was made, ought to enjoy the Liberty of reading it (b). They decided unanimously, that they ought not to have that Liberty continued to them. Bononia was one of the hottest against the translating of the Scriptures into the Vulgar Tongue, and suspected those of Heresy who approved of it (c). In the Year 1555 he published a Book at Louvain about the Doctrine of Predestination. I shall observe below what Judgment a Jansenist gave of it [A].

[A] He published a Book — — — a Jansenist gave this Judgment of it.] That Work, dedicated to Charles V, is intituled, De aeterna Dei Prædestinatione & Reprobatione, &c. The Author shews some subtilty of Wit in it, but no great Solidity; he forms a System concerning Grace and Predestination, peculiar to himself, which he pretends to build upon St Chrysostom, without seeming to lay any great stress on St Augustin's Doctrine, or to understand the Opinions of those two Saints. Neither can I tell whether he understood his own well; for there are gross Contradictions in it. He has some Expressions which seem to ascribe a Sovereign Power to Grace over the Soul of Man, and an efficacious Operation upon it; but a Page or two after you will find, that he gives so great a Power to the Will, that he believes it capable to make all the Operations of Grace useless. In short, he is a Man that confounds every thing, who thinks sometimes he is opposing the Opinion of the Catholics, when he only attacks that of the Heretics (1). — — — He believes that the Opinion, which admits the Foreknowledge of the good and ill use of Free-will and Grace, (for he distinguishes those two Opinions) are contrary to the Apostle, to St Augustin, and even to Faith, being nothing else but meer Pelagianism (2). He acknowledges, that he had grounded his System on new Notions, and so different from the common Doctrine of the Schools, that at first, he almost despaired of bringing any one Divine to his Opinion (3).

(1) Gery, Apologie des censures, p. 51.

(2) Id. ibid. p. 52.

(3) Gery, id. ibid. pag. 53.

(a) Seckendorf. Hist. Lutheran. lib. v. pag. 273. lit. d.

(b) Id. ibid. pag. 272.

(c) Maimbourg, Hist. du Luther. lib. ii. pag. 120. Post biennium in seculo, vagi inter scholares Academicos conversationes, Wittenbergæ exadum — — — facta est Lutheri (si Diis placeat) ux. — — — After two Years spent in the World in loose Conversation with the Scholars of the University of Wittenberg, Luther has taken her for a Wife. Cochleus de Act. & Script. Luther. pag. 102.

(1) Hist. du Lutheran. liv. ii. pag. 120.

(2) Erasim. Epist. xi. lib. xviii.

(3) It should be Bore, or à Bore.

(4) It was but two Years.

(5) Hist. Lutheran. liv. ii. pag. 18. n. 11.

REFLECTIONS upon what some People affect to say, that Luther married a very handsome Nun.

BORE (CATHERINE de), Wife of Martin Luther, was the Daughter of a private Gentleman (a). She left the Monastery of Nimptschen, where she was a Nun, in the Year 1523. One Leonard Coppe, a Senator of Torgau, took her and eight other Nuns out. That Action, done in the holy Week, having made a great noise, and given much Offence; the Elector of Saxony did not think fit to approve it openly; he was contented to provide by private Gratifications for the Maintenance of those unveiled Nuns: But Luther published an Apology for them, and for Leonard Coppe, who had so well assisted them in their Design of leaving their Convent (b). Some have said, that Catherine de Bore, having been carried to Wittenberg, lived there in all kind of Freedom among the young Students of the University (c), and was very profuse of her Kisses (d), till Martin Luther married her two Years after; but the Lutherans maintain, that she behaved herself very modestly, and that she had a good Reputation (e). Those who say, that Luther who still wore the Habit of his Order, having seen the nine Nuns, who had deserted the Convent of Nimptschen, very much liked our Catherine, because she was very handsome [A], and designed her for his Wife, have but little consulted his Letters.

(d) Bellam illam Catharinam jam annos aliquot Wittenbergæ varia per studiorum oscula volutata, sibi uxorem duxit. — — — He married the beautiful Catharine who had now for some Years wallowed in the embraces of the Students at Wittenberg. Lindan. dubit. Dial. 1. p. 104.

(e) Seckendorf. lib. ii. pag. 15.

They

[A] She was very handsome.] Let us hear Father Maimbourg; Among those nine libertine and unveiled Nuns, who were all Maids of Quality, there was one named Catherine de Bore, whom Luther, who was yet in a Religious Habit, thought VERY HANDSOME, and fell violently in Love with (1). Erasmus praises this young Woman's Beauty. 'Lutherus, says he (2) duxit uxorem, puellam MIRE VENUSTAM, ex clara familia Bornæ (3), sed ut narrat indotatam, quæ ante annos complures (4) Vestalis esse desiderat. — Luther married a very beautiful young Woman, of the Illustrious Family of Bore, but without Fortune (as it is said) who had thrown off a Nuns Habit some Years before.' Mr Seckendorf thinks there is a great deal of Exaggeration in those Words as to Catherine de Bore's Beauty (5). No body is more to be credited in this Affair than he, and therefore we may say, that Luther's Wife was not extraordinary handsome. But let us reflect a little on the artificial and malicious Design of those, who affect to represent this Nun as a very handsome Woman. Their aim is, generally, to reflect upon Luther's Choice, and to conclude from thence, that he was too much given to his Pleasures, and that he did not marry purely to bridle his Incontinence, but to satisfy Nature in the highest degree of Concupiscence. They put an ill construction upon a thing which may be very innocent: No Man, that desires to marry, is forbidden to make choice of a handsome Wife, rather than of one that is not so; nay, one may have a very good reason for so doing; a Man may be afraid his Conjugal Affection should unluckily cool, a thing most opposite to the Duties of a Christian Husband; I say, he may fear such a thing, if he makes choice of a Wife that is but ordinary. If therefore, in hopes of being always a good and affectionate Husband, as Reason and Religion require, he makes choice of a handsome Woman, preferably to any other, is it not certain, that he goes upon an honest Principle? And how do we know, but that, if Catherine de Bore was a beautiful Woman, Luther might choose her among the nine Nuns from this laudable Motive? I might say, that the fairer the Object was, the more Luther was to be excused for not being able to resist the Temptation; and it is very likely, that if he had married a homely Woman, his Enemies would have cried

They would have seen there, that he resolved to marry her all on a sudden, in the Year 1525 [B], and that This Resolution was put in Execution with the utmost speed to please his Father, and to put a Stop to Scandal [C]. It is even true, that he made haste, because, as he believed he should not live long, and was unwilling to die a Bachelor, lest he should transgress a Commandment, and retain something of Popery, and frustrate the Desires of his Father, who wished he was already a Grandfather, he thought he had no time to lose [D]. Besides there was a little Share of Spite to the cried out, that his Incontinence was so great, that it wanted no Charms to kindle it. In a word, I might say, that one would be more ready to pardon a Person who should break an obligatory Fast at the sight of a well-dressed Partridge, than one who should do the same thing, at the sight of a piece of ruffy Bacon. But in truth, this Apology does not seem to be satisfactory; it has two Faces, and therefore it is better to let it alone: For it might be said, all things being otherwise equal, that of two Men, who should have the liberty to choose a very delicious Ragoo, or a piece of Beef, he that contented himself with the Beef, would do an act of Sobriety, and shew that he eat only to live, and to satisfy natural necessity; whereas the other, that should make choice of a Ragoo, would do an act of Gluttony and Daintiness, and shew that he only thinks to satisfy his voluptuous Appetite. The application is easy: If Luther had only looked for a remedy against Incontinence, and an opportunity to beget Children for the Church and his Country, he would have imitated him, who prefers a piece of Beef before the greatest Dainties. It were therefore to no purpose to judge of those things by a Comparison with eating. But besides the reason of Fact, I mean, besides Catharine de Bore's being not very handsome, one might alledge other Reasons of Right in favour of Martin Luther.

[B] His resolution to marry her was taken all on a sudden, in the Year 1525. Eight Days before his Epipouals (6), he wrote to Rubelius, That if his Example was necessary for the Cardinal of Brandenburg, Archbishop of Mentz, he would soon marry, tho' he had been ever in doubt whether he was fit for Marriage, and that besides tho' he intended to marry before he died, his Marriage might perhaps, prove an Engagement like that of St Joseph. 'Si Elector forte dicet, cur ego ipse non ducam uxorem, qui omnes ad nubendum incito, respondebis, me semper adhuc dubitasse an idoneus ad id sim. Attamen si meo matrimonio Elector confirmari possit, propediem paratus essem ad exemplum ei præbendum. Nam & alias cogito, antequam ex hac vita discedam, ut matrimonium contraham, quia id à Deo exigi puto, licet forte futura esset desponsatio Josephica (7). — If the Elector chance to ask why I myself do not take a Wife, who persuade every body else to marry, answer him, that I have always doubted whether I were fit for it. Yet if the Elector could be determined by my Marriage, I would soon be ready to set him an Example. For on other accounts, I think to marry before I leave the World, because I think it is required by God, tho' perhaps it may be a Marriage like that of Joseph. A Man, who speaks thus, seems to look as yet on Marriage at some distance, and therefore, Luther must have changed his mind very suddenly. He thought that his change was a work of Providence, and he says that the wise Men of his Party, who blamed his Marriage so much, were forced to acknowledge the Hand of God in it.

Vehementer irritantur sapientes inter nostros: rem coguntur Dei fateri, sed personæ larva tam meæ quam puellæ illos dementat, impia cogitare & dicere facit (8). — The wise Men of our party are greatly provoked: they are forced to own the thing to be of God, but the disguise of the Persons, both of myself and the young Woman, makes them mad, and makes them think and say wicked things. In another place he speaks in this manner: Dominus me subito aliaque cogitantem conjecit mire in conjugium cum Catharina Borensi moniali illa (9). — The Lord brought me suddenly, when I was thinking of other matters, to a Marriage with Catharine de Bore, the Nun. Observe nevertheless, that he shews in a Letter of the fifth of May, of the same Year, that he had a design to marry his Catherine.

VOL. II.

[C] To put a stop to Scandal. This is what he wrote to Rubelius the fifteenth of June 1525. 'Postulante patre meo conjugium iniit, & ut linguas maledicorum & impedimenta vitæ, congressum nuptialem propter infortui (10). — I took a Wife in obedience to my Father's Commands, and hastened the Consummation, in order to shun the Tongues of Slanders, and all obstacles.' Had we no other Passage but this, we could not certainly know the nature of the Slanders which he designed to avoid; one might think, that he had no other aim than to put a stop to a thousand foolish Stories, that are reported in Towns during the time of Courtship. At that time People will say what they know, and what they know not; and it happens but too often, that the Broachers of News hinder the conclusion of a Marriage; but when the Business is concluded, it affords little occasion for talk. It might therefore be said, that Luther was not willing to give those Newsmongers time to spread the News of his design through the Town, and that therefore he put it in execution as soon as he had formed it; but we know by some other passages of his Letters, that there was a necessity to put a stop to another sort of Reports. Os obstruxi, says he to his Friend Spalatinus, infamantibus me cum Catharina Boreana (11). — I have stopped their Mouths who reproach me with Catharine de Bore. Vera est itaque fama, me esse cum Catharina subito copulatum antequam ora cogeret audire tumultuosa in me, sicut solet fieri (12). — To another he says the Report is true that I am married on a sudden to Catharine, before I was obliged to bear a Clamour against me as usual on such occasions. In all likelihood they spoke ill of him and her, because without doubt he saw her familiarly. He loved her, and called her His Catharine. Fortasse etiam rumoribus mota de quibus Lutherus epistola supra allegata queritur, quibus tamen ipse aliquam occasionem dedidisse videtur, optime enim cupiebat virginis, & suam vocare solebat Catharinam (13). — Perhaps too she was moved by the Reports, of which Luther complains in the Letter above cited, for which nevertheless he seems to have given some occasion: for he was very fond of her and used to call her his Catharine. Mr Seckendorf conjectures that those prattlings were one of the Reasons, that made her declare she would not marry Doctor Gladius; but that she was very willing to be married either to Luther, or Amstdorf. Let us add to all this what Melanchthon writes on that Marriage. Si quid vulgo fertur aliud indecentius, id mendacium & calumniam esse perspicuum est (14). — If common fame says any thing indecent, it is manifest it is a Lie and a Calumny.

[D] He made haste, because, as he believed he should not live long, he thought he had no time to lose. Here is the Proof of the two or three Facts contained in the Period that begins with the Text of this Remark. Ecce, quia sic infamant, (they are Luther's words (15), he means those who exclaimed against him on account of the War of Boors) ita me paravi, ut ante mortem meam, in statu quo creatus sum, à Deo inveniar, & quantum potero, nihil ex prior vita mea papistica retineam. Furant itaque tanto acrius, & hæc ultima & valedictoria erunt. Mens enim mihi præfagit, me à Deo ad gratiam suam evocatum iri. Itaque, postulante patre meo, conjugium iniit. — See, because they are thus mad, I have so prepared my self that, before I die, I may be found by God in the State in which I was created, & if possible retain nothing of my former Popish Life. Therefore let them rave yet more, and this will be their last farewell. For my mind presages that I shall soon be called by God into his Grace. Therefore at my Father's Desire, I have taken a Wife.

(6) The 3d of June 1525: The Day that they were betrothed was the 11th of June. See Seckendorf, lib. ii. pag. 16. n. 3.

(7) Lutherus, Oper. Tom. III. fol. 140. apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. §. 5.

(8) Luther. in Epist. ad Michael. Stifellum, pag. 204, dated the 10th of June 1525, apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. §. 5.

(9) Luther. in Epist. ad Wenceslaus Lincium, dated the 20th of June, cited by Seckendorf, lib. ii. §. 5.

(10) Lutherus, Tom. III. fol. 150. cited by Seckendorf, lib. ii. n. 4.

(11) Lutheri Epist. lib. ii. p. 204. apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. n. 5.

(12) Epist. ad Amstorfium, lib. ii. pag. 295, dated the 22d of June, apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. n. 7.

(13) Seckendorf, Hist. Lutherana, lib. ii. pag. 17. n. 3.

(14) Melanch. apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. n. 10.

(15) Epist. ad Rubelium, Tom. III. f. 150, dated the 15th of June, cited by Seckendorf, lib. ii. §. 5. n. 4.

(f) See the Remark [E].

the Papists in this Design of his Marriage (f). This young Woman refused the Man whom he advised her to marry, and told Amldorf that such a Marriage did not please her; but that if Luther or Amldorf would take her to Wife, she was ready to accept of either of them [E]. There went a Report that she was brought to bed soon after her Marriage [F]; but Erasmus, who had wrote that News to one of his Friends, acknowledged the Falsity of it a little after. Luther, with all his Courage, was at first a little put out of Countenance, by the Clamours which his Marriage raised both at home and abroad [G]. But he quickly took heart again,

(16) Lutheri Epist. ad Amldorf. cited by Seckendorf. lib. ii. n. 7.

(17) Luther. Epist. ad Ruhejium apud Seckendorf. lib. ii. n. 2.

(18) Ad. ann. 1525, pag. 274. apud Seckendorf. pag. 17. n. 8.

(19) Ibid.

(20) Ibid. n. 9.

(21) See above, Situation (3).

'Wife.' In another Letter he speaks thus. 'Spero enim me breve tempus adhuc victurum, & hoc novissimum obsequium parenti meo postulanti nolui denegare spe prolis, simul ut confirmem facta quæ docui (16). --- For I hope I shall live a little longer, and I would not deny this last Obedience to my Father, who required it in hopes of Issue, and also to confirm the Doctrines I have taught.' And this is what he says in another place. 'Alias cogito antequam ex hac vita discedam ut matrimonium contraham, quia id à Deo exigi puto (17). --- Besides I think I shall marry before I leave the World, because I believe it is commanded by God.'

[E] She refused to marry Glacius --- but for Luther or Amldorf she was ready to accept of either of them.] We know this from a Manuscript Memorial, which Abraham Scultetus has inserted in his Annals (18). The Man, whom Luther had desired Catharine to marry, was a Minister of Orlamund, one Doctor Glacius. Perhaps he might be called in French, le Docteur de la Glace [i. e. Doctor Ice] (a). The young Woman refused him; Vellet Lutherus, vellet Amldorfius, se paratam cum alterutro bonisum inire matrimonium: cum D. Glacio nullo modo. Luther, having heard this on one side, and having heard on the other, that if he married, he would make all the World, and the Devil himself, laugh, resolved to marry the Nun Catharine, to spite the World and the Devil. 'Hoc ubi Lutherus intellexit, audissetque ex D. Hieronymi Schurffii ore: Si Monachus ille uxorem duceret, risuros mundum universum & diabolum ipsum, facturumque ipsum irritas actiones suas universas: ut ægre faceret mundo & diabolo, ut parenti etiam hoc suadenti gratificaretur, Catharinam sibi uxorem ducendam censuit (19). --- When Luther understood this, and heard from the Mouth of Jerom Schurffius: That if that Monk married, all the World and the Devil himself would laugh at him, and he would undo all he had done: in order to vex the World and the Devil, and gratify his Father who desired it, he resolved to marry Catharine.' This agrees with what he wrote the fifteenth of May 1525, to Rubelius: 'Si domum venero ad mortem me Deo juvante præparabo, & novos istos dominos & latrones expectabo --- Illis autem ut ægre faciam, si fieri poterit, Catharinam meam uxorem ducam, antequam moriar, si pergere eos intellexero: neque enim os mihi obtruent, nec gaudium adiment (20). --- If I get home, I will, by God's Assistance, prepare myself for Death, and wait for these new Lords and Robbers --- But to vex them, if possible, I will marry my Catharine before I die, if I hear they go on, for they shall neither stop my Mouth nor rob me of my Happiness.' When I enquire what Reasons he could have to believe, that he would vex the Papists by his Marriage, I find none more likely than this, that he imagined they had yet some kind of Consolation left, because they thought he had still a regard for the Doctrine of Monastical Vows.

[§ (a) Glacius, from the German, Glas, which signifies either a drinking Glass, or simply Glas, ought to have been rendered in French, by la Glace. Eys is the German word answering to this French Word. REM. CRIT.]

[F] There went a Report that she was brought to bed, soon after her Marriage.] See here what Erasmus wrote about it; 'Lutherus, quod felix faustumque sit, deposito Philosophi pallio duxit uxorem ex clara familia Bornæ (21), puellam elegantem forma natam, annos viginti sex, sed indotatam & quæ pridem desiderat esse Vestalis. Atque ut scias auspicias fuisse nuptias, pauculis

diebus post decantatum hymenæum nova nupta peperit (22). --- Luther, I wish him joy of it, has laid down his Philosopher's Cloak, and married a Wife of the noted Family of Bore, a Lady of excellent Beauty, Twenty six Years of Age, but with no Fortune, and one that had lately been a Nun. And to show that it was a lucky Match, the Bride was brought to bed a few Days after the Solemnization of the Marriage.' This was an egregious Falsity, Erasmus knew it by the Event, and owned that it was a false Report. The Letter, in which he makes that Confession, is dated the thirteenth of March 1526. He says only that Luther's Wife was with Child, and that she had not conquered the fierce Spirit of her Husband, seeing the Book that Luther had composed against him since his Wedding, was the most furious one that ever came from his Pen. 'De conjugio Lutheri certum est, de partu maturo sponæ vanus erat rumor, nunc tamen gravida esse dicitur. Si vera est vulgi fabula Antichristum nasciturum ex monacho & monacha, quemadmodum isti jactitant, quot Antichristorum millia jam olim habet mundus? At ego sperabam fore, ut Lutherum uxor redderet magis cicerem. Verum ille præter omnem expectationem emisit librum in me summâ quidem curâ elaboratum, sed adeo virulentum, ut hæcenus in neminem scripserit hostilius (23). --- Luther's Marriage is certain; the Report of his Wife's being so speedily brought to bed is false; but I hear she is now with Child. If the common Story be true, that Antichrist shall be born of a Monk and a Nun, as they pretend, how many thousands of Antichrists are there in the World already? I was in hopes that a Wife would have made Luther a little tamer. But he, contrary to all expectation, has published a most elaborate Book against me, but as virulent as any book that ever he wrote.

[G] Luther was put out of Countenance by the Clamours that his Marriage raised both at home and abroad.] He confesses himself, that his Marriage made him so despicable, that he hoped that Humiliation would rejoice the Angels, and vex the Devils. 'Sic me vilem & contemptum his nuptiis feci, ut Angelos ridere & omnes demones flere sperem (24).'
[24] Lutheri, Epist. ad Spalatinum apud Seckendorf. pag. 18. n. 3.
[25] Extat hæc epistola (quæ in editione Londinensi est 24. lib. iv.) è Græco versa apud Seckendorf. ubi supra, pag. 17. n. 10.
[26] Luther was not so much the Marriage, as the Circumstances of the time, and the Precipitation with which it was done, that occasioned the censures passed upon Luther. He married all on a sudden, and

(22) Erasmi, apud Scultetum Annal. ad ann. 1525, pag. 278. citatum à Seckendorf. pag. 18. n. 11.

(23) Erasmi Epist. xxii. lib. xviii.

(24) Lutheri, Epist. ad Spalatinum apud Seckendorf. pag. 18. n. 3.

(25) Extat hæc epistola (quæ in editione Londinensi est 24. lib. iv.) è Græco versa apud Seckendorf. ubi supra, pag. 17. n. 10.

again, and seemed very well satisfied with his Match; inasmuch that when his Wife had born him a Son a little after, he said he would not change his Condition for that of Cræsus; so sensible he was that God had given him a good Wife [H]. He was like to die of a Stoppage of Urine in the Year 1537, and in that State he praised his Wife very much (g). In his Will, which he made in 1542, he expressed a great Affection, and took care to provide for her (h). He did not pretend, that she was without Faults, but he believed she was less faulty than others (i). It has been observed, that she took a little too much upon her, and was too imperious (k), but it was an excusable Fault, considering the Glory that attended her Husband. In some things she was too saving, and in others too prodigal: she was sparing in her House-keeping, and too expensive in Building, which is the Character of a Woman that loves to make a shew. After the Death of Lutber she maintained herself and her Family decently, with the indifferent Estate of the Deceased, and the Assistance she received from the Elector of Saxony, and the Counts of Mansfeld. At last she went from Wittenberg to Torgau, and died there the twentieth of December 1552 (l). If Erasmus was not mistaken when he said, that she married at Twenty six Years of Age (m), she must have been Fifty three Years old when she died. Varillas has committed a prodigious Number of Faults in speaking of This Woman [I].

(g) Seckendorf, lib. iii. pag. 165. n. 4.

(h) Id. ibid. p. 651.

(i) See the Remark [H].

(k) Seckendorf, lib. iii. pag. 651. lit. n. See the Remark [K], Citation (49).

(l) Id. lit. (o).

(m) See the Remark [F], Citation (22).

Mr Mayer

at a time when Germany was almost laid desolate by the War of the Boors; a War which was said to be owing to Lutheranism. No body could account for that precipitation. Lutber was then Forty two Years of Age: and till then he had kept a chaste Celibacy during the hottest transports of Youth: It cannot be said that the incapacity of containing himself obliged him to conclude his Marriage so suddenly. But granting, as Melanchthon insinuates, that the remiss life which Lutber led, delighting too much in company, revived Nature, which the Monastical Retreat had in some measure laid asleep: In a word; Granting that he was necessitated to marry by the Lust of the Flesh; must he therefore pass by all Formalities? Could he not put off his Marriage for some Months, to communicate the matter to his Friends, and to prepare the Public for the News of his Marriage, by some preliminary Addresses? I do not wonder that, for want of good Reasons to explain those difficulties, Lutber and others have acknowledged something Divine in that Marriage, Deus vult, as in certain Diseases (26). 'Quod autem in re intempulivum & inconsultum inest, (in quo maxime delicias ostrectandi & accusandi studium adversariorum facit) videndum, ne nos conturbet. Isto enim sub negotio fortasse aliquid occulti, & quiddam divinius subest, de quo nos curiose querere non decet, neque curare nugis deridentium, & convitia facientium quorundam, à quibus neque pietas ad Deum, neque ad homines virtus exercetur (27).

(26) See above in the Remark [G], Citation (8).

(27) Melanchth. Epist. ad Camerac. apud Seckendorf. pag. 17. n. 10. See also the Remark [H], Citation (8).

----- But as for the Unseasonableness and want of Consideration in the affair (on which Accounts chiefly our Adversaries will gratify their desire of railing and slandering) we must take care that That do not disturb us. For perhaps there is some Secret, or something divine, couched under it, concerning which it does not become us to enquire too curiously, or to mind the trifling of some, who deride and reproach us, who neither exercise Piety towards God nor Virtue towards Men.'

[H]----- But afterwards he would not have changed his Condition for that of Cræsus, his Wife proved so very good.] Here is part of the Letter which he wrote, the eleventh of August 1526, to Michael Sifstus. 'Salut te Ketha costa mea, & gratias agit quod eam literis tuis tam suavis dignatus es. Ipsa belle habet Dei dono, mihi que morigera & in omnibus obsequens est, & commoda plusquam ausus fuissim sperare (Deo gratia), ita ut paupertatem meam nollem cum Croesi divitiis commutare (28). ----- My Rib, Kate, salutes you, and thanks you for the Favour of your kind Letter. She is very well through God's Mercy, and is obedient and complying with me in all things, and more agreeable (I thank God) than I could have expected, so that I would not change my Poverty for the Wealth of Cræsus. He was heard to say that he would not exchange his Wife for the Kingdom of France, nor for the Riches of the Venetians (29), and that for three Reasons. I. Because, she had been given him by God, at the time when he implored the assistance of the Holy Ghost in finding a good Wife. II. Because, though she was not without faults, yet she had fewer than other Women. III. Because she kept the conjugal Fidelity which she owed him. In his Will he gave her a good Character for Probity, Fidelity, and Modesty; he acknowledged that she had loved and served him, and that she had been fruitful, &c (30). He would not have the World to think that she had made a private purle, and he left her at full liberty to marry again (31).

(28) Luther. Epist. pag. 318. apud Seckendorf. lib. iii. pag. 651. lit. (r).

(29) This is related by Bavarus, Tom. I. p. 229. apud Seckendorf. lib. iii. pag. 651. lit. (r).

[I] Mr Varillas has committed a prodigious number of Faults in speaking of this Woman.] He says that Catharine de Bore, and eight of her Companions, were taken out of a Nunnery, in a small Town called Timigue, two Leagues from Wittenberg (32). But, I. There never was a Nunnery of that Name, either in the Neighbourhood of Wittenberg, or any where else. II. The Convent which was near Wittenberg, and was called Niemec, was of Regular Canons of St Augustin, and ought not to be confounded, as it has been by some Authors, with the Convent of Nimptschen. III. The nine Nuns were taken out of Nimptschen on the Mulde, near Grimma, two days Journey from Wittenberg. IV. Leonard Coppe, who took them from thence, was not, as Varillas affirms, Provost of the Scholars at Wittenberg; there is no such Character or Function known in the Universities of Germany: But he was a Counsellor of the City of Torgau, the place of his Nativity. V. It is not true that Catharine de Bore, the handsomest of them all, was from that time designed to be the Wife of Doctor Lutber. He thought on nothing less at that time than on Marriage. A Letter, which he wrote about the end of the Year 1524, certifies, that God might alter his Mind, but that whilst his Heart should be disposed, as it always had been, and still was, he should never marry. 'Not but that I feel, says he, my Flesh and my Sex, I am neither of Wood nor Stone; but I have an aversion for Marriage, because I prepare myself for the Punishment wherewith Heretics are punished (33).'

See what has been said before (34) of the Precipitation wherewith he concluded his Marriage with Catharine de Bore, in the Month of June, One thousand five hundred twenty five. VI. Varillas should not have spoken of Lutber's Marriage in the Year 1526, but in the foregoing Year. VII. There never was any Abbess of Misnia. VIII. However that Dignity did never belong to Catharine de Bore. Varillas, who gives it her in the Eighty sixth Page, had said in the seventh Page, that she was a meek Nun, and that she fled with eight others on a Good-friday, while the SUPERIORS were extraordinary busy. By Misnia he means either a Town or a Province; if he means a Province, he is guilty of a great absurdity, for he supposes then that there was but one Monastery in a Country where there were Thirty. If he means a Town, he names it wrong; he should have called it Misse. IX. It is false that Catharine de Bore was of an illustrious (30) His last Will is dated the 16th of September 1542. He had then five Children alive.

(31) See Seckendorf lib. iii. pag. 651. lit. (n).

(32) Varillas, Histoire de l'Herésie, liv. vi. p. 6.

(33) Luthers, Epist. lib. ii. apud Seck. lib. i. p. 314. n. 2.

(34) Citation (6).

* The true name both of the Country and Town is Misse.

(n) Of whom I have spoken before in Citation (35) of the Article BELLARMIN.

Mr Mayer (n) to whom I must make my Acknowledgement here, for the Favour he has done me in declaring publicly that he honours me with his Friendship, published a Dissertation which will afford me a very curious Supplement [K]. I do illustrious Family, and that some of her Relations had a great Power in the Court of Saxony. She had a Brother that stood in need of Luther's recommendation to the new Elector of Saxony in the Year 1542 (35). Luther begged of the Elector, that he might have an Office instead of that which was taken from him; so that his Wife's Relations had more need of his Credit, than he of theirs. What protection can one expect from a Family, which is not able to give a Daughter a Portion? This was the condition of our Nun's Father, according to the account of the Author we criticize (36). X. The frequent visits, which Varillas says Luther made to Catharine in the Nunnery of Misnia (37), are meer Chimeras. Doubtless by Misnia he means the Town of Misnia. Grant him for once this Falsity, viz. That Catharine was Abbess of Misne, yet he supposed very falsely, that Luther made many Visits to that Abbess; for since the Town of Misne belonged partly to the Bishop, and partly to George Duke of Saxony, a great Enemy of the Reformation, Luther would have run very great dangers in Misne. I add, that if the Abbess had received his Visits so easily, there had been no need of any address to carry away Catharine de Bore, while the Superiors could not look after her. Thus we find many Contradictions between Page 7, and Page 86, of Varillas. Lastly, Those frequent Visits are strongly refuted by the two days Journey which is between Catharine de Bore's Convent, and the City of Wittenberg. XI. It appears by the first Letters of Luther which have been published, that he had some Thoughts of marrying from the time that he separated from the Communion of the Church. Varillas affirms this, but it is a sign that he never looked into those Letters. We plainly find there, that Luther thought on nothing less than Marriage during the first years of his Reformation, and that he resolved on it all on a sudden in the Year 1525. Have I not shewed that he would have married his Catharine to another Man? XII. The first measures he took with John Frederic, Brother and Successor to the deceased Elector (38), were, that he should permit him to marry the Abbess. A new mistake of Varillas. John Frederic was not Brother of the deceased Elector, nor did he succeed him. He that succeeded him was called John, and was his Brother. He was the Father of John Frederic, who did not come to the Electorate before the Year 1532. It does not appear that Luther communicated his Marriage to the Elector John, who was taken up with the War of the Boors; I say it does not appear that he did communicate it to him before he concluded it. XIII. Lastly, That Wedding was not so magnificent, that it did not differ in any thing from those of the most eminent Persons of the Empire (39). Who could imagine that such a famous Historian should heap up so many faults in so few Words? A Man would hardly be able to do it, if he were hired for the Purpose.

[K] Mr Mayer ----- has wrote a Dissertation which will afford me a very curious Supplement. It is a Book of Seventy two Pages in Quarto, intitled, De Catharina Lutheri conjugis dissertatio, printed at Hamburg in the Year 1698. The Author has omitted nothing that can be of use towards a full knowledge of the History of Catharine de Bore, and he gives a curious and exact account of the Children she brought to Luther. He brings always good proof for what he says, whereby the Falsities of Corbleus, Maimbourg, Varillas, and many other Writers, are solidly refuted. He shews, that the Example of the eight Nuns, who went with her out of the Convent of Nimptschen (40), was soon after followed by Sixteen Nuns of the Convent of Widersteten in the County of Mansfield, and that this was the fruit of the good and sound Doctrine, which Luther had taught, concerning the Laudableness of Marriage, and the Iniquity of Monastic Vows (41); that in all this, there was no force used to carry them away; for that these young Women were well persuaded that they might return into the World, and were willing to do it (42); that Maimbourg was in the wrong to pretend that Luther durst not marry Catharine, so long as the Elector Frederic was living; for why should That Prince have condemned Luther's Marriage, after having permitted Veltkirebin, Carolsbad, and some other Ministers, to marry (43); and that some have spoken hyperbolically of Catharine's Beauty: Luther fell in Love with a very beautiful Nun of Quality, whom he had taken out of her Convent. These are the Words of the Bishop of Meaux, cited by Mr Mayer (44); and, to make it appear that they are overstrained, he gives a Print of that Woman, drawn by his order from three Pictures compared together, which were done in Catharine's Life time, by Luke Cranachius, an excellent Painter (45), and one of the Guests at Martin Luther's Wedding-feast (46); that is, at the Entertainment which was given without noise on his Wedding-day; for, some Weeks after, a more solemn and pompous Feast was made, to the Charges of which the Senate of Wittenberg contributed something. Senatus Witebergensis nonnulla ex publico aerario suppeditavit, ut videre est in Consiliis Witebergensibus parte IV. p. 9. Mr Mayer refers us to the Twenty second Page of the fourth Part of the Consilia Witebergensia, and to the sixth Chapter of the Defensio Lutheri defuncti of John Molerus against Charles de Creutzen, a Jesuit of Prussia. I say, he refers us thither, to see the Refutation of the Calumny which had been spread, and the excuses for Luther's marrying without publishing the Banns in a Church. His Enemies gave out that he had made so much haste to marry, because Catharine found herself with Child (47). This was false (48). There are also in Mr Mayer's Dissertation many proofs of the Love and Esteem which Luther had for his Wife. They are taken out of his Letters, and we are forewarned to give more credit to them than to a Letter of Pontanus, written to the Elector of Saxony after the Death of Luther. This Pontanus accused Catharine de Bore of Pride, and of having spent a great deal of Money in Building, and chiefly upon a Farm which was assigned her for her Dowry. Huc itaque (Luthero) potius testi credamus quam Pontano apud Seckendorffum, lib. iii. p. 651. qui in literis post mortem Lutheri ad Electorem Sax. scriptis arguit eam animo fuisse elatiore & imperioso, tenacemque in victu domestico, etsi sumtuosam in ædificia, imprimis in prædium Zeulsdorf, quod ei in testamento dotulitii nomine Lutherus assignavit (49). Some pretend that Luther submitted to the government of his Wife, and cite the Letters wherein he called her his Lord. Mr Mayer owns he has seen such Letters, but he maintains, that it was but a Jest (50), and that Luther, who had given his Wife full Authority over Household Affairs, always reserved the Rights of a Husband to himself. 'Tu mihi persuades quicquid vis, totum habes Dominium. In œconomia quidem tibi concedo dominium salvo jure meo. Mulierum enim Dominium nihil boni unquam effecit (51). — You persuade me to what you please, you have all the Dominion. I grant you the Dominion in the management of your House, saving my own right; for the Dominion of Women never did any good.' He has the Original of a Letter, wherein Luther exclaimed against the weakness of those Husbands, who suffer themselves to be mastered by their Wives, and encouraged one of them to curb the Insolence of his Wife (52). The following fact shews our Catharine's Conjugal Affection. Luther intending to make an Exposition of the Twenty second Psalm, took some Bread and Salt, and shut himself up in his Closet, and continued there three Days. His Wife looked for him every where, and was in the utmost concern; she knocked at the Door, she called him, and being at last no longer able to resist her Grief, she caused the Door to be broken open, and found him meditating. He was vexed that his Meditations on a Subject so sacred, and of so great concern, should be interrupted: but at last, he could not find fault with his Wife's Care and Uneasiness (53). She gave a remarkable

(42) Id. ibid.

(43) ib. pag. 19.

(44) Mayer, ubi supra, pag. 21. He quotes, Histoire des Variations, Tom. I. pag. 49.

(45) ib. pag. 22.

(46) ib. pag. 24.

(47) See Lindanus de voto virginis, pag. 13.

(48) See the Remark [F].

(49) Mayer, p. 55.

(50) Quis non videt, genii præsertim beati viri non ignarus, hoc innoxio joco ab illo factum? — Who does not see, especially if he knew any thing of the Genius of this blessed Man, that it was done only as an innocent joke? ib. p. 56.

(51) Luther apud Mayer, pag. 57.

(52) It may be seen in Mr Mayer's Book, pag. 57, 58.

(53) Id. pag. 59. He quotes Reinhard, Bakius ad Pal. xxix.

I do not think that any body will blame me for publishing, in this Place of my Dictionary, a Letter which has never been made public, written by Erasmus, before he was undeceived about the false Report that was spread, concerning Catharine de Bore's being brought to bed a little while after her Marriage [L].

(54) Id. pag. 59 & seq.

(55) Ibid. p. 66.

(56) A quarter of a Year after, and some few Days more. See the Funeral Program.

(57) Because the Plague raged at Wittemberg.

(58) Mayer, ib. pag. 66. & seq.

(59) Id. pag. 69.

(60) I speak of him at large in the Remark [F] of the Article WILHEM.

(61) It is beguiled in the Copy: Mr de Wilhem told me, that none of those, who helped to read the Original, have been able to find out the meaning of that Word. I guess at a venture, that it ought to be read, desultori.

a remarkable Instance both of her Affection and Constancy in a Sickness which he had in the Year 1527, which was so great and dangerous, that he made his Will, and took his leave of his Wife and his Son (54). Our Catharine continued the first Year of her Widowhood at Wittemberg, tho' her Husband had advised her to go elsewhere. Mr Mayer justifies her in that disobedience (55). She went from Wittemberg in the Year 1547, when the Town was surrendered to Charles V. Before her departure, she had received a Present of Fifty Crowns from Christian III. King of Denmark; and, as the Elector of Saxony and the Counts of Mansfeld gave her good Tokens of their Liberality, with the Addition of these helps, to what Luther had left her, she had wherewithal to maintain herself and her Family handsomely. She returned to Wittemberg, when the Town was restored to the Elector, where she lived piously, till the Plague made her resolve to leave it in the Year 1552. She sold what she had there, and retired to Torgau, with a Resolution to end her Life there. An unfortunate Accident happened to her in her Journey: The Horses growing unruly, she leaped out of the Waggon, and got a Fall, which hurt her very much, so that she died soon after (56) at Torgau, the Twentieth of December 1552. She was buried there in the great Church, where her Tomb and Epitaph are still to be seen. The University of Wittemberg, which was then at Torgau (57), made a public Program concerning the Funeral Pomp (58). It may be seen at length in Mr Mayer's Book; it was printed in the Year 1553, in Intimationibus Wittembergensibus (59). I had read it in the Four hundred and forty first, and Four hundred and forty second, Leaf of a Book printed at Wittemberg in the Year 1560 in 8vo, and intitled, Scriptorum publice professorum à professoribus in Academia Wittembergensi, ab anno 1540, usque ad annum 1553. Tomus primus.

[L] I shall insert a Letter written by Erasmus, before he was undeceived about the false Report of Catharine de Bore's lying-in soon after her Marriage.] It was written to an Illustrious Person, to wit, Nicolas Everard, President of the High Council of Holland at the Hague. I have seen the Original, which is very well preserved: Erasmus's Seal, with the Deus Terminus and the nulli cede, remain still intire. Mr de Wilhem, Counsellor in the Court of Brabant (60), has been so kind as to shew me that original Letter, and to give me a Copy of it, which I have compared with the Original. I think, the Readers will not be displeased to find it printed in this place of my Dictionary, since it was never made public.

S. P. Ornatiissime Præfex. Solent Comici tumultus ferè in matrimonium exire, atque hinc subita rerum omnium tranquillitas. Verum hanc catastrophem plerumque nunc habent Principum Tragœdiæ, non admodum lætam populo, sed tamen bellicis potiore. Malebat ille compilari quam venire. Similem exitum habitura videtur Lutherana Tragœdia. Duxit uxorem monachus monacham; & ut scias nuptias prosperis avibus initas, diebus à decantato hymeneo ferme quatuordecim enixa est nova nupta. Lutherus nunc mihi esse incipit, nec perinde sæviti calamo. Nihil est tam ferum quod non ceciderit uxor. Ego sedulo hortor utramque partem, ut æquis conditionibus jungant fœdus, & infana prælia dirimant. Vis scire quantum proficiamus? Quantum solent ii, qui inter duos armatos ira vinoque furentes intercedunt dirēpturi, & utrimque vulnerant. Opinor te legisse Apologiam meam adversus Sutorem. Quis credidisset tam stupidum animal latere inter Theologos & Cartusianos? Et tamen hoc portentum habet Theologos applaudentes. Si vendantur isti hic (61) desultori libri Jodoci Clithovei, quæso ut legas in Antiluthero 3. libri cap. primum, num. 3. nam Beda literis indicavit cum locum ad me pertinere; quod si verum, quis non intelligit in illo pediculis capite nullam esse micam sanæ mentis? Et tamen hujusmodi nebulones Lutherus armavit in nos: Nullum video finem nisi si quis

V O L. II.

Deus à machina, quod aiunt, apparet fabulam explicet. Lutherana factio nunquam suffulit majores spiritus. Et altera pars adeo nihil remittit, ut indies atringat priora vincula. Habent novum dogma, sed simpliciter insanum; totos hos tumultus exortos ex Linguis & bonis litteris. Hoc jam Principibus aliquot persuaserunt. Quoniam te videre aliter non licet, per literas saluto. Dorpium amissimus ante diem. Hic longe supra centum millia rusticorum interfecta sunt, & quotidie facerdotes capiuntur, torquentur, suspenduntur, decollantur, exuruntur. Non nego necessarium remedium, quamvis immite, sed Germani magis novimus malefacta punire quam excludere.

Tibi, uxori tuæ, tuisque liberis precor omnia læta.

Qui has reddet est Franciscus Dilst, quondam convictor meus; juvenis honesto loco natus, moribus mirè civilibus. Quem cupio ut digneris cognoscere.

Datum Bas. pridie Natal. Domini, an. 1525.

ERASMUS ROT. verè tuus.

Ex tempore manu propria.

Non vacabat relegere, ignosce.

Most Honourable President, Greeting. The brails in Comedies generally ended in Matrimony, and that made all quiet at once. But now-a-days the Tragedies of Princes have commonly the same Catastrophe, not very pleasing to the People, but yet better than War. They had rather be stripped than sold. Luther's Tragedy is likely to have the same end. The Monk has married a Nun; and to shew that the Wedding was in a lucky Hour, the Bride was brought to bed in fourteen Days after the Solemnization. Luther begins now to be a little quieter, and is not so busy with his Pen. There is nothing too savage for a Wife to tame. I earnestly exhort both Parties to make Peace on fair Terms, and put an end to this destructive War. Would you know my Success, it is just the same with theirs, who interpose to part armed Men in a drunken quarrel, and get wounded on both Sides. I suppose you have read my Apology against Sutor. Who would have thought, there had been so stupid an Animal among the Divines, and Cartusians too? and yet this Monster has Divines that applaud him. If the desultory books of Jodocus Clithoveus are to be had with you, I beg you would read the Antiluther, lib. iii. cap. i. num. iii. For Beda informs me, in his Letter, that That Passage relates to me; which if it do, it is plain to all the World, that there is not a grain of sound Sense in all that lousy Chapter: and yet such wretches as this bas Luther armed against me. I see no end, unless some God appears to unravel the Plot. The Lutheran Faction never had more Courage than now, and the other Party are so far from abating any thing, that they are daily straitening their former bands. They have got a new notion, but a silly senseless one, that all these Tumults, are owing to Language and good Literature. They have already persuaded some Princes into their Opinion. Not having opportunity to see you, I salute you by Letter. We have lost Dorpius a Day or two ago. Above a Hundred thousand of the Boors have been killed here, and every Day some Priest or other is taken, and tortured, hanged, beheaded, or burnt. I do not deny the remedy to be necessary, tho' inhuman, but we Germans know better how to punish Crimes than to prevent them.

I wish all happiness to yourself, your Spouse and Children.

The Bearer hereof is one Francis Dilst, formerly my Boarder, a young Man well born, and of very Gentleman-like Behaviour. I beg you would be pleased to admit him to your acquaintance.

Dated at Basil 24th of December 1525.

Yours sincerely,

ERASMUS ROT.

Extempore, with my own hand. I had not time to read it over, excuse Faults.

U

[A] Was

(a) That which blows from the North.

(b) Pindar. Od. iv. Pythion.

(c) Balzac. Entretien. v. cap. ii. pag. 80.

BOREAS, one of the four Cardinal Winds (a), and one of the Deities of the Heathens, was the Son of Astræus and Aurora [A], and had his Seat in Thrace [B]. Pindar calls him the King of Winds (b). 'I think, I have read somewhere that he had the Privileges of a Citizen given him in a City of Greece. I have read also, that they built Temples, and ordered Sacrifices to be made to him in another City; once, for having sunk a Fleet of the Enemies; and another time, for having blown the Dust into the Eyes of a Land Army of the same Enemies. If I am not mistaken, he was by a public Decree solemnly called the Son-in-law of the Albenians, because of his Wife Orithya, who was an Albenian (c).' The Author from whom I borrow these Words, (whose Originals I shall also shew) [C] makes [A] Was the Son of Astræus and Aurora.] Natalis Comes confesses, he never read that the Inventors of Fables had said who Boreas's Father and Mother were, Boreas è quibus parentibus ortus sit fabularum inventores non tradiderunt, quod ego legerim (1); and yet he had quoted Hesiod, who says, that the God Astræus, having lain with the Goddess Aurora, begat the four Winds (2). Here are the three Verses that he quotes:

Ἀστειῶν δ' Ἠὼς ἀνέμους τέκε καρτερὸν δούμης, Ἀργεῖον, Ζέφυρον, βορέην τ' αἰ-ἰνεκέλευθον, καὶ νότον, ἐν φιλότῃ δ' ἐφ' ἑαυτὴν ἐνέεισα.

Astræo vero Aurora ventos peperit magnanimos, Argesten, Zephyrum, Boreamque rapidum,
Et Notum, in amore cum deo dea congressa (3).

Aurora, by Astræus' close Embrace,
Impregnate, bore the Winds magnanimous,
Eurus, with rapid Boreas, Auster moist,
And gentle Zephyr.

I must here take notice of a Fault of Mr Hofman. He says, that the Wind Boreas was the Son of Astræus according to some, or of Strymon according to others. He ought not to have expressed himself so; he ought to have said, that some Persons have maintained, that the Ravisher of Orithya was not the Wind Boreas, but the Son of Strymon. Ἡσίοδος δὲ ἐν τοῖς Μεγαλοπολίταις τὸν τὴν Ἠδύταια ἀπαγάγοντα βορέην ὄντα Στρυμόνῳ ἐσθὶν ἐχέει τὸν ἀνέμον (4). Hesiodorus, in the Megarica, says that Boreas, the Ravisher of Orithya, was the Son of Strymon, and not the Wind.

[B] And had his Seat in Thrace.] A great many Authors have said this, and you will find many Authorities for it in Lloyd's Dictionary (5), and in the learned Commentary of Mr Spanheim on Callimachus (6). The Origin of that Hypothesis, is, that the Poets, who have spoken of that Wind, lived in a Country which had Thrace on the North. I speak of the Greek Poets. The Latin Poets, who imitate the Greek Phrases and Epithetes, have placed the Wind Boreas in the same Country, tho' they had not the same reason for it. Read these Words of Mr Dacier; they are taken out of his Note on the Thracio Bacchante magis sub interlunia vento (7). 'Horace speaks after the manner of the Greeks, who call Boreas or Aquilo, Thracian, because it came to them from Thrace.' I believe, it had been well to have commented in the same manner on this place of the same Poet, Nunc mare, nunc syloæ Thracio Aquilone sonant (8), without pretending that 'Boreas or Aquilo, that is to say, the North North-East, was truly a Thracian Wind for the Romans, as well as for the Greeks; because Thrace extended very far (9). I cannot believe, that Horace had in view, either the large extent of that Country, or the Subdivision of the Winds. He intended only to imitate the Greek Epithet of the North Wind; and the same Criticism might be made upon him here, as on this Passage of the Twelfth Ode of the fourth Book: Jam veris comites, quæ mare temperant, impellunt animæ lintea Thraciæ (10). I think, I ought not to omit this Passage of Balzac, because it is Critical: 'This Aquilo, of Thracian Origin, makes Excursions, and Travels over all the World; but if we may believe our African, who speaks Stones and Iron, his Stile is so rough and harsh, he makes his particular abode in the Euxine Sea. How many Leagues from Thrace? I shall inquire about it presently in the Map. Well, Aquilo shall inhabit the Euxine Sea, for this time, Ubi dies nusquam patens, sol nunquam liber, unus aër, nebula totus annus, hibernum, omne quod flaverit Aquilo est. — Where the Day is no where clear, the Sun never free, the Air unvaried, Fog all the Year, always Winter, all that blows is the North Wind. But, by the by, I desire you to observe, whether there is not a kind of contradiction in these Words, Nebula and Aquilo; for in my opinion, they cannot well agree together (11).

[C] I borrow these words from Balzac; I will shew his Originals.] There are some Books in which it is allowable, and even commendable, not to name the Authors from whom a Writer takes what he alleges. This suits a vain Man extremely well; for these general Terms, I have read somewhere, a certain Author relates, &c. give an advantageous Idea of an Author. The Reader thinks, he that speaks so, would not do it, if the Book he mentions, without naming the Author, was known to other learned Men. It is therefore believed, that he found that Treasure in a very rare Manuscript. In a Word, if Balzac had said, I have read in Pausanias, or in Herodotus, he would not have made so good a figure with his Readers. As for me, I endeavour chiefly to satisfy the Curiosity of my Readers, and therefore I always name the Authors from whom I take what I relate; nay, I endeavour to discover from whence the Moderns have taken what they allege. I have succeeded in it, as to this Passage of Balzac's Entretiens (12).

I. Ælian observes, that the Inhabitants of Thurium, having been delivered from a great danger by a Storm which destroyed their Enemy's Fleet (13), offered Sacrifices to the Wind Boreas, who had caused that Shipwreck, and conferred on him the Freedom of their City. They provided him a House, and a settled Revenue, and celebrated every Year a Day of Worship in Honour of him (14).

II. The Megalopolitans consecrated a Temple to him, where they offered Sacrifices on a certain Day of the Year, and honoured no Deity more than him. It was in acknowledgment of a great Assistance, which they received from him, when Agis King of Lacedæmon besieged their City. The Besiegers Engine battered the Wall so furiously, that doublets the Breach would have been very great the next Day; but there came a North Wind which over-set the Engine. This is what Pausanias says (15).

III. Herodotus informs us, That an Oracle having ordered the Albenians to call their Son-in-law to their Assistance, they invoked Boreas; for as he was married to Orithya the Daughter of Ereobtheus their King, they took him for their Son-in-law. Wherefore, when Xerxes's Fleet was come to the Coasts of Magnesia, they implored the assistance of that Wind, and his Spouse, with Victims and Prayers; and being persuaded that the Storm which scattered that Fleet, was the effect of that Worship; they caused a Temple to be built to Boreas on the Banks of the Ilissus (16). They believed, that the same Deities had already destroyed the Persian Fleet near Mount Atbos (17). I have not as yet been able to find The Author, who speaks of the great Service which this Wind did the Greeks in throwing dust into the Eyes of an Army of Persians. I have read indeed in Xenophon, that the Greeks, who repassed the Euphrates after the Defeat of young Cyrus, endured a great deal of cold because the Wind Boreas was full in their Faces; but that it was laid as soon as they had offered Sacrifices to it by the Advice of a Soothsayer (18). Note, that Apollonius represented to the Albenians that Boreas was their near Relation (19). Balzac might have added that

(1) Natal. Comes, Mythol. lib. vii. cap. xi. pag. 861.

(2) Id. ibid. lib. vi. cap. ii. pag. 551.

(3) Hesiodus in Deor. Generat. ver. 378. p. 126.

(4) Schol. Apollonii in lib. i. ver. 211.

(5) At the Word Boreas.

(6) Exech. Spanheimus in Callimachus, pag. 213, 214, 344, 366.

(7) Horat. Od. xxv. lib. i.

(8) Id. Od. xiii. Epod.

(9) Dacier upon Horace, Tom. v. pag. 260, 261, of the Dutch Edition.

(10) See Tanaquil Faber's 24th Epistle of the 2d Book.

(11) Balzac, Entretiens. cap. ii. pag. 81.

(12) That which I have set down in the Text of this Article. See above, Citat. (c).

(13) It was Dionysius the Tyrant.

(14) Ælian. divers. Histor. lib. xii. cap. lxi.

(15) Pausan. lib. vii. pag. 259, 266.

(16) A River of Athens.

(17) Herodot. lib. vii. c. 189.

(18) Xenophon, de Cyri expedit. lib. iv. pag. 143.

(19) Philostratus in Vita Apollonii, lib. iv. p. 167.

makes a Remark on Orithya's not complaining of the Coldness of such a Husband [D]: but that Remark is more pleasant than solid; for Boreas, how cold so ever he is represented, was very warm in his Love [E]. He had several Children, and

(20) Libanus
Declam. 20.

(21) Matron apud Athenæum
lib. iv. cap. v.
pag. 134.

(22) Casaub. in Athen. lib. iv.
cap. v. p. 254.

(23) In tractatu
de festis Græcorum.

(24) Fazoldus in Jerologia p. 124.

(25) Plato in Phædro circa init. pag. 121.

(26) In the Remark [G].

(27) Balzac. Entrec. 5. cap. ii.
pag. 80, 81.

the Athenians swore by the Deity of Boreas, and that his Festival was celebrated by them with great Solemnity, and rich Banquets (20). Casaubon is going to tell us this in his Commentary on these Words of Matron, τῶν καὶ βορέης ἡρώσας πεπτομενῶν, quarum dum coquerentur, sive recens co-actarum vel Boreas poterat affici desiderio (21). —

Which while they were baking, or new baked, even Boreas might long for (21). Sensus autem est, adeo bonos panes illos aut placentas fuisse; ut etiam Boreas celebrantibus apponi potuerint. Moris fuit Athenis Boreæ sacra facere, demerendi illius gratia. Magna solennitate is dies celebrabatur, atque in primis lautis opiparisque epulis. Boreæ hoc dicebant & Boreas superstitionis hujus ritum. Hesychius Boreas μὲν, Ἀθήνησιν οἱ ἀγῶνες τῶν Boreæ ἡρώσας καὶ γοῖνας ἵνα ἀντοῖσι (malum ἀντοῖσι) πρῶσιν. ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ Boreas μὲν. Vi-detur dicere thiasos horum sacrorum fuisse ap-pelatos Boreas μὲν. Ego arbitror Boreas μὲν id esse quod jam diximus: at qui superstitionis hujus sacra concelebant, eos esse dictos Boreas μὲν, ut *εἰκα-
δισὰς, τετραδισὰς*, & similes (22). — The meaning is, that those Loaves or Cakes were so good that they might be served at the Festival of Boreas. It was a Custom, among the Athenians, to sacrifice to Boreas, in order to appease him. That Day was celebrated with great Solemnity, especially with elegant and dainty Feasts. This they called Boreas μὲν, and the Ceremony of this superstition Boreas μὲν. Hesychius says, Boreas μὲν at Athenis were those who celebrated Festivals and Games to Boreas, for the preservation of their breath; they were called Boreas μὲν. — He seems to say that the Assistants at these Festivals were called Boreas μὲν. I am of opinion that Boreas μὲν is what I have said, that the Assistants at the Ceremony were called Boreas μὲν, as εἰκαδισὰς, τετραδισὰς and the like. Cassellian does not mention that Festival (23); but Fazoldus has taken notice of it (24). To conclude, I shall observe that mention is made of the Altar of the God Boreas, in a Dialogue of Plato (25); it is also said there, that it was built where it was thought Orithya had been stolen away. We shall make a Reflexion hereafter (26) on this folly of the Athenians.

[D] Orithya's not complaining of the Coldness of such a Husband.] After the Words I have inserted in the body of this Article, Balzac continues in this manner: 'Whereupon a Signor Dottore, who has been some Months in my House, to whom I have communicated some of my Observations, desires you to consider, that the Women of those Times were more modest, and more patient, than those of our Time, and that if an Orithya of those Times had married a Husband as cold as the North Wind, she would have accused him of Impotency the Day after her Wedding, and petitioned for a Divorce. However the Athenian Lady did not complain to the Areopagites, nor employ an Advocate to plead the Law of Frigidis, nor live ill with Boreas, or otherwise with Aquila (27).'

[E] Boreas was very warm in his Love.] Balzac may be allowed to joke on the Impatency of modern Women; but he ought not to take the liberty to strengthen his observations with the praises of Orithya's Patience; for that Lady had no occasion to exercise that quality. None, not Jupiter himself, surpassed the Wind Boreas in warmth of Constitution. Poor Europa, who was carried away by force, had no sooner called upon him for his assistance, but she retracted her Prayers; she considered that the one was as good as the other, and that she should get nothing by the change. Thus she complains, in the midst of the Waves, on the back of her Lover, as Nonnus relates it in the first of his Dionysiaca: O undæ, ô littora, mutæ undæ, surdæque littora, meas audite preces, meque huic subtrahite Tauro. Tuque, Boreas, pennis me subleva tuis. At verò misera, quem appellas, cujus imploras auxilium, ad quem confugis? nempe ad eum qui Nympham Orithyam rapuit, qui sic effusus est in venerem, ut magis nemo. — O

Waves, O Shores, dumb Waves, deaf Shores, bear my Prayers, and deliver me from this Bull. And thou Boreas, take me up on thy Wings. But poor Wretch whom do you call? Whose Aid do you ask? To whom do you fly? Even to him who ravished the Nymph Orithya, who is so prone to Veneris, as none more. And certainly what Homer says, in the twentieth Book of his Iliad (28), confirms these last Words of Europa: Erant Erichthonio Regi Dardaniæ Equæ ter mille, quæ circa paludes pascabantur. Eas ut vidit Boreas, ut perit, ut malus eum abstulit amor. Equi speciem induit, fallitque feminas, & ex eis suscepit pullos duodecim, currere sic pernicies, ut summas aristas non læderent (29). But observe, that this Translation is not literal. However it is true that Homer says, that Boreas fell in Love with Erichthonius's Mares, and that, having assumed the shape of a Horse, he covered them (that is some of them) and had twelve Colts by them. Casaubon should not have said, that those Mares did belong to Dardanus (30). Mr Hofman has committed the same error. It has been said expressly and particularly, that Orithya was very well satisfied with her Ravisher, and did not find him cruel; Crudelem & Boream rapta Orithya negavit (31). Be the Husband she was married to as cold as you please, she was soon brought to bed of Twins:

Dum volat, arserunt agitati fortius ignes,
Nec prius æræi cursus suppressit habenas
Quam Ciconum tenuit populos & mœnia raptor.
Illic & gelidi conjux Actææ tyranni
Et genitrix facta est, partuque enixa gemellos (32).

He flew, his Fires increasing in his Flight;
Nor check'd his Chariot in its airy Height,
Till now the Ravisher had reach'd the Walls
Of the cold Cicones, where Hebrus falls.
And there in time the bright Athenian Dame
The Mother of a double birth became:

His Fire increased by the swiftness of his flight; and therefore it is very likely that he was not long in his Passage; so that Ovid does not represent him too patient, when he supposes that the Marriage was not consummated before they came to the Town where the Ravisher made his abode. But others assert that he did not tarry so long before he satisfied his Love. They pretend that as he flew over the Sea he spied a Plain covered with Flowers, which seemed fit to serve him for a Nuptial Bed, and that he made use of it for that purpose. Read what follows.

Hic misere rorem infestat crudelis, & asper.
At prædo, & facilis, & rapta conjuge mitis.
Namque per ærias Ponti dum præterit oras
Vota ferens, vidit procul in convallæ remota
Planitiem viridi late florescere campo.
Admonuit locus optatæ cum conjuge noctis.
Deflavit, ac molli lacrymantem amplexus in herba,
Explicuitque sinus, munusque implevit amantis.
Illa gravis oculos ab humo vix anxia tollens
Flebat, eam insolito conjux solatur honore.
His ego pro lacrymis florum, gratulæ memorque, Nocturnos spargam rores, ea præmia furo.
Debeat hoc raptæ pontus memor Orithyæ.
Subrisit, tenerumque genus suffudit honorem,
Lætæ viri dictis, & tanto munere conjux.
Ille novam sensit labi per pectora flammam,
Optatos repetens somnos, mollique quiete
Lenit accensum complexu conjugis ignem.
Scilicet & Boreas calido contrarius Austro, &c. (33).

----- This cruel wind and sharp,
Is dreadful enemy to gentle Dew,

But

(28) Verse 221.

(29) Notes sur
l'Aristote de Vir-
gile, pag. 106.
Ed. Lyons.
1663.

(30) Casaubon in Athen. pag. 254.

(31) Propert.
Eleg. xxvi. lib.
ii.

(32) Ovid. Me-
tamor. lib. vi.
ver. 703.

(33) Jovianus
Pontanus in Metamor. cap. de præmia & rore,
fol. 113. versio.

and among others Zetes and Calais, whose History I shall give [F]. The Megalopolitans honoured him as their chief Deity (d). I speak of it in the Remarks, and likewise

(d) See the Remark [C], n. 11.

But when, a Ravisher, b' had stol'n a Wife Gentle and mild. — For as his airy Course, Bearing his prize, o'er Pontus he pursu'd,
By chance he spy'd, in a retired vale,
A verdant Plain; the place so opportune Presenting to th' Enjoyment wif'd invites;
Quick he alights, and on the tender Grass
Places the weeping Fair, unfold, her Charms,
And there performs the ardent Lover's part:
She anxious weeps, scarce lifting from the Ground
Her drooping Eyes; mean while the Husband grieves,
With promis'd Honours, to allay her Grief;
These Flowers my Gratitude shall ever share;
Then for these Tears I'll e'er with nightly Devo Reward, and Pontus ever thankful shall
This benefit to ravish'd Orithya owe.
Pleas'd with the Speech, and with a Boon so great,
The fair one smil'd, and straight a modest Blush
Overspread her Cheeks; he felt new Flames arise Within his Breast, and satiate now he seeks Needful Repose, and, in a gentle Sleep,
Camps'd the Tumults of his amorous Thoughts.

Apollonius pretends that the Ravisher enjoyed Orithya on the Bank of a River in Thrace (34), and that he covered her with a Cloud (35). You must not think that the Poets have offended against Probability, in representing the fame God both very amorous and covered with Ice.

Nunc gelidus sicca Boreas bacchatur ab Arcto (36).
— and now
Comes frozen Boreas raging from the North.

Thracius hos Boreas scopulos immitia regna
Solut habet, semperque rigens nunc littora. —
Atque ubi se terris glaciali fundit ab Arcto (37).

Now Thracian Boreas ever frozen rules
These Rocks, inhospitable Realm; The Shores —
When from the icy North he sallies out Spreads o'er the Earth.

Cum gravis armatur Boreas, glacieque minaci
Hispidus, & Getica concretus grandine pennas (38).
When dreadful Boreas arms, all shaggy o'er
With horrid Ice, his Plumes congealed with Hail.

Does not History tell us, that Love reigns in the most icy Climates? In this respect all the Zones of the Earth are torrid, as I have said elsewhere (39). Why should not Boreas be in Love, seeing Neptune in the midst of all his Waves, and Pluto in the abode of the Manes, have been likewise in Love? Why should not be feel the effects of that Passion, seeing Polyphemus was struck with it in his Cave?

Omnia vincit Amor.

Love conquers all; nothing can resist him. He sports no less with Lions than with Sparrows, and triumphs in the Euxine Sea as well as in France. Propertius has expressed it in few words.

Hic Deus & terras, & maria alta domat.

This God commands both Earth and Sea.

And Guarini in the first Scene of the first Act of his Pastor Fido (40). The Author whom I quote relates the whole Passage of Pastor Fido; I refer my Reader thither. This Spark, adds he (41) speaking of Boreas, is of a good Temper. Tho' he burns with Love, yet he is familiar with Cold and Snow:

(40) Note sur l'Aristée de Virgile, pag. 97.

(41) Id. ibid. pag. 110, 111.

Scit nivibus servare fidem:

2

And as Virgil says,

Boreæ penetrabile frigus adurit.

A proof of Boreas's Sensibility in point of Love may be gathered from his fury, which made him dash a Mistress to pieces against a Rock, because she had preferred Pan before him. I will quote the same Author again, seeing I must criticise him in some things. Orithya, says he, did wisely (42), not to shew any Grief for having been ravished, 'for she had to do with a strange Ravisher, who might have dashed her against some Rock, as he did the Fair Pitys, according to Pausanias (43). Hear what Achilles Boecbius says of it, in his Emblems.' He sets down the Verses of Boecbius at length; you will find the Sense of them in this Passage of a Commentator upon Propertius: 'Vere amica Pinus Arcadio Deo, utpote quem Boreæ amatori item suo, tunc quum puella adhuc esset, longe præferret, unde Thrac ille injuriæ impatiens deprehensam forte solam spatioso campo saxo allisit, quam infeliciter moribundam exceptam intra gremium suum tellus in arborem cognominem commutavit, cujus frondibus postea tempora præcinctus semper spectatus est Arcadius Deus. Quæ fabula existit apud Constantinum Geoponic. XI. & tangitur à Nonno in Dionys. (44). — Pinus was truly a Friend to the God Pan; for when she was very young, she preferred him to her other Lover Boreas; at which Injury the Thracian was so provoked, that, catching her one Day alone in a spacious Plain, he dashed her against a Rock: the Earth receiving the unhappy dying Maid into her bosom, changed her into a Tree of the same Name, with the Boughs whereof the Arcadian God was ever after seen crowned. This Fable is extant in Constantine, Geoponic. XI. & is touched on by Nonnus in Dionys.' If I would say with Mr Hofman that Boreas was in Love with the beautiful Youth Hyacinthus, who was also beloved by Apollo, I should have a second Example of the raging Jealousy of that Ravisher of Orithya; for every body knows that Apollo's Rival was so enraged, that he had not the preference, that he killed Hyacinthus, by driving back upon his Head the Quoit, which Apollo had thrown: But Mr Hofman is mistaken; for it was the Wind Zephyrus, and not the Wind Boreas, that did this (45). Note, that this Writer commits another fault in calling Orithya's Father Erichonius, instead of Erechtheus.

[F] Zetes and Calais, whose History I shall give.] They were Twins, and, as Ovid says, the first born Children of Orithya, but, as others (46) say, they were born after their Sisters Chione, Chtonia, and Cleopatra. They were in the company of the Argonauts, and did their Brother-in-law Phineus very great Service (47); they drove away the Harpies which tormented him cruelly; for they took away all the Meat that was brought upon his Table, and if they left any thing, they infected it with an horrible stench. They pursued them as far as the Islands Strophades, and would have destroyed them, if an unknown Voice from the Gods had not forbid it (48). 'In the Games celebrated by Atacus the Son of Pelæus, at which all the Argonauts were present, Zethes and Calais obtained the Victory: In ludis quos fecit Atacius Pelei filius, vicerunt Zetes Aquilonis filius dolichodromo, Calais ejusdem filius diaulo.' I take this from the Notes on Virgil's Aristeus. The Latin Passage is taken from Hyginus, Chapter 273. 'They were killed by Hercules, says the Author of those Notes, in the Isle of Tenos at the Funeral of King Pelias, for having taken the part of Tiphis, Captain of the Ship Argo, against Telamon, who would have had them wait for Hercules, who was gone from them to seek his dear Hylas. The Gods being moved at their Death changed them into Winds, which commonly precede the rising of the Dog Star about eight Days; hence it is that they are called ἀπὸδ' ποταμοῦ, that is, Forerunners. Nevertheless Hyginus says in his fourteenth Chapter, that they were buried, and that their Sepulchre is seen to move at the blowing of their Father (49). We find some other Reasons for the Anger, which made Hercules

(42) Id. ibid. pag. 102.

(43) It is not true that Pausanias mentions it.

(44) Donza fuit in hac verba Propertii Eleg. 18. lib. 1. vera 20. & Arcadio Pinus amata Deo.

(45) See Palmyræ cap. xlvii. Lucian in Dialog. Mercurii & Apollinis. Philostratus in Hyacintho. Tzetzes Chil. i. cap. xii.

(46) Scholiast. Apollon. in lib. ver. 211. See also Apollodorus, lib. iii. pag. 246.

(47) He had been married to Cleopatra.

(48) Ex Valerio Flacco, lib. 4.

(49) Notes sur l'Aristée de Virgile, pag. 141. The Author took this from Vigenere upon Philostratus in Glaucon Ponticus, pag. 741, 742. of the 1st Tome in 4to. Apollonius is the first Author who mentions this. Argon. lib. i. ver. 1300, &c.

(e) See the same Remark, n. 111.

likewise of the Worship which the Albenians paid him (e). The Circumstances of Orithya's Rape are variously reported [G]. The anonymous Author, who published a French Translation of Virgil's Aristeus (f) with Notes, in the Year 1668, has collected many things concerning the History, and Qualities of This Wind, and particularly concerning the Violence peculiar to it, which Ovid describes so well (g). He, who calls it the Author of Shipwracks (b), would keep that Epithet for other Winds, if he was to represent what passes in the Channel, and on the Coasts of the Netherlands. It is not the North Wind, but the North-West, and

South

(f) It is an Epitome of the Georgics.

(g) Ovid. Metam. lib. vi. circa fin.

(b) See Balzac, Entretien xxxvii. pag. 351.

(50) See Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. viii. cap. xi. pag. 863, 864, who had it from the Scholiast upon Apollonius, lib. i.

(51) Propert. Eleg. xx. lib. i.

(52) Callimach. hymn. in Delum. ver. 232.

(53) Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. viii. cap. xi. p. 864.

(54) Apollon. Argon. lib. i. ver. 215.

(55) Pausanias, lib. i. pag. 17.

(56) Notes sur l'Artifice de Virgile p. 101, 102.

(57) Natalis Comes, Mythol. p. 864.

(58) Scholiast. Apollon. lib. i. ver. 211.

(59) Thucyd. lib. ii.

(60) Strabo, lib. ix. pag. 275.

(61) Plin. lib. iv. cap. vii. p. 423.

(62) Scholiast. Apollon. lib. i. ver. 211.

(63) Ο τόπος ἐστὶν ὅπου τὰς πηγὰς. Here are the Fountains of the River. Pausan. lib. x. pag. 351.

(64) Plinius lib. iv. cap. vii. see also Aulus Gellius lib. xviii. cap. x.

(65) Plato in Phaedro, pag. 1211.

(66) Guillet, Athenes ancienne & nouvelle, pag. 264.

Hercules kill them (50); but there is no mention made of a thing which raised his Jealousy, and perhaps provoked him more than any thing else. — Propertius says that those two Brothers perceiving that Hylas, the favourite of Hercules, was going by himself to look for a Fountain, followed him, and caressed him passionately (51).

Callimachus mentions three Daughters of Boreas, who carried Offerings to the Isle of Delos (52). He calls them Oupis, Laxo, and Hecærga. It is said also that the Rape of Orithya is not the only Act of that kind which Boreas committed; it is pretended that he carried away Chloris the Daughter of Arcturus, and that he had a Daughter by her. — Memoriae proditum est à Cleante in primo libro de moribus, Boream rapuisse Chlorim quoque Arcturi filiam, atque illam in collem Niphatem asportasse, qui postea thorus Boreæ vocatus fuit, antequam diceretur Caucasus, de qua filiam suscepit Hyrpace (53). — It is recorded by Cleantes, in the first book de Moribus, that Boreas took away Chloris, the Daughter of Arcturus, and carried her up to the Hill Niphates, which was afterwards called Boreas's Bed, before it was called Caucasus, and by her he had a Daughter called Hyrpace. See the Remark [H].

[G] The Circumstances of Orithya's Rape are variously reported. Some say that she was on the Bank of the River Ilissus, when she was carried away; it is the opinion of Apollonius (54), Pausanias (55), and Dionysius Periegetes. — Izertus follows this opinion in his Cybiades. Yet Chærilus says, that it was on the Banks of the Fountain Cepheissus, and Simonides near the River Brilissus (56). The Author, from whom I borrow this Passage, took it from Natalis Comes. He should have observed that the Original does not say that Brilissus was a River. There are only these words in it: Simonides tamen Poeta non ab Ilisso, sed à Brilisso, raptam fuisse Orithyam putavit (57). — Yet Simonides the Poet was of opinion, that Orithya was taken, not from Ilissus, but from Brilissus. This is taken from the Scholiast upon Apollonius. These are his Words: τὴν δὲ Ὠρίθυαν Σιμωνίδης ἀπὸ Βριλίσσου φασὶν ἀρπαγεῖσθαι, ἐπὶ τὴν Σαρπηδονίαν πύργον τῆς Ὠκεῖνης ἐνὶ Χθονὶ (58). But Simonides says that Orithya was taken from Brilissus and carried to the Sarpedonian Rock in Thrace. It is very likely that his Brilissus is the Mountain Brilissus, mentioned by Thucydides (59), Strabo (60), and Pliny (61), and which was in Attica. It is the same Scholiast who informs us of Chærilus's Opinion. Χοιρίλλος δὲ, φησὶ (62), ἀρπασθῆναι αὐτὴν ἐν τῇ ἀκρὶ ἀμυγδαλέω, ὑπὸ τὰς τῆς Κηφισσοῦ πηγὰς. But Chærilus says, that she was taken, as she was gathering Flowers, by the Fountain of Cepheissus. By these last Words might be understood the Spring of the River Cepheissus near Lilea in Phocis (63), but it is better to understand them of a particular Fountain, called Cepheissus, near Athens (64). We have not yet said all that concerns the different accounts of Authors concerning the place where the Rape was committed. Plato observes that there was a Tradition, that Orithya was carried away from the Areopagus. Ἡ δὲ Ἀεὶς πᾶσι λέγεται γὰρ αὐτὴ καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ Ἀρεῷ, ὡς ἐκείθεν ἀλλ' οὐ ἐνθάδε ἠρπάσθην (65). Or out of the Areopagus. For there is another Tradition, that she was not taken from this Place, but from thence. He had just before touched upon the most general Opinion, viz. that Ilissus was the place from whence she was carried away. We must not take for a new Opinion what Mr Guillet says, that Boreas stole away the young Orithya in that part of Athens, called Agra or Agræ, and that it was the first time the Goddess Diana went a Hunting (66). The Altar of Boreas, and the Temple of Diana Agræa, stood there on the Banks of the Ilissus.

VOL. II.

This may be inferred from two Passages compared together, one of Plato (67), and the other of Pausanias (68).

The different Reports concerning Orithya's Employment are these. Some say in general that she was diverting herself (69); others that she was gathering Flowers (70); others that she was going over the Ilissus (71); others that she was dancing; others that she was bathing. Plato insinuates the last Opinion very clearly (72); and we find the fourth in express Words in these Verses of Apollonius.

Ἐὼ χατὴν δὲ ἄλκας δὲ ὡς χεῖμῆρας ἐνθ' ἀγῶν γὰς ὀφινὶς βόρεος ἀνέρι-ῶτο κενεστίνδεν, Ἰλισσοῦ περὶ πᾶσι χορῶν ἐνὶ δινεύσαν (73).

In ultima intempesta Thracia, quo istam Thracius Aquilo rejecerat à Cecropia, Cum se propter Ilissum in choro circumagebat.

To the remote and rigid Climes of Thrace
The fair, by Thracian Boreas, was convey'd
From Attica, where on Ilissus banks
He found her dancing.

I only quote this Passage to shew the rashness of the Historian of another Apollonius. He supposes that his Hero, censuring the Athenians, told them, that, if Orithya had danced, she would not have inspired any Love. That Passage of Philostratus is curious enough to deserve that I should set down the Latin Translation of it. — Oportet ventos venerari, præsertim cum socii vestri sint, & pro vobis maxime spirent, neque Boream asinem vestrum, qui maxime ventorum omnium masculus est, foeminam facere decet, neque enim ipse Boreas Orythiam amasset, si eam vidisset tripudiantem (74). — You ought to reverence the Winds, especially because they are your Allies, and blow mostly for you, nor is it fit that Boreas your Kinsman, who is the most Masculine of all Winds, be made a Woman; for Boreas himself would not have loved Orithya, if he had seen her dancing. Artus Thomas, Sieur d'Embri, who wrote a Commentary upon that Work of Philostratus, should have informed us of the opposition there is between the discourse of Apollonius the Poet, and that of Apollonius the Philosopher. It had been more reputable for him to observe the Impertinences of the latter, than to tell us, I. That some make Boreas the Son of Aëreus, and others say that he was a Thracian. II. That Simonides calls the River, near which Orithya was ravished, Brilissus (75). Here are two Faults; for to be the Son of Aëreus, and to be of Thrace, are not contraries, and Simonides does not say that Brilissus was a River. It would be to no purpose to say, that Apollonius's design being to reform the Athenians, he would have been to blame if he had gone about to refute the Stories which they related of Boreas; I say such a Reason ought not to be alledged, seeing there was a Medium which might easily have been kept, between refuting ridiculous Traditions, and supposing them to be true. He should not have mentioned them; a Philosopher, who was persuaded that a Refutation of those idle Stories would offend his hearers, ought to have said nothing of them. But what a disorder is this! The Athenians, so ingenious, so polite, so knowing, so acute a People, suffer themselves to be persuaded that the Daughter of one of their Kings made a Wind in love with her, that she lay with him, that she conceived by him, that That Marriage occasioned an Alliance between them and that Wind, and that this Ally proved very serviceable to them, when they implored his assistance in the War against the Persians. They were

(67) Plato in Phædro pag. 211.

(68) Pausanias, lib. i. pag. 17.

(69) Id. ibid.

(70) See above, Citation (62).

(71) Apollon. lib. iii. pag. 247.

(72) Plato in Phædro, pag. 210.

(73) Apollonius lib. i. ver. 213, pag. 24.

(74) Philostat. in Vita Apollonii lib. iv. pag. 137.

(75) Artus Thomas Sieur d'Embri in his Annotations upon Apollonius's Life, translated into French by Vigener, Tom. I. pag. 801.

South-West Winds, that are feared there. Those are the two Authors of Shipwracks there. I make this Observation to shew that Poets, who are too servile Imitators of Antiquity, give us often Descriptions not well suited to their Country. I must add, to what I have already said, an Observation on a Passage of Natalis Comes [H], which I have quoted at the End of the Remark [F] of this Article.

were so persuaded of all these things, that they confirmed them by public Decrees, by erecting an Altar, and by the celebration of an Anniversary. I make this observation, lest it should be objected to me, that the Rape of Orithya was looked upon at Athens as a poetical Fiction, and a witty Conceit. That Objection is absolutely false. All that I have said concerning the Wind Boreas, was an Article of Faith among the Athenians. I am apt to believe, that at first it was only a poetical Fancy sang about the Streets; but at length it became part of the Public Religion. The same might be said of the other parts of the Pagan Religion, and we may observe upon this occasion a remarkable difference between Mahometism and Paganism. An Impostor founded Mahometism; it was his design. But Paganism was formed out of the witty Conceits of some Poets, who had no design to sanctify their Fictions, but invented them only for amusement. It is of them, it might have been said, Hæ nugæ serâ ducunt in mala. — These trifles lead into serious mischief. When once those Fooleries came to be looked on as a point of Faith, they never after lost their credit. It is in this respect that the Egyptians might have said to the Greeks, ὦ Σῶλον, Σῶλον, Ἕλληνας αἰεὶ παῖδες ἔσε ----- νῶτερες (εἰπείν) τὰς Ἰνχῶς πάντες (76). O Solon, Solon, ye Greeks are always Children, your minds are always young. But the Greeks might yet better reproach them with the same thing in that respect:

Quis nescit Volusi Bithynice, qualia demens
Egyptus portenta colat — (77).

How Egypt, mad with Superstition grown,
Makes Gods of Monsters, but too well is known.

DRYDEN.

And indeed we do not find any Author among them that deserves the civility, which a Roman shewed to Diodorus Siculus, of whom he said, that he was the first among the Greeks that left off fooling (78).

I do not pretend that all the Athenians were so simple, as to believe those idle Stories. I remember the answer, which Plato put in the Mouth of Socrates, who was asked whether he believed that the Tradition of the Rape of Orithya was true:

ἀλλ' εἰπὲς πρὸς Διὸς, ὃ Σώκρατες. καὶ σὺ τῷ το τὸ μυθολογίᾳ κείνῃ ἀληθὲς εἶναι: sed dice per Jovem Socrates, tunc hanc fabulam parvas ve ram fuisse (79)? If I disbelieved it as wise Men do, answered he, I should not be absurd: Ἀλλ' εἰ ἀπιστοῖν ὥσπερ οἱ σοφοί, ἐκ δὲ ἀπορίας εἶναι (80). Jam si non putarem ut sapientes absurdus non essem. It appears by these words on the one side, that the most knowing Persons judged right ly of it; and on the other, that they explained their Thoughts cautiously upon that Subject in a public Work. However, a great many Athenians, Men of Parts and good Sense in all other things, and much more capable to deceive others than to be deceived, believed honestly what was told them of Boreas and Orithya. This is a matter of Won der, and affords a good Moral Reflexion about the Weakness of Humane Understanding. Let us judge of the Ancients by the Moderns. At this day, in Rome, where there is so much Wit, and so much Prudence, they commonly believe most of the Traditions, upon which the Worship of some particular Chapels is grounded. Some few thinking Men give no credit to them. We must argue in this manner as to ancient Greece.

[H] An Observation on a Passage of Natalis Comes. We have seen (81) that That Author asserts, that Boreas stole away Chloris, Daughter of Arcturus, and carried her to the top of the Mountain Niphates, which was afterwards called the bed of Boreas; and that he had a Daughter by her named Harpax. Natalis Comes pretends that Cleantes has related this in his first Book of Memories; but here is what Plutarch says (82). Mount Niphates was called the Bed of Boreas, from the time that this God carried thither Chloris, the Daughter of Arcturus (83). He had a Son by her called Harpax, who succeeded King Hemiochus. This Mountain was afterward called Caucasus, because Saturn, taking his refuge there, after the War of the Giants, for fear of the Menaces of his Son, killed a Shepherd there, whose name was Caucasus. He was driven from that Asylum, and thrown into Tartarus. Jupiter threw him there, and ordered the Mountain to be called Caucasus, in honour of that Shepherd, and fastened Prometheus to it. This is what Cleantes has related in the third Book of the Theomachia. It is not certain that Plutarch cited him in what relates to the Wind Boreas; so that Natalis Comes is faulty in several Respects.

BORGARUTIUS (PROSPER), an Italian Physician, lived in the XVth Century. He published some Works, the first of which was a Treatise of Anatomy. He composed it in his Native Language; and finding it met with so good a Reception, that the Professors of Anatomy in the Universities of Italy scrupled not to use his very words, he resolved to translate it into Latin, with the Addition of several new Observations, which he had made while he taught Anatomy publicly at Padua. He not only communicated to the Public the Discoveries he had made by Dissection of Bodies, but studied Medicines also, and printed something on that Subject, though he had sworn never to have any thing to do with the Book-sellers [A]. He took a Journey to the Court of France in the Year 1567; and as [A] He published something ----- though he had sworn never to have any thing to do with the Book-sellers. The trouble he was involved in during the printing of his Book of Anatomy, and the Vexation he met with in the Printers Work, made him, in a Fret, take such an Oath, but, when he was got from under the Press, he broke his word. He compares himself in this to those Women, who, in the Pains of Childbirth, protest they will never expose themselves to the like any more; yet notwithstanding when the Pain is over forget their Protections: Quod accidere universis parturientibus solet, mihi plane contigisse videtur, ut dum in labore quidem versantur se jurent amplius non parituras: postea vero extra discrimen positæ, rursus & concipiunt & pariunt. Nam quod haud ita pridem Contemplationem Anatomicam, laboriosissimum partum, exarandum in publicam Studioforum commoditatem curarem; ac partim quidem immensis laboribus fractus, partim prælii difficultates ac molestias summas pertæsus, contuissim, ac propemodum apud me dejerâsem, non futuram mihi amplius rem cum Typographis. Postea quam factus jam editus est in lucem, violare jusjurandum compulsus fui; fabricam Pharmacopolitæcon (ut interim de meo pestilentis morbi Tractatu, ac Methodo de Morbo Gallico verba facere non curem) duodecim classibus digestam, publice educavi, ac meo quidem lacte tam diu sustuli, donec hinc inde seipsa audacter evolavit

(76) Plato in Timæo, p. 1043. C.

(77) Juvenal. Sat. xv. init.

(78) Apud Græcos defuit nugari Diodorus. Plin. in Prefat. p. 10.

(79) Plato in Phædro p. 1211. A.

(80) Id. ibid.

(81) See above, Citation (53).

(82) Plutarch. de Fluvio, pag. 18.

(83) It was the River called afterwards Phasis.

he writes himself Medicus Regius, the King's Physician, I conjecture that he obtained this Title at that time. He found at Paris the Manuscript of the Great Surgery of Vesalius, and bought it, and published it at Venice (a) in the Year 1569 in 8vo [B]. His Epistle Dedicatory, dated from Padua the thirteenth of September 1568, affords me this Information.

(1) Prosper Borganutius Epist. Dedicat. Chirurgie Magnae.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) There be is called Borganutius instead of Borganutius.

'evolavit (1)'. He adds that his Zeal for the good of the Public obliged him to break his Oath, for he saw that the Faults committed in the Composition of Remedies stood in need of Correction, and that he could employ himself therein to good purpose. I know not whether he published the four Books he promised de Morborum Puerorum curandi ratione (2). They are not mentioned in Lindinius renovatus, nor in the Epitome of the Bibliothèque de Gesner (3), nor in the Supplement to it; but that is not sufficient reason to conclude that he did not publish that Work; for he has published some others which these Authors do not mention.

Every body knows the Story of the Woman, who made the Protestations above hinted at, who notwithstanding was no sooner delivered, than she desired that the blessed Candle, which was burning on the Table, might be put out: for says she, it may serve me another time. One cannot here properly apply the Italian Proverb, Passato il pericolo, gabbato il Santo; when the Danger's over, send the Saint a grazing. It is well known that there are particular and indispensable Reasons which very justly discharge a Woman from any thing she may have sworn on such an Occasion. It is not the same thing in respect to Vows made at Sea in a Storm, which are commonly forgot on Shore.

There are no Authors so subject as Poets, to forget that they solemnly promised to print no more.

O! combien l'homme est inconstant, divers,
Foible, léger, tenant mal sa parole,
J'avois juré, même en assez beaux vers,
De renoncer à tout Conte frivole.
Et quand juré? c'est ce qui me confond:
Depuis deux jours j'ai fait cette promesse.
Puis suez-vous à Rimeur qui répond
D'un seul moment. Dieu ne fit la sagesse
Pour les cerveaux qui hantent les neuf Sœurs.

How light, and inconstant, is Man,

How apt of his Promise to fail!

I have sworn, in the best Verse I can,

To meddle no more with a Tale.

Sworn! when? ay, that confounds me sore;

'Tis two days since I made that Oath,

Henceforth who'll trust a Rymer more,

That for one Moment pawns his troth.

Wisdom by Heaven was never made

To adorn a Poet's giddy Head.

These are the Words of the ingenious la Fontaine, in the beginning of one of his Tales (4). Mr Ménage bestowed two Chapters (5), to prove, that Poets after they have sworn to write no more, do still write on (6).

[B] He found at Paris the Manuscript of the great Surgery of Vesalius — and published it at Venice, in the Year 1569 in 8vo.] He corrected and digested it into order, and made it, in a manner, his own Work; as he says in the Title Page.

Andreae Vesalii, Bruxellensis, Philippi

Hispaniarum Regis medici,

Chirurgia Magna, in septem libros digesta,

In quâ nihil desiderari potest, quod ad perfectam atque integram, de curandis humani Corporis malis, methodum pertineat.

Ab Excellentissimo Philosopho, ac Medico Régio, Prospero Borganutio, recognita, emendata, ac in lucem edita.

Formæ etiam Instrumentorum, quibus Chirurgi utuntur, his in libris apprimè descriptæ sunt.

Venetis, Ex Officina Valgrisianâ. 1569.

(a) Ex officina Valgrisianâ.

(4) La Fontaine au Conte de la Clochette, Toms I. pag. 192.

(5) In the Anti-bailler, Tom. II. chap. cxxiii, &c.

(6) See the Index to Anti-bailler at the word Poets.

BORRHAUS (MARTIN), Professor of Divinity at Basil, was first known by the Name of Cellarius. He was born at Stutgard in the Duchy of Wittemberg in the Year 1499 (a); and was a Disciple of Capnio (b). He took his Degree of Master in Philosophy at Heidelberg (c), and going afterwards to Wittemberg, he there acquired the Friendship of Melanchthon, with whom he had already some Acquaintance at Tubingen (d). As he wanted neither Parts nor Learning, he had a great many Scholars, by which he got a deal of Money. He was admitted to that Employment on Melanchthon's Recommendation. He suffered himself to be miserably seduced by Stubner, one of the first Founders of Anabaptism, and laboured with much Zeal to establish that Sect (e). He had a Conference with Luther in the Year 1522 [A], wherein he shewed a great deal of Fanaticism. Being gone into Prussia in the Year 1525, he was imprisoned there by order of the Prince; yet he went on, and wrote several Books to support his Errors (f). But when he

(a) Konig, Bibl. pag. 126.

(b) Frider. Spanhemius de origine & progressu Anabapt. n. 2.

(c) Höornbeck, summa Controv. pag. 356.

(d) Camerar. in vita Melanchthonis, pag. 48.

(e) Ex eodent ibid. pag. 47, 48.

(f) Id. pag. 48.

[A] He had a Conference with Luther, in the Year 1522.] The first fury of Anabaptism broke out at Zwickau, where Nicolas Storch, Mark Stubner, and Thomas Munzer, set up for Prophets, and boasted that they frequently had Conversation with God. They drew a great number of Hearers after them; for they promised that the new Reign of the Messiah would soon come. All this while Luther lay concealed; but he was informed of the great stir of those Fanatics, and of the Progress they made at Wittemberg, where they had also staggered Melanchthon (1). As for our Cellarius, they gained him intirely, and he became as zealous as any of them. 'Non paucos in suam sententiam perducebat (Marcus Stubnerus) quorum caput fuit Martinus Cellarius, qui istis pertinacissime diu sane adhæsit, & causam hanc egit atque defendit (2)'. Luther leaving his retreat came to Wittemberg in the Month of March 1522, and stopped the progress of those Men by his Sermons. Nay, their Disciples heard him with great Veneration; but as soon as Stubner, who was gone from Wittemberg about some business, came back again, they adhered to him as before, and encouraged him to maintain his Opinions. Cellarius especially exhorted him to it (3). Stubner desired a Conference with Luther, and at last a Day and Hour was appointed for that purpose. He came to the Assignment accompanied with Cellarius and another; Luther had only Melanchthon with him. You will see in the Latin Passage recited below, that Cellarius shewed more Passion than Stubner, and how those Fanatics left Wittemberg the same day, and retired to Cheberg, from whence they wrote a Letter full of Curies to Luther. 'Audiuit Lutherus placide narrantem Marcum sua. Cum discendi finem fecisset, nihil contra illa adeo absurda & futilia differendum ratus Lutherus, hoc modo

(3) Inque omnibus maxime & ardentissime M. Cellarius. Id. ibid. pag. 50.

(1) See Secken-dorf, Hist. Luther. lib. I. p. 253.

(2) Camerar. in vita Melanchthon. pag. 47.

(g) Hoornbeeck, ubi supra, pag. 355. See also Camerarius, ubi supra, pag. 48.

(h) Viduus causa fenestrarum opificio se aliquando adoluit. He followed the Trade of a Glazier some time for a livelihood.

Hoornb. ib. pag. 356.

law that his Sect received great checks daily, and that the Hopes they had given of the Renovation of all things proved false, he was converted, and retired to Basil in the Year 1536 (g). He not only quitted Anabaptism, but also the Name of Cellarius, and took upon him the Name of Borrhaus. He married, and applied himself some time to a Trade for a Livelihood (h). At last he was admitted into the number of the Professors of the University; he taught Rhetoric first, and afterwards Divinity. He wrote some Books [B], and died of the Plague at Basil in the Year 1564 (i).

do monuit; viderent quid agerent. Nihil eorum quae commemorassent sacris literis nisi, commentaque esse cogitationum curiosarum, aut etiam fallacis & fraudulentis spiritus deliras & perniciosas subjectiones. Ibi Cellarius & voce & gestibus vesanis, cum & solum pedibus & propositam mensulam manibus feriret, exclamare & indignari, autum esse Luterum suspicari tale aliquid de divino homine. At Marcus paulo sedatior, ut scias, inquit, Lutere, me spiritu Dei praeditum esse, ego quid in animo tuo conceperis sum indicaturus, idque est: Te incipere inclinari ad haec ut meam doctrinam veram esse credas. Cum Luterus, ut ipse postea dixit, istam dedit opera sententiam cogitando esset complexus: Inrepet te Deus Satana: Post haec plus verborum faciendum Luterus non putavit, & minantes gloriantesque eos dimisit, ac nescio quid pollicentes de mirabilibus effectibus, quibus probaturi sua essent, cum hoc modo dixisset: Is Deus quem ego veneror? Ego solo facile vestra numina, ne quid tale efficiatur, coercetis; eo die oppido illi excesserunt, & Chembergo, distante passibus amplius millibus quinque, literas plenas maledictis & execrationibus ad Lutherum miserunt (4). — Luther patiently heard Marcus lay down his Doctrine. When he had done, Luther, not thinking proper to dispute against such absurd and empty stuff, only gave them this Admonition, to take care what they did. That none of those things, they had laid down, were founded on Scripture, that they were the Devices of curious Minds, or rather the pernicious Suggestions of a deceitful and lying Spirit. At that Cellarius, with all the Extravagance of Gesture as well as Voice, stamping, beating the Table, and exclaiming, testified his Indignation, that Luther should suspect such a thing of the divine Man. But Marcus, who was a little more sedate, said to Luther, to let you see that I am endued with the Spirit of God, I will tell you what you have now in your Thoughts; and that is, you begin to incline to believe my Doctrine to be true. When Luther, as he said himself afterwards, had on purpose fixed his Thoughts on this Sentence; God rebuke thee Satan: After this Luther thought not fit to say any more, but let them go threatening and boasting, and promising to prove their Doctrine by I know not what Miracles, to which he only replied, the God, whom I fear and worship, will easily restrain your God from bringing any such thing to pass; the same Day they went out of the Town, and sent Luther a Letter from Chemberg, about five Miles distant, full of Curses and Maledictions.

[B] He wrote some Books. He published Notes on Aristotle's Politics in the Year 1545. A Commentary on Aristotle's Rhetoric in the Year 1551. A Commentary on the Pentateuch in the Year 1557. One upon Isaiah and the Revelations in the Year 1561. One on Job and Ecclesiastes in the Year 1564. I have not seen what he wrote on Logic and the Mathematics (5), nor his Commentary on the Book of Judges, and on the Book of Kings (6). Konig ascribes to him a Philosophical Work divided into three Books, de censura veri & falsi (7).

(i) Id. ibid.

(5) Praeter scripta logica & mathematica libris aliquot commentariis in Vetus Testamentum & Ecclesiae Dei commendavit. Spanhemius de orig. & progr. Anabapt. n. 2.

(6) Hoornbeeck summ. Controv. pag. 356, makes mention of it.

(7) Konig, in Biblioth. vet. & nova, pag. 126.

(4) Id. ibid. pag. 51, 52.

(a) See the Remark [I].

BORRI (JOSEPH FRANCIS), in Latin Burrhus, a famous Chymist, Quack, and Heretic in the XVIIth Century, was a Milanese (a). He finished his Studies in the Seminary at Rome [A], where the Jesuits admired him as a Prodigy for his Memory and Capacity. He applied himself afterwards to the Court of Rome, but that did not hinder him from making several Discoveries in Chymistry. He plunged himself into the most extravagant Debaucheries, and in the Year 1654 was obliged to take refuge in a Church. A little while after he set up for a religious Man, and privately scattered certain visionary Notions [B]. He communicated to his Confidants the Revelations which he boasted he had received: but after the Death of Innocent X, finding that the new Pope Alexander VII renewed the Tribunals, and caused more care to be taken of every thing, he despaired of having time sufficient to encrease the Number of his Followers, as his Design required; and therefore he left Rome, and returned to Milan. He acted the Devotee there, and by that means gained Credit with several People, whom he caused to perform certain pious Exercises, which had a great Appearance of a spiritual Life. He engaged the Members of his new Congregation, to take an Oath of Secrecy to him; and when he found them confirmed in the Belief of his extraordinary Mission, he prescribed to them certain Vows by the Suggestion of his Angel, as he pretended. One of those Vows was that of Poverty, for the Performance whereof he caused all the Money which every one had, to be consigned to himself. The

[A] He finished his Studies in the Seminary at Rome. The Author of his Life has omitted a Circumstance, which well deserved to be mentioned. I shall give it in the Words of a Memorial which came to my hands from Mr Baudrand the Geographer. 'Borri, being in the Seminary of the Jesuits, raised a Sedition against them, and shut himself up with others for three days, so that they were forced to send for the Barig, or Grand Provost, with his Officers to bring Borri and the other Scholars to Reason. In the Year 1653, he was Secretary to the Marquis Mirogli Resident of the Archduke of Inspree at Rome, where I saw him at that time, as also in 1654, but there was no talk of his Heresies; in the Year 1655 he went to Inspree, and afterwards to Milan. These things do not well agree with the printed Life of Borri.

[B] After he had run into the most extravagant Debaucheries, he set up for Devotion, and privately scattered certain visionary Notions. Affecting an appearance of a great Zeal, he lamented the corruption of Manners which prevailed at Rome, saying that the Dissemper was come to the height, and that the time of the Recovery drew near: A happy time, wherein there would be but one Sheepfold on the Earth, whereof the Pope was to be the only Shepherd. 'Whosoever shall refuse, said he, to enter into that Sheepfold, shall be destroyed by the Pope's Armies; God has predestinated me to be the General of those Armies; I am sure that they shall want nothing; I shall

The fifth of those Vows engaged them to a most ardent Zeal for the holy Propagation of the Kingdom of God. It was to be the Reign of the Most High, the Reign of one sole Flock, in the Jargon of this new Sect (b). Borri was to be Captain-General of the Troops, which were to bring all Mankind into one Sheep-fold; he was to be assisted in a particular manner by Michael the Archangel; he had already received a Sword from Heaven, on the Handle of which appeared the Image of the seven Intelligences, and the Pope himself was to be killed, if he had not the requisite Mark on his Forehead. I omit the particulars of his other Visions (c), to say something of the new Doctrines of the Cavalier Borri. He taught, among other things, that the Holy Virgin was a real Goddess, and properly the Holy Ghost incarnate, for that she was born of St Anne, in the same manner as JESUS CHRIST was born of her. He called her the only Daughter of God, conceived by Inspiration, and caused this to be added to the Mass when the Priests his Sectaries celebrated it (d). He said, that as to her Humanity she was present at the Sacrament of the Eucharist, and alledged certain Passages of Scripture to maintain his Doctrine. He took it in his Head to dictate a Treatise on his System to his Followers [C]. I have said already, that he boasted of having a great Share of heavenly Revelations: and it was by that means he had learned, that St Paul had communicated to him the same Power, which God conferred on that Apostle to censure St Peter's Conduct. He boasted that he could communicate to others the Gift of Illumination for understanding Mysteries, and made use of the Imposition of Hands, beseeching the Trinity to receive the Novice into the Religion of the Evangelical Nationalists (e). His Design was, in case he could get a sufficient Number of Followers, to appear in the great Square in Milan, there to represent eloquently the Abuses of the Ecclesiastical and Secular Government, to encourage the People to Liberty, and so to profess himself of the City and Country of Milan, and then to pursue his Conquests as well as he could. But all his Designs miscarried by the Imprisonment of some of his Disciples, and, as soon as he saw that first step of the Inquisition, he fled with all the haste he could, and took care not to appear to the Summons of that formidable Tribunal. They proceeded against him for Contumacy in 1659, and 1660: he was condemned as an Heretic, and burnt in Effigy, with his Writings, in the Field of Flora at Rome, by the Hands of the Executioner, the third of January 1661 [D]. He staid some time in the City of Strasburg, where he found some support and assistance, as being persecuted by the Inquisition, and also as a great Chymist; but he wanted a larger Theatre. He looked for it in Holland in the Year 1661, and found it at Amsterdam. He made a great noise there; People flocked to him as to the universal Physician for all Diseases; he appeared there in a stately Equipage, and took upon him the Title of Excellency; they talked of marrying him to the greatest Fortunes, &c. The Chance turned, his Reputation began to sink, either because his Miracles no longer found any Credit, or because his Faith could work no more

(b) Quanto si doveva fare nello spazio di pochi anni col suo immaginario Regno dell' Altissimo ed il suo suo Ovile. Vita del Cavagl. Borri, pag. 347.

(c) See the Remarks.

(d) See the Remark [C] at the end.

(e) Coll' imporre loro tutte due le mani sovra il capo invocando la santissima Trinità affinché gradisse d'accettarli nella religione de Nazionalisti Vangelici. Vita del Borri, pag. 351.

' I shall quickly finish my Chymical Labours by the happy Production of the Philosophers Stone, and by that means I shall have as much Gold as is necessary for the Business. I am sure of the assistance of the Angels, and particularly of that of Michael the Archangel. When I began to walk in the Spiritual Life, I had a Vision in the Night attended with an Angelical Voice, which assured me that I should become a Prophet: the Sign that was given me for it was a Palm that seemed to me quite surrounded with the Light of Paradise (1). He boasted that St Michael the Archangel had taken Possession in his heart, and that whole Bands of Angels revealed to him the Secrets of Heaven, and what passed in the Conclave of Alexander VII. I only mention a few of his chimerical Notions; which may suffice to give an Idea of the whole.

(1) Gli apparisce una palma circondata d'ogni intorno, da lumi paradisiaci. Vita del Cavagliere Borri, pag. 342.

[C] He dictated a Treatise on his System to his Followers. He took it from them as soon as he understood that the Inquisition had heard something of their Nocturnal Assemblies, and hid all his Papers in a Nuntery. From thence they fell into the hands of the Inquisition: they contained very extravagant Doctrines; as: 'That the Son of God, through an ambitious Principle, and to become equal to his Father, moved him to create Beings; that Lucifer's Fall proceeded from his refusing to adore JESUS CHRIST and the Holy Virgin in idea: That the Angels, who adhered to Lucifer, not thro' deliberation, but only out of desire, remain in the Air: That God made use of the Ministry of rebellious Angels for the Creation of the Elements and Animals: That the Souls of Beasts are a Production, or rather an Emanation, of the substance of the wicked Angels, and that is the reason why they are mortal: That the Holy Virgin proceeded conceived from the Bosom of the Divine Nature, and that, otherwise, she could not have been the Spouse of the Holy Ghost, because of the disproportion of Natures (2). I have said in the Body of this Article, that he called her the only Daughter of God. I shall now quote my Author. 'Chiamava la Vergine, sagratissima Dea, ed unispirata figlia dell' Altissimo, e da que' Sacerdoti suoi sciocchi fieguaçi faceva aggiungere al Canone della Messa le parole UNINSPIRATA FILIA (3). — He called the Virgin, most Holy Goddess, and only inspired Daughter of the most High, and made the Priests, who were his followers, add to the Canon of the Mass the Words, ONLY-INSPIRED DAUGHTER.'

(2) Vita del Cavagliere Borri, pag. 354, and following.

(3) Ibid. pag. 351.

[D] He was burnt in Effigy at Rome. — the third of January 1661. The same Thought, which many Writers have ascribed to Henry Stephens, is likewise ascribed to him, viz. that he should say, he never was so cold as on the day that he was burnt at Rome. It is said that Antonio de Dominis used the same Raillery. 'Gli pervenne la nuova che la sua effigie era abbruciata, e si lasciò intendere, che non aveva mai avuto tanto freddo quanto quel giorno, all' imitazione di Marco Antonio de Dominis, che disse lo stesso, mentre ritrovandosi egli in Inghilterra si faceva della sua effigie simil' esecuzione (4). — News was brought him that his Effigy was burnt, and he said that he never had been so cold as he was that Day, in imitation of Marco Antonio de Dominis, who said the same when he was in England, at the time the like Execution was done on his Effigy.'

(4) Id. p. 359.

[E] He

(f) Cominciando a mancare i miracoli alla sua fede & la fede à suoi miracoli. Id. pag. 372.

(g) Se ne fuggì di notte carico di gemme e danari alla somma di più di dodici mila doppie. Id.

(h) Borri's Journey to the Court of Saxony, has been forgotten in the Book, out of which this Article is extracted. See the Acta Eruditum, 1688. p. 587.

(i) Taken from a Book, intitled, Breve relazione della vita del Cavaliere Gioseppe Francesco Borri Milanese, printed at Geneva, (the Title says, in Colonia appo Pietro del Martello) in 1681, with another Treatise intitled, la Chiave del Gabinetto del Cavaliere Gioseppe Francesco Borri.

more Miracles (f). In short he broke, and fled one Night from Amsterdam with a great many Jewels and Sums of Money which he had pilfered (g). He went to Hamburg where Queen Christina was at that time; he put himself under her Protection, and persuaded her to venture a great deal of Money in order to find out the Philosophers Stone; which came to nothing. Afterwards he went to Copenhagen, and inspired his Danish Majesty with a strong Desire to search for the same Secret. By that means he acquired that Prince's Favour so far as to become very odious to all the great Persons of the Kingdom. Immediately after that King's Death, whom he had put upon great Expences in vain, he left Denmark for fear of being imprisoned, and resolved to go into Turkey (h). Being come to the Frontiers, at a time when the Conspiracy of Nadasti, Serini, and Frangipani was discovered, he was taken at Goldingen for one of the Accomplices; wherefore the Lord of the Place invited him to lodge at his House, and secured his Person; and understanding that his Prisoner's Name was Joseph Francis Borri, he sent that Name to his Imperial Majesty, to see if he was one of the Conspirators. The Pope's Nuncio had Audience of the Emperor at the same time when the Count of Goldingen's Letter was brought. As soon as he heard the Name of Borri, he demanded, in the Pope's Name, that the Prisoner should be delivered to him. The Emperor, having consented to it, ordered that Borri should be sent to Vienna; and obtained a promise from the Pope that he should not be put to death, and sent him to Rome, where he was condemned to remain all his Life in the Prison of the Inquisition, and to make the Amende honorable [E]. Some Years after, he obtained leave to come out, to attend the Duke d'Estree, whom all the Physicians had given over for lost; and he cured him, which occasioned this Saying, that an Arch-Heretic had done a great Miracle in Rome [F]. The Duke obtained, that his Prisoner should be changed, and that he should be sent to the Castle of St Angelo. There was a Report since that time, that he was permitted to go abroad twice a Week, and to walk in the City with Guards (i) [G]. Some Pieces were printed

at

[E] He was condemned to remain all his Life in the Prison of the Inquisition, and to make the Amende honorable. The Reader will be glad to find here more at large, what I have touched upon in general, concerning the Punishment inflicted on the Cavalier Borri. On the last Sunday of the Month of October 1672; he was condemned to make Abjuration of his Errors in the Church della Minerva; for which end, he was brought upon a Scaffold raised on purpose for him, where one of his Adversaries, who was a Priest, read the Trial aloud, with his Confession and Abjuration. The Sentence was pronounced by the Holy Office, he being on his Knees, with a Torch in his Hands, whilst his Abjuration was reading; which done, he arose, and thanked the Sacred College for the Mildness wherewith he had been treated, in not inflicting a greater Punishment upon him, which he confessed he deserved. This was done in the Presence of a vast crowd of People, who were curious to see such a famous Man, and such a solemn and extraordinary Action. He was surrounded with a great many Archers, and Officers of the Holy Office. Many Prelates were also present, with the Sacred College, and an innumerable multitude of other Persons. The said Borri, seeing so many Archers, and other People of that sort about him, fell twice into a Swoon. The Ceremony being over, he was sent back into Prison, from whence he was carried to Loretto, as being too pernicious a Man in Christendom, with express Orders to make him say the Creed every Day, and the Penitential Psalms once every Week (5). — He was also ordered, by his Sentence, to receive the Sacrament once every Day, when he came to Loretto (6). — Before he came out of the Prison of the Inquisition, he was visited by several Men and Women, and also by some Princes and Princesses, Knights, and other Persons of Quality. When he came out of the Prison, they made him pass through a Troop of the Pope's Lancers, which made a Lane. He mounted the Scaffold with his Hands bound, and a lighted Taper between them, and kneeled all the while they were reading his Sentence, by which he was condemned to a perpetual Imprisonment, for having been (these are the very Words of the Sentence) an Inventor of a new Heresy; and to wear, for Penance, the Habit of the Inquisition all his Life, with a Red-cross on his Breast, and another on his Back. He was astonished to hear of a perpetual Imprisonment;

but the Inquisitors comforted him with this Reason, That if that expedient had not been found, they would certainly have taken away his Life; and that they had done him that favour, because he had made an Abjuration of his Errors thirteen Years before (7); which he ratified to the Inquisitors Casanatta and Pozzobonelli: The Pope, on hearing of the Confirmation of that Abjuration, was so well pleased, that he gave a plenary Indulgence of all Sins to all those that were present at it; for the Ceremony lasted above five Hours (8).

Mr Baudrand informed me. I. That it is not true that our Borri was sent to Loretto after his Abjuration. II. That the Inquisition could not put him to Death, since he was not a Relapse, and that he made an Abjuration of his Errors at the Minerva, before the Cardinals of the Congregation of the Holy Office. I wish that all who hereafter shall cite the Mercurio Hollandis were apprised of these two faults.

[F] He cured the Duke d'Estree, which occasioned this Saying, that an Arch-Heretic had done a great Miracle in Rome. The Physicians had given over the sick Person; he was therefore accounted as dead, and therefore his Recovery was looked upon as a Resurrection. Sendo cosa strana che un Eresiarca abbia fatto un miracolo di resuscitar' un morto, come veniva creduto da' medici (9).

[G] It has been said, that he was permitted to go abroad twice a Week — with Guards. I have it from very good Hands, that the Queen of Sweden sent for him sometimes in a Coach; but that, after the Death of that Princess, he went no more abroad, and that none could speak with him, without special leave from the Pope. I have been assured, that he pretended he was not a Prisoner in the Castle of St Angelo, but that he lodged there, as it was a large Palace, to apply himself to Study and Chymical Operations, and that he neglected opportunities of making his escape, which frequently offered.

Note, That Mr Majclari, having read this last Passage, informed me, that, when he was at Rome (10), he saw the Cavalier Borri several times, and that he knows very well, that he could come no lower than a certain Door in the middle of the Stairs, of the Dungeon of the Castle of St Angelo; so far he waited upon those who came to see him; that he had a pretty good Apartment, consisting of three Rooms and a Laboratory; that none could be admitted to see him without a Note from Cardinal Cibo, and that he looked upon that Castle

(7) The Author of his Life says nothing of that; he says that Borri was condemned for refusing to appear, and that he fled from Milan, as soon as he knew that he was discovered.

(8) Mercurio Hollandis of 1672, pag. 465, 466.

(9) Vita del Borri, pag. 379.

(10) That is in 1679, and 1680.

(5) Mercurio Hollandis of the Year 1672, pag. 463, 464.

(6) Id. pag. 465, 466.

at Geneva, in 1681; which are ascribed to him [H]. We shall see in the Remarks what was Sorbieri's Opinion of this Man [I]. It will be a pretty curious Supplement to this Article. You will see likewise what Monconis thought of him [K].

Mr Frischman

as a real Prison to him, from which he did not despair but that the Duke d'Esirée would deliver him. The difference of these Relations may be reconciled by distinguishing times, and those, who know the Character of our Borri, may easily see, that, when he had obtained permission to go abroad sometimes, he might perhaps boast, that he was no longer a Prisoner.

[H] Some Pieces were printed at Geneva in 1681, which are ascribed to him. They may be reduced to two, viz. Letters concerning Chymistry, and Political Reflexions. The first of those Works is entitled, La chiave del Gabinetto del Cavaliere Giuseppe Francesco Borri Milanese. It contains ten Letters; the two first, dated from Copenhagen in the Year 1666, are in substance the very same with le Comte de Gaballus, published by the Abbot de Villars in the Year 1670. Let the curious examine which of those two Pieces ought to pass for the Original. The other Letters run upon Chymical Questions, except the last, wherein the Author maintains Des Cartes's Opinion concerning the Souls of Beasts. The Title of the other Treatise is, Istruzioni politiche del Cavaliere Giuseppe Francesco Borri Milanese date al Re di Danimarca. They are some Political Aphorisms, with a pretty long Commentary. Borri's Life informs us, that, when he was at Straßburg, he published a Letter which went all over the World (11). The Bibliothèque of the Physicians mentions two of his Letters printed at Copenhagen in the Year 1699, and ascribed to Bartholinus, one of them de ortu cerebri, & usu medico; the other, de artificio oculorum humores restituendi (12). König ascribes another Piece to him, intitled, Notitia Gentis Barbarorum.

[I] This is Sorbieri's Opinion of this Man. I have only to add a few Words concerning the famous Cavalier Borri, whom I have seen at Amsterdam, this last time I have been there. You have a mind to know how it came to pass, that at such a distance he made so great a noise at Paris, that some Persons of Quality have been carried into Holland in Litters to be cured by that Quack; and that some ingenious Persons have gone thither on purpose to see so great a Man. I can say nothing more to it, Sir, than this, that it is as true now, as it was formerly, that our poor Humanity might be defined by the inclination to Lying, and by Credulity, Homo animal credulum & mendax, Man is a credulous and lying Animal, Φιλόλογος ἴσως. Those that can so easily believe the Stories which are told of those Workers of Miracles, such as Borri was taken to be, before the World was undeceived, must have been accustomed, without doubt, in their Infancy, to listen attentively to old Wives Tales; it is a mark of a good Nature, and a very tractable Disposition. I could make several Reflexions upon this (13). — Some People after they have laughed at Physicians, on a sudden give intire Credit to the promises of a Quack, and suffer themselves to be bubbled by his new Method, tho' he only sells the same Ware. He, whom I am going to describe to you, is a tall black Man, pretty well shaped; he wears good Cloaths, and spends pretty high, tho' not so much as is imagined; for eight or ten Thousand Livres will go a great way at Amsterdam. But a House of fifteen thousand Crowns bought in a good Place, five or six Foot-men, a Suit after the French Fashion, now and then a Collation to the Ladies, the refusing Money in some Cafes, five or six Rix-dollars distributed to the Poor in a proper Time and Place, arrogant Words, and such like Arts, made some credulous Persons, or some who could have wished it had been true, say, that he gave handfuls of Diamonds, that he had found the Philosophers Stone, and that he had the Universal Medicine (14). The Truth is, the Sieur Borri is a cunning Blade, the Son of an able Physician of Milan (15), who left him some Estate; but he has added to it, what he has got by the Industry I am going to speak of. As he does not want for Parts, and has some Learning, he has found means to prevail with some Princes to supply him with Money, by giving them expectation that he would communicate to them the Philosophers Stone, which he was upon the point of finding. He has, without doubt, some Skill, or some Practice, in Chymical Preparations, some Knowledge in Metals, some imitation of Pearls and Jewels, and, it may be, some purgative or stomachical Remedies, which are commonly very general. As most diseases come from that Region, by this Lure he has insinuated himself into the good Opinion of those whom he stood in need of; and some Merchants, as well as some Princes, have fallen into the Trap. Witness a Promissory Note for two hundred thousand Livres, which he gave to one Demers, who had supplied his Expenses, for which the Heirs of that Merchant are at Law with the Spagyrist; for the Spark has worded it in such an odd manner, that no body knows what to make of it. This Cheat, to come into Credit, and make himself talked of, set up at first for an Heresiarch. He had heard say, that Physicians were suspected not to believe enough, and therefore he pretended to believe more than was required; and striving as it were to pay a greater Honour to the Holy Virgin, than what the Church prescribes, he began to say, That she was a fourth Person of the Divinity. The Inquisition prosecuted him for it; and he was condemned to be burnt for Non-appearance. He went to Inspruc (16), where the late Archduke became the first of his Dupes. And by his means he proceeded in his way to Holland, and settled at Amsterdam, as being a fit place to make his Persecution at Rome sound aloud; and where he might find several People ready to advance large Sums, on account of the great Profits he would give them expectation of. There he set up for a Man of Consequence. At first he acquired some Credit among the Citizens; and maintained himself there for some time by the support of an old Burgomaster, whom he kept up with his Cordial-waters, till every body discovered his knavery, and laughed at his artifices. They confist chiefly in a Method of debasing Coin, with impunity, and in some alteration of Metals, which is not yet well known. For as to his Cures, People are no more the better for them where he is, than they are in this City for the Remedies of a famous Mountebank, who has almost as great a Reputation in the Country of Liege and in Holland, as Borri has in Paris. — (17) Some say, that Borri being at Naples in the time of the Plague, and having an excellent Preservative, went into the infected Houses, which were forsaken by reason of the Infection and Mortality, where he thrived pretty well. I do not know what ground there is for it.

There are two things to be observed in this Narrative of Sorbieri. I. The first is that the Author of Borri's Life does not say that he was the Son of a Physician, but rather intimates the contrary. — Nacque in Milano, says he, figlio del Signor Branda Borri, di Famiglia antica della Città di Milano. — He was born in Milan, Son of Signor Brandi Borri, of an antient Family of the City of Milan. He adds that the Cavalier Borri boasted that he was descended from Burrus Governor of Nera. II. The second is, that the same Author says, that Borri, when he left Italy, went to Switzerland, and thence to Strasburg, Amsterdam, Hamburg, &c. Shunning the Catholic Countries. — Il Borri, dit il (18), uscito d'Italia, e passati li monti con quella fretta che ricercava il suo scampo se ne passò nell' Elvezia, ed indi ad Argentina fuggendo a più potere il passare per paesi Catolici. However it is certain that Borri distilled with the Archduke. See Monconis Part ii. pag. 149, 404.

[K] Likewise what Monconis says of him. He saw him at the Hague in 1663, and heard him say several things concerning Chymical Secrets. The substance

(11) Stampò la lettera di restituire l'occhio ad un cavallo, che corre per tutto il mondo. Vita del Cav. Borri, pag. 370. He could cure sore Eyes very well. See the Remark [K].

(12) Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato, pag. 289, at the word Franciscus Josephus Burrius. The Journal des Scavans of the 2d of September, 1669, speaks fully of these two Letters.

(13) Sorbieri, Relation d'un voyage en Angleterre, pag. 155.

(14) Ibid. pag. 153.

(15) See the end of this Remark, n. 1.

(16) See the end of this Remark, n. 2.

(17) Sorbieri, Relation d'un voyage en Angleterre, p. 163.

(18) Vita del Borri, pag. 563.

Mr Frischman, the French Resident at Strasbourg, wrote a Piece, worth reading, concerning Borri [L]. The Supplement to Dr Burnet's Travels is not exact on this Subject [M]. The Utrecht Gazette of the ninth of September 1695, informed the Public that Borri was lately dead in the Castle of St Angelo, being Seventy nine Years of Age.

(19) Monconis, Voyage, Part. II. pag. 135, 137, 145, 146, 147. &c. of the Lyons Edition.

(20) Ibid. pag. 144, 145.

(21) Ibid. pag. 147.

substance of which may be seen in the Relation of his Travels (19). Borri's Affairs were already in an ill condition; he was afraid of his Enemies, and mistrusted those he had most confided in, and spoke of retiring into Turkey (20). He said, it was indifferent to him, whether the World took him for a learned Man or an ignorant one; and with the same indifference he neglected to justify the Truth of his Belief (21). He added, 'That no Body could be a good Philosopher, without being a good Christian. When I told him, (continues Monconis) that he was accused of having said, that the Holy Ghost had incarnated himself in the Virgin, and his Gentleman had replied, 'Why is he accused of a thing, of which they never had any proof, since they could not shew any of his Writings, wherein there was any such thing: He answered Si bene, 'Yes indeed, in one that the Pope had had, which was the only one that remained by chance, when he had burnt all the rest; and as for supernatural things, no Misfortune did ever happen to him, but he was forewarned of it by a Star that appeared before him, even tho' he had his Eyes shut.' See, in the hundred fifty fifth Page of the same Relation, the Stories which were told Monconis about Borri's Cheats, and in the hundred seventy eighth Page an admirable Cure of an Eye. The Painter Otio told Monconis, that Borri had perfectly cured him of a Cancer in his Eye, which deprived him of his sight, and hindered him from working, which all the Doctors held incurable (22).

(22) Ibid. pag. 176.

[L] Mr Frischman wrote a Piece worth reading concerning Borri.] It bears this Title, Monumentum in laudem gentis Burrorum Calend. Jan. MDCLX. Francisco Josepho Burrbo Medico Italo Atrubum. The four Letters F.R.C.R. which stand for the Author's Name, signifie Frischmannus Regis Christianissimi Resident. He who gives me this Information, explains, in this manner, the Contents of that Piece: 'In quo, says he (23), potens artifex plantas in cineres, earumdem cineres ad eandem pristinum speciem, ignis beneficio rite suppositu balneo Mariæ deducens, Romæ ut fama sed incerta est, similem suam παλινγεσείαν, quæ est combustorum è cineribus resurrectio, expectans, laudatus est. . . . Wherein says he, (23) Deckerhus, de Script. adscript. pag. 131. Tuldensis, Hist. Europ. Part. IV. pag. 144. & in Tractat. p. 303.

'the mighty Artist, reducing Plants into Ashes, and the Ashes into their former shape, by help of fire properly disposed in Balneo Mariæ, expecting for himself a like παλινγεσεία, which is a Resurrection of things burnt from their Ashes, was, as some, though uncertain, reports say, greatly commended for it at Rome.' He refers us to Tuldensis, who mentions the proceedings of the Inquisition against Borri, that is, the Proceedings of 1659, and 1660.

[M] The Supplement to Dr Burnet's Travels is not exact on this Subject.] Three Letters concerning the present State of Italy, are called a Supplement to those Travels: Those Letters were translated out of English, and published at Amsterdam in the Year 1688. We are told there, that Burri (for thus the Translator calls him) is a Gentleman of the Milanese, who had about Eight thousand Crowns a Year, Paternal Estate (24). He travelled in his Youth, and being returned to Milan, he held some Conferences there on the new Philosophy and Chymistry. He was put into the Inquisition; but as nothing could be proved against him, he was set at liberty (25). He went into Germany and Holland. The Inquisition complained of him to the Emperor; he was stopped at Vienna, and afterward sent back into Italy. He was accused of strange Opinions, which were all proved against him, tho' he protests, that he never thought of them (26), and he was obliged to abjure them in the Year 1668 (27). He was condemned to a perpetual Imprisonment. Of those Eight thousand Crowns a Year, they leave him but Three thousand (28); for the good Fathers out of Charity retained five thousand for themselves, and the three thousand are so curtailed by those, thro' whose Hands they pass, that he does not receive One thousand five hundred yearly. The Author of the three Letters imagines, that all the ground of Borri's Heresies, is, his speaking of Religious Things in the mysterious and unintelligible Jargon of certain Chymists. I know some Persons, who believe, that Borri pretended to explain the Trinity, the Incarnation, &c. by the Principles of Chymistry. Mr Baudrand says, that Borri had so small a Patrimony, that he could not live upon it.

(24) Pag. 140, &c.

(25) Had he been taken and judged by the Inquisition, the Italian Author of his Life would not have said, that he made his Escape, and that he was summoned to appear, which he refusing to do, he was condemned.

(26) But he did not deny to Monconis, that he had taught the Incarnation of the Holy Ghost in the Holy Virgin. See the Remark [I].

(27) It was in 1672. See above, the Remark [E].

(28) It is not at all likely, that Borri had then so large a Patrimony, and that the Inquisition left him 9000 Livres a Year.

BORRICHIUS (OLAUS), one of the most learned Men of his Age, was the Son of a Lutheran Minister in the Diocese of Ripen in Denmark, and was born the seventh of April 1626. He was sent to the University of Copenhagen in the Year 1644, where he applied himself six Years to several Sorts of Study; but chiefly to Physic. He taught a Class in the College of Copenhagen, and acquitted himself very well of that Function; for he was indefatigable, and a very sober Man. This gained him the Esteem of Gaspar Brochman, Bishop of Seeland, and that of the Chancellor of the Kingdom, and, by their Recommendation, he obtained a Canonicate at Lunden. The Rectorship of the Illustrious School of Herlora was offered him by Mr de Rosencrantz, after he had taught that Class of Copenhagen four Years; but he refused it, because he thought it would prove an obstacle to his Design of travelling, and perfecting himself in Physic. He began to practise it in the time of a dismal Plague, which destroyed a great many People in the Metropolis of the Kingdom. When the Contagion was over, he spent a Year more in teaching his Class, and then made ready for his Travels. But he was obliged to put off his Design to another time; for Mr Gerstorff, Prime Minister of State, would have him in his House for Tutor to his Children. He was there five Years, after which he satisfied his Inclination to travel; but, before he set out, he had the Advantage of being declared Professor of Philology, Poetry, Chymistry, and Botany, in the University of Copenhagen. He set out in the Month of November 1660, and having seen some famous Physicians at Hamburg, he came to Holland, where he stayed a considerable time. There he met Mr Gerstorff's Sons (a), whom he took under his Conduct. He shewed them the Spanish Netherlands, and England, and carried them to Paris, where he stayed two Years; their Guardians called them home, which gave him Opportunity to continue his Travels with more Liberty. He was made Doctor of Physic at Angers, and saw the chief Cities of the Kingdom;

(a) He died after Borrichius's Departure.

Kingdom; afterwards he went into Italy, and arrived at Rome in the Month of October 1665. He was there till the end of March 1666. After which he was obliged to return home: the Office, which had been conferred upon him in the University of Copenhagen, required his Residence. He crossed Germany, and arrived in Denmark in the Month of October 1666. His long Travels must needs have been very beneficial to him, since he made himself known to the most learned Men in every City he came to [A]. He made it appear in the Exercise of his Office, that he was very worthy of it; being laborious to the highest Degree, and furnished with a great Variety of Learning. The Books, which he published, were an authentic Proof of it [B]. He never would marry, for fear of abridging his Liberty of Philosophizing (b). He was promoted to the Office of a Counsellor in the Supreme Council of Justice in the Year 1686, and to that of the Royal Chancery in 1689. In that same Year he began to be troubled with the Stone (c). The Distemper increased daily, and at last, finding no other remedy than to be cut, he resolved to run the Hazard of that rigorous Operation the thirteenth of September 1690. It did not succeed; the Stone was so large and so hard that it was not possible to extract it. He bore that Accident, and all its Consequences, with great Constancy and Piety, till he died, which happened the third of October the same Year. His Will was a Proof that he made a pious Use of the Riches he had got (d) [C].

(c) Taken from his Life, written by himself, and prefixed to his Latin Poems in the second Tome of the Delicæ quorundam poetarum Danorum, collected by Frederic Roßgaard, and printed at Leyden in 1693.

(d) Taken from his Funeral Program, made by John Møller, Professor at Copenhagen.

(b) A conjugio tota vita abstinnit ut eo philosopharetur expediret. Borrich. in vita sua. See below.

[A] He made himself known to the most learned Men in every City he came to. The account of his Life, written by himself, and inserted in the second part of the Delights of the Danish Poets, contains the Names of several of those learned Men, and of several Persons of Quality, who shewed their Esteem for him in his Travels. The Marquis de Pianezze entertained him splendidly at Turin. At Rome he had several Audiences of Cardinal Pallavicini, and was often sent for by the Queen of Sweden, who loved Chymistry extremely. Adhibitus est quandoque colloquiis CARDINALIS PALLAVICINI, et sæpe accersitus ad disserendum cum REGINA CHRISTINA de arcanioris Chemicæ studio, veritate, experimentis, quibus tum sacris se Palladia virago deoerat (1).

(1) Vita Borrichii in Tom. II. Delicæ Poetarum Danorum, pag. 378.

[B] He was worthy of his Post of Professor. — The Books, which he published, were an authentic proof of it. His Conspectus præstantiorum Scriptorum Linguae Latine, is but a small part of a great Work compiled by him on that Subject, which is among his Papers. We have seen his Cogitationes de variis linguae Latine ætatibus et scripto G. J. Vossii de vitis sermonis, and his Analecta Philologica et judicium de Lexicis Latinis Græcisque. We have also seen his Antiquæ Romæ imago, and his Treatise De syllabarum quantitate, which he intitled, Parnassus in nucæ. Having observed that some Apothecaries, and even some Physicians, do not pronounce right the Latin Name of Remedies, he published a Piece intitled, Lingua Pharmacopæorum. His Dissertationes de Poëtis Græcis et Latinis, are not the least of his Works. Having seen that his Prodrum de ortu et progressu Chemicæ had been criticized by Conringius, he made an Apology for it, intitled, De Hermetis Ægyptiorum et Chemicorum sapientia. He explained a whole Course of Chymistry twice in public. That Work is not yet printed. His Latin Treatise Decimasæ metallica has been translated into High-Dutch and Danish. There are several Chymical and Botanic Memoirs of his in the Acta medica Hafniensia. He also published a Book, De usu indigenarum plantarum in medicina; a Treatise De somno et somniferis; another De Cabala characterali; another De causis diversitatis linguarum. Add to this, Oratio jubilee Evangelica, and Memoria Dn. Oligeri Vindii (2), and Deusignius beaumontimorumenos. This last Work contains some satirical Letters against Deusignius, wherein he gives himself the false Name of Benedictus Blotensandæus, which is the same thing as Benedictus Nudiverius (3); for blot signifies naked, in Danish, and sandæ signifies the Truth, as Mr Placcius observes in the hundred and fifth Page of his Pseudonymous Writers. I omit the Titles of some other Books of Borrichius, which I might transcribe out of that Work of Mr Møllerus, which I have quoted (4), and wherein he promises to speak of that Author at large in his Cimbria literata. I shall only give the Title of a posthumous Book, which was printed at Copenhagen in the Year 1697. Olai Borrichii conspectus Scriptorum Chemicorum illustriorum.

(2) Taken from his Life, ubi supra, pag. 379. & seq.

(3) Jo. Møllerus, ubi supra, & in hypomnematis, pag. 354.

(4) Jo. Møllerus, ubi supra, & in hypomnematis, pag. 354.

[C] He made a very pious Use of the Riches he had got. He dedicated great part of them to the good of the Poor, and to the benefit of Students. Read the particulars of it in the following Passage: 'Instituit ut & sufficeret juventuti Academicæ necessariis destitutæ adminiculis præsidium aliquod in uberiora studiorum incrementa, & famelicis afflictiisque solamen obtingeret: Illis quippe domum plane lateritiam magnificentissimæ structuræ reliquit, ubi omnia cernuntur splendide parata, cubicula octo cum suis conclaviis, sedecim destinata studiosis, modestia, virtute, ac doctrina conspicuis: amplum auditorium varie exornatum ut in hac palæstra commodius lacertos moveant juniores sacris Apollineis devoti; supellex libraria exquisitæ elegantiae diverso studiorum generi inserviens, cui adherent manuscripta rariora; cernitur ibi quoque laboratorum Chemicum medicinarum excolentibus profuturum; cernitur hortus floridus arboribusque confitus, oculis recreandis, animo pascendo dicatus. Hoc tam sumptuosæ structuræ domicilium vocari maluit COLLEGIUM MEDICEUM, quam ut à suo nomine appellationem haberet; nihil enim arrogantiae, nihil fastuosi ostentabat toto vitæ cursu, sed fortuna ac felicitate sua summa usus est modestia. Utrique tum hujus Collegii incolis, tum aliis elegantiae, ærumnis & imbecilli valetudine oppressis, nec non alumnis scholæ Ripensis ingentem pecuniæ summam attribuit, quæ resignatis post obitum testamenti tabulis, in Collegio Consistoriali annuo spatio reservatis, explevit numerum viginti sex mille & trecentorum Joachimicorum (5). He made a Provision, both to afford some Assistance to such Youth in the University, as were destitute of the necessary Supports for the thorough Improvement of their Studies, and to administer some Comfort to the hungry and afflicted. For he left the former a brick House, a Structure really magnificent, and splendidly furnished throughout; eight lodging Rooms, with proper Closets, designed for sixteen Students, eminent for Modesty, Virtue, and Learning; a large School with variety of Ornaments, for the Exercise of the young Devotees to Literature, where they might exercise themselves conveniently: a Library furnished with most exquisite Elegance, for different kinds of Study, and enriched with some rare Manuscripts; there is also a Chymical Laboratory for the use of those who study Physic, and likewise a beautiful Garden set with Trees for Recreation and delight. This sumptuous Edifice he chose rather to call the Medical College, than to give it any Appellation from his own name, for he had never shewn the least Arrogance or Pride in all his Life, but possessed his Fortune and Felicity with the utmost Modesty. He left both to this College, and to other people, poor, miserable, and sick, as also to the School of Ripen, a prodigious Sum of Money, which, after his Death, on opening his Will, (which had been kept for a Year in the Consistorial College,) amounted to 26300 Crowns. To shew the amount of his Estate, I add, that in the Division which

(5) Taken from his Funeral Program, pag. 383, 384, of the 2d Tome of Delicæ quorundam Poetarum Danorum.

which he made of it between his Relations, and the Students, &c. he bestowed 26300 Crowns upon the latter, and left 50000 Crowns to the former (6). God grant that this may serve for an Example to those, who are able to do the like.

(6) Jo. Mollerus ubi supra, pag. 334.

BORSTEL (ADOLPHUS de), a German Gentleman, with whom Balzac had a Correspondence, and has given him great Encomiums, he was the Son of Conrad de Borstel, Lord of Guften, Plotzka, and other Places, and Prime Minister to the Princes of Anhalt, and Governour-General of that Principality. He was Envoy to France from the King of Bohemia, and the Princes, of the Empire in the Reign of Lewis XIII; and when his Negotiations were ended, he settled in the Kingdom, and procured Letters of Neutrality, and the Office of Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to the King. He married Charlotte de Farou de Sainte Marcolle, by whom he had a Son, who has a numerous Family [A]. This Lady married a second time to Joseph le Brun, Knight, Lord of Brosse, Governour of the Town, and Castle of Cbinon. She died in her Castle of Zaille in Loudumois the fourteenth of March 1705, aged Forty three Years. She was of one of the best Families of Poitou (a). I shall say something of the Genealogy of this Adolphus de Borstel [B], who had two illustrious Nephews [C].

(a) Taken from the Mercure Galant for March 1705, pag. 257, &c.

[A] He had a Son, who has a numerous Family. He married a Cousin of the Marquis de Rafilli, the King's Lieutenant-General in Touraine, and Sub-Governour of the Children of France. The eldest of his Sons has served in the Marines, these twelve Years, and is Ensign of the King's Ships; the youngest was Page to the Duke du Maine, and is Provincial Commissary of the Artillery (1).

(1) Id. ibid. pag. 264.

[B] I shall say something of the Genealogy of this Adolphus de Borstel. The Author of the Mercure Galant says, that the House of Borstel is one of the most Ancient and most Illustrious in Germany. It is, continues he, originally from Zeland, and a certain Lord de Borstel, who was possessed of the Towns Flushing and de Wert, married the last Countess of Holland, and by his Marriage became Sovereign of that Province, which the Duke of Brabant afterwards took from him. After this Usurpation, several of that House settled in upper Saxony, where they built the Castle of Borstel, remarkable in the Map; and we find, that so early as the time of the Emperor Otto I, they made a very great Figure, and had the chief Employments of State both in the Ministry, in War, and in Embassies (2). Here are a great many faults; for in the first place, It was Francis de Borstel, or de Borstelle and not de Borstel, who married the last Countess of Holland. II. He ought not to have said de Wert, but de la Veret or rather de Ter-Veer (3). III. He did not become Sovereign of Holland by his Marriage: the Duke of Burgundy, Philip the Good, would have put him to Death, if the Countess of Holland had not given him all her Dominions to

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 259.

(3) See the Article BERSAL. Remark [B].

save her Husband's Life (4). IV. He ought not to have said the Duke of Brabant but of Burgundy. V. I observe that this Countess of Holland died in 1436, and that the Emperor Otto I died in the Year 973. Judge then, whether, after this pretended Usurpation in prejudice of the Countess of Holland's Husband, several Persons of the House of Borstel could settle in Saxony, build a Castle there, and shine in Employments, in the time of this Emperor.

(4) See Part. II. of Réponse aux Questions d'un Provincial, p. 6.

[C] He had two illustrious Nephews. One of them, FREDERIC DE BORSTEL, was Captain of the Life-guard to the late King of Sweden, Colonel of the Regiment of Westergothia, Governor of Gottenbourg and Babous, and Major-General of the Forces of his Swedish Majesty, who, in Consideration of his Services, made him Baron of the Realm; and the other ERNEST AMEDEE DE BORSTEL first Cupbearer to his late Electoral Highness of Brandenburg, Colonel of the Regiment of his Guards, Major-General of his Forces, and Governor of the Duchy of Magdeburg, which Government is yet in the Hands of John Henry de Borstel (5). The Mercure Galant adds, that there is in France a Lady DE BORSTEL who married Mr de Daumany, Lieutenant of Grenadiers in the Regiment of French Guards, who was Maid of Honour to the Electress Palatine, Mother of Madam (6), that her Mother was Governess to the Elector of Brandenburg; and that she has now a Nephew who is first Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to the Electoral Prince.

(5) Mercure Galant, March 1705, pag. 261, 262.

(6) That is, the Widow of the Duke of Orleans, only Sister of King Lewis XIV.

BOSC (JOHN du), in Latin Boscbæus, Lord of Esmendreville, President in the Court of Aids at Rouen, put to Death by the public Executioner, on account of Religion, in the Year 1562. See ESMENDREVILLE.

BOSC (N. du), a Franciscan, lived in the XVIIth Century. He made himself known by a Book intituled, The honest Woman. His good Friend d'Ablancourt prefixed a Preface to it (a). I have heard say, that the Translation of Father Narni's Sermons, which went under the Name of Father du Bosc, is a Work of d'Ablancourt [A]. It is said, that this Franciscan, having lived several Years out of the Convent by the Pope's Permission, took the Habit again (b). He wrote several Books which are now in no esteem; his Heroic Woman is one of them. The most despicable of his Works are those he wrote against the Jansenists. No body would vouchsafe to answer them [B]; and that Silence, which is in reality a kind

(a) Histoire de l'Academ. Francoise, pag. 351.

(b) Colomies, Biblioth. choisie, pag. 171.

[A] I have heard that the Translation of Father Narni's Sermons, which went under the name of du Bosc, is a Work of d'Ablancourt. I have heard the thing related thus: du Bosc, having no Money, desired d'Ablancourt to lend him some: d'Ablancourt, being very sorry that he had none, offered him a Translation which he had made of Father Narni's Sermons, and gave him leave to dispose of it as he pleased. Du Bosc accepted the Manuscript, and agreed with a Bookseller for the Sum of thirty or forty Pistoles, and published it in his own Name. They are but few Authors who would testify their Friendship by such kind of Presents (1).

(1) See Mr. Colomies in his Biblioth. choisie, pag. 171. He had heard the thing related much in the same manner.

[B] His Books against the Jansenists were very much despised. No body would vouchsafe to answer them. Mr Arnauld has given a very disobliging reason why Father du Bosc's Books were not answered. It is in a Passage of the third Volume of the Morale Pratique, where he lays down several Rules whereby to judge, whether not answering an Adversary ought to pass for a proof of Weakness. This is his fourth Rule: 'It cannot be said, that those, who leave a Book unanswered, are not able to answer it, when, in forbearing to answer, they follow the Judgment of the Public. Now this happens when one scorns to refuse mean Authors, who of blemish upon the Author, has been interpreted to his Glory by some Anti-Jansenist [C].

'who, to get a Name, take part in the Quarrels of the learned. — It is for that reason, that, at the same time that care was taken to answer Father Annat and Father Ferrier, Marandé and du Bosc were suffered to bark, without doing them the honour to think of them (2).

(2) Arnould, Morale pratique, Tom. III. cap. xi. pag. 261.

[C] That Silence - - - has been interpreted to his Glory by some Anti-Jansenists. 'The Question about the assistance of Grace for the Free-will of 'Man, was debated under Pope Clement VIII, and left as it was, that is to say, undecided under Paul V. Nevertheless, the Jansenists have lately printed it, to create a belief that That Sovereign Pontiff is on their side concerning efficacious Grace; but Father du Bosc, a Franciscan, struck them dumb by his Book intitled, le Pacifique Aposolique. These are the words of Dom Peter de Saint Romuald (3).

(3) In the Journal Chronologique & Historique under the 30th of November, pag. 574, 575.

BOSC (PETER du), a French Minister, and the greatest Preacher in his time among those of the Protestant Religion, was the Son of William du Bosc, Advocate in the Parliament of Rouen, and was born at Baieux the Twenty first of February 1623. When he had studied Divinity eighteen Months at Montauban, and three Years at Saumur, he had made so great a Progress, that though he was but in his Twenty third Year, he was qualified to serve the Church of Caen. He was presented to that Church the fifteenth of November 1645, and received the Imposition of Hands the seventeenth of December the same Year. Notwithstanding the Merit of his Colleagues, especially of Mr Bochart, and the Nicety of his Hearers, he acquired in a little time the Reputation of one of the chief Men of his Cloth. He was looked upon in his Country as a PERFECT ORATOR, and his Eloquence became so famous all over the Kingdom, that the Church of Charenton would have had him for their Minister, and sent Deputies to request him of his Church, in the beginning of the Year 1658. The most powerful Sollicitations were made use of; but neither the Eloquence of the Deputies of Paris (a), nor the Letters of the most considerable Persons in France, among the Reformed [A], could persuade the Church of Caen to deprive themselves of such an Excellent Pastor, neither would that Pastor leave his Flock. The Sollicitations of the Church of Charenton, which were renewed several times after, with all imaginable eagerness, did not prove more successful. It was impossible that so great Merit, and so advantageous to his Party as he was, should not disquiet and give umbrage to the Enemies of the Protestant Religion. They shewed it in the Year 1664, by surreptitiously obtaining a Letter de cachet (b), which confined him to Châlons till further Order. One Pommer (c) boasted that he was the Cause of that Disgrace. He deposed falsely, that Mr du Bosc had spoken of Auricular Confession in the most offensive Terms; inasmuch, that he accused him of having compared the Priests Ears to a Common-Shore, a Sink, and a Channell that receives all the Filth of the City. Which was the Reason why Mr du Bosc, as he went through Paris, in his way to the Place of his Exile, explained his Opinion about Confession to Mr le Tellier, and in what manner he had spoken of it. Mr le Tellier seemed satisfied with it, and even told him, that he had never questioned the Falshood of the Accusation. Mr du Bosc obtained the Liberty of returning to his Church the fifteenth of October 1664, and the Joy that appeared among the Brethren, when he returned to Caen the eighth of November, is inexpressible. Many considerable Persons of the contrary Party came to wish him Joy, and there was a Catholic Gentleman, who did at that time one of the strangest things that ever was known [B]. That Exile of Mr du Bosc shewed him how much he was beloved and esteemed [C]. The Civilities, which he received from the

(a) Mr Gaches, Minister, and Mr de Massines, Lay-Elder.

(b) Dated the ad of April.

(c) He was of Montauban, and had been a Protestant.

[A] They made use of - - - Letters of the most considerable Persons in France among the Reformed. Mr and Madam de Turenne, Mr and Madam de la Force, Madam de la Tremouille, and Madam de Rohan, sent some Letters to Mr du Bosc, written in their own Names, or with their own Hands, whereby they earnestly solicited him to accept the Call of the Church of Paris. Their Letters are still in his Closet. That which Mr de Turenne wrote to him proprio pugno, is inserted in the Life of Mr du Bosc (1), with two very fine Letters, which Mr Pellisson wrote to this Minister, whom he had formerly known at Montauban.

(1) Life of Mr du Bosc, pag. 7.

[B] At his return to Caen, a Catholic Gentleman did one of the strangest things that ever was known. An eminent Gentleman of the Romish Church, whose Life was not very regular, but who openly professed to love the Ministers, that had particular Talents, and who seemed altogether charmed with Mr du Bosc's Merit, having a mind to solemnize that Day with a Drinking-bout, took two Franciscans, whom he knew to be Good-fellows, and made them drink so much, that one of them died on the Spot. The next Day he went to see Mr du Bosc, and told him, that he thought it his Duty to sacrifice a Monk to the public Joy: that this Sacrifice would 'have been more reasonable, if it had been a Jesuit; but that his Offering ought not to displease him, tho' it was but a Franciscan. That Tragical Accident, whereof he was only the innocent Cause, did nevertheless interrupt the Joy he had to find himself again with his Family, and his Flock. He expressed it in the first Sermon he made, having taken these Words for his Text, Here I am, O Lord, and the children that thou hast given me (2).

(2) Ibid. pag. 44.

[C] His Exile shewed him how much he was beloved and esteemed. Mr de Turenne desired Mr Bouchérat, (who is at present Chancellor) (3) to obtain a Letter from the Intendant of Caen, to give a good Testimony of Mr du Bosc to Mr le Tellier (4). The Count de Rouffi, who had a great Estate near Châlons, was so kind as to take care of Mr du Bosc's Lodgings, and of all other things which might conduce to allay his Grief (5). The Duke of Montausier undertook to acquaint the King with his Innocence. The advantageous Testimony which he gave him, together with the good Offices of Mr de Turenne, and Mr de Beringhen chief Equerry to the King, and of several other Persons of Quality of both Religions, proved effectual (6). Mr de la Vrilliere read to his Majesty the Letter which he had received from Mr du Bosc (7).

(3) I write this in 1699.

(4) Life of Mr Bosc, pag. 33.

(5) Ibid. pag. 36.

(6) Ibid. pag. 38.

(7) Ibid. pag. 41.

[D] The

(d) For example, the Observations upon the Declaration of 1666, printed at Amsterdam by James le Jeune in 1670, and the Observations on the Declaration against those that relapsed. They are also printed.

(e) Those of Paris and Rouen.

(f) Mr le Gendre, ubi infra, gives an exact and particular account of his Conduct and Management of those Affairs.

(g) Si Pergama dextra Defendi possent, etiam hac defensa fuissent. If by a mortal wound old Priam's Throne Could be defended, 'twas by his alone. DAVDEN: Virgil. Æn. lib. ii. ver. 291.

(h) In the Life of Mr Bosc, pag. 2.

(i) Ibid. pag. 3.

(k) Taken from his Life written by Mr le Gendre, heretofore Minister at Rouen, and now at Rotterdam.

(l) 1 Tim. iii. 7.

the Bishop of Châlons, ought not to be forgot [D]. In the Year 1665 he began to have some Affairs, wherein he signalized his Prudence, his Gravity, and his Eloquence; I mean the Prosecutions commenced against the Churches. He defended that of Caen, and many others of the same Province, against the unjust Pursuits of the Bishop of Baieux. The King having published a grievous Declaration, in 1666, against those of the Reformed Religion, all the Churches sent a Deputation to Paris, to make a most humble Remonstrance to his Majesty. The Churches of Normandy deputed Mr du Bosc, who set out from Caen the third of July 1668. As soon as he came to Paris the other Deputies chose him to draw up several Memorials (d). It being noised abroad that the King intended to suppress some Chambers of the Edict (e), all the Deputies of the Provinces hastened to Mr de Ruvigni the Deputy-General, to speak to him in a Business of such Importance. Their Design was to obtain leave to throw themselves at his Majesty's Feet; it was obtained, but in such a manner that none but Mr du Bosc was admitted to the Audience. He made a Speech to the King, who was alone in his Closet the Twenty seventh of November 1668, and after he had ended his Discourse, he had the Liberty to represent several things, in all which he succeeded so well, that the whole Court spoke of his Eloquence, and Prudence. After several Conferences with Mr le Tellier, and several times going and coming, something was obtained in the Month of April 1669, against the Declaration of the Year 1666. After that time Mr du Bosc made many Journeys for the Affairs of the Churches, and defended them before the Ministers of State, and the Intendants, with all the Force and Ability imaginable (f), till he himself was forbid exercising his Ministry in the Kingdom, by an Arrêt of the Parliament of Normandy the sixth of June 1685. If it had been possible to save the Reformed Churches of France by way of Negotiation, he was more proper to succeed in it than any other that could have been employed (g). It is certain that he kept off the Evil by his Care and Prudence (h), and that he knew how to manage those Affairs with so much dexterity, that they could not be in better Hands (i). After his Interdiction he went into Holland, where he was Minister of the Church of Rotterdam till his Death, which happened the second of January 1692. He died like a good Christian, and his Death was answerable to that regular and edifying Life which he always lived (k). No Man ever maintained the Gravity of his Character better than he: His Body in this Respect was answerable to his Mind; for he had a majestic Presence, which contributed not a little to the Glory he acquired by his Preaching: this is easy to imagine. He had also very great Talents for presiding in a Synod [E], and gained esteem among Persons of Quality [F]. They did him Justice in Holland, where he was generally esteemed; the very Sectaries could not refuse the Respect which he deserved for his wise Conduct; and they revered Mr du Bosc, as much as they despised those violent Men, who, by their turbulent and misanthropic Humour, made themselves unworthy of the Approbation of those that are without, the gaining of which the Scripture recommends so expressly to the Ministers of JESUS CHRIST (l). He was twice married, and left but two Daughters [G].

We

[D] The Civilities, which he received from the Bishop of Châlons, ought not to be forgot. I shall make use of the words of Mr le Gendre, Author of Mr du Bosc's Life. 'The Bishop of that place, of the Family of Herse Vialart, was also pleased to contribute to his comfort. He received all manner of civility from that excellent Prelate. If he would have accepted his Generosity, he had eat at no other Table; he dined with him twice every Week regularly. One day as this Lord shewed him his House, which was richly furnished, and the Apartments very sumptuous, he asked him what he thought of it, and whether he looked upon that Magnificence to be very Apostolical? Mr du Bosc, who would neither disoblige his Benefactor, nor belie his own Character, answered, That he had two Titles in the City, that he was Count and Bishop of Châlons, and that his Dignity of Count gave him quite different Rights and Privileges from those of Episcopacy; that he saw nothing in his House that was above the Magnificence suitable to a Peer of France. This gallant Answer did not displease the Prelate (8).

(8) Ibid. pag. 36.

(9) Ibid. pag. 37.

[E] He had very great Talents for presiding in a Synod. His Historian expresses this so happily that I shall use his own words. 'He was, says he (9), one of the Presidents of the Synod held at Rouen in 1663. Some intricate and difficult Matters were examined there; and he acquired no less Honour in it than he had done elsewhere. It is certain that he succeeded admirably well in those Assemblies. The Readiness and Clearness of his Apprehension, the Force and Solidity of his Judgment, appeared there with great Lustre. He had surprizing Reaches and Hints, which often helped those Assemblies out of the most intricate Affairs. Add to this that he spoke so pertinently, and could give so easy and pleasant a turn to matters, that he commonly brought the Assembly to his Opinion.'

[F] — and gaining Esteem among Persons of Quality. I have already (10) named several Persons of the first Rank, who had a very particular esteem for him. I add, that the Duke of Roquelaure, who was complimented by Mr du Bosc in the Year 1674, when he was sent to command on the Coasts of Normandy, conceived an affection for him which he expressed all his Life in the most obliging manner. Mr de Schomberg and his Lady loved and esteemed him very much, and when he went out of the Kingdom they gave him the most obliging Letters of Recommendation to several Officers and Commanders of Places, and Garrisons, that were in his Road (11). The Count de Roze was very much pleased that he had to inform him, that the Queen of Denmark offered him a Retreat in her Dominions, and assured him both of a Flock, of which she herself would willingly be one, and an advantageous Settlement for his Family (12). The Prince and Princess of Orange did him all manner of Kindness at his coming into Holland, and gave him marks of their Esteem on all occasions. The Text of this Remark will be confirmed by several things which I shall mention below (13).

(10) In the Remarks [A] and [G].

(11) Life of Mr du Bosc, p. 147.

(12) Ibid. pag. 144.

(13) In the Remark [H].

[G] He was twice married, and left but two Daughters. He married his first Wife in 1650, and lost her in 1656. She left him two Children, a Son

We speak of his Writings in one of our Remarks [H]. He is mentioned in the Menagiana in a manner no ways disadvantageous to him [I].

Son and a Daughter. The Son died in 1676, Lieutenant-Colonel, in the Regiment of Schomberg. The Daughter was married in Normandy to Michael de Neel, Lord of Bouillonniere, who fled into Holland with his Wife and Children, at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He chose rather to forsake great Riches than abjure his Religion. He died at Rotterdam in the Month of October 1697. Mr du Bosq's second Wife is yet living (14): He married her about the end of the Year 1657. The Daughter which he had by her was married in Holland to Philip le Gendre, formerly Minister of Rouen, and at present of Rotterdam. It is he who composed the Life of Mr du Bosq, which I quote so often in this Article.

[H] We speak of his Writings in one of our Remarks. There are two Volumes of Sermons, and a Collection of divers Pieces, which was published after his Death. He had published some of those Sermons in France: The first of them was St Peter's Tears. He preached it on a Fast-day; the Missionaries found something in it, for which they begun a Process against him, and the Duke of Longueville was obliged to use his Authority to put a stop to that Persecution: He did it earnestly, as well because he was solicited to it by the Duchess de la Tremouille, at whose desire the Sermon had been printed, and who made it her own concern, as because he always had a particular kindness for the Author (15). He preached upon the Doctrine of Grace in the Year 1661. The Jesuits pretended, That he had imputed some Opinions to the Church of Rome which she does not hold, which obliged him to his Sermon (16). Some Years after he published two Sermons, intitled, The Censure of the Lukewarm. These Sermons, and most of those which had already appeared, were re-printed in Holland, with several others which had never been printed. They make two Volumes in 8^o, as I have said already. Mr du Bosq out-lived the publication of the latter Volume but few Days. The Collection of divers Pieces contains, I. The Requests, Petitions, Memoirs, and Remarks relating to the Affairs of the Reformed, which Mr du Bosq managed at Paris. II. The Speeches he made, and the Letters which he wrote, and received, on divers Occasions. The first Speech is that he made (17) to the Duchess of Longueville, who was charmed with it (18). III. Divers Letters by way of Dissertation upon some Passages of the Scripture, and some Points of Divinity. IV. Some Greek, Latin, and French Verses, which he composed at several times, and some other Poems made in his Praise. The Public is obliged for this Collection to the same Mr le Gendre, who composed the curious Life of that Great Man. Those Pieces shew, that Mr du Bosq was very fit for Business, a good Divine, a polite Man, and well versed in good Literature. I must not forget the Letter, which he wrote, in the Year 1660, to Mr Brevint, Chaplain to his Britannic Majesty Charles II, wherein he discovers his Opinion concerning Episcopacy. Part of that Letter was inserted in a Book composed on that Subject: The Presbyterians complained of it. The whole Letter is to be found in the Author's Life (19). Mr le Gendre has added this Remark to it. 'The Joy which Mr du Bosq expressed in that Letter for the Re-establishment of the King of England, shews, that he differed not in his Opinion from the rest of our Divines, who have openly condemned the Parricide of Charles I. He always looked upon Kings as the lively Images of God on Earth, whose Character ought to render them inviolable to their People. No Body ever spoke of them with more respect, no Body submitted himself more cheerfully and freely to the Powers than he. He forgot nothing which might inspire his Flock with the Love and Obedience that is due to them. He chiefly applied himself to it upon extraordinary Occasions, as he did at Rouen in 1663, where preaching, in the presence of the Synod, on the first Chapter of the Revelations, the sixteenth Verse, he gave a Character of his Most Christian Majesty, altogether fit to confirm his Subjects in all their Duties. That Piece being now scarce, it will perhaps be re-printed to confute the Calumnies of those, who represent the Ministers as Enemies of Royalty (20). Another thing which must not be forgot, is, that in 1665, there appeared a Sermon (21) printed at Paris in his Name, wherein they had inserted several things concerning the Blessed Mother of the Son of God (22), which were so ill digested, that they might have created trouble to the Person to whom the Piece was falsely ascribed. But he pursued the Printer so smartly, that they could take no hold of him (23). The Public will quickly see (24) three Volumes of Mr du Bosq's Sermons on the three first Chapters of the Epistle to the Ephesians (25), and perhaps they will be followed by a fourth on several Texts.

[I] He is mentioned in the Menagiana in a manner no ways disadvantageous to him. When I was at Caen, I heard the Minister du Bosq preach. I never heard a Minister preach but that time. He preached very well; but it seemed strange to me, to see a Preacher in the Pulpit with a Hat on his Head. Montagne says, that there is nothing more ridiculous than the square Caps of our Priests. We are used to it (26). Mr Menage would not have gone to hear Mr du Bosq's Sermon, if he had not been told, that he was a very good Preacher. His Friends, that is to say, the most learned and ingenious Persons of that City, were of Opinion, that he would not know all that was remarkable in it, if he had not heard the Huguenot Preacher, whom the Catholics themselves admired.

BOSQUET (FRANCIS), Bishop of Montpellier, was one of the most learned Prelates of France in the XVIIth Century. He was born at Narbonne, and performed the greatest Part of his Studies at Toulouse. Before he took Orders he had discharged several considerable Offices; he had been Intendant of Guienne and Languedoc, Attorney-General in the Parliament of Normandy, and Counsellor of State in Ordinary (a). John de Plantavit, whose Friendship he carefully cultivated, from the time he lodged with him in the College de Foix at Toulouse, resigned his Bishopric of Lodeve to him in the Year 1648. Mr Bosquet took Possession of it in the Month of January 1650. Five Years after he became Bishop of Montpellier, and continued so till his Death, which happened the Twenty fourth of June 1676. He was in his Sixty third Year, and a Year before his Death he had his Nephew the Abbot de Pradel for his Coadjutor. He composed some Books in Latin, which are in good Esteem [A]. Mr Moreri, out of whose Dictionary I have taken the

[A] He composed some Books in Latin, which are in good Esteem. The first Work he made public, is an Abridgment of the Civil-Law, which Pellus had composed in Greek Verse for his Disciple Michael Ducas in the XIth Century. That Poem of Pellus had never been printed: Mr Bosquet not only translated it into Latin, but also added some Notes, wherein he shews what Authors Pellus had made use of, and explains the most difficult Passages. The second Work (1), is the History of the Galli-

(14) I write this the 14th of June 1699.

(15) Life of Mr du Bosq, pag. 17.

(16) Ibid. p. 31.

(17) In 1648.

(18) Ibid. pag. 5.

(20) Ibid. pag. 30, 31.

(21) Upon St Matthew, chap. i. ver. 23.

(22) This relates to the false Complaints lately made by a Jesuit in the Pulpit, that Mr du Bosq had said something against the Honour of the Virgin. Mr Bochart and Mr du Bosq went to the Intendant, and confuted the Jesuit in his Presence. Life of Mr Bosq, p. 45.

(23) Ibid.

(24) I wrote this the 14th of June 1699.

(25) The three Volumes, and the two following have been printed at Rotterdam by Reinier Leers.

(26) Menagiana, pag. 260. of the 1st Dutch Ed.

(a) Journal des Savans of the 31st of August 1676.

(1) I mention these Books in the same order as they are mentioned in the Journal des Savans, ubi incan fia.

greatest Part of what I have said in this Article, has very much commended this Prelate, and has not committed many Faults [B]. I had almost forgot to say, that can Church, from the beginning of Christianity in Gaul, to the Reign of Constantine. There are two Editions of it. The same Author published the History of the French Popes, who resided at Avignon. It is the History of eight Popes: It reaches from the Year 1305, to 1394. He published also several Epistles of Innocent III (2), with very learned Notes. The Bishop of Montpellier, and the Abbot de Lacan, Nephews of Mr Bosquet, intend to publish two considerable Works of that learned Man: The one relates to the Liberties of the Gallican Church, and the other contains Notes on all the Canon Law (3). Mr Doujat, who might have read this in the Journal des Savans of the Thirty first of August 1676, confessed in the Year 1686, that he had not been able to find out where the Notes of Mr Bosquet on the Decree of Gratian were. Plura alia majoris molis opera a litteratis expectata, imprimi vero Commentaria vel Notæ in Decretum Gratiani nondum prodierunt, nec ubi lateant discere ulla ratione adhuc potui (4). If it were possible Authors should be acquainted with the most common Books, and with the most scarce Pamphlets; they would learn some things by them, the ignorance of which does them no honour. Further, the Abbot de la Roque should not have forgot (5) the Year, where in each of Mr Bosquet's Books were printed. I find (6) that the Synopsis Legum Pællus was printed at Paris in the Year 1632, in 8°. The Oxford Catalogue mentions, in the same Year, the History of the Popes who resided at Avignon. We find there that the Epistles of Innocent II, were printed at Toulouse in 1635. Now as the Abbot de la Roque places the History of the Gallican Church in the second Rank, therefore it must have appeared in the Year 1632, at the farthest; and so, Mr Bosquet must have published most of his Books at Nineteen Years of Age, and left off writing Books at Twenty-two, which would be a very hasty retreat, and almost without example. He deserves a Place in the List of Enfants célèbres, if Mr Baillet reprints it. I am sure, the Journalist has not observed the Order well; for if the History of the Gallican Church was Mr Bosquet's second Work, it is very unlikely that Father Morin should not have mentioned it, when, in 1633, he bestowed this Encomium upon that young Author: 'Nec non eruditus juvenis Franciscus Bosquetus doctæ synopsis legum Michaelis Pælli de Græco in Latinum versione, & Historiæ Pontificum qui de Gallici orti in ea sederunt correctæ editione, horumque eruditus notis illustratione, apud omnes antiquitatis amantes merito charus & acceptus (7). — Likewise the learned Youth Francis Bosquet is deservedly loved and esteemed by all Lovers of Antiquity, for his learned Latin Version of Michael Pællus's Greek Synopsis of the Laws, a corrected Edition of his History of the Popes of French Extraction, who resided in France, and an Illustration of both with learned Notes.' This Passage alone would be sufficient to convince me, that the Historia Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ was printed after the Year 1633, and after that of the Popes of Avignon.

Henry

The second Edition of that History of the Gallican Church, is of the Year 1636, in Quarto: it is much larger than the first, which was in 8vo, but some Lines have been left out of it, which Archbishop Usher has taken the pains to preserve (8). They are so considerable, that I will insert them in this place of my Dictionary. It appears from them that Mr Bosquet acknowledged, that the false Zeal of the Monks was the first cause of the fabulous Traditions, which have covered the Origin of the Gallican Church with such thick darkness. 'Quod de Gallicana nobis proxima Ecclesia notavit nuper prætor Narbonensis Franciscus Bosquetus, incertam longa antiquitate & posterorum commentis originem illius extitisse, idem in nostris quoque Britannicis verissimum fuisse comperimus (9). — What Francis Bosquet late Intendant of Narbonne observed of the Gallican Church, our next Neighbours; that it's Original is rendered uncertain, by it's great Antiquity and the Fictions of later times, the same we find true concerning our British Churches also.' He thinks, that the heat of their Zeal, and the desire of inspiring more Devotion into the People, made them believe what they taught others afterwards, concerning the pretended Wonders and Antiquity of certain Saints. One can hardly have so good and charitable an Opinion of the first Inventors of Fables; but it would be very unjust not to entertain it of those who succeeded them. However it be, here follows the Words in question: 'Primos, si verum amamus, hujusmodi zelotas monachos in Galliis habuimus. Illi simplici ac servida ideoque minus cauta & sæpe inconsulta religione perculti ad illicendas hominum mentes, & augustiori sanctorum nomine ad eorum cultum revocandas, illustres eorum titulos primum sibi dein credulæ plebi persuasos proposuerunt. Ex horum officina Martialis Lemoicensis Apostolatus, Urfini Bituricensis Discipulatus, Dionysii Parisiensis Areopagitice, Pauli Narbonensis proconsularis dignitas, amborum Apostoli Pauli magisterium, & in aliis Ecclesiis similia prodire. Quibus quidem sano judicio & constanti animo Galli primum Episcopi resistere. At ubi Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ parentibus, sanctissimis fidei præconibus, detractis his spoliis, injuriam fieri mentibus ingenuis & probis persuasum est, paulatim error communi consensu confurgere, & tandem antiquitate sua contra veritatem præscribere (10). — To say Truth, we had the first of this Sort of zealous Monks in France. They out of a simple and fervent, and consequently less cautious and often inconsiderate, Zeal, in order to allure Mens minds, and bring them over to the Worship of the Saints, by giving them more august Names, first persuaded themselves, and afterwards the credulous People, of their illustrious Titles. From this quarter came the Apostleship of Martial, of Limoges; the Discipleship of Urfin, of Bourges; the Areopagitical Office of Dionysius, of Paris; the proconsular Dignity of Paul, of Narbonne; and the like in other Churches. Which indeed were at first opposed with good Judgment and Resolution by the French Bishops. But when the Fathers of the Gallican Church, and the most holy Preachers of the Faith, had given their Opinion, that ingenuous and honest minds might be hurt by removing these things, the Errors of this kind grew by Degrees, by common consent, and at last by their Antiquity out-weighted the Truth.' I question whether it was a good piece of Policy to suppress these fine Words in the second Edition. The omission of this Passage plainly shews that the Roman Catholics are extremely cautious with respect to Errors; and that they, whose Interest it is to maintain them, are easily offended at any discovery of that kind. They should have considered, that the suppressing of those Words would raise the Curiosity of most People; and that those, who would have read them curiously, and with little attention, would, for that very reason, look upon them as a thing of the greatest Importance. They might very well think, that the Protestants would not fail to make their Reflexions upon it. In a word, we may say of this Passage, what an Historian said of Brutus and Cassius, whose Images did not appear in a Funeral Pomp (11). The suppressing of it gives it a greater lustre. We observe more easily when a Man is not at a certain Feast, than when he is there. Here is a Passage of Seneca: 'C. Cæsar villam in Herculanensi pulcherrimam, quia mater sua aliquando in illa custodita erat, diruit, fecitque ejus per hoc notabilem fortunam: statem enim præternavigabamus, nunc causa dirutæ queritur (12). — C. Cæsar pulled down a very fine House near Herculænum, because his Mother had once been confined there, and by that means made her misfortune remarkable; for while it was standing People used to sail by, now they enquire why it was pulled down.' Compare with this, what I have said in another Place (13).

[B] Moreri — has not committed many faults. I. He does not speak exactly, when he says, that Mr Bosquet

(10) Bosquet apud Usserium An. iij. Britann. Ecclesiæ. Præfat.

(10) Bosquet apud Usserium An. iij. Britann. Ecclesiæ. Præfat.

(11) Vincti clarissimarum familiarum imagines antelate sunt, Manlii Quinctii, alique ejusdem nobilitatis nomina: sed præfulgebant Cassius atque Brutus eo ipso quod effluvia eorum non viderantur. Tacitus Annal. lib. iii. in fine.

(12) Seneca de Ira, lib. iii. cap. xxii.

(13) In the Remark [B] of the Article A. R. NAULD (ANTHONY the Doctor).

(2) That is, the 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th Books of that Pope's Register in fol. Journ. des Savans of the 31st of August 1676.

(3) Taken from Mr Bosquet's Essay inserted in the Journal des Savans of the 31st of August 1676.

(4) Doujat, prænot. Canonie. pag. 633.

(5) Journal des Savans of the 31st of August 1676.

(6) Apud Cave Hist. literar. pag. 605. The Oxford Catalogue mentions but one Paris Edition of 1639.

(7) Morin. Exercit. Biblic. pag. 18. Edit. in 4to. 1633.

A REMARKABLE Passage left out in a second Edition.

(8) See Colomies, Bibliothéque Choise, pag. 84.

(9) Usserius in Pref. Britann. Ecclesiæ Antiquitatum, printed at Dublin 1639.

(b) Journal des Savans, ubi supra. See also Doujat. Prænot.
Canon. pag. 653.

Henry de Mêmes, President in the Parliament of Paris, was the first Patron of Francis Bosquet, and that Mr de la Chambre was very useful to him, by the good Character he gave of him to the Chancellor Seguier (b). A Passage, which that Prelate left out of his Gallican History, when he reprinted it (c), shews, that tho' he was cautious in representing the Abuses of his Church, he was not ignorant of them. (c) See the Remark [A].

Mr Bosquet studied in the College de Foix at Toulouse; for there are neither Professors, nor any other Teachers, in that College. It is a House where a certain number of Students are maintained, who give a certain Sum at their Entrance into it. There are, or have been, several such Colleges in the same City. In a certain sense it is very true, that Mr Bosquet studied in the College de Foix; for he lodged there during his Studies, and he was constant in the Library of that College; but this is not what is commonly understood by Studying in a College. The expression of the Journalist is therefore fallacious: it gives his Readers a false Notion, that the College of Foix is a Place of Learning. II. The Abbot de la Roque, is not more exact, when he places the Pugio Fidei of Raimond Martini among the Works of Mr Bosquet; for tho' he adds these Words, which he took out of the Library of the College de Foix, he leads his Readers into this Error, that Mr Bosquet published the Pugio Fidei. We shall see elsewhere (14), what share he had in the Edition of that Book.

(14) In the Remark [A] of the Article RAIMOND (MARTINI).

BOSQUET (GEORGE), Advocate in the Parliament of Toulouse (a), in the Reign of Charles IX, wrote some Books, and among the rest one which was condemned to the Flames [A].

(a) Du Verdier, Bibl. Fran. pag. 443.

[A] He wrote some Books, and among the rest one which was condemned to the Flames. His Latin Treatise, on the Edict of Henry II, concerning Marriages contracted by Children of a good Family, without the Knowledge or Consent of their Parents, was printed at Toulouse, by Jacques Colomies, in the Year 1558, in 8vo. He published, by the same Man, in 1563, Hugonorum Hæreticorum Tolsæ conjuratorum proscriptio memoriae posita, in 4to (1). It is this last work, if I mistake not, to which the following words relate: 'The King — has commanded, and does hereby command, that the Book composed by one George Bosquet, of the said City of Toulouse, containing a diffamatory Libel, shall be burnt; and that all Bookellers and Printers be forbid to print or cause to be printed, or to sell, the said Book, and that all Persons be forbid to buy the same' (2). These are the Words of an Arrêt of the Privy-Council, held at the Chateau de Vincennes the eighteenth of June 1563 (3).

(2) Bena Hist. Ecclesiast. lib. 2. pag. 59, 60.

(3) Ibid. pag. 60.

(1) Du Verdier
Biblioth. Fran.
pag. 443.

BOSSU (JAMES le), in Latin Bossulus, Doctor of Divinity in the University of Paris, and a Monk of St Denis, was one of the most violent Preachers of the League, before and after the Death of Henry III. I cannot tell whether he declaimed in the Pulpits of Paris, but I know very well that those of Nantes were the Stage of his Rebellion; and besides, not content to preach with the most brutal Fury against Henry III and Henry IV, he also printed at Nantes some Dialogues (a) between a Catholic and a Politician, wherein he vented the most extravagant Maxims of the Spirit of Sedition. He maintained in the first place, that Henry III was worse, and more atheistical than Judas (b). II. That James Clement was inspired by God to stab him (c). III. That no Prayers ought to be made to God for the Repose of his Soul (d). IV. That it was lawful for any body to kill him, on account of the notoriousness of his Tyranny, &c (e). The abusive Expressions of that furious Preacher against the Parliament of Paris sitting at Tours, and against all the Catholics who remained faithful to Henry IV, cannot be sufficiently detested. He maintained that the Catholics, who had any Commerce with Heretics, were ipso facto excommunicated (f); and that Heresy being worse than Paganism, and Paganism being true Atheism, Heresy ought to be called Atheism, and the most enormous of all Sins, and that Heretics ought to be shunned as the Plague (g). At that time France was full of such Preachers, and, to compleat her Misfortunes, was constrained not only to let them go unpunished, but to grant them what they desired, I mean that France should refuse to submit to it's lawful Prince, unless he turned Catholic. The Triumph of those rebellious Preachers over Justice will serve for a Model in all such like Cases; whereas if those Trumpeters of Sedition had been punished according to their Deserts, such an example would have served as a Curb for the time to come. There is nothing more dangerous in a State than such People; and with respect to this Evil, Sovereigns ought to be put in mind of the Maxim, principiis obsta. Mr Arnould, or a very good Friend of his, will not contradict me in it [A]. Father le Bossu must have been a Man of some Merit, since

(a) He calls them Devils.

(b) Second Dev's pag. 80.

(c) Third Dev's pag. 17, 18. He says the same of him, who killed the Prince of Orange.

(d) Ibid. pag. 8.

(e) Ibid. pag. 28.

(f) Traité contre l'adhésion aux Hérétiques, pag. 56.

(g) Ibid. pag. 3.

(1) Citat. (1).

[A] Mr Arnould — will not contradict me in it. I have promised in the Article of that Doctor of Sorbonne (1), to insert here an important Reflection which was made on a Conventicle, wherein something was hatched against him. It is as follows: 'Indeed, you Gentlemen in Authority, you are fine Folks to suffer such attempts. Do not you perceive that if the Proceedings of that Conventicle should succeed, (for this is not a chimerical Conventicle, as those of Mr Arnould) there is not one honest Man in Liege, but is liable to the like insults from them, if he should displease them, or be suspected to favour the pretended Jansenism, of which they make Mr Arnould the Head? It is always dangerous to suffer such Audaciousness to get head, and it gathers Strength daily, when no care is taken to quash it in the beginning. Believe me, an Assembly of Men, moved by a false Zeal of Religion, supported by the Reputation, which their Habit, their Condition, and outward Austerity, procure them, armed with the Power which the direction of Consciences gives them over the Minds of the People, and above all animated, encouraged, and directed by a Rector of the Jesuits, are more to be feared than is imagined; and if your Politicians laugh

since, besides his teaching Divinity among the Benedictins, he was one of the Members of the Congregation de Auxiliis under Pope Paul V (b). Mr Arnauld has commended him very much [B]. I believe this is the same Bossu, whom Mr du Pleffis Mornay mentions in these Words. 'Le Bossu (i) Steward of the Bishopric of Nantes discovered this (k), preached against it, made Remonstrances to Mr de Mercur about it, made the Agent of Spain protest against it.' This made him forbear speaking to him (l). Thus the very Heads of the League were Slaves to the Preachers.

(b) See the Compendium of the Life of that Congregation, printed at Brancfort, (or rather at Rotterdam) in 1687. pag. 9.

(i) Memoirs of Du Pleffis Tom. II. pag. 274. under the 24th of September 1592. See also the Life of Mr du Pleffis pag. 186, where Bossu is called Theological of Nantes.

OF WHAT consequence it is to keep a close Reins on the Ecclesiastics.

(k) Question Carieuse à Mr Arnauld est heretique, pag. 197.

(l) Difficulté proposée à Monsieur Steyart Part. IX. p. 251. Cologne 1692.

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 183.

(b) Id. pag. 389.

(1) La Croix du Maine, pag. 183.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Id. pag. 184.

(4) Brant. vie des Capitaines étrangers, Tom. II. pag. 117.

'laugh at it, I dare say, they understand nothing of the matter. Father d'Iselin boasts already that he has either a Commission, or a Permission, from his Highness to arrest Mr Arnauld, wherever he shall find him in the Diocese. . . . Believe me such Men must not be allowed too much Liberty. For if, notwithstanding the Advices given to the Superiors, of which they made no account, nor do make the use that was desired, we see them so heartily disposed to use Violences of that nature, so far as to be willing to take the Execution upon themselves by the Sovereign's leave, they will make no difficulty of acting without that leave in any thing they are pleased to undertake, as soon as they see themselves strong enough, and sufficiently supported by the Mob (2).'

[B] Mr Arnauld has commended him very much.] A Letter, written from Rome, says he, which was lately shewn me (3), contained an Extract of the Memoirs of Mr Pegna, who was Dean of the Rota, under Clement VIII. and Paul V., concerning what had passed under those two Popes in the Congregation de Auxiliis. Out of those Memoirs they had transcribed the Suffrage of Mr le Bossu, a Monk of St Denys, and Doctor of Sorbonne, of the Month of October 1607, one of the most learned Directors of that Congregation. He declared by that Suffrage, that he did not approve that a certain University should be consulted about the Matters that were in agitation there; and among other Reasons he gave these two: First, That they had not condemned certain Notes on Cassian, which tended to give a pretended good sense to the erroneous Propositions of that Author, whose Works had been censured by Pope Gelasius: Secondly, That they had divulged the Bull of Pius V. and Gregory XIII. These are that learned Doctor's own Words concerning this second Complaint against that University, &c.

(k) That is to say, that the Duke of Mercur had a Design to confer with a Royalist secretly.

(l) That is, the Duke of Mercur.

BOSSULUS (MATTHEW), a Parisian (a), taught in Boncour College at Paris in the Year 1583 (b) [A]. He was a great Orator: he had been Preceptor to Don Carlos, Son of Philip II [B], and taught Rhetoric in the University of Valencia in Spain [C]. I do not find that he has appeared in Print.

[A] He taught in Boncour College at Paris in the Year 1583.] In that Year Bossulus made a Speech in Boncour College, which lasted about an Hour and a half (1). Du Perron remembered it so well that he could have recited it word for word. He recited a great part of it in the presence of la Croix du Maine three Days after. That Speech was an Eulogy on the Art of Oratory and Orators. Bossulus spoke of a certain Orator, who seemed to come from Heaven, to bind the two Armies of Francis I and the Emperor Charles V. from fighting (2). I wish that Speech was printed, that I might know the Name of that Orator, who did a thing which Signior Julio Mazarini imitated to happily near Cazal, and which was the beginning of his Glory and Fortune. Bossulus wrote only the Heads of his Speeches, he supplied the rest in the Pulpit extempore (3).

[B] He had been Preceptor to Don Carlos, Son of Philip II. Brantome informs me of this. 'I have been told, says he (4), that a Book was wrote in Spain, and even printed, concerning the Stubbornness, Caprice, Whims and Maggots of Don Carlos, in which is amusement of all kinds for the Reader. His Preceptor was Mr Bossulus a Frenchman, whom we have seen since in France, one of the most learned and eloquent Men of his time, who also spoke several Languages fluently; but lead a wicked Life, in which he was capable of giving him fine Lessons.' Here is a Man, who, according to Brantome and la Croix du Maine, was very Learned and very Eloquent; and for all that, I am sure, he is but little known in the Commonwealth of Letters, and a great many Persons less Learned than he, are a hundred times better known: The reason is, because they published Books; whereas the Prés was never employed on his Productions. It extremely concerns learned Men, who desire not to fall into oblivion after their Death, to set up for Authors; without which, their Name seldom out-lives the first Generation, res erat unius ætatis. The generality of Readers do not take notice of the Names of those learned Men, whom they only know by the Testimony of others: A Man is soon forgot, when the Encomium bestowed upon him ends thus, The Public has seen nothing of his. We must except those, who, like Mr de Peirese, signalize themselves in a singular manner.

[C] He taught Rhetoric in the University of Valencia in Spain.] I found this in a Book of the Jesuit Andrew Schot (5). I believe they took Bossulus from that Post to place him with Don Carlos, or at least, that his teaching Rhetoric served him for a mediate Introduction; and I cannot but wonder, that a Frenchman was chosen for such an Employment. I wonder yet more, that the French have spoken so little of a Man of their own Nation, who was honoured with such a Place in the Court of Spain in the XVIth Century.

THE Learned who desire to be spoken of after their Death, ought to print Books.

(5) Bibliotheca Hispanica, pag. 32, where instead of Matthæus Bossulus Parisiensis, it should have been Bossulus, &c.

BOSSUS (MATTHEW), born at Verona in the Year 1427, deserves an honourable Place among those who have been illustrious for Virtue and Learning. He was sent very young to Milan to study the belles Lettres under Francis Philelpbus, and Peter Perleon, and made good Improvement; but he had been spoiled as to his Morals, if he had not soon left a City so corrupt as that was in those Times, where he was at his own Disposal, in the midst of Temptations, and without the Assistance of the good Counsels or Censure of a good Tutor. Being called back to Verona, he lived under a better Discipline; and found fewer Occasions of perverting himself; He had vigilant Directors who made him weary of the Vanities of the World. He turned his Thoughts another way, and devoted himself to an Ecclesiastical State in the Year 1451, in the Congregation of the Regular Canons of Lateran. Timothy Mapheus, who was afterwards Archbishop of Ragusa, persuaded him to take that good Resolution, and brought him soon after to Padua, where he taught Divinity. Bossus improved much under him, both in the Sciences, and in the Art of Preaching; and with a great Zeal and Capacity he discharged the Duties

Duties of the Employments his Superiors gave him. He caused many Houses of his Order to be repaired, and particularly the Abbey of Fiesoli in Tuscany. Cosmo de Medicis gave Seventy thousand Crowns for the Reparation of that Abbey: It was an admirable Building, and the Workmanship of Philip Brunelleschi, a Florentine, one of the most excellent Architects of that Time (a). It was in that Church that Matthew Bossus gave the Ornaments of the Cardinalate to John de Medicis [A]. Laurence de Medicis would have it so; which I observe only to shew how much he considered Matthew Bossus. Pope Sixtus IV had as great an Esteem for him; for as soon as he was raised to the Pontificate, he undertook to put a Stop to the Disorders of the Nuns of Liguria, and of the Neighbouring Provinces, and intrusted him with that Employment. As a Reward for his Pains, which had not been to much purpose [B], he offered him a very good Prelacy three several times, and pressed him to accept it; but Bossus excused himself, and by his Intreaties prevailed with the Pope to leave him in the Condition he was in. He stoutly opposed the Decree of Innocent VIII, whereby all sorts of Monks were ordered to give the Clerks of his Chamber, yearly, part of their Revenues. He was five times Visitor of the Order, and twice their Procurator-General at the Court of Rome. I do not mention several Deputations wherein he displayed his Eloquence, and other most necessary

(a) The Vault of the Cathedral Church of Florence is accounted a master-piece. It was he who had the Direction of it. Philippo Inghram inquam illo Architectorum corphæo, ejus prodigium ingenium super antiquos quocunque ac moderniores unum tholus seu testudo miris templi Florentini æternum extollit. Lycæum Lateranense, Tom. II. lib. xi. pag. 34.

[A] He gave the Ornaments of the Cardinalate to John de Medicis. John de Medicis was so young when Innocent VIII made him Cardinal, that, to save appearances, it was thought fit to require of him, that he should be debarred the use of the public Marks of the Cardinalate for three Years. Cum puer ad sacrum illum Senatuum assumptus fuerit ab Innocentio octavo Pontifice, hac una explicita conditione, ne palam insignibus uteretur aut se ut Cardinalis haberet nisi triennio expleto ad augendam ætatem (1). That time being expired, Matthew Bossus was chosen to install that Youth in the Dignity of a Cardinal. He performed the Ceremony with a great deal of Gravity in the Abbey of Fiesoli. Laurence de Medicis, the Father of John, chose him for that Function, which was attended with a most magnificent Pomp. You will find an account of that Ceremony in the hundred and eighth Letter of Matthew Bossus. The Author whom I quote, has inserted a long Extract of it in his Lycæum Lateranense (2). It appears there, that John de Medicis was but fifteen Years of Age (3), when he was named to the Cardinalate by Innocent VIII. I need not say that he was made Pope after the Death of Julius II, by the Name of Leo X.

[B] The pains — he took to reform the Nuns — was to little purpose. This business is much to the Honour of the Memory of Sixtus IV. One of his first thoughts, after his Exaltation, was to correct the disorders of the Nuns, and particularly to restrain the Licentiousness of those of Genoa, who were going the broad way to Perdition. Vixit dum sacro diademate caput ornaret magnus ille Pontifex Sixtus quartus de Ruere, cum homo regionis illius, & coherentis insubriæ, adque Genuesis præsertim reformandas, quarum status patulas vias perditionis intraverat; tantam provinciam, tamque laboriosam, tali tempore dubiam, implicitam uni Bosso commendatam voluit (4). — The great Pope Sixtus the fourth de Rovere, who was of the Province of Genoa, had scarce well put on the sacred Crown, before he turned his Thoughts on the Reformation of the Nuns of his own Country, and the Milanese his Neighbours, but especially those of the City of Genoa, who were in a State leading directly the broad way to Destruction; this Business, so great and laborious, and, at that time, critical and intricate, he assigned to Bossus alone. Our Matthew was chosen for such a difficult Employment, and of such a doubtful Success, that he was unwilling to accept of it. Nevertheless, he acquitted himself of it with great Courage and Vigilance. He gave them exhortations both public and private in the most pathetic manner he could; he animated the Magistrates, and shewed them what they ought to do; he despised the Dangers to which his Reputation, and even his Life, were exposed (5), and he had already put things upon a good Foot, when the Governour of Genoa, corrupted with Presents, ceased to second him, and spoiled what had been so happily begun. Quæ plane res Christo propitio & magistratibus suffragantibus omnibus eo tum loci pervasit, atque iis fuit vallata & constituta præsidis, ut qui desiderabatur exitum prorsus foret habitura, nisi urbis tunc Præsidentis alienatus magna vi munerum, quod maximum esse solet ad omne scelus incitamentum, à nobis turpiter defecisset, ceptaque omnia perturbasset, & quæ erant jam acta sanctissime avarus ille atque infidus evertisset (6). — Which business, by the help of Christ, and concurrence of all the Magistrates, was really come to such a point, and was guarded and secured by such fences, that it must certainly have had the desired end, had not the Governor of the City been alienated with large presents, (the common Temptations to any kind of wickedness) and basely fallen off from us, and spoiled all our undertaking, and by his Covetousness and Treachery undone all we had been doing. Some time after, as the Letter from which I have taken this Passage informs us, the Magistrates took more effectual measures to bring at last those disorderly Nuns to Reason. Bossus heard that news with great satisfaction. Quod ego semper optavi qui Genuesem patriam istam singulari pietate atque constantia sum prosecutus, tuis literis audio fieri. — Cives scilicet istos ardentius curare atque moliri ut tandem Monialibus suis istis minus honeste, minusque sobrie ac religiose versantibus, modus adhibeatur, adhibere que jam ceperint (7). — What I, who have a singular and constant Love for my Country, Genoa, always wished, I understand by your Letter is done. — that is, the Citizens are studying and contriving how at last to lay a Restraint on their Nuns, who do not live so honestly, soberly, and religiously, as they ought, and that they have begun to restrain them. The Magistrates forbade the Superiors of Nunneries to receive any Maids; they deprived them of their great Riches, which occasioned the Luxury, and other Irregularities which they intended to reform. Quod scribis modo concordî, publicoque decreto questum, simulque definitum omnibus atque positum, ne puellæ videlicet ea ipsa in Monasteria ullo modo amplius excipi possint; videtur mihi sane optimus modus, optima ratio, — addunt æque fœminis istis magnæ opes & ingeruntimenta libidinum, ambitionis, delictiarum, & sumptuum, quibus si vel ex parte caruerint, in his fortasse frigeret ardens & petulca luxuries. — What, as you write, is now ordered by a Public Decree, and given in Charge to them all, viz. that no Maids shall henceforward be received in the Monastery itself, on any account, seems to me certainly the very best Method. — Great Wealth is to all these Women only a great Increase of Fuel for Lust, Ambition, Pleasure, and Magnificence, which if they are but partly deprived of, perhaps their wanton, flaming, Luxury may cool a little. Note, That Bossus's Care did not prove altogether useless; for though he made no general Reformation, yet some Nuns were affected with his Discourses, and renounced their disorderly Life (8). He had a peculiar Talent at representing to the

(6) Id. ibid. apud eund.

(7) Ibid.

(8) Ibid. Tom. II. pag. 42.

(1) Celsus de Rosinis in Lycæo Lateranensi, Tom. II. lib. xi. pag. 38.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Others say he was but 14.

(4) Lycæum Lateranense, Tom. II. pag. 40.

(5) Quantum exaudaverim, quantum dimicaverim, quantum denique ad crimen usque famæ & vitæ contendendum, potius factis meminit Math. Bossus, Epist. 87. apud Celsum de Rosinis Lycæi Lateranensis Tom. II. pag. 41.

VOL. II. No. XXXIV.

B b

necessary Qualifications. He composed several Books which are worth reading [C]; for there is a great deal of good Morality in them, and they are wrote in a polite Stile for that time. His Book on Womens Drefs, and to prevent the recalling of the Prohibition they were under not to wear Ornaments, is very pious [D]. He was esteemed by Persons of the best Quality, and the most celebrated Scholars of his Time. He died at Padua, in the Year 1502, aged Seventy five Years. This Article is taken from the second Tome (b) of the Lyceum Lateranense, of Abbot Rosini, printed at Cesene, in the Year 1649, in two Volumes in Folio.

(b) Pag. 24. and following.

(9) Ibid.

(10) De parce cauteque verando sanctis etiam cum viris. Ibid.

(11) Cesner, in Biblioth. fol. 505. versio.

(12) Celsus de Rosinis Lycei Lateran. Tom. II. pag. 67.

(13) Upon five Orations, and upon the Rhetoric.

(14) In the Epistle to Bartholomew of Placentia. See Celsus de Rosinis Lycei Lateran. Tom. II. pag. 68.

(15) Id. ibid. Tom. II. p. 65.

(16) Id. ibid. pag. 60.

(17) Id. ibid.

Nuns their Duty. See the Letters which he wrote to Istota Nogarala, a learned and devout Nun, to Violante Seraphica, to Cassandra Fidelis, to Antonia of Reggio, to Margaret of Mantua, a Woman of a great deal of Wit, a good Memory, and great Learning, and to Paulina (9). He would have the Nuns (and he had good reason for it) to converse but seldom with Men, even with the most virtuous, and to observe a great deal of Circumspection in that too (10). O what good Advice was this!

[C] He wrote several Books which are worth reading. His Dialogues De veris ac salutaribus animi gaudiis: De instituendo sapientia animo: De tolerandis adversis, are none of the least of his Works. His Treatise De gremio magistratu, justitiae colenda, is a good one: Those four Books, with another De immoderato mulierum cultu, were re-printed at Strasburg in 4to, in the Year 1509, with a Letter of Politian, wherein the Author's Life and Learning are very much praised (11). His Speeches, Sermons, and Letters are worthy of him, and have been printed a great many times. A new Edition of his Works was published at Florence in the Year 1627 (12). As for the Commentary which he made on some Pieces of Cicero (13), it is not known whether it was printed, or not. He mentions it in one of his Letters (14). He had the pleasure to see four Editions of his Works; but because they were printed separately, he resolved to collect them into a Body, and to add to them some other Pieces which were still in the Dust of his Closet, or among the Papers of his Brethren. He intitled that Collection, Recuperationes Pefulanæ, and dedicated it to Cardinal John de Medicis (15). Note, That he made a kind of Apology for Phalaris Tyrant of Agrigentum, and that he solidly refuted an apocryphal Book, which the President Cassaneus was ashamed to insert in his Works: Read this Latin; Phalaridem dudum Agrigentinum tyrannum ab oppositionibus Benedicti Calchi Concanonici tutatus est, occasione Epistolarum quas ille scripsit, in quibus præter eloquentiam raram atque mirabilem, multa gravissima, multa sanctissima, summo Philosopho & Christiano digna comperiuntur. Sacerdotum temporale Christi Domini apocrypham cantilenam evidentissimis rationibus consultavit scribens ad Policletum Phificum, quem tamen ineptissime Bartholomeus Cassaneus in suo Gloriarum mundi theatro inseruit ex Libello ineptiore (16). He defended Phalaris, Tyrant of Agrigentum, from the Objections of Benedictus Calchus Concanonicus, on Account of the Epistles wrote by him; in which, besides a rare and admirable Eloquence, there are many very grave and pious things, and worthy of an excellent Philosopher and a Christian. He confuted an apocryphal Song, called the Temporal Priesthood of Christ the Lord, with the most solid Reasons, in a Letter to Policletus Phificus. And yet Bartholomeus Cassaneus has been weak enough to insert it in his Theatrum Gloriarum Mundi, from a Book yet more foolish.

[D] His Book on Womens drefs ----- is very pious. Timotheus Mapheus, preaching in Lent at Bologna, shewed so clearly in his Sermons, that Women ought to be forbid all superfluity of Drefs by a public Decree, that such a Law was promulgated. Egisset ex pulpito ut publico decreto petulantior mulierum cultus, & inundans vestimentorum luxuriam comprimeretur (17). Soon after came out an Harangue addressed to Cardinal Bessarion, Legate of Bologna, wherein it was attempted to be proved, that Women ought not to be deprived of their Ornaments, and that it was proper to revoke the Prohibition. Mapheus, who was gone to Tuscany, as soon as Lent was over, was not in condition to refute the Censurer of the Decree which he had obtained, nor to prevent the impressions this Apologist for the Women might make on Peoples minds. So the Discourse of the Apologist was spread without Opposition; and as it was pretty eloquent, and maintained a Thesis very agreeable to the World, it was applauded by many: but the wiser heads were provoked, that the Extravagance of Drefs, so contrary to Modesty, and so dangerous with respect to Chastity, should find an Advocate to support it with all the turns of Rhetoric. Alii vero, quorum sanior erat mens, rectiusque judicium, dolebant ornamentorum licentiam, injuriâ continentiae, pudicitiaeque discrimine, literis illustratam (18). Our Matthew Bossus was therefore earnestly desired to refute it. Observe, that the Apologist concealed his Name, and introduced a modest Lady, called Nicolsa Sanuta, pleading the Cause of the fair Sex. He represented her very angry at the Prohibition, and making Heaven and Earth resound with her complaints and murmurs. It is not known, whether that Lady took it amiss, that her Name was made use of on such an Occasion. We only know that she was esteemed a Woman of Honour: Operi, ob turpitudinem, nomen non cuderit Auditor suum; verum ingenuam matronam Nicolosam Sanutam loquentem adduxerit, omnia mulierum querimonia replentem: cui ignotum gratiamne an injuriam fecerit, cum nobilissima femina magis præse ferre videretur pudicitiam, honestatem, frugalitatem, antiquos mores atque animi constantiam, quam lasciviam & immoderatum ornamentorum affectum (19). Bossus undertook to plead the Cause of the Preacher Mapheus, and addressed a very fine discourse to Cardinal Bessarion (20), to shew him that he ought not to give leave to the Women of Bologna, to use their Ornaments again. This discourse had all the effect the Author could desire; for the Decree continued in its full Force all the time of that Cardinal's Legateship (21). When that was expired, a Piece came out addressed by a very learned Person (22) to Santes Bentivoglio, a Man of great Authority in Bologna. The Author advised him, in this Piece, to give the Women liberty to adorn themselves, and fell very foul on those who held the contrary. Bossus wrote a handsome Letter to that Author, and retouched the matter so dextrously, that he brought him into the right way (23). I do not wonder that he converted his Antagonist; but I should have wondered, if he had Eloquence enough to persuade the Women to consent to the Decree. There was the Difficulty. Hoc opus, hic labor est. I have said elsewhere (24), they were obliged to abolish such a Law in Rome. See also Remark [C] of the Article PYTHAGORAS, and the fourth Chapter of the second Book of Christian Advice for the Education of Children. Mr Joly, the Author, speaks there of this Dispute of Matthew Bossus, and cites several curious things from it. I shall content myself with these. One of the most difficult Points to manage with Women, is to root out their curiosity for Cloaths and Ornaments of the Body. The reason of it is, Women naturally love to be fine. St Jerome calls the Female Sex Philosopson, that is to say, which loves Finery; and adds, that he knew a great many Women of extraordinary Chastity, who dressed themselves solely for their own satisfaction, without design of pleasing any Man. This therefore is one of the peculiar imperfections, with which he reproaches the Sex in these Words to Eusebius: Imperfectissimum mulierum affectus. Semper in vestibus, semper in auro, lapidibus & ornamentis, extrinsecus gloriam ponunt. The affection of Women is very imperfect, in that they place all their Glory in the outside, always in Cloaths, always in Gold, Jewels, and external (18) Celsi de Rosinis Lateranensis. Tom. II. pag. 61.

(19) Id. ibid.

(20) It is intitled, Ne feminae ornamenta Bononiensibus restituatur, ad Bessarionem Cardinalem atque Legatum cohortatio. It is also cited by the Title of de immoderato mulierum cultu.

(21) Celsi de Rosinis Lyceum Lateranense, Tom. II. pag. 61.

(22) Guarini de Veronense.

(23) Celsi de Rosinis Lyceum Lateranense, Tom. II. pag. 61.

(24) In the Article PRETEXTATE, about the middle of the Remark [B].

† In Epist. ad Gaudentium, de Pacatulae Inst.

† Hier. in Virginitate servanda.

(25) Joly, Institution des Enfants, pag. 257, 258.

'external Ornaments. And to Demetrias: Quando eras in seculo, ea quæ erant seculi diligebas; polire faciem purpuris, & cerussa ora depingere, ornare crinem, & alienis capillis torritum verticem struere. Ut taceam de inaurium pretiis, candore margaritarum rubri maris profunda testantium, smaragdorū virore, cæraniorum flammis, hyacinthorum pelago, ad quæ ardent & infaniunt studia matronarum (25). — When you were in the World, you loved the things of the World, as to whiten your Face, to set off your Complexion with Vermilion, to curl your Hair, and adorn your Head with strange Hairs. I say nothing of the richness of Diamonds, the whiteness of Pearls fished from the bottom of the Red-Sea, of the beautiful green of Emeralds, the lustre of Rubies, nor the Sky Colour which appears in Saphirs and Jacinths, which are the objects of Passion, Admiration, and Folly of Ladies of Quality.'

BOTAL (LEONARD), in Latin Botallus, lived in the XVIth Century. He was born at Ast in Piedmont, and took his Degree of Doctor of Physic at Pavia. He came into France where he made his Fortune; for he was Physician to the Duke of Alençon, and to Henry III. He introduced at Paris the Practice of frequent Bleeding. Some Persons wrote against him on that Subject, and his Method was condemned by the Faculty of Physic. We shall see, below, Proofs of all this [A]. He published several Books of Physic and Surgery (a), a new Edition of which was printed at Leyden, in the Year 1660, in 8vo, by the Care, and with the Notes of John van Horne, a Physician (b).

(a) The Titles of them are to be found in Lindenius Renovatus, pag. 741.

(b) Ibid.

[A] He introduced at Paris the Practice of frequent bleeding, for which he was written against. Here are the Proofs of all this. Botal — a Piedmontese, of the Town of Ast, and Doctor of Pavia, having found the great effects of bleeding in the Distempers which came under his care, having large Practice in Paris, and at Court, in the Service of Francis Duke of Alençon, fourth Son of Henry the Second, he wrote a Book on that Subject, to which one Bonaventure Grangier a Physician in Paris wrote an Answer; to moderate the frequent Practice of drawing Blood, and shew how to make a proper Use of that great Remedy (1). Another Evidence, and the more authentic, as he was particularly acquainted with our Botal, says thus, 'And not to leave the Subject of Bleeding, I remember, when I was young (2), Physicians were very moderate in it, and took a great deal of care before they ordered it, and more before they repeated it. Mr Duret, my Friend, a Physician of a singular good Character, visiting me when I was ill, and playing on the equivocal meaning of the word Saigneur [Bleeder], used to say that he was but a very little Seigneur [Lord]. Afterwards there arrived in France one Botal, a Piedmontese, who was Physician to Henry III, who used Bleeding in all manner of Distempers, even in the Gout, and would not stick to repeat it four or five times to one Patient. And as I was remonstrating to him one Day, (for I was his Advocate) that instead of curing Distempers, it was the way to turn them into Consumptions. He answered, that the more stagnated Water you draw out of a pit, the more good comes in its Place; and the more a Nurse is sucked by her Child, the more Milk she has: That it was just the same with respect to Blood and Bleeding. Notwithstanding, this Proposition was at that time condemned by our Faculty of Physic. Nay, there was a Book written expressly against it by Grangier, which was received with general Applause. And yet after the Death of Botal, his Practice revived in the Opinion of our Physicians, who do not spare repetition of Bleeding, not only to their Patients that are Strangers to them, but even to their own Wives, Children and Brothers by which they have had very good Success.'

Whatever helps to shew the Original and Progress of any thing is so pleasing to a multitude of Readers, that they will not be sorry to find here this Passage entire; and to be informed that I have recited elsewhere (3), the same Author's account of the Bleeding practised by Auerroës.

(3) Remark [D] in the Article AVERROES, near the end.

BOTEREIUS (RODOLPHUS), Advocate in the Grand Council at Paris, Author of a History of Henry IV. See the Article BOTERO, Remark [B].

BOTERO, or BOTERUS (JOHN), Native of Bene (a) in Piemont, flourished towards the end of the XVIth Century. He was Tutor to the Children of Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, and died in the Year 1608 (b). He wrote several Books in Italian, which have been translated into divers Languages. They are accounts of the Government and Forces of several States of Europe, or bare Recitals of modern Transactions. He wrote also Discourses on Politics, &c. [A]. Consult Mr Moreri, and the Observations I make below [B]. Tbuannus blames the Translator

(a) Hence he is called in Latin Beneficius or Beneficius.

(b) Baudrand in Catalogo Geographorum ad calcem Lexici Geographici.

[A] He wrote . . . Discourses on Politics, &c. I shall take notice of one only: which is intitled, Della Ragion di Stato, libri dieci, contre libri delle Cause della Grandezza e Magnificenza della Città. It was printed at Venice by the Giolitti, in the Year 1589 in 4^{to}. The Author observes in his Epistle Dedicatory, dated at Rome the tenth of May 1589, that he had spent some Years past in several Journeys, to the Courts of Kings and great Princes, both within the Alps and without. Naudé mentions Botero's Works in several Places of his Bibliographie Politique, and seems to value them.

[B] Consult Mr Moreri, and the Observations I make below. It is pleasant enough to see all Piedmont erected into an Abbey: Boterus Abbot of Piedmont says Mr Moreri. A Comma after Abbot would help it a little, but would not hide the Author's negligence in expression. It is certain Botero had an Abbey: viz. that of St Michael de Claufula (1). He published his Works in Italian; and therefore it ought not to have been said, that he published his Relations under this Title, Amphitheatrum seu relationes Universales. It is falsely said, that Rodolphus Botereius, from whom this Author ought to be distinguished, is called indifferently BOTERUS or BOTEREY, and that the History which he published in 1610, reaches from the Reign of Henry II, to the beginning of that of Lewis XIII, and that it is different from the Latin Work, extant in three Volumes in Octavo, under the Title of Commentaries in XVIII Books. Here are a number of Faults in a few Lines. I do not well know the French name of the Advocate, who gives himself this Latin name Rodolphus Botereius at the head of his Works. Father du Breuil cites him often, and calls him sometimes Master Rodol Boterey (2), sometimes Boterays (3), sometimes Botrays (4), sometimes Monsieur Boterays (5), sometimes Monsieur Boterays (6). And all this in citing a Poem composed by This Author on the City of Paris (7). I think Mr Baillet in some of his Works has rendered Botereius by Bouteroue. The Bodlian Catalogue fixes his name Botereius; but mentions two others, Botereus and Bouterays. Among so many variations I find theatrum seu relationes Universales. It is falsely said, that Rodolphus Botereius, from whom this Author ought to be distinguished, is called indifferently BOTERUS or BOTEREY, and that the History which he published in 1610, reaches from the Reign of Henry II, to the beginning of that of Lewis XIII, and that it is different from the Latin Work, extant in three Volumes in Octavo, under the Title of Commentaries in XVIII Books. Here are a number of Faults in a few Lines. I do not well know the French name of the Advocate, who gives himself this Latin name Rodolphus Botereius at the head of his Works. Father du Breuil cites him often, and calls him sometimes Master Rodol Boterey (2), sometimes Boterays (3), sometimes Botrays (4), sometimes Monsieur Boterays (5), sometimes Monsieur Boterays (6). And all this in citing a Poem composed by This Author on the City of Paris (7). I think Mr Baillet in some of his Works has rendered Botereius by Bouteroue. The Bodlian Catalogue fixes his name Botereius; but mentions two others, Botereus and Bouterays. Among so many variations I find

(2) Antiquities de Paris pag. 10, 14. Edit. 1639. in 4^{to}.

(3) Pag. 61.

(4) Pag. 426.

(5) Pag. 564.

(6) Pag. 726.

(7) Intituled Lucretia.

(1) Baudrand in Catalogo Geographorum ad calcem Lexici fol.

Translator of Botero, and calls him Impostor [C]. I will recite his Words, which shew that Engraving is as capable of falsifying History as Printing, and that the Licentiousness in publishing the Print of a fictitious public Monument did not begin in our Days.

I find not the name Boterus, which Moreri prefixes to the two others. The History published by Boterius in 1610, begins but in the Year 1594, and ends with the Death of Henry the Great. And therefore it is not true, that it extends from the Reign of Henry II. to the beginning of that of Lewis XIII. It is intitled, de Rebus in Galliâ &c pene toto orbe gestis Commentariorum Libri XVIII in tres tomos tributi. The first Tome contains eight Books, and ends with the Year 1601, the second Tome contains nine Books, and ends with the three first Months of the Year 1610; the third Tome contains but one Book of Twenty four Pages, which is only a relation of the Death of Henry the Great, and what followed in a few Days after.

CEREMONIES of the Abolition of Henry IV.

(8) Or the 50, according to the Latins. It is the Miserere.

(9) At the Creation of several Knights the Ceremonial requires that they shall have a blown on the Check, or with a naked Sword on the back. They do but just touch them. If that Act were repeated several times, would an Author have any Ground to say that the Knight received a hundred Blows with the flat of a Sword.

(10) The Edition of Francefort in 1628, which I make use of says Botero.

(a) Thuanus, lib. xcv. p. 280.

(b) Varillas, Hist. Hen. III. lib. viii. pag. 325. Edit. of Holland.

(c) Thuanus, lib. lxxxvii. pag. 127.

(1) Thuan. Hist. lib. lxxxvii. pag. 126, 127.

(2) Tom. III. in folio. pag. 644.

(3) In the Remark [A] of the Article AM-PHARES, near the end.

[C] Thuanus blames the Translator of Botero, and calls him Impostor. That is on Account of the Abolition of Henry IV. The King's Proxies, among other Ceremonies, were obliged to kneel before the Throne of Clement VIII. and bow their Heads, while the fifty first Psalm was read (8). At every verse the Pope gave them a gentle tap with his Wand; so the Ritual has appointed, according to the old Practice of the ancient Romans in enfranchising Slaves. Henry IV. was considered as a Person loaded with the Chains of Excommunication, who was going to be solemnly set free. It is certain the Pope gave himself too many haughty airs, and he ought not to think it strange that the Protestants blamed him for it; but then they ought to keep within the bounds of Truth, and not to carry their raileries too far; for then it is no longer a just complaint, but a Lampoon, and malicious Falsification. This does not effect d'Aubigné; for as his Catholic Confession of Sanci is truly a learned and ingenious, but burlesque, Piece, no Body takes all that he says literally. That is not the Case of Botero's Accounts; they are taken for grave and serious Narrations; and therefore the Latin Translator ought not to have falsified them, by pretending that the King's Proxies received a hundred blows with the Cudgel (9), and that the Pope erected a Column for an eternal Monument of his Triumph over France. Thuanus complains of him thus. 'Relationem de eâ re a Joanne Botero (10) Benensî, aliis editis libris non obscuro, vernaculè scriptam qui latine vertit, & Colonie cum inep- ta admodum & mendaci picturâ typis excuden- dam curavit, erga Regem Regnumque injuriosus fuit, quippe qui in explicanda vindictâ adhibita ratione fultibus cælos procuratores dicit, quod maxime apud nos contumeliosum dicitur. De- inde procuratores qui vestibus modestiæ sacerdo-tali convenientibus induti erant cum penulis & gladiis in scenam inducit, & columnam quasi insignie triumphantis de Rege, & regni calamitate Pontificis monumentum Romæ erectum confingit

(11).— John Botero of Bene, a Man noted for some other Pieces, having published an Account of that Affair in French, it was translated into Latin, and printed at Cologne with a very foolish and lying Frontispiece; the Translator has abused both the King and Kingdom, for in setting forth the matter of inflicting the Penance, he says that the Proxies were beat with Cudgels, which in our Country is the utmost contumely. And then the Proxies, who were clothed in a modest Habit, suitable to Priests, he has introduced with Cloaks and Swords, and seigns of his own Head, that a Column was erected at Rome, as a Monument of the Pope's Triumph over the King, and the Calami- ty of the Kingdom. It is a common Saying, that Pictures are the Books of the ignorant: Authors ought therefore to make Conscience of putting false Prints into their Books: for they deceive such Persons as are least able to guard against Error. They deceive even the learned; for when we see a Print, which was published at the time the thing represented is supposed to have existed, it is looked on as an authentic Proof; so that they who see that figure of a Column which Thuanus complains of, dare not doubt but the Pope did really raise himself that pompous Trophy. And when a Man finds himself deceived by a representation of pretended public Monuments, he can no longer tell what to trust to: he cannot tell whether Medals, Inscriptions, and such like Monuments are more sincere than a mercenary Historian kept in annual Pay; and this is a Confirmation of Historical Pyrrhonism. Let us dispel the gloom of this Criticism by the Raileries of the Sieur d'Aubigné; 'Do not you see, say they, how the State submits to the Church, that this brave King, after defeating so many Armies, reducing so many Subjects to Obedience, and subduing so many great Princes, his Enemies, is obliged to prostrate himself at the Pope's feet, and suffer a drubbing in the Persons of Mr the Converter and the Cardinal d'Ofsat? Who lay flat on the Ground upon their Bellies, like a Couple of Mackerel on a Gridiron, from Miserere to Vitulus. And besides, say they, this Game he was obliged to play over again between himself in Person and the Legate, but that was done gently, and under the Rose (12). See the Remark [K] of the Article HENRY IV, and Remark [A] of the Article TEXERA.

(11) Thuanus, Hist. lib. cxlii. sub fin. pag. 608. ad ann. 1595.

(12) Confess. Cath. de Sancy, liv. i. cap. i. at the beginning.

BOUCHER (JOHN), a Parisian (a), Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Curate of St Bennet at Paris, in the time of the League, was a Trumpet of Sedition, and the most mutinous and furious Spirit among the Rebels. Their first Assembly was held in his Apartment, in the College of Fortet, in the Year 1585 (b). It was he, who, by ordering the Alarm Bell to be rung in his Church the second of September 1587 (c), contributed more than any body else to a Commotion of the People, the Consequences of which were so ignominious to Henry III. The Success of that Day made him more insolent, and the next he preached violently against the Person of the King, and against his Counsellors (d). History observes, that the Weakness of this Prince was the principal Cause of the Boldness of the Rebels [A]. Boucher prostituted, not only his Tongue, but also his Pen to the Head of the League, and published, among other things, a Discourse on the Justice of deposing Henry III. [B].

(d) Concilia- tores vero & in his familiam du- cens Bucerus ex Ambone in Re- gem & ejus Con- siliarios palam debacchari. Id. ibid.

[A] The weakness of Henry III. was the principal Cause of the boldness of the Rebels. See Thuanus (1) and Mezzerai (2). This confirms what I have somewhere (3) said, that it is not usually Tyranny, but want of Capacity to make themselves feared, that causes Princes to lose their Sceptres and Crowns. The Flatterers of the People would gladly persuade us, that there is nothing to be feared from them as long as they are well governed. But this is an Impostion: an enterprising Man does what he will with the People, under a soft and gentle Government.

[B] He published, among the rest, a Discourse on the Justice of deposing Henry III. This we learn from William Barclay, in his Answer to that Book, which is part of his Work against the Monarchomachi (4). Thuanus mentions it still more clearly: See the next Remark. The same Barclay observes, that Boucher published another Book in French, under the Name of Francis de Verone Constantin. Quo- niam

(4) The 5th Book, the particular Title whereof is, Anacrisis libro- rum Jo. Bouch- erii de justâ imo injustâ Hen- ricî III. abdicat- ione e Franco- rum Regno.

The most infamous Satire imaginable [C]. There is a strong probability that he was an Accomplice in the enormous Action of James Clement [D]. He was the bolder after the Death of that Prince, because he could then screen himself under a pretence that the Successor was actually and notoriously a Huguenot. That pretence failed him to his great Grief, when Henry IV professed himself a Roman Catholic; nevertheless he persisted in his first Opinion. He continued to preach, that he ought not to be obeyed, and published nine Sermons, dedicated to the Cardinal of Placentia, wherein he maintained that the Abjuration of the * Bearnois was but a Feint, and that his Absolution was void [E]. Notwithstanding all his Sermons, and Libels, the Parisians submitted to Henry IV. The Day after the Reduction of the City his Sermons were burnt at la Croix du Tiroir (e). But he persisted in the Party of the Leaguers, and retired into the Netherlands (f) with the Spanish Garrison, which had been in Paris during the League, and

[* So he called Henry IV. born in Bearn. REM. CRIT.]

(e) Cayet Chron. Novenaire, fol. 225, verso ad ann. 1593.

(f) Mezzerai, Abr. Chronol. ad ann. 1594, pag. 114.

(5) Gal. Barclaius lib. v. contra monarchomach. pag. 599.

* niam — turbas illas civiles prioribus tuis Libris & Concionibus excitatas, accensaque in Reges odia, posteriore scripto, quod patriâ linguâ, sub Francisci Veronenfis Constantini nomine divulgasti, non modo non mitigare & compescere, sed novo artificio fovere & propagare de industria natus es: patere me tecum vehementius paulo, sed lenius tamen quam rei indignitas flagitat, regum & regnorum omnium nomine de hac injuria expostulare

(5). — Since — in a late piece published by you in French, under the Name of Francis de Veronne Constantin, you have endeavoured by a new Artifice, not to compose and mitigate, but to cherish and propagate the civil Tumults and Hatred of the King, caused by your former Books and Sermons; I suffer me to expostulate with you in the Name of all Kings and Kingdoms, concerning this Injury, whicb tho' I do some what warmly, yet will it be much more mildly than the baseness of the thing deserves. The French Book he charges him with, is even more wicked than the Latin one; for it is the infamous Apology for John Châtel, under this Title, An Apology for John Châtel, a Parisian, who was executed, and for the Fathers and Scholars of the Society of Jesus, who were banished the Kingdom of France, against the Arrêt of Parliament, passed against them at Paris, the twenty second of December (1594); in five Parts. By Francis de Verone Constantin. The Name of Francis de Verone Constantin is a convincing proof, that Barclay attributes this Apology for John Châtel to Boucher: nevertheless I shall give another Reason; and quote a Passage which will put the thing out of all manner of doubt. 'Cur in spurcissimâ illâ & infami tuâ Apologiâ, quam pro parricidâ & perduelle manifesto, recenti irâ & inveterato odio furens & fremens evomisti, nefarium perditu adolescentis conatum, facinusque omni memoriâ execrandum, in Regis iidem Christianissimi, & (si alium Galilia unquam habuit) clementissimi perniciem meditatum, ut pulcherrimum & prope divinum, atque omni ex parte heroicum commendasti (6)? —

(6) Id. ibid. lib. vi. cap. xxv. pag. 795.

'Why did you, in that most filthy and infamous Apology of yours, which you, fretting and foaming with fresh rage and inveterate hate, spued out for a manifest Murderer and Rebel, and extol an Act to be cursed to all Posterity, contrived for the destruction of a most Christian and (if ever France had one) a most merciful King; I say why did you extol it as a most beautiful and almost divine Action, and in every respect heroic.' Barclay after having said this, praises the Apology which the Jesuits had published, wherein they detested Châtel's Action and confessed that he was justly punished, as a Parricide. We shall see in the Remark [H] Citation (15), that Cardinal d'Osset was of Barclay's Mind, concerning the Apology for John Châtel.

[C] It was the most infamous Satire imaginable.] Tuauus says that William Rose Bishop of Sentis, the little Feuillant, the Jesuit Commolet, Genebrard Feuardent, Launois, (a Minister who turned Papist,) Boucher, and some others, defamed King Henry III, with a prodigious rage, both with their Tongues and in anonymous Libels, and that at last they gloried in putting their Names to those satirical Writings. He adds that Boucher was so bold as to put his Name to the Book in question, which was printed in a fine Letter for Nicolas Nivelles, but the Impression was not finished 'till a little after the tragical Death of that King (a). He vented in that Book all manner of abominable stuff against the King: Read what follows: 'Hac fiducia fretus librum scripsit Boucherus de justa Henrici III abdicatione, nomen suum professus apud Nicolaum Nivellem characteribus elegantibus expressum, neque dum, cum rex vivere desit, consummatum quo non aliud flagitiosius toto illo effrenata licentiae tempore publicatum est, eoq; rubra impudentissimus innumera dictu foeda & audita horrenda per summam calumniam Regi assegebat, propter quâ eum tanquam à communione ecclesiae ipso jure exclusum, ab omni regni jure excidisse, & legitime abdicatum, ac tandem jullo Dei judicio & impulsu interfectum esse colligebat' (7). — Emboldened by this, Boucher wrote a Book on the Justice of deposing Henry III, with his Name prefixed, printed by Nicolas Nivelles, in an elegant Letter, but not finished till after the Death of the King. A more flagitious thing than this had not appeared in all that time of exorbitant licentiousness: there the impudent Brawler had, in a most reproachful Manner, aspersed the King with many abominable and shocking Things; for which, as in his account, he was justly excluded from the Communion of the Church; so he concluded, he had likewise lost all Right to the Kingdom, and was lawfully deposed, and at last slain by the just Judgment and Impulse of God.

VOL. II.

[§ (a) See the Catholicon d'Espagne Edit. 1712, Tom. II. pag. 332. REM. CRIT.]

[D] There is a strong Probability, that he was an Accomplice in the enormous Action of James Clement (8).] Antony Lyesel has left in writing in his Journal, that the same Day the King was wounded, and before any News was brought of his Wound, he heard a Sermon at St Merry's by Dr Boucher, who said, to comfort his Hearers, that as on that Day, the First of the Month August, in which they celebrated the Feast of St Peter in Bonds, God had delivered that Apostle out of Herod's Hands, they ought to hope, that he would grant them the like favour. Whereupon he did not scruple to advance this damnable Proposition, that it was an Act of great Merit to kill a King, who is a Heretic or a favourer of Heretics. The other Preachers, going Hand in Hand with him, preached at the same time with more passion and fury than ever they had done against Henry de Valois; and the same unexceptionable Witnesses says, that they gave the People certain hopes that God would soon deliver them from him: Which made many Persons believe that they had been acquainted with the horrible design of that Parricide (9). I take this from Maimbourg, an Author, who is not hasty in drawing consequences upon such a Subject.

[E] He published nine Sermons, against the Abjuration of Henry IV, wherein he maintained that his Absolution was void.] He published them the first time at Paris: He printed a second Edition of them at Douay after he had left France: A poor comfort for his vexation to see upon the Throne a Prince, whom he had so much reviled in his Discourses and Writings. Tuauus uses him 'as he deserves. Inter eos vero, says he (10), unus repertus est Joannes Boucherus S. Benedicti Curio qui maledicendi rabie effertus cum in defunctum regem

(7) Thunn. Hist. lib. xcvi. pag. 230. col. 1.

(8) A Dominican Monk who killed Henry III.

(9) Maimbourg, Hist. de la Ligue lib. iii. ad ann. 1589. pag. 100. Dutch Edit.

(10) Thunn. Hist. lib. cvii. pag. 558. ad ann. 1593.

(2) Id. ibid.

and marched out the Twenty second of March 1594. He obtained a Canonicate at Tournay, and died Dean of the Chapter of that City fifty Years after, but very much altered in his Humour, being as zealous a Frenchman among Foreigners, as he had been a furious Spaniard in France (g) [F]. His Character may be judged of by the Discourse which I mention in the Remarks; it is a Reproof given him by King Henry III [G]. On the News that he was to come to Rome, Cardinal d'Ofsat intreated the Pope to cause him to be imprisoned [H], and spoke vigorously

‘ regem contumeliosus fuisset, in hunc injuriosus
‘ esse voluit, & IX. longas conciones ad Mederi‘ ci fanum habuit de simulata Henrici Borbonii ‘ Benearni Principis ad ecclesiam reconciliatione, ‘ & irrita abfolutione, quas anno proximo Kalend.
‘ Mart. Cardinali Placentino in scriptis ac typis in ‘ urbe excusas, postea cum ab ea exularet, Duaci
‘ in Atrebatibus recudendas curavit, furore nondum
‘ per secutam rerum conversionem aut locorum ‘ aut temporis intercedinem domito. — But ‘ among them was one John Boucher, Curate of ‘ St Bennet, a furious railing Fellow, who as he had ‘ contumeliously treated the late King, was resolv‘ ed to abuse the present; and preached nine long ‘ Sermons in St Merry's Church, on the feigned Re‘ conciliation of Henry of Bourbon, Prince of Bearne,
‘ to the Church, and the Nullity of his Abfolution,
‘ which he got printed in the City, and published
‘ the Year following on the first of March, dedicated ‘ to the Cardinal of Placentia, and again, in his ‘ Exile, reprinted at Douay, his rage not being yet ‘ conquered by the Change of affairs that followed,
‘ or the distance of time or place.

The whole Title of that Work according to my Edition is thus: ‘ Some Sermons concerning the ‘ feigned Conversion and the Nullity of the pre‘ tended Abfolution of Henry de Bourbon, Prince of ‘ Bearne, at St Denis in France, Sunday the twenty ‘ fifth of July 1593, on the subject of the Gospel
‘ for the same Day, Attendez à faulx prophetis, ‘ &c. Mat. vii. delivered in St Merry's Church in ‘ Paris, from the first day of August following, to
‘ the Ninth of the said Month. By JOHN BOU-‘ CHER Doctor of Divinity. *Nonne qui oderunt
‘ te Domine oderant, & super inimicos tuos tace‘ bant.* Psalm cxxxviii. According to the Copy ‘ Printed at Paris for G. Chaudiere, R. Nivelle,
‘ and R. Thierry, in St James's Street M.D.XCIV.’
The Approbation of the Divines of Paris is to be ‘ seen on the back of the Title Page. The Epistle ‘ Dedicatory to the Cardinal of Placentia, Legate of ‘ the Holy Apostolical See in the Kingdom of France, ‘ is dated from Paris the first of March 1594, and ‘ signed J. B. The Advertisement to the Reader says ‘ that several things have been added to what had ‘ been preached. At the end there are some Let‘ ters of Henry IV, to the Canton of Bern, to the ‘ Lady de Tinteville, to the Queen of England, to ‘ the City of Rochelle and such others, and to some ‘ private Persons, who were Huguenots.

[F] He died, Dean of Tournay: — but very ‘ much altered in his Humour, and as zealous a ‘ Frenchman among Strangers, as he had been a fu‘ rious Spaniard in France.] The continual railing
‘ of the Flemings against the French, could not but ‘ awaken by degrees a natural tenderness for his ‘ Country in the Soul of this mutineer. People at ‘ Paris were not thoroughly persuaded that he was ‘ changed in the Year 1625. For the Libel which ‘ came out at that time against France, which we ‘ shall see the Title of below, was ascribed by ma‘ ny Persons to Boucher: But he denied it by Let‘ ters; let us see what the Mercurius Francicus, says
‘ on this Subject: ‘ To prevent it's being discovered ‘ that this Book was first printed in Italy, it was ‘ given out that it was first dispersed in Flanders ‘ before it was handed about in France, and ‘ that Dr Boucher (who is yet living at Tournay, ‘ and who formerly wrote several Books on those ‘ matters during the League of 1588, and the ‘ following Years, and against the most Christian ‘ Kings) was the Author of it: But that Doctor ‘ having notice of it, protested in Letters, which he ‘ wrote to his Friends at Paris, that it was fall‘ sely ascribed to him, and that upon the Word of a ‘ Priest, he had not seen that small Book intitu‘ led Admonitio: His Letter was also shewn to
‘ the curious, which removed the suspicion that

‘ was entertained of him, and made it fall on the ‘ Jesuit Eudemon Joannes, a Greek by Nation,
‘ who came into France with the Legate (11).’

There never was more indignation shewn in ‘ France against any Book than against that: It was ‘ intitled G. G. R. ‘ Theologi, ad Ludovicum de‘ cimum tertium Galliae & Navarrae Regem Christia‘ nissimum, ADMONITIO, fidelissimè, humillimè ‘ verissimè facta, & ex Gallico in Latinum transla‘ ta. Qua breviter & nervosè demonstratur Galliana ‘ foedè & turpiter impium foedus inisse, & injustum
‘ bellum hoc tempore contra Catholicos movisse, ‘ salvaque Religione prosequi non posse Augustae
‘ Francorum, cum facultate Catholici Magistratus ‘ Anno M.D.C.XXV. — An Admonition most faith‘ fully, humbly, and truly given to Lewis XIII, most ‘ Christian King of France and Navarre, by G.G.R.
‘ Divine, wherein is briefly and fully proved, that ‘ France has basely and scandalously entered into ‘ an impious Alliance, and moved an unjust War at ‘ this time, against the Catholics, which they can‘ not carry on without Injury to Religion; at Soissons
‘ with Licence of the Catholic Magistrate Anno 1625.’

It was condemned by the Sorbonne, and by the ‘ Assembly of the Clergy of France: The Lieu‘ tenant Civil caused it to be burnt by the Common ‘ Executioner: The Parliament of Paris made several ‘ Decrees to hinder the Censure of the Assembly ‘ of the Clergy from being enervated. See the Mer-‘ curius Jesuite, in the first Volume, a Work that is ‘ ascribed to James Godefroy the Son of Denis (12).

[G] His Character may be judged of by a Reproof ‘ given him by King Henry III.] That Prince sent ‘ for the Parliament and the Faculty of Divinity ‘ to the Louvre: ‘ and severely reprimanded the ‘ Divines for the insolent and unbridled liberty
‘ they took to preach against him and all his Acti‘ ons — — — and addressing himself particularly to ‘ Boucher, Rector of St Bennet, he called him a ‘ wicked Man, and told him that his Uncle Poisse, ‘ who had undeservedly been a Counsellor of the ‘ Court, was a wicked Fellow, but that he was still ‘ worse, and that his Companions were but little ‘ better: He added that he directed his Speech ‘ particularly to him, because he had been so im‘ pudent as to preach that he had caused Burlat,
‘ a Doctor of Divinity of Orleans, to be drowned
‘ in a Sack, though the said Burlat was daily ‘ eating, drinking, and making merry with him;
‘ telling them moreover, that they could not deny ‘ that they were notoriously wretched and damned
‘ for two reasons, first for having slandered him
‘ their Natural and Lawful Prince in the Pulpit ‘ of Truth, and spoken several calumnies against ‘ his Honour, which is forbidden them in the ‘ Holy Scripture. Secondly, that when they came ‘ out of the Pulpit, after they had slandered and ‘ told many Lies of him, they went directly to ‘ say Mass at the Altar, without reconciling them‘ selves and confessing the said Lies and Slanders, ‘ though they preached daily that if any one has ‘ told a Lie or spoke evil of any body whatso‘ ever, according to the Words of the Gospel, he ‘ must go and reconcile himself with him before
‘ he presents himself at the Altar (13).’ Nothing ‘ can be more solid than this censure; but it is not ‘ for a King to make use of it; he ought to have ‘ recourse to other Arms; and if Henry III had been
‘ as well versed in the Art of reigning as in the ‘ Morality of the Gospel, he would not have been ‘ reduced to the condition of a Catechist to the ‘ Preachers of Paris.

[H] On news that he was to come to Rome
‘ Cardinal d'Ofsat intreated the Pope to cause him
‘ to be imprisoned.] The account he gives of it to ‘ Mr de Villeroi will yet further discover the Acti‘ ons and Character of that Man: Wherefore I in‘ sert it at length. ‘ I told him (14) also that Dr

(11) Mercurius
‘ Fran. Tom. XI.
‘ pag. 1058, 1059.

(12) Vide Prae-
‘ fix. Samuel. Ma-
‘ resti ad distin-
‘ ctiones Castaneis.

(13) See the ‘ Journal of Hen‘ ry III, on the ‘ 30th of December
‘ 1587. p. 28. 29.

(14) Viz. the ‘ Boucher Pope.

roufully to him against this Mutineer. Can any thing be more horrible than the Complaint he made to the Duke of Mayenne, after the just Punishment of those who had caused the first President Briffon to be hanged? Had he not the Impiety to say that these profligate Wretches were Martyrs of JESUS CHRIST [1]? I add that he was one of the Adversaries of Richer, and published several Pieces against him in French, under the feigned names of Paul Timoris, and Pompey Ribemont (b).

(b) See the Journal des Sçavans of the 14th of December 1702.

(15) This letter, that Cardinal d'Ossat believed that the pretended François de Verone Constantin, who wrote the Apology for John Châtel, was no other than John Boucher. It was also William Barclay's Opinion. See above the Remark [B].

(16) The Letter wherein Cardinal d'Ossat speaks thus, was written from Rome the 1st of December 1600.

REFLECTIONS on the Rewards which the Spaniards bestowed upon those, who made Panegyrics upon the murderers of kings.

Boucher had left that Country before the said Count, to come to Rome to visit LIMINA APOSTOLORUM PETRI & PAULI, in the Name of the Bishop of Tournay who had given him a Canonicate in his Church: And hereupon I exposed to his Holiness the violence and rage of that Man, the Books he had written against the late King, and since against the Life and Conversation of the King now reigning, justifying the Parricide attempted by John Châtel (15), and exhorting every one to finish what that Murderer had begun, and that he had also written several things against the Authority and Power of the Pope and the Holy See, and was yet more obstinate and violent to this Day than ever, and there was but too much Cause and Reason to make him a Prisoner, and punish him severely for his crimes and blasphemies. But if his Holiness's Goodness and Clemency, and the condition of the Times and other considerations, did not permit him to use that Man so rigorously as he deserved, that at least his Holiness should shew him, by not admitting him to kiss his Feet or otherwise, that such Persons were not acceptable to him, nor ought to expect from his Holiness the reception and favours, which are due to good, peaceable, and moderate Men. The Pope answered me, that he remembered he had formerly heard of that Man, and also that the Sieur Malvaufie, at that time Nuncio in the Netherlands, had wrote to him, that he said the Pope could not observe the King. His Holiness asked me whether he was come. I told him, not that I knew. Well (said he) we shall see (16). When one considers that the Spaniards not only gave a Retreat, but also a Canonicate, to such a Man as he, one cannot forbear saying that in this World all things are facrificed to Political Interest, and National Hatred. They knew he was a Man, who to satisfy the rage with which he was transported against the Person of Henry IV, overturned both the Civil and Ecclesiastical Authority: He took the Power of Absolution from the Pope, he submitted Crowns to the caprice of Subjects, and the Life of Kings to the Daggers of Assassins. Those Principles were as opposite to the Faith of the Spaniards as to that of the French Nation: Nevertheless they were tolerated in that Doctor, because he hated the King of France, and as I have already said, they gave him Benefices. Nay, They let him pronounce and publish the Funeral Oration of Philip II (17). I have not been able to find out yet whether he performed his Journey or not. Cardinal d'Ossat wrote the twentieth of January 1601, that he had been told that Boucher remained Sick at Cologne (18). He was not the only one whom the Spaniards protected and rewarded in the Netherlands. Did not Montgaillard, so well known by the Name of the little Feuillant, one of the Panegyrist of the Murderer of King Henry III, obtain an Abbey (19)?

[1] He had the Impiety to say that the profligate Wretches, who caused the President Briffon to be hanged, were Martyrs of JESUS CHRIST. These are Thuanus's Words. 'Joannes Bucerus Curio S. Benedicti homo vecors Catholicorum bonorum ac zelotum nomine Orationem expostulatoriam ad ipsum (Meduanum) habuit, qua publicam ultionem, carnificinam, merito supplicio facinorosos affectos, Dei martyres, insigni impudentia vocabat (20). — John Boucher Curate of St Bennet, a furious Man, made an expostulatory Oration to him (the Duke de Mayenne), in which he had the consummate Impudence to call the public Vengeance Murder, and the criminals, deservedly put to Death, Martyrs of God.'

(17) At Tournay the 25th of October 1598.

(18) It is the 25th Letter in the Edition of Mr Amelot de la Houffle.

(19) That of Orval.

(20) Thuan. Hist. lib. cii. pag. 443. 444. ad ann. 1591. See also Mœner Tom. III. in fol. pag. 998.

BOUCHET (WILLIAM), Sieur de Brocourt, published a Book, intituled, Les Séries, in the Year 1584, and dedicated it to the Merchants of the City of Poitiers, who had constituted him their Judge and Consul. He divided it into twelve Chapters, and continued the Work to the third Volume: so his Séries are divided into three Parts, each containing twelve Chapters. The Reason of the Title is because they are Discourses supposed to have passed in Evening Conversations. These Discourses are stuffed with all manner of Jokes and Puns: gross Obscenities are frequent there: but they have this particular Character, that you find a great deal of Learning in them, and that the Author had read a great deal. He was dead when the Epistle Dedicatory of the third Volume was writ, the first Day of November 1607. There are several Editions of his Séries: I make use of that of Paris, by Jeremy Perier, in 1608, in three Volumes in 12mo.

BOUCHET (JOHN), Author of a great Number of French Books, some in Verse and some in Prose, was of Poitiers, and flourished in the XVIth Century. He was an Advocate, ora Counsellor at Law, if we believe la Croix du Maine (a); but du Verdier vau Privas makes him only an Attorney (b). The most considerable of his Works is that intituled, Les Annales d'Aquitaine — The Annals of Aquitaine [A]. He published it at Paris, in the Year 1537, in Folio (c); he afterwards revised it, and had it reprinted at Poitiers (d), in 1557, in Folio; he continued

(a) La Croix du Maine Biblioth. Franç. pag. 208.

(b) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 656.

(c) Id. ibid.

(d) By Englebert de Marne.

[A] The most considerable of his pieces is that of the Annals of Aquitaine. It is a very laborious Work, and full of fine and very memorable Stories, and, to repeat the Judgment of Robert Ceneau called Cenalis, Bishop of Auranches &c, in a learned Book which he wrote on the French; this Book of Annals by John Bouchet is one of the most valuable of all our French Histories, and deserves to be translated into Latin 'that Foreigners may be acquainted with it (1)'. There is no Flattery in this Judgment, but as for Encomiums given to this Author, and to the Annals of Aquitaine by John Quintin (2), I believe we may make large Abatements, without calling in question his Assertion, that John Bouchet did not write after common talk, as many others had done, but examined the most certain Monuments: 'De quibus (Gallis) tam multa egregie Bouchetus, ut e dolio (quod aiunt) hausisse videatur: nec ea (crede) ex tonstrinis futrinisque deprompta, quo maxime nomine male audit bona nostrorum historiarum pars. Paginas in Annalibus Magistratum, Fastique, non sine longæ inquisitionis tedio ac sudore percurrit, lectu sæpe difficiles (scio) exelso jam tinea membranas vel literis exolecentibus, verisque interpunctis. Veterum monumenta, scalptos lapides, ruderata etiam marmora, omnia (hercule) in historiâ (non mediocre fidei & diligentia

(1) La Croix du Maine, pag. 208.

(2) In a Latin Preface to the Annals of Aquitaine.

tinued it to that very Year; for it ends with a long detail of the secret Machinations of the Spaniards against several Places in France: and as these Enterprizes were carried on during the Truce concluded in the Year 1556, he pretends to prove that King Henry II did not break it first [B]. John Bouchet must have been pretty old at that time; for he tells us that Peter Bouchet his Father, Attorney in the Court Laye at Poitiers, being at Supper in the Year 1480 with another Attorney his Neighbour, took the Poison which his Neighbour's dissolute Wife had prepared for her Husband, and died the third Day after (c). He says farther, that in the Year 1486 he saw the Nativity, Passion, and Resurrection of our LORD JESUS CHRIST acted and represented by Mysteries and Personages at Poitiers, in great Triumph and Magnificence: at which were present a great many Gentlemen and Ladies of the Province of Poitou, and the neighbouring Places (f).

(c) Bouchet Anal. d'Aquit. in the Year 1480, fol. 162. Edit. 1557.

(f) Bouchet Anal. d'Aquit. in the Year 1480, fol. 168. Edit. 1557.

(g) Joannes Quintinus Hedius, in Epist. ad lectorem Annalibus Aquitanis præfixa.

ligentiae argumentum) sedulâ manu revolvit, tempora temporibus, gesta gestis, resque rebus, acrimodum, & oculata supputatione componens (3). — Concerning whom (the French) Bouchet has said so many things excellently well, that he seems (as we say) to have gone to the Fountain, his stories not taken from Barber's Shops or Cobblers' Stalls, on which account chiefly great part of our Historians are blamed. He, with infinite Labour and Pains, revolved the Annals of Magistrates and public Records, which (I know) are often difficult to read, the Parchment being much eaten, the letters very old, and the words interpointed. He examined with Sedulity the Monuments of the Antients, Inscriptions, and even Marbles, buried in rubbish; every thing (in short) relating to History (no small Argument of his Fidelity and Diligence), comparing Times with Times, Actions with Actions, and Things with Things, with the greatest Sagacity and Judgment.

[B] He pretends to prove that King Henry II did not break the Truce first. He was accused of it, and Appearances were against him. John Bouchet is not alone in his endeavours to justify him. The Sieur Francis de Boyvin, Baron du Villars, has also given a detail of the secret Practices of the Spaniards, and says, that whoever considers impartially these Marvellous Intrigues, will excuse the Regretment of the French (4). The Maxim, which he had advanced on Occasion of the like Plots of the Spaniards in the Year 1550, might have place here. 'To say the truth, they break the Peace, not who first make War, but who

(c) Memoirs de du Villars, liv. viii. pag. 717, 718.

(a) Bouchin, Epistole Dedicatory to his Pleadings.

BOUCHIN (STEPHEN), Counsellor, and King's Attorney in the Royal Courts of Beaune in Burgundy, exercised that Office for twenty Years, after his Father and Grandfather who had held it for sixty Years (a). He published some Pleadings and Conclusions, which he had taken during his Exercise of that Employ, and printed a second Edition of them, with Additions, in the Year 1620 [A]. He had a great

[A] He printed a second Edition of his Pleadings in the Year 1620. This Edition was printed at Paris by Claude Morel in 8vo, it contains but six Pleas; and yet it is Three hundred and sixty Pages. The matter of these Discourses is pretty curious, and gives him room to quote a great many Love Stories. The first Plea is 'on the Case of one pretended to be under Age, who was accused and brought to Trial for having said in several Places, that a married Woman had been found divers times with the Curate of her Parish, who knew her carnally. The second, against a young Woman accused of having, by a pretended Charm, hindered the Consummation of a Marriage. The third, against a Son accused as a Criminal by his Father. The fourth, for a Husbandman condemned in a Fine for stealing some Bread Dough in a time of Famine. The fifth, touching the preference of Creditors and Privileged Persons, at the sale of Goods left by an Ecclesiastic. The sixth, on a Charivary, or Mock Music, given to a Woman that was married again immediately after the Death of her Husband (1). They who had given it, the next Day demanded Money of the new married Couple for the Charge they had been at (2); that being refused, they brought them before a Judge, who ordered them a small Sum (3). The married folks appealed from the Sentence. Bouchin concluded by the Evidence that it was ill judged, and the Appeal good (4).

(1) Three Weeks after.

(2) Bouchin, Plaidoies, pag. 302, 302.

(3) Note be observans, pag. 316, that Thomas Faber and Chastaneus do not approve the Charivary, yet others are of a contrary opinion, and have wrote that non fit injuria fecundo nubenti si carivarium detur.

(4) Bouchin, Plaidoies, pag. 360.

arm privately and use secret practices in prejudice of Treaties and Alliances, as the Emperor did (5).

In reality, the Aggressor is not he who gives the first blow; but he who first resolves and prepares to do it. This Mr Puffendorf has well determined. But when we have evident Proof, says he (6), that another does actually intend, and has taken proper measures to do us an injury, altho' he has not openly declared such his intention; then we may fairly put ourselves on our Defence, and anticipate the Aggressor, before he compleats the Preparations he is making to do us the designed mischief: provided notwithstanding we have endeavoured by friendly Advice, to move him to lay aside his ill purposes, so long that there remain no hopes of his being prevailed upon to do so by fair and gentle means: In using which friendly Advice and gentle Means, care must be taken that it be not done when it may prove a prejudice and a disadvantage to our own Affairs. He who first forms the design to do an injurious Act, and first makes preparation to bring it about, is to be accounted the Aggressor, altho' it may perhaps so fall out, that the other using greater diligence may prevent him, and so commit the first open Acts of Hostility. It is not absolutely necessary to a justifiable self-defence, that I received the first stroke, or that I only ward off and avoid the blows that are actually aimed at me.

According to John Bouchet and the Baron du Villars, this was the Case of Henry II, with Charles V.

(5) Id. liv. 1. p. 15.

(6) Puffendorf, Duties of the Man and the Citizen, Book I. Chap. V. §. 17. of the English Translation.

He leaves no manner of common place untouched; he begins with praising Virginity, and Widowers who do not marry again; then he proceeds to declaim against second Marriages; and especially against the impatience of Widows who marry too hastily, and against the impudence of old Men that marry, and lastly against Step-Mothers; and then, on a sudden, excuses or justifies all that he had been condemning, and confirms the whole by Quotations and Examples as before.

To give an Idea of his motley Stile, I will give a Specimen of it from the place where he details the inconveniencies of second Marriages. 'So that one may say with Hesiod, that he who marries a second time

* Ibid. pag. 330. and following.

Naufagus navigat bis profundum difficile.

Ναυηγός πλώει δις βαθύν ἀργάλεον,

Hesiod. ex I. Epigram.

he is shipwrecked in a place where there is no bottom; after the Death of one Wife to seek a second, is, according to the Opinion of the comic Philemon, to desire to float again on a Sea of Disquiet and Misery: it is a game where Chance has more share than Reason, and an effect of a blank Lottery, where every Body is hunting for Benefits, and the luckiest get them; and it is in vain for the unlucky to complain, that Cupid has not struck them with a golden Dart, armed with a shining point.

— Cujus

great deal of Reading, but according to the Custom of that time he displays it too profusely [B]: for without counting the Greek and French Verses, which he cites, there is almost as much Latin as French in his Pleadings. He followed the same Method in his Book, intituled, The Perfect Magistrate.

Ovid. vii. Met.
Fab. 26. ver.
673.

--- cujus fuit aurea cuspis.

‘ which is the Dart that begets Love in Hearts
‘ wounded with it; but with that which is endow‘ ed with a contrary Virtue, and creates Hatred in‘ stead of Love, being quite blunt and armed only ‘ with Lead.

Idem. i. Met.
Fab. ix. pag. 469.

--- fugat hoc, facit illud amorem.

‘ That if there be in the Wife some small remains ‘ of Beauty plastered according to custom,

Plaut. in Merc.
Act. 2. Sc. 2.

Quasi sit signum pictum in pariete,

‘ says Plautus,

Plaut. in Mostel-laria, Act. 1.
Sc. 2.

Nam isthæc veteres quæ se unguentis unctitans, interpoles

Vetulæ, edentulæ, quæ vitia corporis fūco occu-lunt,

Ubi sese sudor cum unguentis consociavit, illico Iridem olent, quasi quom una multa Jura confundit coquus.

‘ That if they adjust their Hair with a little more ‘ artifice than ordinary,

Ovid. i. Fast.
ver. 406.

--- comptis arte manūque comis:

‘ If they dip it in the Water of the River Cratis or ‘ Cybaris, to make it look like thread of Gold,

Id. i. Met. ver.
315. Fab. 18.

Electro similes faciunt auroque capillos:

‘ If they never go without their Chains and Neck‘ laces,

Propert. lib. ii.
Eleg. 1.

Auratis circumdata colla catenis:

‘ And if there is still any thing agreeable,

Ovid. ii. de Arte
Amandi, ver.
678.

Et faciunt curâ, ne videantur anus:

‘ If, contrary to Sofastra in Plautus, they are com‘ plaisant and cajoling, the Husband's Head akes,
‘ and he grows jealous,

Idem. vii. Met.
Fab. 26. ver.
715.

Esse metus cepit, ne jura jugalia conjux
Non bene servasset.

‘ The Wife as susceptible of Jealousy as the Huf‘ band, more pale than the jealous Procris,

Idem. iii. de Arte Amandi,
ver. 703.

Palluit ut ferâ lectus de vite racemus:

‘ More dry of this peccant Humour, and yellower
‘ than Leaves blown off by an ill Wind, or nipped
‘ by the cold,

Id. ib. ver. 704.

Frondes quas nova læsit Hyems;

Plutarch Roman
Questions, Qu. 16.
Emilius Probus
lib. xv.

‘ And who would not suffer her Maids to enter the ‘ Temple of the Goddess Leucothea, if it were not to ‘ box them, may on the other Hand complain with ‘ old Syra, that the Husbands imagine they have ‘ greater Privileges than the Wives,

Plaut. in Merc.
Act. 4. Sc. 6.

Ecastor lege durâ vivunt mulieres,
Multoque iniquiore miseræ, quam viri;
Nam si vir scortum duxit clam uxore suâ,
Id si rescivit uxor, impune est viro:
Uxor vero, si clam domo egressa est foras,
Viro sit causa, exigitur matrimonio.
Utinam lex esset eadem uxori, quæ est viro.

Ovid. Epist. v.
Oenone Paridi.

‘ She is susceptible of Jealousy if a Heifer but break ‘ into her Pasture (these are the Words of Oenone
‘ to Paris) or if her Husband

Fundum alienum arat, incultum familiarem deserit; Plaut. in Affin-ria. Act. v. Sc.
27.

‘ which she does not think more lawful for him
‘ than for herself, periniquum est ut pudicitiam vir ‘ ab uxore exigat, quam ipse non presert, says the ‘ Civilian Papinian, that if he takes too much Liber‘ ty, or arrogates too much to himself, the common‘ ly follows his Steps,

Vitio est improba facta viri:

Ovid. ii. de Arte
Amandi, ver.
400.

‘ which, among other inconveniencies of Marriage,
‘ causes domestic quarrels, which happens, it may ‘ be, for want of having sacrificed to Juno Jugalis, ‘ the Inventress of Marriage, and who takes care of ‘ the Nuptials,

Toris quæ præfidet alma maritis,

Idem. Epist. ii.
Phil. Demo-
phoon. ver. 4.

‘ to whom Dido, desiring to marry Aeneas, took ‘ care to make the first sacrifice,

Junoni ante omnes, cui jura jugalia curæ.

Virg. 4. Æneid.
49.

[B] According to the Custom of that time he displays his reading too profusely (5). This ill Custom, which prevailed not only at the Bar, but also in the Pulpit, is by degrees abolished. Mr de la Bruyere expresses this change very well. ‘ It is not an Age ago, says he (6), that a French Book was a certain Number of Latin Pages with a few Lines, or a few Words of French scattered here and there in them. Passages, Instances, Citations, would not suffice barely as such. Ovid and Catullus decided finally concerning Marriages and Wills, and came with the Pandeſts to the Assistance of Widows and Orphans; sacred and prophane did not shun each other; they were got together even into the Pulpit; where St Cyril, Horace, St Cyprian, and Lucretius talked alternately; the Poets were of the Opinion of St Austin and all the Fathers; they would talk Latin a long while together, and even Greek before the Women and Sextons. A Man must have a prodigious deal of Learning to preach so ill. Different times, different Customs: the Text is still Latin, all the Discourse is French and fine French, the Gospel itself is hardly cited. Now a Man needs but little Learning to preach well. The Advocates were not alone in this Practice; the Advocates-General and First Presidents ran into it as well as they. This appears by the Collections of Harangues pronounced at the opening of Sessions, and Arrêts pronounced in the red Robe. Mr Balzac very much disapproved this Custom (7), and makes merry with a First President, who in the middle of his Speech made an Apostrophe to the Attorneys, telling them they might learn their Duty in the Scholiast on Homer, on ten or a dozen Verses which he recited. ‘ Illum (Fori Principem) certe nos ipsi audi- ‘ vimus, in medio Orationis cursu compellantem
‘ his verbis Procuratores, quos vocant & Pragmati-
‘ cos. Docet vos, o Procuratores, officium vestrum
‘ Homerus Iliados x & Enſtatius Scholiastes Homeri
‘ in illos versus, quos memoriter ad decem aut
‘ duodecim recitabat, nullâ numerorum & accen- ‘ tuum habita ratione, ut scires qui loqueretur vere
‘ principem & legibus solutum esse. Vetus hic Fori ‘ Parisiensis morbus est, quo Falli, Pibracii, Brifſon- ‘ nii, docti profecto & egregii viri, miserum in ‘ modum laboraverunt (8). — I myself heard him
‘ (the First President), in the midst of his Discourse, ‘ addressing himself to the Attorneys and Solicitors,
‘ in these Words; Homer will teach you your Duty,
‘ ye Attorneys, in the tenth Iliad, and Enſtatius,
‘ the Scholiast of Homer, on these Verses, which ‘ he repeated by heart to the Number of ten or ‘ twelve, without any regard to Numbers or Accents,
‘ to let you see he was truly free from Latins. This ‘ is an old Distemper of the Law Courts of Paris,
‘ with which your Fayes, your Pibracs, your Brifſons,
‘ tho’ really learned and excellent Men, were misera- ‘ bly

(7) See the 5th and 6th Latin Letters of Bal-zac.

(8) Balzacius
Epistolæ. Selectæ.
pag. 54. Edit.
in Folio.

'bly affected.' I will add to this Passage another wherein he censures the same fault in the famous Lewis Servin. 'Scis enim quo genere dicendi uteretur Ludovicus *' (Servinus), & quam exoticis deliciis gauderet, doctrinæ aliunde apporata, vir alias præci moris retinens, & civis patriæ amantissimus. Apud te sunt variae quas reliquit orationes. Vide ut etiam de Cloaca aut stilicidio verba facturus,

Doctor ab Auroræ populis & littore rubro
Ægyptum viresque Orientis & ultima secum Bactra vehat.

'Raro ibi reperies Prudentum Responsa, Paulos, Labeones, Scævolas. At passim occurrent Rabbi Maimon in Hal Beth Habecchira, cap. 4. & in Hal. Cele Hammikdash, cap. 10, & Rabbi Abraham ben David, & Rabbi Zacuth in Libro Jucasin, & Talmud in Massefa Joma, &c. --- You know Lewis (Servin)'s manner of speaking, and what foreign Kickshaws he delighted in, and Learning imported from abroad; a Man otherwise of uncorrupt Behaviour, and a true Lover of his Country. You have by you several of his Orationes, which he left behind him. See how, when he is to speak about a Sink, or the Eves of a House,

The Doctor fetches Egypt to his Aid,
From Asia brings the Powers of all the East;
Not India 'scapes.

You shall seldom find, there, the Decisions of Lawyers, the Pauli, the Labeones, or the Scævolæ. But, every now and then, you have Rabbi Maimon, &c. Let us observe, by the way, that even when this Mixture of Literature was most in use at the Bar, there were Advocates who seldom cited Classic Authors, either because they saw the Abuse, or they wanted the Art to apply their Learning, or else they were not well versed in the Classics. Their Method was certainly better than the other: for what purpose could this train of Citations serve, but to withdraw the Judge's Attention, and hide the true State of the Cause? An Advocate, such as our Stephen Boucbin, pleaded more for himself than for his Client; he laboured more to shew his own Learning than to prepare the Judges to determine rightly. What could Homer's Verses signify to the Judges of Beaune? Did the People understand Greek in these little Jurisdictions? It is to be feared that the opposite extrem, which we have sometimes since fallen into, will make the Advocates despise Learning as a piece of Furniture entirely useless: but what can be done? It is defined that the Remedy of one Abuse is the Introduction of another.

BOUGI (The Marquis of), Lieutenant-General in the Armies of France in the XVIIth Century. See REVEREND.

BOUHOURS (DOMINIQUE), a famous Jesuit, died at Paris, the Place of his Birth, the Twenty seventh of May 1702, in his Seventy fifth Year. I do not give the Article concerning him, because it is already done in several Pieces which are in every body's hand, viz, in the Memoires de Trevoux (a), in the Nouvelles de la Republique de Lettres (b), in Journal des Scavans (c), and in the Mercurc Historique (d). I shall therefore only refer to them, and observe that among these several Elogies, those in the Journal de Scavans, and in the Mercurc Historique are the most instructive.

(a) In the month of August 1702. pag. 328, French Edit. and month of March 1703. pag. 163, Amst. Edit.

(b) August 1702. pag. 231.

(c) July 24. 1702.

(d) October 1702. pag. 413.

BOULAI (CÆSAR EGASSE du), in Latin Bulæus, Register and Historiographer of the University of Paris, was Professor of Rhetoric many Years in the College of Navarre. He published a Treatise of Rhetoric, intituled Speculum Eloquentiæ, which was valued. His Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanarum, which he published at Paris in the Year 1650, in Folio, is very useful not only to those who understand nothing but French, but also to those who understand Latin. Divers Law Cases of his composing have been published, relating to the Differences which arose concerning the Election of the Officers of the University, or such like matters. Those Pieces shew his Zeal for the Faculty of Arts, and the great Knowledge he had of the Usages and Customs of that University. The Work which chiefly ought to immortalize him, is the History of the University of Paris, which he published in six Volumes in Folio [A]. The Impression of it was stopt for some time (a); but the Commissioners appointed by the King to examine what was already printed, and the Author's Design, reported that nothing could hinder the Impression from being continued. Du Boulai was not of Tours [B], as has been commonly believed. He died the sixteenth of October 1678.

(a) See the Mercurc Galant, Nov. 1678.

[A] The work which ought chiefly to immortalize him is his History of the University of Paris, in six Volumes in folio. See here what Mr Baillet says of it. 'The reasons for censuring that great Work seem to diminish, by degrees, and all of them will perhaps vanish at last, that the Public, notwithstanding that endeavours have been used to the contrary, may have a just value for a work, which is indeed a mixture of good and bad things, but is otherwise very useful to give Information of the Actions and Writings of the learned Men of France, and even of those Foreigners who have appeared in that first University of the Kingdom. And indeed they begin to say now that it is a good Book generally speaking, and that it contains many material Pieces, which it would be difficult to find elsewhere so well collected (1).'

(1) Baillet, Jugem. des Scavans, sur les Critiques Histor. n. 138.

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 170, and not 160, as he is quoted in the Antibaillet, n. 138.

[B] Du Boulai was not of Tours. Mr Baillet, who makes him a Native of that City (2), was censured for it by Mr Menage, whose Words are these: 'Cæsar Egasse du Boulai --- was born in the Village of S. Ellier, in the Lower Maine, which is the last Parish of Maine on the side of Bretagne. What led Mr Baillet into this mistake is, that du Boulai was Dean of the Tribe of Tours in the University of Paris (3). Whereupon Mr Menage tells us that in that University the French Nation is divided into five Tribes, which bear each of them the Name of an Archbishopric. 'These five Tribes are those of Paris, Sans, Reims, Tours, and Bourges. --- The Members of the Nations are of the Tribe that bears the Name of the Archbishopric which is their Native Country, or of the Bishopric where they were born holding of that Archbishopric. And therefore Cæsar Egasse du Boulai, who was of the Diocese of the Bishop of Mans, first Suffragan of the Archbishop of Tours, was of the Tribe of Tours.' Mr Patin is therefore mistaken when he says that du Boulai was of the Province of Anjou. I shall recite the whole Passage, because the Reader will find by it at what time the History of the University of Paris was begun to be printed, and what was then said of it. 'The University of Paris have appointed a learned Man, whose Name is Mr Boulai, of Anjou, who taught Rhetoric for several Years in the College of Navarre, to write the History of their own Body, Studii Parisiensis: It will make several Volumes in Folio; the first will shortly be put to the Press; it gives an Account of the State of Learning at Paris before the University, and then explains, and proves the Foundation of it by the good King Charlemagne in the VIIIth Century, and the Continuation thereof (4).'

(3) Menage, Antibaillet cap. 34.

(4) Patin, 2 Fol.
Letter 218, dated Novemb. 26, 1660. pag. 258.

BOULEN (ANNE), Mistress, and afterwards Wife of Henry VIII, King of England. See BOLEYN.

BOUQUIN (PETER), a Carmelite Fryar, took his Degree of Doctor of Divinity at Bourges the Twenty third of April 1539 (a). He was Prior of the Convent of that City, and might have come to higher dignities in his Order, if he had not rather chosen to leave it in order to go to the Protestants in Germany (b). He went first to Basil in the Year 1541, where he spent the Winter. Afterwards he took a Journey to Wittenberg where Luther and Melancthon received him very kindly. His design was to go to a good Friend of his in Pomerania; but Melancthon made him alter his Design, and engaged him to go to Strasburg, where they wanted a Man to fill up the place which Calvin had left vacant by his Return to Geneva. He read Lectures in the College of Strasburg on the Epistle of St Paul to the Galatians. Some time after he returned to France, where he had a Brother who was Doctor of Divinity, and no enemy to the Protestants. He lodged with him at Bourges, but did not return into the Monastery. Hefusius taxed him falsely with having returned into it: Bouquin, being persuaded by his Brother that there was reason to hope for the Reformation of the Gallican Church, read Public Lectures on the Hebrew Grammar, and afterwards on the Holy Scripture. He did it without a Salary; but after he had waited upon Margaret de Valois [A], when she went by Bourges at the time of the Marriage of her Daughter Joan d'Albret (c), he was gratified with a Pension by order of that Princess (d), who besides procured him the Place of Preacher in the great Church of Bourges with the Archbishop's Consent. Those Employments and Gratifications continued after the Death of that Lady; for Michael de l'Hôpital, Chancellor of another Margaret de Valois (e), who had the same Inclinations as the first, brought her easily to make no alteration in Bouquin's Fortune. But that Protection was at last insufficient; he found himself exposed to so many dangers, that seeing no likelihood to make his Labours serviceable to the Work of the Gospel, he quitted his Employment. His Resignation did not stop the ill Designs of his Enemies: They brought him into trouble, and he was obliged to plead his Cause before the Parliament of Paris, and afterwards before the Archbishop of Bourges, not without hazard of his Life. He had the good Fortune to escape all those dangers, and took care not to be any more exposed to them. He returned to Strasburg [B], where he exercised the Ministry in the French Church for some Months. Otto Henry, Elector Palatine, invited him to Heidelberg in the Year 1557, and made him Professor of Divinity. That Employment exercised Bouquin's Patience very much by reason of the Disputes about Ubiquity, and the real Presence. Endeavours were used to suppress them at the Conference of Maulbrun, at which he was present in the Year 1564; but it had no better effect than most of the Assemblies of that nature, which inflame the Wounds instead of healing it. Being turned out of his Place in the Year 1577, with all the other Professors, who would not adhere to Lutheranism, he was invited to Lausanne, where he taught Divinity till his Death, that is, till the Year 1582 (f). I shall give the List of his Books [C], and observe that Baudouin says

(a) Catherinet, Calvinisme de Berri, pag. 3.

(b) Melchior. Adam. in vit. exter. Theolog. pag. 143.

(c) That is, in the Year 1548.

(d) Note, that she was not only Queen of Navarre, but also Duchess of Berry.

(e) Sister of Henry II. and Duchess of Berry. Bouquin had presented her with his Book, intitled, L'homme parfait. See Melch. Adam in vitis Theolog. exterorum, pag. 145.

(f) Taken from his Life written by Melchior Adam. See vita Theolog. exterorum.

[A] He waited upon Margaret de Valois. I add, that he presented her with a Book of the Necessity and Use of the Holy Scripture, and that he presented another, intitled JESUS CHRIST the Spiritual Spouse, to the Princess Joan d'Albret. He was the Author of those two Pieces (1). Note That no Professor of Divinity had a public Salary at Bourges before him, nor was any given after him. Stipendium ex aerario publico ei numerari iussit, (Regina Navarra) quod nec ante nec post eum Theologorum concessum fuit nemini (2). Here is a passage of John Chameau Lord of Laffai: The Doctors whom I knew in the Noble University of Bourges, are Mr Peter Bouquin, Professor of the Hebrew Tongue, &c (3).

(1) Melchior. Adam in vitis Theolog. exter. pag. 145.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Chameau, Histoire de Berri printed in the Year 1566. pag. 243. See Colomies Gall. Orient. pag. 32.

[B] He returned to Strasburg. Melchior Adam forgot a circumstance which informs us of the Year of that Journey, which is, that Bouquin left Bourges with the Civilian Francis Baudouin, and went with him into Germany. Baudouin says to himself, and that it was in the Year 1555. 'Cum jam septem annis in ea Schola (Bituricensi) Balduinus magna cum laude fecisset officium suum tandem, qui fuit annus M.D.LV. dare se cepit quibusdam eum in Germaniam ad excitanda prioris jurisprudentiae studia vocantibus. --- Comitem & (ut loqueris) asseclam habuit Boquinum nunc vestrum Doctorem Theologiae. Eum non recusamus testem totius protectionis (4). --- When now Baudouin had done his Duty with great applause in that School [Bourges] for seven Years, at last, in the Year M.D.LV. he began to listen to some who invited him into Germany, to reform the Study of the Civil-Law --- He had for his Companion Bouquin, now your Doctor of Divinity. I appeal to him as a witness of the whole Journey.

[C] Here is the List of his Books. I give it such as I find it in Melchior Adam. (5). 'De senio ad calumnias Doctoris cujusdam Avili in Evangelii Professores (6). Examen libri quem D. Tilemannus Hefusius inscripsit de praesentia corporis Christi in cena Domini (7). Theses de cena Domini. Exegesis divinae communicationis. Adversio

(4) Balduinus in Resp. ad Cal. vin. & Bezaam. fol. 85.

(5) Vita Theolog. exterorum, pag. 147.

(6) Printed in the Year 1558, in 4to.

(7) Printed at Basil for Oporinus 1561.

he assisted him in the Misery to which the Reformed had reduced him [D]. Consult the Gallia Orinetalis (g).

(g) Colomesius, Gall. Oriental. pag. 32, 33.

(8) Printed at Heidelberg 1579, in 8vo.

(9) Printed in the Year 1576.

(10) Printed at Heidelberg 1563, in 8vo.

(11) Printed in 1562.

Adversus veteris ac veri Christianismi adversus novum & fictum Jesuitismum (8). Brevis notatio præcipuarum causarum diuturnitatis controversiæ de cœna Domini (9). Canones quibus defenditur Sidiosa in verbis Christi hoc est corpus meum, & controversiæ de cœna Domini atque similibus dijudicandæ certissima ratio demonstratur, item adversus ritus frangendi & in manus fumendi panis Eucharistici (10). The Dates, which I have placed in the Margin, are taken either out of the Epitomy of Gesner's Bibliotheca, or out of the Sacramentary History of Hopinian. I have found a Book in that History which Melchior Adam does not speak of, viz. Petri Boquini iusta defensio adversus injustam vim Heshulii & Villagagnonis de judicio Philippi Melancthonis ad Electorem Palatinum missio de cœna Domini (11).

[D] Baudouin says that he assisted him in the misery to which the reformed had reduced him. He expresses this in a most odious manner: 'Ipse cum volet & audebit Bouquinus idoneus testis erit: quem vos quia vos fugiens Gallus Germanis initio se dabat tam crudeliter persecuti estis, ut nisi subvenisset liberalis misericordia Balduini qui miserum aleret, vestra clementia hominem fame & frigore enectum jugulasset. Atque is tamen dicebatur paulo post mortuo Principe Othone Henrico abs vobis corruptus objecta spe offiæ novæ, & ubi vobis turpiter servire cepit repente, vestro judicio ex foetido hircio (sicuti paulo ante loquebamini, ad hominis nomen alludentes) factus catellus Melitæus qui vobis esset in deliciis (12). — Bouquin himself when he is willing and dares do it, will be a proper witness: whom you persecuted because he, being a Frenchman, had at first shunned you and joined the Germans, that if the liberal Compassion of Baudouin, who supported the wretch, had not prevented, your Clemency would have starved the Man to Death. And yet, soon after Prince Otho Henry was dead, he being corrupted by you with hopes of a new Morfel, and basely entering on a sudden into your Service, was in your Judgment, from a stinking Goat (as you used to speak but just before, alluding to the Man's name) become your most favourite Lap-Dog.' Thus he reproaches Calvin and Beza, for having first persecuted that Man, and afterwards caressed him, according as they saw him a Friend or an Enemy to the Lutherans.

(12) Respons. ad Calvin. & Beza pro Franc. Balduino fol. 71.

BOURIGNON (ANTOINETTE), was one of those devout Maids, who think themselves directed by particular Inspirations; for which reason she was called a Fanatic. She published a great many Books full of very singular Doctrines, and there was something extraordinary in her Mind from her Infancy to her old Age. She was born at Lisse the thirteenth of January 1616, so deformed that it was debated for some Days in the Family whether she should not be stifled as a Monster (a). Her deformity lessened, and they resolved to let her live. At four Years of Age, she knew already that Christians did not live according to their Principles. She desired to be carried into the Country of the Christians (b); for she did not believe that she was amongst them, since she observed that People did not live agreeably to the Law of JESUS CHRIST. One of the greatest Vexations she had in her Family was that they had a Mind to marry her; That was not what she desired; a Nunnery seemed to her preferable to a Husband. She perceived her Mother was too unhappy in a married State [A], not to fear the same Inconveniency (c): besides she was endowed with a surprizing Chastity [B], and she found an extraordinary Delight in weaning herself from the Objects of the Senses to unite herself to her Creator in a most intimate manner. Her Father nevertheless promised

(a) Vie continuée de Mademoiselle Bourignon, pag. 11.

(b) Ib. pag. 16, 17.

(c) Id. pag. 20, & vie extérieure pag. 148.

[A] She refused to marry, seeing that her Mother was too unhappy in a married State. If I did not bring a Proof for what I advance here, it might perhaps be thought that I have not well understood the Author whom I quote; for in short this is not to reject Marriage through a motive worthy of Mrs Bourignon, to shun it because there is some trouble in it. It might therefore be imagined, that he who published the Life of that Woman, has not said what I relate. Let us prevent that rash Judgment by a good quotation. 'That Child observing that her Father was harsh to her Mother, and that sometimes he fell into a Passion with her, after having endeavoured to soften him with her little fond Embraces, for which her Father had some regard, she would step aside, where considering what a miserable thing it was to be married to a peevish Husband, she addressed herself to God, saying, My GOD, my GOD! Grant that I may never marry: A Prayer very different from that which St Augustin lamented to have made before his Conversion; Lord, Give me Continency and Chastity; but do not give it me so soon: Fearing to be too soon cured of that damnable and transient Charm: Wherein it is to be believed he has more Accomplices and Brethren, than Mrs Bourignon, yet a Child, has Imitators in her Prayer (1). This Author's reflexion is very good. The Gift of Continency is not a thing that many Persons care for (I speak of those who are not engaged to it by a Vow). St Augustin asked it, and is afraid of being taken at his Word; wherefore he desires God not to make too much haste.

(1) Vie continuée de Mademoiselle Bourignon, pag. 20.

[B] She was endowed with a surprizing Chastity. See here what is said of it in her Life. 'God gave her the Gift of Chastity and Continency from her Childhood in so perfect a manner, that she has often said, she never had in her life-time, not even by Temptation or Surprize, the least Thought which could be unworthy of the Chastity and Purity of the Virgin State. St Teresa says of herself, that God had formerly favoured her with the same Grace. But Mrs Bourignon possessed it in such an abundant manner, that it redounded, if one may say so, on those that were with her (2). Her Presence and Conversation diffused such an odour of Continency, as made those who conversed with her forget the Pleasures of the Flesh; and I leave it to the Experience of those, who read her Books with application, to judge whether they do not feel some Impressions of it, and some Inclinations to that Virtue which is so pleasing to God (3). Had I not reason to say that the Chastity of that Maid was surprizing? In School Terms it might be called not only immanent, but also transitive, since it's Effects were diffused outwardly, and did not terminate in her Person. I think your mystical People rather use the Word penetrative, than the Word transitive; for I remember a Carthusian says, that the Holy Virgin had a PENETRATIVE VIRGINITY, whereby those who looked upon her, though she was so beautiful, had none but chaste Thoughts. He adds that St Joseph had the Gift which they call INFRIGIDATION, which kept his Body and Soul free from all sense of Impurity (4). It seems to me that the Talent, which God had granted

(2) We shall see in the following Remark that this did not prove true at all times, and therefore it is said that the Gift of Continency is not a thing to be depended upon for the present, and for the time to come.

(3) Vie continuée pag. 21.

(4) Peter Garnet in his Elocutiones sacre in 5 libros de imaginibus antiquorum Eremitarum, pag. 645, apud Thomasmum in Schediasmata historica. The Book of that Carthusian, was printed at Cologne in 1622.

misf her in Marriage to a Frenchman: The time was already appointed for the Wedding, and to avoid the performance of it she was forced to run away on Easter-day, 1636 (d). It was not to throw herself into a Cloister; she had learned that the Spirit of the Gospel did not reign in Convents (e): But it was to retire into some Desert. She dressed herself, therefore, like a Hermit, and fled as fast as she could; but being suspected in a Village of Hainault to be a Woman, she was stopped (f). She never run so much hazard, as to her Virginity, as at that time: She fell into the Hands of a Soldier, who did not let go his hold but by a kind of a Miracle. The Curate of the Place (g) delivered her from that Danger, and observing the Spirit of God in her, he mentioned her to the Archbishop of Cambray, who came to examine her, and advised her against a Hermit's Life, and obliged her to return to her Father. She was soon after persecuted again with Proposals of Marriage, which obliged her to run away a second time. She went to the same Archbishop, and obtained leave of him to form a small Community in the Country with some other young Women of her Humour (b): He retracted it a little while after, which obliged Antoinette to go into the Country of Liege, from whence she returned to Flanders, where she spent many Years in retirement, and in great simplicity of Life, but not without inspiring a Man with a great deal of Love, who pretended to Devotion in order to get Access to her. He proposed Marriage to her, and not finding her pliable, he tried to supply by the Strength of his Arms what was wanting to the Efficacy of his Discourse [C]. But she implored the protection of the Magistrates; inasmuch that this false Devotee was obliged to address himself to another devout young Woman, whom he found more tractable [D]. Our Antoinette, who had resolved to renounce her Patrimony for ever, changed her mind

(d) Vie extérieure, pag. 150.

(e) Ibid. p. 143.

(f) Ibid. pag. 151, & seq.

(g) It was the Village of Blacon.

(b) Vie extérieure, pag. 100.

to Mrs Bourignon, ought to be called by that Name. That Word would admirably represent the Effect which she produced on her Neighbours: The Gift of Infrigidation should be that which makes those cold who come near us. But since we must determine the force of Terms, I will not insist upon it. I only say that the Clause, notwithstanding that she was so very handsome, which the Carthusian made use of, is not an expletive or a needless Parenthesis: It was essential to his Subject; the wonder lies in that; for Nature without Grace might very well confer a penetrative Virginity; there needs only a certain degree of ugliness for that. Wherefore I wish the Author of Mrs Bourignon's Life had inserted in the above quoted place, by way of Parenthesis, that the Gift of Continency, which she diffused outwardly, did not proceed from any Deformity, or any thing disagreeable, that was observed in her Person. I conclude with a Reflexion, which, if put to the Vote, would not be disallowed. I believe there are not many young Nuns that pray for a penetrative Virginity. The most virtuous are contented with the Gift of Continency, and would be very unwilling to mortify all the desires of the Men that look upon them (5). They would think themselves too much disgraced by Nature, did they believe that they need only shew themselves to make Mens Eyes and Hearts chaste; that Thought would not please them. I believe, therefore, that the most sublime and rarest degree of Chastity, in a Woman, is to wish not only to be chaste, but also to make all those chaste that are round about her, and with whom she converses. Generally speaking Women do not desire that this Gift should have a great Sphere of Activity; it is enough if it possess the whole space of one Person.

(5) I omit some very rare instances of Women, who disgraced their Faces, least they should occasion a Temptation.

[C] A Man ----- not finding her pliable in relation to Marriage, tried to supply, by the Strength of his Arms, what was wanting to the Efficacy of his Discourse.] That Man's Name was John de St Saulieu: He was the Son of a Peasant, and if all may be believed that is said of him in the Life of our Antoinette, he was a great Rogue. He insinuated himself into that young Woman's Favour by a devout Countenance and Discourses of the most sublime Spirituality. "The first time that he met with her ----- he spoke like a Prophet, but like a moderate and reserved Prophet, who having made an end of his Prophecy, retires quietly without explaining any thing, or insisting to make himself believed (6). ----- The second time he spoke to her he pretended to be a Man illuminated, charitable, and familiar with God (7). After he had pretty well insinuated himself, he declared his Passion; but finding that she took it ill, he seemed to be sorry for it: they fell out but were reconciled again, and at last he attempted by Force

(6) Vie intérieure, pag. 233.

(7) Ibid. p. 234.

See here what the Lady says of him: "Being often in my House, he was so importunate and insistent with me, that I was obliged to give my Maids notice to watch him, and to shut the Door of my House against him: For he came several times with a Knife in his Hand, which he presented to my Throat, if I would not yield to his wicked desires, inasmuch that I was at last obliged to have recourse to the Arm of Justice, because he threatened to break the Doors and Windows of my House, and to kill me, though he should be hanged for it in the Market-Place of Lille. The Provost gave me two Men to secure me in my House, whilst an Information was making of the Insolencies which the said St Saulieu had committed against me (8)."

(8) Vie extérieure, pag. 196.

The Conclusion was that the matter was made up between them; he promised never to go to any place where she should be, and retracted his Slanders (9); he protested that he knew her to be a good and virtuous Woman. That pious Maid had not always had a good Fame, nor always the Talent of inspiring Chastity. I say nothing of the design of the Officer of Horse who seized her in a Village, when she was disguised like a Hermit at about twenty Years of Age (10); Soldiers, especially when they are lodged in a Village, are very dangerous upon such an Occasion, and not very penetrable by a penetrative Virginity: Waving therefore this Adventure, I shall speak of the Nephew of the Curate of St Andrews near Lille. Mrs Bourignon had shut herself up in a Solitude in the Neighbourhood of that Parish. The Curate's Nephew fell in Love with her: He was so smitten with her that he was continually walking about the House, and discovering his Passion by Words and Pursuits (11). The solitary Lady threatened to leave her Post, if she were not delivered from that importunate Person. The Uncle turned him out of his House. Then the young Man changed his Love into Rage, and sometimes discharged his Gun through the Chamber of that Recluse; and seeing that he gained nothing by it, he gave out that he was going to marry her. The thing was noised all over the Town; the devout Women were offended at it, and threatened to affront Mrs Bourignon, if they met with her in the Streets. The Preachers were obliged to publish that there was nothing in the report of that Marriage. I do not think she was sorry to let the Public know that she had appeared so lovely to some Men, that they passionately desired to marry her. Old Maids are pleased with telling such Stories.

(9) You must know that when he saw she rejected his proposal of a Marriage, he gave out every where, that she had promised to marry him, and that he had lain with her. The whole Town talked of it; many believed it, and were offended at it. Traité de la parole de Dieu, pag. 78.

(10) Vie extérieure, pag. 155, & seq.

(11) Traité de la parole de Dieu, pag. 64, 65.

[D] And afterwards addressed himself to another devout Woman, whom he found more tractable.] St Saulieu, having made an Agreement with Antoinette, went to Ghent. He had his Will there of a devout Woman 'till she was with Child, and then

E c

(7) Vie continuée, pag. 128.

(8) It was the Hospital of Notre Dame des sept douleurs at Lille. Vie extérieure, pag. 203.

(1) Ibid. p. 200.

(m) Traité de la parole de Dieu, pag. 79.

(n) Vie extérieure, pag. 216.

(o) Vie continuée, pag. 220.

(p) Ibid. p. 226.

mind and took possession of it again (i) [E]. She became Governess of an Hospital in the Year 1653 (k), and shut herself up there in the Cloister in the Year 1658 (l), having taken the Order and Habit of St Augustin (m). By a very strange Fatality, Sorcery proved so general in that Hospital, that all the Girls, who were kept there, had contracted with the Devil (n). All Tongues took from thence occasion to give out that the Governess of the House was a Sorceress (o): The Magistrates of Lille fell upon Mrs Bourignon; they sent Sergeants into her Cloister; they had her before them, and examined her. She answered them pertinently; but believing that her Adversaries had as much Credit as Passion, she did not think it proper to remain exposed to their Prosecutions, and therefore she fled to Ghent. This happened in 1662. She was no sooner at Ghent, but GOD discovered some great Secrets to her (p). She got a Friend at Mechlen who proved always faithful to her. His Name was Mr de Cort; it was, if one may say so, her first spiritual Child-birth; but it had this singularity, that it gave her the same pains as a Child-birth in a proper Sense [F]. That Man being, twice successively, divinely warned, and threatened, (12) Vie extérieure, pag. 197.

(13) Ibid. p. 194.

(14) Et qui redire, cum perit, nescit pudor. Seneca in Agamemnone, Act. 2.

(15) Vie extérieure, pag. 192.

(16) I found myself obliged to renounce my temporal Estate, rather than to leave it to those, whom it did not belong to, (this is her first reason) and rather than it should serve for doing evil: (this is the 2d.) Besides, God discovered to me that I should want it for his Glory, (this is the 3d.) Vie extérieure, pag. 141.

then be returned to Lille. Mrs Bourignon affirms it (12), and here are other Circumstances of it: 'Seeing (says she (13), that he could not marry me by Love or Force, he accosted one of my devout Maids, who seemed also a Mirror of Perfection, and got her with child, after which he would not marry her, till after many Intreaties and Endeavours of the said Maid, who at last mollified his Heart by her great Humility, and he married her a little before she was delivered of a Child. He lived very unchastly as well as she.' I do not wonder at it; for, if I may be allowed a proverbial Expression, the most difficult step is that of the Door: as soon as a devout Woman has once got over that first step by some Gallantry that has made a Noise, her Honour is lost: Now Modesty once turned out of Doors seldom returns again (14). What the Scripture says in general, that the Devil transforms himself into an Angel of Light, is particularly very true of the Devil called Asmodeus, who is that of Lewdness. The Bigots have invented a thousand Arts to make a great many devout Women fall into the Snare; who had a sincere desire to behave themselves chastly. He, who attacked Mrs Bourignon, made her believe, that he was quite dead to Nature; that he had been some Years a Soldier; and was returned from the War as unpotted as a Child, though several Women had inticed him to lewdness, and had even come to bed to him with an ill Design: That he had remained firm, because he conversed daily in his Spirit with GOD (15). He told her also, 'That he had lost the Taste of Meats and Drinks by his great Abstinencies and Mortifications; and that he could not discern delightful Meats from coarse ones, nor Wine from Beer or Water: That all those things seemed to him to have the same taste, that he loved the one as well as the other, and could not perceive any difference.' By this we may see that a Woman's Honour lies in the Centre of a Circle, the Circumference of which is blocked up by a thousand forts of Enemies. It is a Mark which Men try to hit all manner of ways, and even by the Appearances of the most mystical and illuminated Theology. Witness Molinus, and the Quietists of Burgundy.

[E] She had resolved to renounce her Patrimony: she changed her Mind, and took Possession of it again.] Three reasons of Devotion persuaded her to it (16); for if she had not retaken it, she would have left it to those, it did not belong to, who would have made an ill use of it: therefore to spare the Crime of possessing the Estate of others, and of employing it to do ill, she thought it her Duty to take it from them, and devote it by GOD's Order to good Uses. It did not lessen under her Direction; on the contrary it increased: two reasons contributed to this increase; for her Expences were small, and she gave no Alms: So that she might convert the superfluous part of her Income into Stock, which she did not fail to do. Not that she was covetous; she possessed her Estate without any Affection, and the Poverty of Spirit did not forsake her in the midst of her Riches. What was it then? She would have enough to make greater Expences for the Glory of GOD, when there should be occasion for it. The Reason why she spent so little in Alms, was, because she found no body, that was in a real Poverty, and she was afraid People would make an ill use of what she should give away. She herself informs us of those Articles of her Morals. 'The temporal Estate I have, says she (17), fell to me by Succession, or increased by what I could not spend or give, because I could not find enough of People truly poor, or honest Persons in necessity: Therefore I have been sometimes obliged to increase my Stock out of the superfluous part of my Income; because Sobriety requires no great Expences; and the truly poor are so scarce that they must be sought for in another World: For the Assurances which are given in this wretched Age serve often to commit more Sins. Wherefore he who has a greater yearly Income than is necessary, is obliged to increase his Stock in hopes of finding an occasion to employ it to the greater Glory of GOD.' They, who accuse her of Fanaticism, would make a wrong choice of their Proofs, if they should alledge these. There is nothing here that favours of a Visionary or of a Fanatic; Every thing in it shews a subtle Wit, and a nice way of arguing. See below the Remark [M].

[F] Her first spiritual Birth --- gave her the same Pains as a Child-birth in a proper Sense.] I shall set down the whole Passage, though it be somewhat long; whereby it will appear, that the Disciples of our Antoinette were not always upon the high strain, and that they descended sometimes from the Sublimity of their Devotion to the innocent Jest of the Men of the World. 'When GOD gave him to Mrs Bourignon, it was after a very particular manner, and as the first of her spiritual Children, for whom she felt great bodily Pains, and like the pressing Pains of Child-birth: For it is a certain thing, and known by the Experience of all those who have conversed with her, (let wicked and impious Scoffers say of it what they please) that whenever any persons received so much Light and Strength, by her Words or Writings, as to resolve to forsake all, to give themselves to GOD; she felt, wherever she was, some Pains and Throws like those of a Woman in Labour, as it is said of the Woman whom St John saw in the twelfth of the Revelations (18). She felt them more or less, as the Truths, which she had delivered, had more or less strongly operated in Mens Souls; which occasioned an innocent Jest of the Archdeacon on Mr de Cort: For as both of them were discoursing with Mrs Bourignon of the Christian Life, and of their good and new Resolution, and Mr de Cort having observed that she had felt more pains for him than for the other, when they resolved to be born again according to GOD; the Archdeacon, considering that Mr de Cort was fat and corpulent, whereas himself was but a little Man, and seeing that he valued himself for having cost to his spiritual Mother dearer than he, told him smiling; it is no wonder that our Mother suffered more for you than for me, for you are a very large Child, whereas I am but a little one. Which Repartee made them all laugh (19).'

(17) Ibid. p. 140.

(18) It might have been added that St Paul, speaking of himself in relation to those whom he had converted, makes use of a Word, which signifies to be in labour. Τελμα μὲν ὡς παῖδες ὧν ἐμὸν μέλος κοποῦμαι ὡς κοποῦμαι ὡς κοποῦμαι Galat. cap. iv. ver. 19.

(19) Vie continuée, pag. 235.

[G] One

threatened, if he did not obey that Inspiration (q), had lent almost all his Estate to some Relations, who were endeavouring to drain an Island in the Country of Holstein, which the Sea had overflowed (r), and thereby he had acquired the Tenth, and the Direction and part of that Island [G]. He sold a Seat there to Mrs Bourignon, who was preparing to retire thither in the Year 1668 (s), after she had published at Amsterdam her Book Of the Light of the World [H]. She had written many Treatises, and Letters, in Brabant (t), and even on the Disputes of the Janfenists and Molinists, since her Persecution at Lisle. Her stay at Amsterdam, with her dear Profelyte Mr de Cort, was longer than she thought: She was visited there by all sorts of Persons, without excepting the imaginary Propbets and Propbeteesses (u). This made her hope that the Reformation which she preached might have some effect: Nevertheless few persons took a firm Resolution to conform to it. Labadie and his Disciples were desirous to have settled with her in Noordstrandt [I]: Mr de Cort consented to it; for they offered great sums of Money to buy the whole Island; but the Lady rejected their Proposals. She had Conferences with some Cartesians, and formed a terrible Idea of their Principles [K]. She composed more Books at Amsterdam, than she got Followers. Her Conversations with God were very frequent there: She learnt a great many particular things by Revelation; and it was then that she had the Visions which I spoke of in the Remarks of the Article ADAM (x). Mr de Cort died the twelfth of November 1669, and made her his Heiress, which exposed her for some time to more Persecutions than her Doctrine [L]. Being, moreover, sick and ill attended, she endured many Miseries.

[G] One of her Disciples had ----- acquired ----- part of the Island of Noordstrandt. He was one of the Fathers of the Oratory, and their Superior at Mechlen, and moreover the Director of a House of poor Children (20). The Expenses which he had been at to recover Noordstrandt tended to prepare a Retreat there for the persecuted Friends of God. He thought that he had been divinely informed, that such was the design of God (21); and presupposing that the Janfenists were those persecuted Friends of God, he drew many of them out of France, Flanders, and Holland, into that Island, part of which he sold to them. ----- He resigned all the rest that he had there, and all his rights and pretensions into the Hands of the Oratory of Mechlen upon certain Conditions, which they did not honestly perform to him, for which he had afterwards redress. All this was attended with great Law-suits; the Sieur de Cort was imprisoned at Amsterdam (22), in the Month of March 1669, at the Prosecution of the famous Janfenist, Mr de Saintamsour, who went by the Name of Lewis Gorin. Before he was put into Prison he was severely censured by a Bishop (23), who called him a Heretic, and a Man, who coveted the Riches of this World to the prejudice of those whom he had deceived by selling Lands in Noordstrandt, a Man given to drinking and suspected of having lost his Faith and Chastity, and who suffered himself to be seduced by a Maid of Lisle, with whom he lived to the great scandal of every body (24). He remained six Months in Prison, and got out only by a fortuitous Accident. He went into his Island, where he was poisoned, and died the twelfth of November 1669. I am but a transcriber, and do not warrant the Facts that I borrow from the Books which I quote.

[H] Whether she designed to retire as soon as she had published ----- at Amsterdam, her Light of the World. The first Work which she published is a Letter to the Dean of Lisle concerning the State of the World, and the Judgments of God. It was printed at Amsterdam in the beginning of the Year 1668, and inserted in the second Part of the Light brought forth in Darkness; it is the fifth Letter in that Book (5).

[I] Labadie and his Disciples were desirous to have settled with her in Noordstrandt. Antoinette would not join with them: and therefore understanding that Mr de Cort had a mind to carry them into Noordstrandt, she said to him (26), you may then go thither without me; Because I perceive and know that we can never agree together. Their Opinions and the Spirit that governs them are altogether contrary to my Light, and the Spirit that governs me. She had already had some inward Sentiments about him from God, and a divine Vision, wherein he made her see, in the Spirit, a little Man very busy, with a great Pole in his Hand, to hinder the fall of a great Building, or of a Church that was falling; and by some Conferences, which she had with him, wherein she endeavoured, but in vain, to dissuade him from going to brave the Synod of Narden, and to convince them of their wicked Doctrine of Predetermination. She was fully persuaded that he had no other Light than what the Learned of these times have, Reading, Study, some barren Speculations, and some Acts of his own Mind; and for a Motive of his Conduct, only some insatiation, and the Motions of corrupt Passions; without being any ways enlightened by God himself, or directed by the calm Motions of his divine Inspirations. This Passage will not be useless to those who have a mind to know by what Spirit our Antoinette was led. It was a Spirit that would not suffer any Companion or Colleague: Wherefore we have seen all Sects against that Maid, and that Maid against all Sects. The very Quakers have also wrote against her (27).

[K] She had Conferences with some Cartesians, and formed a terrible Idea of their Principles. Amongst others with Mr Heydanus and Mr Burman. They were but little satisfied with her, nor she with them (28). The Method of the Cartesians did not suit her. She would not have the Light of Reason to be consulted, whereas their Principle is to examine all things by that Touchstone. She affirmed, 'That God had shewn and even expressly declared to her, that this Error of Cartesianism was the worst, and the most cursed, of all the Heresies that ever were in the World, and a formal Atheism, or a Rejection of God, in whose place corrupt Reason was set up (29).' Which agrees with what she said to the Philosophers: 'That their Malady proceeded from her pretending to comprehend all things by the Activity of human Reason, without giving way to the Illumination of divine Faith, which requires a Cessation of our Reason, our Minds, and weak Understanding, that God may diffuse or revive that divine Light in them: Without which God is not only not well known, but also he and his true Knowledge are driven out of the Soul by that Activity of our corrupt Reason. Which is a true kind of Atheism and rejecting of God (30).' This Passage is proper to shew the Principles of the Bourignonists. They agree pretty well with those of the Quakers (31).

[L] The Inheritance of Mr de Cort exposed her to more Persecutions than her Doctrine. Many Law-Suits were commenced against her to hinder her from enjoying the Succession of her Disciple: and if some were animated with Zeal against her Errors, there were some whose Zeal for her Estate was no less forward. This latter Zeal heightened the first; for some of Mrs Bourignon's Persecutors cried out

(2) Ibid. p. 237.

(r) The Isle of Northstrand.

(s) Ibid. p. 280.

(t) Ibid. p. 265. & seq.

(u) Ibid. p. 284.

(x) In Remark [G]. See Vic continuee, chap. 21.

(27) Benjamin Furley, an Englishman, a Merchant at Rotterdam, a moderate Quaker within these few Years, and a Man of Genius and Learning, wrote strongly against her, and made it his business to shew that she contradicted herself.

(28) Vic continuee, pag. 295.

(29) Ibid. p. 306.

(30) Ibid. p. 296.

(31) See the Articles BRACHMANS, REMARK [K], and DIOSCORIDES, Rem. [A].

Miseries. She left Holland in the Year 1671, to go to Noordstrand. She stopped at several places in Holftein, and was obliged to dismiss some Disciples, who were come to lift themselves under her Banner: perceiving that every body minded his own conveniences and ease, she conceived that That was not the way to make a flock of new Christians (y). She provided herself with a Printing-House (z); for her Pen went as fast as the Tongues of others, I mean like a Torrent. She had her Books printed in French, Dutch, and German. She found herself very much defamed by some Books which were published against her Tenets and Morals, and she vindicated herself by a Work which she intituled The Testimony of Truth, wherein she mightily inveighed against the Clergy. This was not the way to find Peace: Two Lutheran Ministers founded the Alarm against her, and wrote some Books, wherein they said, that some Persons had been burnt and beheaded, whose Opinions were more tolerable than those of Mrs Bourignon (aa). The Labadists wrote against her (bb). She was forbid to make use of her Press. She retired to Flensburg in the Month of December, 1673 (cc). Her Enemies came to know it, and stirred the People so violently against her, calling her a Witch and Circe, that it was very fortunate for her, that she found means to retire privately. Being persecuted from Town to Town, she was at last obliged to leave Holftein; she retired to Hamburg in the Year 1676 (dd). She was safe there only so long as they knew nothing of her Arrival; for as soon as they had notice of it, they endeavoured to secure her; God knows how they would have used her, if she had been taken. She hid herself for some Days, and went afterwards to East-Friesland (ee), where the Baron of Lutburg granted her his Protection. She had the Direction of an Hospital there, and consecrated her Cares and Industry, but not her Purse, to the good of that House [M]. She found Persecutors there also; so that she went into Holland in the Year 1680 (ff). She died at Franeke in the Province of Friesland (gg), the thirtieth of October the same Year (bb). The rubs she met with in Germany did not hinder her from writing many Books. It would be a very difficult matter to give an account of her System. No Coherency must be expected from a Person who ascribes every thing to immediate Inspirations. It cannot be denied that it is a strange Error to pretend, as it is said she did, that the true Church was extinguished, and that the Liturgical Exercises of Religion ought to be laid aside. This last Tenet lies extremely open to Persecution [N]. It is to be remembered that the Journalists have mentioned the Works of Antoinette Bourignon out against her Doctrine, that they might exclude her from Mr de Cort's Succession. This may be seen at large in her History (32).

[M] She employed ----- her Care and Industry but not her Purse. I have already spoke (33) of the Reasons whereon her Sparring was grounded.

What I am going to say shall be a Supplement to it. When she accepted the care of that Hospital, she declared that she consented to contribute her Industry as well for the building, as for the Distribution of the Money and Inspection of the Poor: But without engaging any part of her Estate (34).

She alledged two reasons for it; one was that she had already consecrated her Estate to GOD, for those who sincerely endeavour to become true Christians: The other was, that Mankind and all humane things are inconstant, so that it might happen that those, in whose favour she might part from her Estate, might make themselves afterwards unworthy of it. This was an admirable Reason, never to part with any thing, and to put off all manner of Gifts till she should make her Will. The Lady found by Experience that she was not rashly dissent of the inconstancy of Men; she was so far from finding any body in East-Friesland that deserved to have her Estate, that she could not so much as find any, upon whom she might bestow part of her Revenue, meeting with none but Poor, who had nothing left at Heart than to think of a Christian Life, who made use of what was given them to cheat, guzzle, and live in Idleness. Nevertheless, she and one of her Friends distributed to them for some Months certain Revenues of that place, which were annexed to that Hospital by the Founder: But when she was asked whether she would not contribute something of her own, she answered in writing, that because those Poor lived like Beasts who had no Souls to save, and abused the Gifts of GOD instead of giving him thanks for them, she and her Friends would rather choose to throw their Estates, which were consecrated to GOD, into the Sea, than to leave any part of them there. Which she and her Friends have also carefully avoided in all their Transactions, so far as to reserve to themselves the Restitution of the Money they should get to the day wherein they would retire from that place (35). Other Countries were not better provided with Persons that deserved her Charity. 'Nullos adhuc inveni (vere pauperes) & sic coacta fui mea bona ad hunc usque diem servare (36). ----- I have found none that are truly poor, and so have been forced to keep my Estate to this time. Vellem ut occasionem haberem ea (bona mea) ad gloriam Dei impendendi, tunc ne uno quidem die retinerem: sed nullam hucusque inveni: multi sunt qui ea acciperent, sed non impenderent ad gloriam Dei ut ego facere destino.

----- I wish I had an Opportunity of laying it out to the Glory of GOD, and then I would not keep it so much as one day; but I have found none hitherto; there are many who would receive it, but would not bestow it to the Glory of God as I intend to do. So that this Head of Expende did not cost her much. It seems to me that the Children of this Age are not much more prudent in their Generation, than those Children of Light.

We shall see, in the Remark [P], that her Humour was not to spare those who stole any thing from her. She took it very ill that her Friends had not indicted those Thieves.

[N] She was for abolishing the Liturgical Exercises of Religion. ----- a Tenet which lies extremely open to Persecution. Two very powerful Interests engage the Directors of Churches to oppose that Tenet: the one is the Interest of the whole Body; the other a personal Interest. Take from the Church her public Assemblies, her Rites, Liturgy, and Discipline, and you take the way to ruin her before the third Generation. So that it is a Maxim destructive of the Church. It is moreover personally prejudicial to the Directors; for the more that Tenet is followed, the fewer People will be found in Churches; and so the Pains that are taken all the Week to prepare a Sermon become almost fruitless, whether the Preacher designs only the Conversion of the Hearers, or only to get Praise, or both these things together.

[O] The

(y) Ibid. p. 380.

(z) Ibid. p. 384.

(aa) Ibid. pag. 388.

(bb) Ibid. p. 391.

(cc) Ibid. p. 394.

(dd) Ibid. p. 446.

(ee) In June, 1677.

(ff) Ibid. pag. 580.

(gg) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Avril 1685, Art. 9.

(bb) Vie contin. pag. 585.

(32) Vie continuee, chap. xix, & seq. pag. 338, & seq.

(33) In Remark [E].

(34) Ibid. p. 504.

(35) Ibid. p. 505.

(36) Lumiere en ten. &c. Part IV. pag. 215, and Seckendorf. Apolog. Relat. pag. 78.

* Ibid. pag. 61, apud eund. Seckendorf. ibid. pag. 79.

rignon [O]. She had this in common with most Devotees, that she was of a cholerick and morose Humour [P]. Notwithstanding her peevishness, and all the Fatigues and Crosses of her Life, one would not have thought her to be much above forty Years of Age, when she was above sixty (ii). She had never made use of Spectacles (kk). The most remarkable Periods of her Life, as her Birth, her coming to be an Author, and her Death, were signified by Comets (ll). The Author of her Life was not aware, that by saying this he gave occasion to think, according to the common Hypothesis, that this Maid was as a scourge of Providence, and not a holy Prophetess. The Vanity and the Danger she found in having her Picture drawn (mm), hindered her from suffering it to be done (nn). She had a very singular Opinion concerning Antichrist [Q], which seemed to be taken from the Hypothesis of many Doctors concerning the Incubus's [R]. See John Mollerus, a Lutheran Author, in his Introduction to the History of the Cerberus Cimbricus, where he relates several things concerning Antoinette's Abode in Holstein, and concerning the Writers who attacked her (oo).

(ii) Ibid. p. 586.

(kk) Ibid.

(ll) Ibid. p. 590.

(mm) It concerned her extremely that her Face should not be known, by reason of her Persecutors, Ibid. pag. 586.

(nn) Ibid.

(oo) Mollerus, Parte II, pag. 151, & seq.

If

[O] The Journalists have mentioned the Works of Antoinette Bourignon. See in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres a Memorial of Mr Poiret on that Maid's Life and Doctrine (37). But in the Journal of Leipsic (38) there is an Extract of her Works which has occasioned a Dispute. An anonymous Author complained very sharply of that Extract, and accused the Journalist of a great many Fallhoods. A very ample, and elaborate, Apology was made for that Extract (39). Those who will not take the trouble to look over that Lady's Writings, and yet are desirous to know many things concerning her, need only see that Apology.

(37) April 1685, Art. ix, and May 1685, Art. viii.

(38) In January, 1686, pag. 9.

(39) The Acta Eruditorum of May 1687, speak of it. The Index of the ten first Volumes of that Journal informs us, that Mr Seckendorf is the Author of the Apology. Mr Mollerus says so likewise in his Historia Cimbrica, Part II, p. 161, 162.

(40) Seckendorf, in the Apology for the Journal of Leipsic, pag. 76, 77.

(41) Id. ibid.

(42) Vie continuee, pag. 169. See the Apology for the Journal of Leipsic, pag. xco.

(43) Vie continuee, pag. 477.

[P] Like most other Devotees she was of a cholerick and morose Humour. Mr Seckendorf found some Proofs of this in the Lady's own Writings. Multa vestigia (says he (40), in scriptis ejus apparent, ex quibus judicari posset feminam hanc duram, immitem, pervicacem, stomachabundam, rixosam --- fuisse. --- Several Marks appear in her Writings by which one may judge, that she was a severe, stubborn, passionate, brawling Woman. It came to that at last that no body could endure her ill Humour, and particularly her Maids were obliged to leave her. Unde factum ut nemo ejus morositatem tolerare posset, minime omnium feminæ quas in sodalium aut famulitium adsciverat: exercebatur nempe in illas, ut lussit Satyrus, Præfutura domus Sicula non mittit aula (41). --- For which reason no body could bear her ill Humour, especially the Women which she took for Companions or Servants: for she exercised over them, as the Satirist expresses it, A Family Government as cruel as the Sicilian Court. The following Passage will confirm this: 'If those who lived with her had not had strong Teeth to break some Cruels, very hard to corrupt Nature, they would have left her a thousand times for one. And indeed of so many Persons who have known, and even of those who have followed her, there were not four left that she would have kept with her (42).' Note, that she did not allow that her ill Humour was a fault; she called it love of Justice, and maintained that Anger was a true Virtue, and alledged in her Vindication the Rigours which the Prophets and Apostles used. She severely censured those of her Friends, who had not sued the Boors who had stolen something from her: and when her Friends excused themselves, saying they did not know whether she would have had them prosecuted with Rigour; she told them that these were but the Excuses of corrupt Nature, which will not take Pains, nor bear Inconveniences. Then she said with a strong Voice, 'Once for all, and I have already so often repeated it, we must prevent Evil, and oppose it with all our might, wherever we find it (43).' How well this agrees with the Patience which is so much recommended to us in the Gospel!

[Q] She had a very singular Opinion concerning Antichrist. She believed he would be a Devil incarnate. When she was asked, whether it was possible that Man should be born by the Operation of the Devil, she answered, 'Yes: Not that the Devil can do this alone without the Co-operation of Man; but having Power over lascivious Men, when they misuse the Principle of Fecundity (which the Scripture calls spilling it on the Ground, Gen. xxxviii, 9.) the Devil carries it by his diabolical Interposition into his Witches, from whence he causes wicked Men to be born, who are all dedicated to himself, and are true Antichrists: And that the Devil will incarnate himself in that manner (44). She believed that the Reign of Antichrist ought to be understood two ways, the one sensually and the other spiritually. In the first Sense, it will be the visible Reign of a Devil incarnate, and that is to come. In the second Sense, it is the Corruption and the Disorders which appear in all Christian Societies; and on this head she gives herself a full Scope, and rails most bitterly against all those Societies, and spares the Protestants no more than the Roman Catholics. 'De spirituali Antichristo longe plura tractat & veluti æstro percita campo decurrit per quem magnus equos Auruncæ flexit alumnus. Ante omnia Romanæ Ecclesiæ --- Antichristum, caput, principem & rectorem --- confidentissime assignat --- nihilo tamen mitius Protestantium cœtus tractavit, ideoque in libris de Antichristo omnia in eundem censum refert, nihil relinquens quod non Antichristianum & diabolicum faciat effreni & incredibili maledicentia (45). --- Concerning the spiritual Antichrist, she says a great deal more, and beats about the Field like one mad. Above all, she calls the head Prince and Governor of the Roman Church Antichrist --- nor does she treat the Societies of Protestants more mildly, and therefore in her Books concerning Antichrist she brings them all into one Account, leaving nothing which she does not, by her unbridled and incredible Malediction, make Antichristian and Devilish. As to the true and sensual Antichrist, viz. a Devil incarnate, according to her Principles, she had known him so well in a Night Vision ratified, that she gave a Description of him, whereby one might see what Complexion, Stature, and Hair he should have (46). The Verses which contained that Description have been suppressed; I say the Verses, for she pretended to make some, without ever having learned the Rules of Poetry. Omnia ex Deo didicerit, etiam rythmorum artem, in quâ quidem ita versatur ut facile fidem inveniat se nullo magistro usum esse (47). --- She learnt every thing from GOD, even the Art of making Verses, which she does in such a manner that it is manifest she never learned it of any Master. I must explain in a few words what is meant by a ratified Vision. Mrs Bourignon little valued the Visions which are made by the Interposition of the Imagination (48). If she had any of that kind, she suspected them, till having been recommended them to God in a profound Recollection, and disentangled from all Images, she learned from God what she ought to think of them, and God ratified the Truth of them to her in so pure, so intimate, and so private a manner, in the recesses of a Soul so disengaged and so given over to God, that there could be no mixture of human Thoughts or diabolical Illusions. In that manner God ratified to her the Truth of the Vision of Antichrist.

[R] Which seemed to be taken from the Hypothesis concerning the Incubus's. The Opinion that certain Persons of an extraordinary Moxit have been

(44) Ibid. p. 555.

(45) Seckendorf, ubi supra, p. 154.

(46) Vie continuee, pag. 267.

(47) Seckendorf, ubi supra, p. 154.

(48) Vie continuee, pag. 265, 267.

If she was predestinated to be the Instrument of some Revolution of Religion, that Lot was not assigned to her Person, nor to the Ministry of her Voice : It will rather be an effect of her Writings ; for during her Life she had but a very small number of Followers, who after her Death decreased every day in the Countries where she was most admired. They want but little of being reduced to Unity, I mean to one single individual. But it is not the same in Countries which were never honoured with her Presence : Her Books have fructified beyond Sea ; some Persons in Scotland like her Doctrine, and have undertaken the Propagation of it. They have made themselves formidable ; and it was thought necessary to take Pen in Hand in order to stop their Progress. They have taken the same Weapons to defend themselves ; and that conflict of Books continues still : You shall see the Extract of a Memorial on that Subject, which a very worthy Man has communicated to me [S].

been begotten by those Spirits is very ancient, and wants not Favourers to this Day. See Leo Allatius in his Book concerning Homer's Country, where declaring for that Opinion, he maintains, that Children procreated in that manner, are nevertheless formed of human Seed (49). The Count de Gabalis explains that ridiculous Whim. 'Sir, said I to him, our Divines take care not to say that the Devil is the Father of all those Men, who are born without our knowing who brings them into the World. They acknowledge that the Devil is a Spirit, and therefore cannot procreate. Gregorius Nyssenus (replied the Count) does not say that ; for he holds that the Devils multiply among themselves like Men. We are not of his Opinion, said I, but it happens (as our Doctors say) that — Ha! do not tell, (interrupted the Count) do not tell what they say, for then you must say a most filthy and immodest thing as they do. What an abominable Evasion have they found there? It is a wonder, that they should unanimously embrace that filthy Opinion, and take pleasure in placing Hobgoblins in Ambuscades, to take advantage of the idle Brutishness of solitary Persons, and thereby bring those miraculous Men speedily into the World, whose illustrious Memory they blacken by such a foul Original. Do they call that philosophizing? Is it worthy of God, to say that he has that Indulgence for the Devil to favour those Abominations ; to grant them the Grace of Fecundity which he has refused to great Saints ; and to reward that filthiness by creating more heroic Souls for those Embryo's of Iniquity, than for those who are formed in the Chastity of a lawful Marriage? Is it worthy of Religion to say, as your Doctors do, that by that detestable Art the Devil may get a Virgin with Child whilst she is asleep without any prejudice to her Virginity? Which is as absurd as the Story which Thomas Aquinas (otherwise a most solid Author, and who knew something of the Cabala) is so heedless as to relate in his sixth Quodlibet, of a Daughter lying with her Father, to whom he ascribes the Adventure which some heretical Rabbins relate of the Daughter of Jeremiab, to whom they impute the Conception of the great Cabalist Benysrab by going into the Bath after the Prophet. I could swear that this Impertinence was contrived by some — (50).

[S] Here follows the Extract of a Memorial, which a very worthy Man has communicated to me concerning the writings for and against her Followers.] I have read there, that the Followers of Antoinette Bourignon are perhaps more numerous in Scotland than in any other part of the World. Some Laymen, and some Clergymen in Scotland have embraced that Sect, some who, by having been too fond of abstracted Speculations, have suffered themselves to be dazzled by the Subtilties of Mr Poirer's Divine Oeconomy (51) ; others, who because they were not satisfied with the present State of Things, were easily charmed by the magnificent Promises of Antoinette Bourignon. Inclined to Novelty, and greedy of a Change, they too hastily believed that her System would remedy the Disorders they were displeased with. It was their Desire, and therefore it was soon their Hope, and thus they bestowed many pompous Encomiums upon that new Prophetess, who promised them such an advantageous Change, and such a noble Restoration of the Church. Two or three learned and pious Persons, who relished her Writings, encouraged the thing : Their Authority added weight to the frequent Discourses which were held on that new System ; and by often speaking of that Woman's Writings, which promised the Reformation of Faith and Manners, and that of Discipline and Worship, and which contain very sharp Censures against all sorts of People, and particularly against the Clergy, Dispositions to Bourignonism were sowed in People's Minds. The first thing that made a noise was the publishing an English Translation of one of the most considerable Pieces of our Antoinette in the Year 1696 (52). A very long Preface was prefixed to it, wherein the Translator maintained that she ought at least to be looked upon as an extraordinary Prophetess. Charles Lesley, a Man of great Merit and Learning, is the first who wrote against the Errors of Mrs Bourignon in Great Britain. The Books he wrote against the Quakers, have been very much esteemed, particularly his Treatise, intitled, The Snake in the Grass, Anguis in herba. Three anonymous Editions of it were published in two Years : in the Preface of the second Edition he took notice of the Errors of Bourignonism ; but he and several other Persons engaged Dr Cockburn to refute them more fully. That Doctor acquitted himself very well of it ; he published a Book, intitled, Bourignonism Detected. He proposes, and confutes the Judgment of Mr Poirer, Mr de Cort, and the English Translator of the Lux Mundi, concerning that Woman, and shews that neither their Authority nor their Reasons are sufficient to persuade that she was inspired, nor that she had received a Commission from God to reform Christianity. He has since published a Letter, wherein he justifies himself for writing on that Subject, and excuses himself for the delay of the new Relations he had promised, and answers some Difficulties. This was followed by a second Narrative printed in London, wherein having represented all the magnificent things that Mrs Bourignon attributed to herself, he shews that if they were true, she ought not only to be preferred before the Prophets, and the Apostles, but also before JESUS CHRIST. He believed this might be sufficient to undeceive the Bourignonists, and therefore he made no haste to publish the other two Relations, wherein he is to shew, I. That the Life of Antoinette did not answer the great Part that she pretended to act. II. That she had not the Characters peculiar to those who are raised by God. III. That there are good reasons to accuse her either of Imposture, or of Diabolical Illusion. IV. That her particular Doctrines, though veiled with a Pretence of a greater Piety, are contrary to true Piety. The Bourignonists of Scotland, not profiting by his writings, thought themselves obliged to write in defence of Antoinette, and therefore published an Apology for her, and an Answer to Dr Cockburn's Relations. This obliges the latter to go on in his Work, which, though chiefly designed to shew the Fanaticism of Mrs Bourignon, serves nevertheless to discover several other Illusions (53).

(52) That which is intitled The Light of the World.

(53) Taken from a Memorial imparted to me July 2, 1699.

(49) Allat. de patria Homeri, pag. 30. See what shall be quoted out of the Polygamia triumphatrix in the Article of LYSERUS (JOHN), the Author of that Book.

(50) Quatrième Entretien sur les Sciences secrètes, pag. 240, Paris A. M. 1670.

(51) It is a Book printed at Amsterdam, 1687, in seven Volumes in 12mo.

BOURLOTE

BOURLOTE (CLAUDIUS DE LA), a Soldier of Fortune, who raised himself by his Valour. Look for LABOURLOTE.

BOURSALT (EDMUND), known by divers Works in Verse and Prose, which have been in good Esteem, had a great share in the Affection of the Duke of Montausier. It was by his Order that he wrote a Book, in 1671, for the Education of the Dauphin. This Book is entituled L'Etude des Souverains, and is stored with illustrious Examples, necessary for young Princes who are to be instructed. The King was very well pleased with it, and the Duke of Montausier — recommended him to his Majesty for Sub-Preceptor to the Dauphin, and there was no other Obstacle but his want of the Latin Tongue, that kept him from so considerable Honour and Fortune (a); for it must be observed that Mr Boursault had no Knowledge of the Latin Tongue. He died in the Month of September, 1701. He was putting the last hand to a Work entituled Esope a la Cour (b). It is a kind of Supplement to the other Esope, which he had wrote (c). The Children he left are a Theatin, a Captain of Foot, and a Nun (d).

(a) Mercure Galant, of September 1701, pag. 398, 399.
(b) Id. pag. 400.
(c) Id. pag. 399.
(d) Idem.

BOXHORNIIUS, Professor at Leyden. See ZUERIIUS.

BRACHMANS, Indian Philosophers, of whom Strabo relates several things which are very singular (a). They begun so early to take care of their Scholars, that they sent learned Men to the Mother as soon as they knew that she had conceived. Those learned Men seemed to go thither to give their Blessing to the Mother and the Child, that she might have a happy time; but their chief design was to give her good Precepts. If the Mother was pleased with those Discourses, it was taken as a good Omen for the Child. As the Children grew up, they went thro' the Discipline of different Masters; as for the Brachmans they kept out of the Town in a Wood, and led a very rigid Life [A]. They slept on Hides, they eat no Fleth [B],

(a) Strab. lib. xv, pag. 490, ex Megasthenes.

nor

[A] They led a very rigid Life. It appears by a Passage of Strabo that they insured themselves to Toil; for he speaks of two Brachmans, one of whom made a Trial of Patience by lying on the ground, exposed to the Sun and Rain. The other who was younger made his Trial, by standing a whole Day sometimes on his Right, and sometimes on his left Leg, holding up a great Piece of Timber with both Hands. They were at Alexander's Court; the youngest returned home, but the other thought it better to follow that Prince, and to comply with the Customs of the Greeks (1). This was in some manner to forsake his Order. Arrianus says, that Alexander admired the Constancy of those Indian Philosophers (2). It would doubtless have been very wonderful, if they had done what Pliny ascribes to them. 'They look upon the Sun, says he (3), from it's rising to it's setting with a steadfast and unmoveable Eye, and stand all day long, sometimes on one Foot, and sometimes on another, in the hot burning Sands. Philosophos eorum quos Gymnosophistas vocant ab exortu ad occasum perficere contuentes solem immobilibus oculis, ferventibus arenis, toto die alternis pedibus insistere.' Solinus adds, that they sought great Secrets in the Sun (4). He seems to say, that it served them for a Looking-Glass to foretel things to come. It is to no purpose after this to extol and cry up such Saints as Simeon Stylites; they do not come up to those Indian Philosophers. But the Fact is almost as doubtful on one side as on the other. It looks altogether like a Fable with respect to those Philosophers, and if there was no other reason to question it than this, viz. that most of the Authors, who speak of them, do not mention that uneasy Posture, and that perpetual Contemplation, we should have sufficient ground to disbelieve it. It seems to me that standing always on one Foot, and having one's Eyes turned directly to the hottest Sun without the least winking, are such singular things, as no body will ever pass over in silence, who has a Mind to inform any Person what sort of Life those People live, who practise such extraordinary things. And consequently all those who asked any News of those Indian Philosophers, would immediately have been informed of such wonderful things. They must needs be publicly known in the Country, and are the best Part of the Story, the marvellous and rarity of the Sect, and therefore every body may and ought to acquaint Strangers with them. So that it is impossible that an Historian, who looks for Information, should not come to the Knowledge of such things; and if he knows them, he ought to make them the chief Article of his Account: he must have lost his Wits if he thinks they do not deserve to be mentioned. How comes it then that there are so many Writers, who do not say one word of them? Doubtless it is because they never heard of them; or because observing that all those who should have mentioned them, did not do it, they concluded that it was all Romance and Imposture. One may apprehend the reason why an Author may relate fabulous Stories; but one cannot apprehend why he should suppress such Truths as these. There are some cases then wherein a Negative Argument may take place; not only when it is grounded on the Silence of the greatest Number, which is our present Case. Strabo who had read many Relations, and who also cites some ocular Witnesses, says indeed, that those Philosophers suffered the excessive Heat of the Sun all the Day long, some standing, some sitting, and others lying down; and that they did not move out of their Places, till returned to the Town at Night: but he does not speak of their continual standing on one Foot, nor of their perpetual Contemplation of the Sun. Neither does Stephanus Byzantinus speak of it, though he says that the Brachmans were chiefly consecrated to the Sun. Βραχμάνων ἰδέειν οὐλον ἀνδρῶν φιλοσόφων καὶ θεοῖς φίλων, ἡλίῳ δὲ μάστιγα καὶ ὥστωμένων. Brachmanas visere homines philosophiae deditos et diis charos, soli vero praecipue dedicatos (5). — To see the Brachmans Men given to Philosophy, dear to the Gods, but chiefly dedicated to the Sun. I must observe that one of the Austerities of some Indian Philosophers was to continue a whole Day in the same posture, ἐν ὁμοίᾳ στάσει ἀκίνητον διαμένειν τὴν ἡμέραν ὅλην (6). It would be a hard Penance for many Persons. See the Remark [F] of the Article GYMNOSOPHISTS.

[B] They eat no Fleth. Porphyry represents them very rigid on that Point: the Carthians do not come near them. They not only did eat nothing but Fruit and Rice; but they would have thought themselves guilty of the greatest Impiety, had they touched any Food that had had Life. Τὸ δ' ἄλλο τινὸς ἀφασθαι, ἢ ὅπως δίγειν ἐμψύχου τινος ἴσον καὶ τῇ ἐσχάτῃ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ τε καὶ ἀσεβείᾳ νομιμαί (7). They were moreover very devout, and spent the greatest part of the Day and Night in singing Hymns to the Honour

OBSERVATIONS on a Case where the Negative Argument is strong.

(5) Hierocles in Philistoricis apud Stephanum de Urbibus in Βραχμάνων. See also Philostratus in vita Apoll. lib. iii.
(6) Strab. lib. xv, pag. 491.
(7) Porphyry de Abst. lib. iv.

(1) Strabo, lib. xv, pag. 491.

(2) Arrian. de expedit. lib. 7.

(3) Plin. lib. vii, cap. ii.

(4) In globo igneo rimantes scireta quaedam. Solin. cap. lii.

nor had any Commerce with Women [C]. They spent their time in fine Discourses, and communicated their Science to those who would come and hear them: But none of their Hearers was allowed to speak or to spit: Whoever did it was turned out for that Day. When a Man had been thirty seven Years in that Society, he was at liberty to leave it in order to live a more easy Life: He was then permitted to eat such Beasts as do not labour for Men, and to marry many Wives; but he was not allowed to philosophize with them [D]; for if they were bad, it was feared they would divulge the mysterious things among the profane; and if they grew better by the Lessons of their Husbands, it was feared they would live no longer under their Subjection. The Brachmans said, our Life ought to be considered as the State of Conception, and Death as a Birth to a true and happy Life for those who have philosophized well. They added, that the accidents of human Life are neither good nor evil, since the same things please some, and displease others, and even are agreeable and disagreeable to one and the same Person, at different times. Thus much for Morality. As to Physics, they taught several things which favoured of Folly; their main skill did not lie in that; their Actions were better than their Words, and they built a good part of their System on Fables; but otherwise they had the same Opinion as the Greeks in several things. They believed that the World had a Beginning, and would have an End; that it was round, and that God, who made and governed it, penetrated it every where; that the Principles of the Universe differed from each other, but that Water was the Principle of the World, and that there was a Quintessence, out of which the Heavens and the Stars were formed. They had also some Fables, like Plato, concerning the Immortality of the Soul, the Tribunals of Hell, and such like things. It is Strabo, who speaks thus slightly of the greatest Truths of Religion. Apuleius, though he was taken for a Magician, has not so described those Doctrines of the Brachmans [E]. They cultivated Physic and Astronomy very much (b). Clemens Alexandrinus testifies that they drank no Wine, nor eat any thing that had Life, and that because they were persuaded of a new Birth, they did not value this Life (c). He looks upon them as

(b) Strab. ibid.
pag. 494.

(c) Καταφρονέ-σι δὲ θανάτου, καὶ παρ' αὐτῶν
ἀγνοεῖται τὸ ζῆν.
πισθόνται γὰρ
εἶνα παλιγγενεῖσθαι. Mortem autem contemnunt & vive-
re nihili faciunt,
credunt enim ei-
se regenerationenem. . . . They despise Death,
and yet no value
upon Life, for they believe there is a new Birth. Clemens Alexandr.
Stromat. lib. iii,
pag. 451.

(8) Id. ibid.

(9) Bardejanes
apud Euseb.
Præp. Evang.
lib. vi, cap. viii.

Honour of the Gods, and praying to them. Each had his Cell, and they could not abide to live in common; Κοινῇ γὰρ Βραχμῶνες μένειν ἐκ ἀνέχομεναι (8). Here you see true Carthusians among the Pagans, and I do not even know whether they can be compared with Cenobites, rather than with Anchorites. Bardejanes represents them as Men free from Malice, and who thought only of God (9). They drank neither Wine nor Malt-Drink; they eat nothing that had Life; they worshiped no Images. That which is most wonderful is, that there was not a small Number of such great Saints; for there were several Thousands of them. Credat Judæus Apella.

[C] They had no commerce with Women.] Suidas speaks quite otherwise of them; what he says of them deserves to be taken notice of for its singularity. He says, that the Brachmans inhabit an Island of the Ocean, where the Air is so pure that they live a Hundred and fifty Years. They do not live there upon Bread and Water, but upon Water and Apples. They do nothing but pray to God. In the Months of July and August the Fruits, being then very plentiful, heat them with the Fire of Love, so that they go to their Wives beyond the River Ganges, and remain forty Days with them, and then return to their Island. When a Woman has had two Children, her Husband goes no more to see her; and she on her side comes no more near any Man: and if any Woman has been five Years barren, her Husband makes no farther attempt upon her; he goes no more over the Sea with the rest. This was not the way to people the Country: neither was it well peopled, as Suidas observes; but he should not have forgot to say that these are meer Stories and Romances forged by idle Writers. It may be they designed to make the neighbouring Nations ashamed by endeavouring to make them believe that there is a Country in the World, where People are far from being such gluttons as they. However it be, I do not think that in all the sincere Relations of Travellers there is any Country mentioned, where the Inhabitants are so chaste as the Brachmans spoken of by Suidas. There are some Sects, and some Fraternities every where, that make Profession of renouncing venereal Pleasures; but the rest of the Inhabitants laugh at that Morality, and scarce confine themselves to any thing but to satiate their Appetites. The most savage Countries of Africa and America, the most icy parts of Lapland, abound with great gluttons in that Respect.

[D] They married many Wives, but were not allowed to philosophize with them.] Some would have made use of this Passage to adorn the common Topic of Women's prating, if Strabo had not prevented it by observing that the Brachmans were only afraid of the Indiscretion of bad Women. As for good Women, they only feared that as soon as they became good Philosophers, they would free themselves from the conjugal Servitude. But as all that is said of the Indian Philosophers swarms with Contradictions, we read in the following Page that some philosophized with Women, but in such a manner that they went not beyond Speculations; they begun and ended with the Spirit, they had nothing to do with the Flesh. Συμπρολοσοφῶν δ' ἐνίοις καὶ γυναῖκας ἀπεργουμένας καὶ αὐτὰς ἀρεσδισίων. Cum horum etiam nonnullis mulieres philosophari à veneris abstinentes (10).

----- Women philosophize with some of them, ab-staining from Vener. The Brachmans went quite another way to work; They did not philosophize with their Wives, but endeavoured to get many Children by them. Ταυτὴν δ' ἐπιπλεῖσας εἰς πολυτέκνιαν. Quamplurimas ducere uxores multiplicandæ prolis gratia (11). ----- They marry several Wives in order to multiply their Offspring. If that Passage of Strabo were not so mangled as it is, we might see all the Reasons which he had given for their Conduct. Another Historian says that they philosophized also with them (12).

[E] Apuleius ----- has not represented the Opinions of the Brachmans as Fables.] These are his Words; 'Brachmanæ pleraque Philosophiæ ejus (Pythagoræ) contulerunt, quæ mentium docu-
'menta, quæ corporum exercitamenta, quot partes
'animi, quot vices vitæ, quæ Dii manibus pro-
'merito suo cuique tormenta vel præmia (13). ----- The Brachmans furnished great part of 'his (Pythagoras;) Philosophy, what were the pro'per Improvements of the Mind, what the Exer'cises of the Body, how many parts of the Soul,
'how many changes of Life, what Rewards or
'Torments the Dii manes had for every Man ac'cording to his Deserts.'

(10) Strabo, lib.
15, pag. 491.
See also pag. 494.

(11) Id. ibid.
pag. 490.

(12) Nearchus
apud Strabonem,
pag. 493.

(13) *Apul. Flo-
rid. lib. ii, pag.*
351.

[F] Clemens

as one of the two sorts of Gymnosophists (d) [F]; but it is very difficult to determine among so many contrary Relations, whether the Brachmans went naked or not [G]. Lucian calls the same Indian Philosophers indifferently Brachmans and Gymnosophists (e). We must take care not to be deceived by his Expressions, when he says in an indefinite manner, that they burnt themselves, not by leaping into the Pile, like Peregrinus, but going into it with a grave pace, worthy of their Character of Philosophers [H]. If some did it, it does not follow from thence that it was one of their Customs. He observes also, that, by reason of their Sobriety, they lived a long time (f). The Treatise of Palladius de Gentibus Indiae & Bragmanibus, which was published at London in the Year 1665, deserves to be consulted [I]. If we had the Book that the Brachman King wrote in his own Language, concerning the Laws and Government of the Brachmans (g), it is likely we might see something very romantic in it.

The Brachmans subsist still in the East. The third Sect that is in vogue among the Chinese, may be called the Religion of the Brachmans or Bramins, and they call it so themselves. They are Priests who chiefly reverence three things, the God Fo, his Law, and

[F] Clemens Alexandrinus looks upon them to be one of the two sorts of Gymnosophists.] Megasthenes divides the Indian Philosophers into Brachmanes and Germanes (14); the first were more esteemed than the latter: Those that were most esteemed among the Germanes were called Hyllobians. The Reason of that Name was taken from their living in Woods (15). They fed only on Leaves and wild Fruits; their Garments were made of Barks of Trees; they abstained from Wine and from the Pleasures of Love. Clemens Alexandrinus follows the same Division of the Gymnosophists, only he calls the last sort Sarmanes, and subdivides them into Allobians, &c. (16). I cannot tell whether Germanes ought to be preferred before Sarmanes (17); but it is certain that the Word Ἀλλόβιοι is corrupted, and that it ought to be read Ἰλλόβιοι, as in Strabo. Now in order to know whether that Division is just, this question must first be decided, whether the Brachmans wore any Cloaths; for it is not to be doubted, that by the Word Gymnosophists the Greeks understood all the Indian Philosophers, who did not cover their Nakedness. See the following Remark, and the Article GYMNOSOPHISTS. Ludovicus Vives had not examined Strabo carefully, when he made him say, that there were two sorts of Philosophers, in India; that some made their abode in the Towns, and others in the Woods; that the first were called Civil, and were covered with Shirts and Skins; those were the Brachmans; and that the last were naked, or were sometimes covered with Leaves and Barks of Trees; they were called Hermanes and Gymnosophists, and from them proceeded the Gymnosophists of Ethiopia (18). This account is far from being exact. I. In the first place, when Strabo speaks of certain Philosophers who were called Civil, he means a Sect which they opposed to the Brachmans, and which did nothing but find fault. II. In the second place, he does not say that That Sect was divided into two Classes, but into three; that of the Mountaineers, that of the Naked, and that of the Civil. Lastly, he says that the last dwelt indifferently in Towns and the Country. How came Vives then to find out that the Gymnosophists of Ethiopia were issued from any particular Indian Sect, rather than from another.

[G] Among so many contrary Relations, it is difficult to determine whether they went naked or not. We have seen some of the Contradictions, that are to be found in Books concerning the Indian Philosophers. It is past doubt, that they had not all the same Customs: By what right should they have been uniform? Was ever such a Privilege seen any where? But this does not fully justify the Authors, who tell inconsistent things of them; for they have not denoted each Sect by their proper Name. Those, who ascribe such or such a thing to them, make use of the same general Names, as those who do not ascribe it to them. Nay, did not Nearchus say that Calanus was a Brachman (19)? Did not Onesicritus say that he had discoursed with Calanus, and that he found him stark naked (20). One might therefore conclude from those two Witnesses, that the Brachmans went naked, and confirm it by Megasthenes, who reckoned among other Prerogatives of those, who left the Brachmans after having been Thirty seven Years among them, the liberty of wearing a Shirt (21). Yet an Author, named Hierocles, says the Brachmans wore a very singular Garment (22); it was made of Cloth of Stone, and did not consume in the Fire. Philostrophus in the Life of Apollonius says they wore flaxen Cloth (23). According to Megasthenes, the Philosophers, who were the most esteemed in the Sect of the Germanes, wore Cloaths made of the Barks of Trees. But Cicero says in general, that the Indian Philosophers go naked (24). Hierocles says that the Brachmans lay always in the open Fields (25); but Onesicritus, who had seen them, affirms that they came every Night into the Town. Arianus tell us that they spent the Summer under great Trees, and the Winter sub dio. Others say that each of them had his Cell (26). It may be they did not follow the same Institute in all Ages, and that, with a distinction of time, one might reconcile some of the Variations of the Authors, who have spoke of them.

[H] According to Lucian they burnt themselves, going into the Pile with a grave Pace worthy of their Character of Philosophers. We believe that Jester, they built the Pile, and stood unmoveable by it whilst the Fire roasted them. Afterwards they slept gravely and majestically into the Flames, and stirred no more than a Statue, after they had laid themselves down in the Fire (27). He opposes this way of burning ones self to that of Peregrinus, who threw himself into the Flames, and pretends that the Method of the Brachmans is much more glorious. Thus a Banterer finds some subject of Ridicule in every thing. If Peregrinus had imitated those Indian Philosophers, Lucian would have accused him of Irresolution; he would have said, he hesitates, he has a mind to fortify himself by degrees; he would show more Courage if he threw himself headlong into the Fire. See what the Baron des Adrets said to a Soldier who durst not throw himself down a Precipice at the first nor the second Trial (28). Let a Man turn himself all ways imaginable, he will never avoid the fatirical Stokes of such Men as Lucian, nor Slander in general. Read Mr de la Fontaine (29).

[I] The Treatise of Palladius de gentibus Indiae & Bragmanibus deserves to be consulted.] Edward Bisseus (30) published it in Greek and Latin at London in the Year 1665, as the Bodleian Catalogue has it; but I find the Year 1668, in the Title of my Copy, without any Observation of it's being a second Edition. It is likely that this Difference in the Date comes from the Booksellers, who are wont from time to time to renew the Titles of their Books. Bisseus added two other Treatises to that Treatise of Palladius (31), one of St Ambrose, de Moribus Brachmanorum, and the other of an anonymous Author, de Brachmanibus. Neither of them had ever been printed before. Those three Pieces are preceded by an exact Collection of what the Ancients have said concerning the Brachmans: the Testimonies of the Greeks are set down in their Language, and afterwards in Latin.

(d) Id. lib. i, pag. 305.

(e) Lucian in satyris, pag. 790, Tom. II.

(f) Id. in Macrobii, pag. 632, Tom. II.

(g) Suidas.

(21) Ibid. pag. 430.

(22) Hierocles apud Stephanum de Urbibus in Βραχμανέσ.

(23) See what Pliny says of the Flax, Asbestos, lib. xviii, cap. i.

(24) Cicero, Tuscul. lib. v.

(25) Ἰεροκλῆς τὸν ἐπὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ θύρου. Sub dio totam aetatem degunt. Hierocles apud Stephan. de Urbibus in Βραχμανέσ.

(26) See Remark [B].

(27) Lucian de morte Peregrini, pag. 772, 773, Tom. II. He quotes Onesicritus, who had seen Calanus in the Flames. See the same Author in Lucian, pag. 700, in the same Tome.

(28) See above, Remark [B], Citation (10), in the Article BEAUMONT, &c.

(29) In the Fable of the Miller. It is the first of the third Book.

(30) Eques Aularius & titulus Clarencl rex armorum. Knight, and Clarenclous King at Arms.

(31) The same who wrote the Historia Lausica, and who lived in the 17th Century.

(14) Megasthenes, apud Strabonem, pag. 439.

(15) Ζῆντρας ἐν ταῖς ὕλαις.

(16) Clem. Alex. andr. Stromat. lib. i, pag. 305.

(17) Porphyr. de Abstin. lib. iv, divides the Gymnosophists into two Sects, viz. into Brachmans and Sarmanes.

(18) Lod. Vives in August. de Civit. Dei, lib. xiv, cap. xvii.

(19) Nearchus, apud Strabonem, pag. 493.

(20) Ibid. pag. 492.

G g

[K] They

(6) Charles le Gobien, a Jesuit, in his Histoire de l'Emp. de la Chine en faveur de la Religion Chretienne.

(7) Tachard, Voyage de Siam, Book iv, sub fin. pag. 241, Edit. Holl.

(8) T. Burnet, in Appen. Archæolog. Philosph.

and the Books which contain their particular Statutes (b). They have very odd Opinions about Non-entify, and their Morality has a great affinity with the Visions of our Quietists [K]. The Relation of Father Tachard shews that the Brachmans or Bramins of Bengal lead a very austere Life, that they walk bare-headed and bare-footed on their burning Sand, and that they live only upon Herbs (i). The Brachmans of Indostan have very ancient Books which they call Sacred, and which they pretend God gave to the great Prophet Brabma (k). They preserve the Language in which those Books were written, and use no other in their divine and philosophical Explications. By that means they keep them from the Knowledge of the Vulgar. They believe the Transmigration of Souls, and eat no Flesh. They say that the production of the World consisted in this, that all things came out of the Bosom of God, and that the World shall perish by the return of those same things to their first Original. A Spider serves them for an Emblem to explain that Opinion [L]. The Brachmans of Siam believe that the first Men were bigger than [K] They have very odd Opinions about Non-entify, and their Morality has a great Affinity with the Visions of our Quietists. The Bramins assert that the World is but an Illusion, a Dream, a Deceit: and that Bodies, to exist truly, must cease to be in themselves, and be confounded with Nothingness, which by its Simplicity makes the Perfection of all Beings. Their Morality is yet more overstrained than that of our Stoics. For they carry the Apathia, or Indifference, to which they refer all Holiness, so far, that a Man must become a Stone or a Statue to acquire the Perfection of it. They do not only teach that a Wife Man ought to have no Passions, but also that he ought not to have any Desire. So that he ought continually to apply himself to desire nothing, to think on nothing, to feel nothing, and to remove all Thoughts of Virtue and Sanctity so far from his Mind, that there remains nothing in him contrary to the perfect quiet of the Soul. It is, say they, that profound drowsiness of the Mind, that Quiet of all the Powers, that continual suspension of the Senses, which makes the Happiness of Man (32): in that State he is no more subject to change; there is no more any Transmigration for him, any Vicissitude, any Fear of Things to come, because, properly speaking, he is nothing, or if he is any thing, he is Wise, Perfect, Happy, in a word, he is God, and perfectly like the God Fo: which certainly comes somewhat near to Folly. It is against this ridiculous Doctrine that the Chinese Philosophers display all the Strength of their Eloquence. They look upon a perfect Indifference as a Monster in Morality, and as the overturning of the civil Society (33). I omit the solid and short Refutation that follows in Father Gobien.

(32) Compare with this the Nirupan of the Siamele, of which I speak in the Article SOMMONA-CODOM.

(33) Father Charles le Gobien, in his Preface to the Histoire de l'Edit. de l'Emp. de la Chine.

(34) La Bruyere Dialogue 2, sur le Quietisme, pag. 33, & seq.

(35) Molinos Guid. spirit. Book iii, ch. xiii, apud Bruyere, ubi supra, pag. 35, 36.

(36) Madame Guyon, moien court, apud eundem, Dial. v, pag. 171.

(37) Regle des Allicees à l'enceinte de Jesus, apud eundem, ibid. pag. 172.

But I desire you to observe that this Monster of Indifference is the darling Doctrine of the Quietists, and that, according to them, one's true Felicity consists in Nothingness. Then in the threefold silence of Words, Thoughts, and Desires, finding ones self in a spiritual Sleep, in a mystical Drowsiness, or rather in a mystical Death, all the suspended Powers are recalled from the Circumferences to the Center: God, who is that Center, makes the Soul feel him by divine Touches, by a Taft, by Illapses, by unspeakable Suavities. It's Affections being thus moved, it lets them rest quietly, and finds a delicious Repose which sets it above all Delights and Extasies, above the finest Manifestations, and divine Notions, and Speculations: one cannot tell what he feels, nor what he is (34). Do not imagine that Mr la Bruyere has made any Amplification: You will see his Book supported with Proofs. You will find this Passage of Molinos in it. 'It is then that the divine Spouse, suspending it's Faculties, lulls it in a sweet and calm Sleep: It is in that Drowsiness that it enjoys with an unconceivable Calm, without knowing wherein it's enjoyment consists (35). You will find there, that a spiritual Soul ought to be indifferent to all things, either for the Body or the Soul, or for temporal or eternal Goods, and leave what is past in forgetfulness, and things to come to the Providence of God, and deny itself the present (36). And that the resignation of the Soul ought to be such as to act without any Knowledge, like one that ceases to be (37). That the Soul, feels, sees, and knows itself no more: it sees, comprehends, and distinguishes nothing in God; there is no more Love, Light, or Knowledge (38). That that Soul, not feeling itself, is not at the trouble of seeking, or doing any thing: it remains as it is, which is sufficient. But what does it? Nothing, nothing, and always nothing (39). That the Indifference of this Lover is so great that it cannot incline towards Enjoyment, nor towards Privation. Death and Life are equal to it, and though it's Love is incomparably stronger than ever it was, yet it cannot desire Paradise, because it remains in the Hands of it's Spouse as things that are not. This ought to be the Effect of the most profound Annihilation (40). That the perfect Prayer of Contemplation puts Man besides himself, delivers him from all Creatures, makes him die and enter into the Rest of God; he is in Admiration that he is united to God, without doubting that he is distinguished from God. He is reduced to nothing, and knows himself no more: he lives and lives no more: he operates and operates no more: he is and is no more (41).

We do not want Persons in Europe, any more than in China, to confute those foolish Visions eloquently; but to the shame of our Age, and our Climate, they have found Apologists among us, who make themselves formidable. Note, That the Doctrine of the Brachmans is less dreadful in some respects than that of our Mystics; for the latter place Indifference, and the perfect Quietness, in a Transformation of the Soul into God, which they explain by the Notions of the Consummation of Marriage.

The essential Union, say they (42), is the Spiritual Marriage, where there is a communication of Substance, where God takes the Soul for his Spouse, unites it to himself, not personally, nor by any act or means, but immediately, reducing all to an Unity. The Soul ought not, nor can any more make any Distinction between God and itself: God is the Soul, and the Soul is God, since by the Consummation of the Marriage it is returned into God, and finds itself lost in him without being able to distinguish or find itself again. The true Consummation of the Marriage makes the Mixture of the Soul with it's God. The Marriage is made when the Soul finds itself dead, and expired in the Arms of the Spouse, who seeing it more disposed, receives it to Union with himself; but the Consummation of the Marriage is made only, when the Soul is so melted, annihilated, and disappropriated, that it can altogether run into it's God without any reserve. Then is made that admirable Mixture of the Creature with it's Creator, which reduces them to Unity. If any Saints, or any Authors, have established this Divine Marriage in a less advanced State than this which I describe, it is because they took the betrothing for the Marriage, and the Marriage for the Consummation (43). The Absurdity of this Doctrine as to Metaphysics is monstrous; for if there is any thing certain in the clearest Ideas, it is absolutely impossible that a real Change should be made either of God into a Creature, or of a Creature into God. Ovid, and the other Pagan Poets, were not so senseless as to mention such a Metamorphosis. What might not one say against this Cant of the Quietists, That a Soul is no more in itself, nor by itself; that

(38) Madame Guyon, in the Book of Torrents, apud eundem, ibid.

(39) The same, ibid. apud eundem, Dial. vi, p. 201.

(40) The same, Explicat. du Cantique des Cantiques, apud eundem, Dial. vi, p. 192.

(41) La Combe, analyse de l'ecartement mentale, apud eundem, Dial. vii, pag. 231.

(42) Madame Guyon, explicat. du Cant. des Cant. pag. 3, 4, apud eundem, Dial. vii, pag. 239.

(43) Ibid. pag. 14, &c. cited by La Bruyere, Dial. vii, on Quietism, pag. 239.

than those of this present time, and that they lived many Ages without any Sickness (l); and that our Earth shall be destroyed one day by Fire, and that another will come out of its Ashes, in which there shall be no Sea, nor any change of Seasons, but an eternal Spring (m). The Brachmans of the Country of Coromandel say, there are all at once several Worlds in different parts of the Universe, and that the same World is destroyed and renewed in certain periods of Time; that our Earth begun with the Golden Age, and will be destroyed by Fire (n).

(l) Tachard Voyage de Siam, pag. 39, apud T. Burnetium, ubi supra.

(m) Burnet, ibid.

(n) Id. ibid.

(44) La Bruyere, Dial. 7, pag. 261.

(45) The Abbot d'Edival, confessor, apud eund. Dial. ii. pag. 35.

(46) Madame Guyon, in the Book of Torrents, apud eund. Dial. vii. pag. 253.

(47) La Bruyere, Dial. vi. pag. 222, 223.

(48) Id. Dial. vii. pag. 255.

(49) Ibid. pag. 256.

(50) T. Burnetius, in appendice Archæol. Philol. pag. 472.

that it is relapsed and swallowed up in God by a fundamental and central Presence (44), that it admires God 'in his abyssal and supereminent Bottom' (45). Can any body forgive them, that State of Deification, wherein all is God without knowing that it is so (46), ----- that State of essential Union wherein the Soul becomes 'immutable, and has lost means' ----- that Union 'not only essential but immediate and without means, more substantial than the hypostatic Union' ----- that central Union with God, that has no need of Jesus Christ for a Mediator (47). This kind of Eutychianism multipliable in infinitum would appear horrible to Eutyches himself. But if one would excuse all these things, can any body forgive them the obscene Images they make use of, which are so proper to expose Religion, and outdo in a manner all the Licence of the ancient Heathen Poets? Can any one forgive them what they assert, that, in order to lead a Soul to the State of Death, which is a Preparation to Deification, 'God permits that the Senes should extrovert, that is to say, debauch themselves, which appears a great Impurity to the Soul. And yet the thing is reasonable, and to do otherwise is to purify ones self in another manner than God commands, and to fully ones self (48). Some faults are committed in that Extroversion, but the Confusion, which the Soul receives by it, and the Care of making use of it, make the Muck, wherein it rots the foener, and hastens its Death' (49). Can any thing be more dangerous to good Manners? It is likely I shall have some occasion to shew that the pretended essential Union of those Persons may very well be called Seneca's Paradise.

[L] A Spider serves them for an Emblem to explain that Opinion. See here how Dr Burnet expresses it: 'Hoc autem more Cabalistico vel Mythologico exprimitur. Fingunt enim immensam quandam Araneam esse primam rerum causam: Quæ, materia è suis visceribuseducta, hujusce universi telam contexuit, & mira arte ordinavit. Sed illa interea in arce sui operis, & cujusque partis motum sentit, regit, & moderatur. Tandem cum satis luserit in sua tela adornanda & contemplanda, retrahit, quæ evoluerat, fila, atque ita omnia reorbet in seipsam, totaque rerum creaturarum natura in nihilum evanescit. Hoc modo Mundi ortum, ordinem, & interitum, representant hodierni Brachmanes (50). ----- But this they express in a Cabalistic and Mythological Manner. For they pretend that a certain immense Spider was the first Cause of Things: which wrought the Webb of this Universe of Matter drawn out of her own Bowels, and disposed it with wonderful Art. That she from the Summit of her Work continually observes, orders, and regulates the Motion of every Part. At last, when she has satisfied herself with the Pleasure of adorning and contemplating her Web, she gathers up the Thread she had spun, and so absorbs all again into herself, and the whole Nature of created Things vanishes. Thus the modern Brachmans represent the beginning, order, and end of the World. This Comparison of the Author of the World to a Spider, who having diverted herself with making her Web, draws in, and devours the same Threads that came out of her own Bowels, plainly represents the Doctrine of the Stoics (51). The Extravagancy of that Idea cannot be sufficiently wondered at. Physics, Metaphysics, and Morals, afford us an hundred solid Arguments to confute it: Doubtless I shall have some Occasion to touch upon this Matter. I shall only observe, here, that a Man is very excusable, when the Consideration of the Follies, which the Eastern Nations have believed for so many Ages about the Original of the World, moves him to ascribe them to the Wrath of Heaven, and raises his Astonishment at the Duration and Greatness of it. 'Miseret me quidem Terrarum Orientalium, primæ sapientum sedis, florentissimi olim bonarum literarum Emporii, à multis retro sæculis in fœdam barbariem conversarum.'

Tantæne animis cœlestibus iræ?

Faxit Deus, ut easdem non subeamus vices, neque retrahat iratus id luminis quo gaudemus in Occidente (52). ----- Indeed I pity the Eastern Countries, the first Seat of wise Men, once the most flourishing Men of Learning, for many Ages past fallen into abominable Barbarity.

Can Heaven such strong Resentment show?

GOD grant it may not come to our turn to do the like, and that he in his WRATH do not withdraw that Light which we are blessed with in the West.

(51) See T. Burnet, Archæol. lib. i. cap. vii. pag. 326, 327. Edit. Amstel. 1694.

(52) Id. ibid. pag. ultima.

(a) Gesner Biblioth. fol. 483, does not rank his Names right, for he places him under Lippus Brandolinus Aurelius.

(b) Taken from Michael Pocior. Florent. pag. 21. See also Ghilini, Tom. II, pag. 32, 33, who only paraphrases Pocior.

(1) König. Biblioth. vet. & nova, pag. 131.

BRANDOLINUS (AURELIUS), born at Florence in the XVth Century, was surnamed Lippus, from a Defluxion of Humours that ran down from his Eyes (a). That Distemper, so much an Enemy to Men of Letters, did not hinder him from becoming a very learned Man. He was a great Orator, a great Musician, and a good Poet. His Reputation being spread every where, he was invited to Hungary by King Matthias Corvinus, to teach the Art of Oratory, which he did many Years at Buda, and in Strigonia, with great Success. After his return to Florence he took the religious Habit of St Augustin, and some time after was made a Priest. He applied himself to preaching, and had every where the applause of a great crowd of Auditors. He died of the Plague at Rome in the Year 1498. He was Author of some Books which are esteemed (b) [A]. Moreri's Faults are not so considerable as his Omissions [B].

[A] He was Author of some Books which are esteemed. He put the Histories contained in the Old and New Testament into Heroic Verse. He wrote a Commentary on St Paul's Epistles; a Treatise de Lege; two Books of Christian Padoxes; a Dialogue de humanæ vitæ conditione & tollenda corporum aegritudine ad Matthiam Corvinum Regem; three Books de ratione scribendi. This last Work was very much praised by Sebastian Corradus. 'Quamvis penè cæcus, certe lippus, ex ea (Rhetorica) præcepta collegit, & à ratione dicendi ad rationem scribendi tam docte transtulit, & tam diligentur accommodavit, ut verissime de eo scripserit Seb. Corradus, nihil neque majorem suorum memoria, neque sua, doctius aut elegantius in ea scriptum videri (1). ----- Though he was almost blind, at least sore eyed, he gathered Precepts from that (Rhetoric) and transferred them so learnedly from the manner of speaking to the manner of writing, and adapted them so carefully, that Sebastian Corradus said very truly of him, that there was nothing writ more learnedly or elegantly in the Memory either of his Ancestors himself. König, from whom I have these Words

Words, had not done amiss if he had told us where Corradus spake so; for one would never conjecture that those Words are prefixed to Brandolini's three Books de ratione scribendi, reprinted at Basil in the Year 1565, since Mr König speaks of that Edition immediately after, without saying any thing to shew that Sebastian Corradus was concerned in it. I shall therefore add a Passage which will serve for a Supplement to the other. 'Hoc pacto fere Lippus Brandolinus; vir suæ ætatis doctissimus, si non cæcus certe insigniter lippus, libros de ratione scribendi concinnaverat, Rhetoricen à clarissimo Hungarorum Rege Matthia Corvino evocatus, in Pannonia professus, teste Sebastiano Corrado (2), præstantis eruditionis viro.
'In like manner Lippus Brandolinus, the most learned Man of his Time, if not blind, yet certainly extremely sore eyed, writ his Books de ratione scribendi, when he was Professor of Rhetoric in Pannonia, whither he was invited by Matthias Corvinus, the most serene King of Hungary, as Sebastianus Corradus, a Man of extraordinary Learning, testifies. I take this from a Piece where mention is made of several learned blind Men: It is intitled, Dissertationcula de cæcis sapientia ac eruditione claris, mirique cæcorum quorundam adio- nibus. You will see the Author's Name, and the Year of the Impression, in the Margin (3).

[B] Moreri's Faults are not so considerable as his Omissions.] I find but two in the Edition of Lyons 1688, the one is that Lippus is put instead of Lippus: the other is that descript. Aug. is put for de Scriptor. Augustinianis. Those two Faults are worse in the Dutch Editions; for instead of Lippus they have put Lupus, and instead of Aug. they have put Angl. This last mistake may persuade the Readers that Elisius and Pamphilus have composed some Books concerning the English Writers. I very much suspect two other Faults of Moreri. I believe he is mistaken when he says after Miræus, that the Treatises de humana conditione, de ratione scribendi, and de paradoxis Christianis, were dedicated to Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, and printed since at Basil in the Year 1498. The first of those two facts seems to me to be false as to the two last Treatises. Neither do I believe that the Paradoxes were printed at Basil in the Year 1498, for I see in Gesner's Bibliotheca that the first Impression is of the Year 1543. Paradoxa Christiana nunc primum excusa 1543. in 8vo. Basileæ apud Rob. Winter (4).

(3) Georgius Trinklhus Obrusf. Thuring. Gymn. Rathen Gerani Contrictor, in dissertationcula de cæcis sapientia ac eruditione claris, &c. fol. B 2. It was printed at Gera, in the Year 1672, in 4to.

(4) Gesner, Biblioth. fol. 483.

(2) Epistola ad S. P. Q. Rheginensem tribus Brandolini libris ab Operino excusis præmissa.

(a) See the Preface to his Commentary upon the Aphorisms of Hippocrates in Gesner Biblioth. fol. 62.

(b) Gesner takes notice of the Basil Edition, in Folio, of 1542. See his Biblioth. fol. 62.

(c) Gesner, ibid.

(1) In pag. 78.

(2) See Simleri Epitome Biblioth. Gesneri, p. 63, Edit. Tigurinae An. 1583, in Folio.

(3) Joubert Erreurs populaires, liv. 1, chap. 18, pag. 39.

(4) Id. ibid. pag. 40.

(5) In Jovianus Pontanus, lib. vi, de Sermonibus, cap. 17, pag. 1727.

BRASAVOLUS (ANTONIUS MUSA), Physician and Professor at Ferrara, flourished before the middle of the XVIth Century; he taught Logic eight Years, and Natural Philosophy nine Years, in the University of Ferrara; after which he applied himself to the Explication of the Theory of Physic (a). The Commentaries which he wrote on the Aphorisms of Hippocrates (b) were well esteemed. He wrote several other Books on the Nature of Medicines, and the Method of preparing them [A]. He used the Form of a Dialogue between himself and an old Apothecary. His Style is clear and simple, and without any affectation of Ornament (c). He was very impertinently introduced by Laurence Joubert, in the Story of a Buffoon [B]. His Work on the Pox was judged very contemptible by John de Renou, a French Physician [C]. Jerom Brasavolus his Son was a Physician, and published something [D].

[A] He wrote several other Books on Medicines, and the Method of preparing them.] His Examen omnium Simplicium quorum usus est in Publicis Officiis was printed at Rome in the Year 1536, in Folio; and at Lyons in 1544, 8vo. You will find in Lindinius Renovatus (1) the different Editions of the Examen omnium Symplicum, Linæum, Pulverum, Electuariorum, Confessionum Catbarticarum, Catapotiorum, vel Pitularum, Theracisicorum, Unguentorum, &c. The Epitome of the Bibliotheca of Gesner gives the Titles of several other Works of Brasavolus, whether they had been printed, or not printed at that time (2). I have mentioned one in the Remark [D] of the Article GONZAGUE (LUCRETIA).

[B] He is very impertinently introduced by Laurence Joubert in the Story of a Buffoon.] Joubert says, that Alphonse Duke of Ferrara having asked of what Trade there were most People; Gonelle his Buffoon laid a Wager with him that there were more Physicians than other sort of People (3). He feigned the next day that he had got the Tooth-ach, and set down in his Table-book every one that told him a Remedy: the Duke was put in the List, for he had said to Gonelle, I know a thing that will put thee immediately out of pain though the Tooth be decayed; Mr Antonio Musa Brasavolo, my Physician, never uses a better. Do so and so and you will be immediately well (4). I omit the rest; you may find it in the Collections of Jests; I only say that Joubert was not well acquainted with the date of the Fact: it was before the time of Brasavolus, and of Alphonse Duke of Ferrara. This Gonelle was Buffoon to Nicolas d'Est, Marquis of Ferrara, and we read all the Story in a Writer of this kind of Stories; they are carried from Age to Age, and from Country to Country; but an exact Author ought to keep to the Source.

[C] His Work on the Pox was judged very contemptible by John de Renou, a French Physician.] I beg leave to recite the very Words of his Translator; they have not the Politeness of the present time, but every Age has its manner. I do by no means approve that this Author should out of spite forget Modesty, spite I say to see that the Italians call the Pox the French Disease. 'It is a Distemper, says he (5), which 'till the Year 1493 was entirely unknown in Europe; the Italian Companies and Servants of Christopher Columbus brought it from the Indies about that time, and communicated it presently to the Women of Italy, who prostituting themselves to our French during the Siege of Naples, they infected immediately all that had to do with them: whence it followed that the French, after they had taken the City of Naples, returning home in confusion gave this Distemper also to a great number of other Italian Women, which they lay with here and there in diverse places of Italy, who also communicated it to their Husbands, being willing to acquit themselves of their matrimonial Duty. . . . At which the Italians, being extremely enraged at the French Nation, have, out of spite, and to revenge themselves for the Affront, called the Disease of Naples the French Disease. So that the Titles of the Books, which they have since wrote on that Subject, carry in them the Vengeance of their Courage, and the disorderly Life of their Wives, which makes me believe also that Brasavolus finding himself touched, as it were by Tradition, with the Injury of his supposed Predecessors, (I say supposed because possibly from the Spawn of some Frenchman) has wrote a certain little Book on the French Disease, in which he makes Two hundred and thirty four sorts of it; but I believe that the good Man doted when he writ the Book, or else he was willing that Posterity should know, that at the first Bout which our Frenchmen had with his Relations and Neighbours, there were Two hundred and thirty four of them done over; and for as much as they never were so well matched as then, he thought it was his Duty to leave us these eternal Memorials to raise our Frenchmen's Appetites to return thither again, and when they were there, to do the like Favour to all the Women they could meet with.' How flat and ridiculous this!

[D] JEROM BRASAVOLUS, his Son ----- published something.] An Exposition on the first Book of Hippocrates's Aphorisms, printed at Ferrara,

(6) Jean de Renou Antidotaire, liv. II, cap. xxi, pag. 602, in Leurs de Serres's French Translation, printed at Lyons, in 1637, in Folio.

(7) See Lindnerus Renovatus, pag. 113.
(8) Pag. 78.

Ferrara, in 1595, in 4to, and a Treatise De Officiis Medicis, printed at the same Place, in the Year 1590 (7), and in the Year 1599, in 4to. I find in Lindnerus Renovatus (8), A Commentary on the first Aphorism of Hippocrates, printed at Ferrara in 1594, and attributed to Antonius Musa Brasavolus. I rather think it is a Treatise of Jerom Brasavolus, as it is said to be in the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library.

(a) He is called Braunius in the Epitome of the Bibliotheca of Gieser, pag. 265, and Brauns in the Athenae Belgicae of Swertius, pag. 269. Note, the Bodleian Catalogue makes of this Mantua Authors, George Braun and George Braunius.

BRAUN (GEORGE), in Latin Braunius (a), Archdeacon of Dortmund, and Dean of our Lady in Gradibus at Cologne, lived 'till the beginning of the XVIIth Century. He published a Latin Oration against the Priests that kept Concubines, in the Year 1566. He wrote also the Life of Jesus Christ, and that of the Holy Virgin, and a Treatise of Controversy against the Protestants [A], which was printed at Cologne in the Year 1605 in 8vo; but his principal Work is the Theatrum Urbium, in several Volumes in Folio (b). He was at Antwerp at the time of the Insurrection of the People, on the thirteenth of March 1567, and relates how the Lutherans joined with the Catholics to resist the Calvinists (c). All the Accounts of that dreadful Action agree as to that Union. I shall extract from his Work of Controversy some Facts, which relate to the establishment of Lutheranism in the City of Dortmund [B], and to the Variations of the Confession of Augsburg [C].

(b) Swertii Athenae Belgicae, pag. 269.

(c) Braunius in Catholicorum Tremonensium Defensione, fol. 218, verso.

[A] He wrote a Treatise of Controversy against the Protestants. This is the Title, Catholicorum Tremonensium adversus Lutheranicam ibidem factionis Praedicantes Defensio: in qua legitimae rationes & causae explicantur ob quas Catholicae Ecclesiae in qua nati, Christo initiati & educati, confessione deserta, Augustanam assumere & profiteri nequeant. The Occasion which determined George Braun to publish this Work was, that the Magistrates of Dortmund (Tremonia in Latin), an Imperial City of the Circle of Westphalia, and the Diocese of Cologne, made a Decree the seventh of October 1603, that all the Inhabitants, who would not subscribe to the Confession of Augsburg, should be deprived of Liberty of Conscience. Braun urged ten reasons against this Decree. I shall touch a little of the first, because they are historical Points, of which the Readers, whatever dislike they may have to Controversy, may be glad to be informed.

[B] I shall extract from his Book of Controversy some facts, which relate to the Establishment of Lutheranism in the City of Dortmund. The Author represents to the Lutheran Ministers, that they ought to remember the first Step which their Ancestors took to introduce their Faith into the City of Dortmund. It was to present a Petition to the Magistrate, by which they humbly desired Liberty of Conscience, the Communion in both kinds, and a particular Chapel in the Parish Church, without pretending to give the least Disturbance in the World to the Catholic Religion, the public Exercise whereof was established in all the Churches of the City. And promising further, to live in submission to their Superiors, both Civil and Ecclesiastical, who were then of the Roman Communion. A Chapel was allowed them where they might communicate in both kinds. Some time after they obtained one of the Parish Churches, and the Liberty of singing in German. The Preacher who officiated there banished the Mass. He had been a Monk, he drew a great Number of Auditors, and succeeded so well that he established Lutheranism in all the other Parishes except that of St Nicolas; but that also fell some time after into the Power of a Lutheran Minister (1) who preached violently against the Priests. The Author observes that at the time of the Treaty of Passau (2), and a little after the Peace of the Religion had been concluded (3), there was no other than the Romish Religion prevailed in the City and County of Dortmund, but that it was suppressed there, and Lutheranism established by public Authority in the Year 1582, when the principal Magistrates and Patricians were absent on account of the Contagion, those who would oppose the Novelty proving to be the weaker Side. When the Confession of Augsburg was thus publicly authorized, it was not hard for the Ministers to fix it, and make it triumph throughout the whole City, till they had obtained the Decree I have mentioned (4). The Author compares the Conduct of the Lutherans in this Affair to a Wedge, the thinnest Part of which being once entered into a piece of Wood serves by little and little to introduce the thickest parts till the Wood be quite split. 'Talem procedendi modum amplexi estis, quem cuneo, cum Stanislao Hosio, comparo.

(1) Named Herman Emblinghoff.

(2) In 1552.

(3) In 1555.

(4) Ex Georgii Braunii Casus primus, pag. 3, etc.

ravero. Is prima parte tenuis, ita ut in lignum impactus magnam ligni disruptionem non videatur esse facturus; & tamen prima hac sua tenuitate aditum facit sequenti crassitie, adeo ut cum prima pars illa admittitur & recepta fuerit, sensim ac paulatim sequentia crassiora admittantur, donec solidum lignum penitus decussum disruptumque fuerit. Hujus cunei primam ac tenuiorem partem, apud vos Tremonenses, primam supplicationem ac petitionem vestram dixero, qua Calicem separatim in unicum tantum sacellum introduxistis. Is receptus, altera pars cunei crassior, tantum Germanicum & unius Parochiae occupationem extorsit, ex qua novus novi verbi Minister ac Praedicans legitimum Evangelicae Legis ac Catholicae sacerdotium ac iuge sacrificium sustulit, pedetentim, juxta Lutheri vaticinium, progrediendo (5). ----- You have taken such a Method of proceeding, as I, with Stanislao Hosius, will compare to a Wedge, that is thin at the first end, so that when it is driven into a Piece of Wood it does not seem as if it would make any great Rupture, and yet by it's thinness at first it makes way for the following thickness, so that when the first part is admitted and received, the following thick parts are insensibly, and by little and little, admitted, till the whole Timber is intirely rent and torn in pieces. The first and thin part of this Wedge, amongst you of Dortmund, I call your first Supplication and Petition, by which you introduced the Cap, separately, into one Chappel only: that received, the other thicker part of the Wedge extorted singing in German, and the Possession of one Parish, from which the new Minister and Preacher of the new Word took away the lawful Priesthood, and pure Sacrifice of the Evangelical and Catholic Law, proceeding, step by step, according to the Prediction of Luther.

(5) Braunius, ibid. pag. 4.

It is certain, that one of the Pretenses of those who oppose new Religions, is to say that we must not trust the Humility which appears in the respectful Demands which they make at first to be barely tolerated. That it is the Language of a Man who will enter like a Fox, and reign like a Lion, and that they have a Zeal which has an extraordinary Resemblance to Ambition. A private Man, who is ambitious, will be content at first to be advanced five or six steps, soon after he will desire as much more. And then he would be equal to his Principals, and afterwards surpasses them. A new Sect seem as if they would think themselves very happy if they obtain only Liberty of Conscience, but after a few Months that will not suffice them, they desire to be admitted to some Offices, and afterwards to share half the Government; and lastly, to be Masters, and will not allow the rest what they obtained of them by favour (6). Those who take literally the Command of JESUS CHRIST Compelle intrare, Compel them to come in, imagine that nothing is more justifiable than that Conduct; but it has been shewn that they are grossly mistaken, and that they expose Christianity to the just Detestation of all the World (7).

(6) I have recited, in Remark [C], of the Article A.B.B.A.S., the Words of Charles IX.

Most of the other Reasons of George Braun are taken either from the Divisions, which prevailed among the Sectaries, or from the Confession, which

(7) See the Philosophical Commentary upon Compel them to come in, Part I, chap. v.

H h

several Ministers had made, that the new Reformation had augmented the Disorders of Mankind; he cites a great deal: I know not whether he cites faithfully, but what he cites has been a thousand and a thousand times objected by the Roman Catholics: and Answers have not been wanting.

[C] — And to the Variations of the Confession of Augsburg.] It is the Subject of the fourth reason of George Braun. He says, I. That the Original German, and the Original Latin of the Confession of Augsburg, presented to the Emperor, and to the Diet of the Empire, in the Year 1530, differ both as to the Words and Sense in almost every Article (8). II. That Melancthon printed it in Latin and German, at Wittenberg, in the beginning of the Year 1531, but that he varied from the Original, especially with regard to the tenth Article, which relates to the Holy Supper. III. That in the same Year, in the same City, and in the same Printing-House, Luther and Melancthon got two Editions printed in Latin, one in 4to, the other in 8vo, which were extremely unlike both as to the Terms and the things. IV. That the Edition in Quarto admits Transubstantiation, and proves it by the Canon of the Greek Mass, and by Theophylact, but that the Edition in 8vo contains nothing of that, and that for that reason Hespeus, Pappus, and other Lutheran Preachers reject the Edition in 4to, and condemn it as Popish. V. That the German Editions, made under the Direction of Melancthon at Wittenberg in the Year 1531, and at Nuremberg in the Year 1532, differ from the Original, and from the two first Latin Editions, in several Points. VI. That every time the Confession was put to the Press, Alterations were made in it. VII. That he was blamed for it by the rigid Lutherans, as appears by the Conference of Altembourg, where they enquired which was the true Confession of Augsburg, and which was spurious, where the Partisans of Melancthon acknowledged that, with the Consent of Luther, in 1538, in 1540, and in 1541, he had altered, corrected, and augmented the Confession, and the Apology for the Confession. VIII. That after the Death of these two Heads of the Party, they continued making Alterations in the Confession of Augsburg till the Year 1580, and that the Lutherans knew nothing of any Edition conformable to the original German, and the original Latin. IX. That they began to open their Eyes, and not being able to find the true Original in the Cabinets of their Ministers, they desired of the Archbishop of Mayence the original German, which had been presented to the Diet of the Empire, in the Year 1530, and was kept in the Chancery of the Empire, and that having obtained it they at last published in the German Tongue, for the first time, the true and genuine Confession of Augsburg in the Year 1580. 'Germanicum ejus originale, quod Moguntiae in Cancellaria Imperii inter acta comitiorum Augustanorum ab anno 1530, usque ad eum ipsum annum 1580, delitescens cum blattis & tinea rixabatur, ab Archiepiscopo & Electore Moguntino emendicantur, ac tum primum genuinam Germanicam Confessionem integra fide excusam publicantur (9).' X. That the Latin Apology, according to the Original, was not published till 1587, as we learn from David Chytreus, who had the Care of it. XI. That the Latin Confession, and the German Apology, as they were presented to the Emperor, with the German Confession in the Year 1530, at the Diet of Augsburg were never yet printed (10). I shall make a small Remark on the tenth Fact. David Chytreus has inserted in the Work cited by Braun, that is to say, in the History of the Confession of Augsburg, the true and unspurious Apology, according to the first Impression by George Rheu at Wittenberg in the Year 1531. Now this Work of David Chytreus was printed before the Year 1587; for I have the French Version of it, printed at Antwerp in the Year 1582. I know not whether David Chytreus, after he had published the Original of that Version, published a second Edition in the Year 1587, in which he inserted the Apology according to the first Manuscript of Melancthon; if so, there is nothing to be said against George Braun.

Observe, that Luke le Cop, who translated that Work of Chytreus into French, and was Member of the Lutheran Church at Antwerp, observes in his Epistle Dedicatory, that the Confession of Augsburg as it was translated into French, and afterwards printed some where in the Year 1566, is so disguised that it ought not to be acknowledged for what the Title imports. Observe also, that the Bishop of Meaux has taken a great deal of Pains to set forth the Alterations of the Lutheran Confession, and the Apology (11); but I do not believe that he advances all the Facts which Braunius has recited. Hospinian, who has given a very large detail of that Matter (12), was the Bishop of Meaux's Original.

BRAUNBOM (FREDERIC) (a), a Protestant Author, and a German, published in 1613, with great Ostentation, a Book, which he thought full of new Discoveries, on the Explication of the Prophecies of the Old and New Testament [A]. He determined all the Periods of the Reign of Antichrist; his Birth, his Youth, the highest pitch of his Strength, the beginning of his Decline, his decrepit Age, and his Death. By his account Antichrist was born in the Year 86, and he was in the state of Adolescence in the Year 376, at the Age of Manhood in 636, in the highest Prosperity in the Year 711; he begun to decline in 1086, his Decay, and the Adolescence of the Reformed Church, fell in the Year 1376; the decrepit State of the former, and the full Strength of the latter, was to happen in the Year 1636. Antichrist was to die in the Year 1640, and the end of the World

[A] He published -- a Book which he thought full of new Discoveries on the Explication of the Prophecies of the old and new Testament.] The Title of this Book is Florum Flaminiorum Romanensium, Bapalium sive Papalium Decas una, inter quas inspersae Notae Anafceasticae in disputationem Martini Becani Antiesuidae Moguntini de Antichristo reformato, una cum Chronologia totius sacrae Scripturae nova, absoluta, &c. Hanoviae 1613 (1), in 4to. 'I dare affirm, says he, that I clear up certain Things which were not known before, that I prove the Truth of Propositions which others had advanced; that I correct Falsities, that I settle what was before uncertain (2); the first Reformers, continues he, understood not the Revelation. Neither Daniel himself, nor the Angel which instructed him, nor the Soul of Jesus CHRIST, understood the Numbers of this Prophet. Liber Apocalypsis non est intellectus initio reformationis aut parum pro evangelico habitus, & sinistra illa veterum suspicio de hoc sacro volumine antiquata est & sublata per Ecclesiam. Verum id qui-dem, sed primipilis nostris suspecta erat Ecclesia, nec injuria, licet hoc non in loco (3). -- Non Daniel ipse, non Angelus Danielis instructor, non anima Salvatoris plena Sapientia, numeros Danielicos intellexit, quia non curavit, nondum enim tempus, nec ideo Apostolis curandi (4). -- The Book of Revelations was not understood in the beginning of the Reformation, or hardly taken for Canonical, and the Suspicion of the Ancients in prejudice of this sacred Volume is removed by the Church. That is true indeed, but the Church was suspected by our first Leaders, and not without cause, though in this place. -- Daniel himself, nor the Angel who instructed him, nor the Soul of our Saviour, who had the Fulness of Wisdom, understood Daniel's Numbers, because he did not take notice of them, for it was not yet time for him, and therefore not for the Apostles to take notice of it.' This nevertheless is what our Author boasts he has explained clearly and with all the Success in the World (5).

[B] Here

(8) Braunius Defensio Catholicorum Tremonensium, pag. 55, 56.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 91.

(10) Taken from the Defensio Catholicorum Tremonensium of Braunius, pag. 55, &c.

(11) See Tom. I. of his Histoire des Variations in the Places referred to in the Table of matters under the Word Augsburg.

(12) See Tom. II. of his Historia Sacramentaria.

(a) And not French, as in Konig.

(1) The Bibliotheca of Draudius observes, pag. 166, of the Edition of Hanau, apud Haeredes Aubrianos, 1615, in 4to, and pag. 459, Edit. of Francfort, apud Weckelianos, 1618, in 4to. Observe, that that of 1613 is printed at Hanau.

(2) Braunius, pag. 9, apud Contzen in Tractatu cui Titulus de Haereseon incrementis.

(3) Id. ibid. pag. 22, apud eundem, pag. 55.

(4) Id. pag. 27, 28, apud eundem pag. 558.

(5) See fine peremptorio successu, pag. 5, apud eundem, pag. 558.

World should be in the Year 1711. We shall see below some other Particulars of that Work [B]. It is not necessary to observe that Braunbom applies to the Papacy, whatever he found in the Scripture concerning Antichrist and the great Whore :
I shall

[B] Here are some other Particulars of that Work. We find there a new beginning of the Christian Era; the Author was so pleased with the Invention that he exhorts all Christians to bless God for it: Gaudete mecum & laudate Deum quoties estis Christiani: inveni Annum Nativitatis Christi qui perierat (6). This fine Discovery conflicts in placing the Nativity of our Saviour ten Years sooner than it is commonly placed, and by this he is obliged to say that JESUS CHRIST was baptized in the fifth Year of Tiberius, notwithstanding St Luke places it in the fifteenth Year of that Emperor (7). He remedies this by supposing, that St Luke reckons from the time that Tiberius was made Colleague of the Emperor; he founds his new Chronology on five Arguments; I shall not recite them, nor the Answers that have been made to them (8).

(6) Id. apud eundem, pag. 558.

(7) Luke iii. 1.

(8) The Jesuit Contzen refuted him in a Book quoted above, Cist. (2).

(9) He that is mentioned in the Book of Judges, chap. iii. who killed the King of Moab.

(10) Contzen, de Hæreson, incremento, pag. 556.

The Title of his fifth Chapter of the tenth Book is Mandatum divinum de Pontifice evertendo. --- A Commandment from GOD to ruin the Papacy. He affirms in this Chapter that every Protestant has received a public Order, like that which Ehud (9) received in private: Ubi publicum præceptum habere omnes Calvinistas asserit quale Ehud habuit privatum & ne desit concitandæ seditioni verba Apoc. xvi. 4, 5, 6, 7, Germanicè recitat. Omnia igitur supplicia irrogare jubet, exurere, carnes edere, nullum supplicium nimium putare (10). 'Where he asserts that all the Calvinists have a public Command, such as Ehud had a private one, and that he may not want Words to stir up Sedition, he recites in German the xviii. of Revelations, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th, Verses. Therefore he commands them to exercise all Punishments, to burn them, to eat their Flesh, and think no Torture too great.' I leave you to judge whether the Jesuit who answered him spared him on these sanguinary Notions. See below Remark [C] towards the end. He made an Objection to his Hypothesis that Popery should perish in 1641. 'The Protestant Princes may then, says he, spare their Preparations for War, since the Pope is not to perish 'till 1641, and then he will necessarily perish: It is then a foolish piece of Work in Mr du Plessis to exhort the King of England to equip a Fleet to go and destroy Rome.' 'Hoc monere amicè possum & debeo, periculo, sumptu, labore bellandi posse superfedere Principes adversæ Religionis; non enim nisi anno 1641 morietur Pontifex & certè tum morietur. Militari itaque soliditate Plessæus Sereniss. Magnæ Britannæ Monarcham hortatur, classem instruat, naviget Italiam, Romam exurat, Pontificem mactet, carnes edat: præmatura sunt vetuli militis consilia, nam ut vita in Annum 1641 suppetat Regi serenissimo & Plessæo, 37 annorum bellum in Italia sustinere tres Insulæ queant, meriti dubitare posse videntur Proceres Britannii' (11). --- This I may and ought to advise them, friendly, that the Princes of the contrary Religion may spare the Danger, Expence, and Trouble of making War, for the Pope will not die 'till the Year 1641, and then he will certainly die; therefore it is a piece of military Folly in du Plessis to exhort the most serene King of Great Britain to fit out a Fleet, sail to Italy, burn Rome, kill the Pope, and eat his Flesh: the Counsel of the old Soldier is a little too hasty; for suppose the most serene King and du Plessis should live to the Year 1641, yet there is some Reason for the British Lords to doubt whether the three Islands can bear a Thirty seven Years War in Italy.' This Objection is of no Force; for, I. In the first place, neither the Princes who were preparing for War, nor Monsieur du Plessis Mornai, who animated them to it, did rely on the Visions of our Braunbom. II. In the second place, there could be nothing more likely to persuade them to make Preparations for War, than the Opinion that Popery should come to an end in the Year 1641. There is nothing animates Persons more than an Assurance that an Enterprize will succeed. No body imagined that Popery would fall by it's own Crazels, without some external Force to give it a hard Shock; they imagined on the contrary, that in order to execute the Predictions with more Expedition, they ought to employ all human means, and commonly it is the end and design of those who ballot the Numbers of the Apocalypse, and at last fix the time for Revolutions, to encourage Princes to undertake War. Some give no Credit to the Explications which they themselves publish; they print them only to serve for a Spur to ambitious Princes. Others believe them, but in such a manner, that they become thereby more ardent and active to move all the Springs of the human Passions, and all the Machines necessary for the Execution of great Designs; few People trust Providence less than they, who boast that they have fathomed the depth of his Decrees, and the Riddles of the Prophets.

(11) Id. ibid., pag. 581.

I believe that many Persons, who made no great Account of Braunbom's Prophecies when they first appeared, changed their Opinion when Gustavus Adolphus had subdued so many Towns in Germany. They thought it very probable that Popery would be in it's decrepit Estate in the Year 1636, and that it would fall intirely in the Year 1641. And thus they conceived a particular Esteem for the Writer; but that vanished in two or three Years after. They had begun to think that Gustavus would be another Alaric, and another Totila, who would destroy Rome, and execute upon the Pope the Menaces of so many Commentators on the Apocalypse. His Death in 1632, and the Victory gained by the Imperialists at Norlingen, in the Year 1634, dissipated all these fine Imaginations. If Braunbom had chosen the Year 1632, instead of the Year 1636, he would not have been so far beside his Mark; for not only in Germany, but also in the Spanish Netherlands, the Protestants became Masters of several Cities in the Year 1632; but that still was not a Reduction of Popery to a decrepit State. The Protestants took Cities, but made no Converts. The number of Roman Catholics diminished but little; a Controvertist took notice of this to Mr du Moulin, who had wrote to Balzac during the Conquests of Gustavus, that the Reformed Religion made very great Progress in the Netherlands and Germany. 'De Belgio equidem suadeo, ne Molinæus plus nimio gloriatur; nam est potius sint Batavi non ita pridem Sylva Ducis, Ruemunda, Trajecto, & Limburgo, attamen plurimi & præcipui avitæ Religionis sunt retinentissimi, & dummodo excipiantur advenæ & milites,

Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto, dum hæretica fit Concio. Leodii propinquâ urbe habito, neque rem incognitam scribo. Item ea pars Germaniæ, quam Sueci & principes cum iis fœderati ad Rhenum & ad Mosenum occupaverunt, Hæresum verius dixerim patitur quam proficitur (12). --- As to the Low Countries, I advised du Moulin not brag too fast; for though the Dutch have lately got Boisdud, Roërmund, Maelricht, and Limburg, yet most, and the better sort, of the People stick very close to their old Religion, and, except only the Strangers and Soldiers, (12) Silvester, à Petra Sancta, in Notis in Epist. Molinæi ad Balzacum, pag. 73. Edit. Antwerp. An. 1634.

They here and there are floating seen in the heretical Assemblies. I dwell at Liege, a Town just by, and so do not write a thing that I am not acquainted with; likewise that part of Germany, which the Swedes, and the Princes in Alliance with them, have conquered on the Rhine and the Maine, may rather be said to suffer than to profess Heresy. Besides, Braunbom did not believe that That Ruin of Antichrist was to happen without the Assistance of a powerful Confederacy. These four Verses he used to sing upon the Subject:

Dalmata

I shall observe that he published his Work the same Year that, according to other Divines, the World was to be at an end [C]. This furnishes me with a Digression against

Dalmata & Englandus, Francus, Germanus, & Illyr, Hi venient Romam dilaniare suam.
Quid facient Italus, Lusitanus? quid, nisi plangent Emptricem mercis dispersisse suæ (13).

(13) Braunbom, apud Contzen de Hæreson Incre-
mento, pag. 610.

From England, Istria, Germany, and France,
And from Dalmatia shall the People flock,
And each Man raise his Share of bated Rome,
Whilst Italy and Portugal bewail
The Fall of her who purchas'd all their Wares.

I know not whether he lived long enough to be witness of the Falsity of his Prediction in relation to the Death of Antichrist, but I believe, that if he was alive in the Year 1637, he continued as bold as ever; for it is very common for those, who are rash enough to take too short a Term, to make it up with Assurance, and some frivolous Subterfuge, when they find themselves contradicted by the Event. He was wiser as to the end of the World; he put that off to a time he knew very well he should not live to (14).

(14) Compare
this with what Mr de Bauval says in his Histoire des Ouvrages
des Savans, June
1702, pag. 252.

[C] He published his Work the same Year, in which, according to other Divines, the World was to be at an end. They thought that because all the Letters of the word Judicium are numeral, and make 1613, that the last Judgment would be in the Year 1613. 'Nostrum hoc seculo ex vocali JUDICIUM, in quo omnes literæ sunt numerales, non pauci collegerunt anno 1613 judicium ultimum & universale futurum, eoque videtur D. Menzerus etiam Theologus Giesiensis celeberrimus, & ab omni quidem Fanaticismo prorsus alienus, collimasse in Dedicatione Exegetico Augustanæ Confessionis quam hinc voluit claudere verbis: Anno a nato Christo millesimo sexcentesimo decimo tertio quem enumerat vox jam olim omnia JUDICIUM (15). — In our time from the word JUDICIUM, in which all the Letters are numeral, several have concluded that the last universal Judgment should come in the Year 1613; and D. Menzerus, a noted Divine of Gießen, and intirely free from any Fanaticism, seems to have alluded to that in his Dedication of the Exposition of the Confession of Ausburg, which he hath closed with these words: In the Year of CHRIST, One thousand six hundred and thirteen, which is the Number contained in the ominous word JUDICIUM. A fine Reason indeed! those who built upon it deserved at least to live till 1614, on condition that they would humble themselves at the Sight of their Error.

(15) Andr. Carolus Memoir.
Ecclesiast. Sæculi
xvii, lib. ii, cap.
xi, pag. 321.

What is surprizing is, that the ill Success of an infinite Number of Commentators on the Apocalypse, does not hinder others from falling into the same Temerity (16). We see that it is a Den like that of the sick Lion; a great many go there, but no body comes back, that is, with the Treasure they went to seek: ought not they to have remembered the Fox in Æsop.

(16) See the Article STIPHENE-LIUS.

Olim quod Vulpes ægroto cauta leoni
Respondit referam: quia me vestigia terrent
Omnia adversum spectantia, nulla retrorsum (17).

(17) Horat. Epist.
i, lib. i, ver. 73.

My Answer must be what fly Reynard said
To the sickly Lion, I'm afraid
Great King of Beasts, for all the Treads, I see,
Are to thy Den, none back, that frightens me.

CREECH.

Ought not one to take good care not to come into that Cavern, where so many have been, and returned without the Sybilline Branch, without the Information expected? Notwithstanding, the Voyage is as often undertaken as ever, and no regard paid to those, who represent that there is no Return from thence; that it is like the Grave, and cry with all their Might, you are going

----- per iter tenebricosum,
Illuc, unde negant
Redire quenquam (18).

(18) Catal. Epigram. iii.

A dark and gloomy way unto the Place,
From whence no Traveller returns.

They embark every Day on this Sea, as if it were not noted for thousands of Shipwrecks.

A Minister of Rotterdam published in 1686, An Accomplishment of the Prophecies, in which he gave out, among other things, that what Joseph Mede said, that the Duration of the corrupt should be 1260 Years, and that the Duration of the pure Church was to be 360, seemed to him inspired (19). Joseph Mede adds, that we may begin these 360 Years, I. Either from the Birth of JESUS CHRIST; II. Or from the Time of his Passion; III. Or from the Time of the Destruction of Jerusalem; IV. or lastly, From the Time that St John prophesied (20). Which ever Account we take, the Minister of Rotterdam owns, that the Business answers very well as to the Epoche of Antichristianism (21); but nevertheless, the first Calculation and the second have proved false; for Antichristianism, which, according to the first Calculation, was to have ended in the Year 1620, and according to the second in 1653 or 1654, was still in being in 1686 (22). And since it subsists at the time when I write this in the Year 1702, the third Calculation, by which it was to end in 1690, was no better than the two first. The Minister suspected it. 'It does not appear, says he (23), that things are ripe, at this Day, for so great an Event; we must not imagine that the Empire of Antichrist and Idolatry will fall so easily, and be destroyed in four or five Years.' He fixes upon the fourth Calculation, and gives it for true; from whence he concludes, that the Reign of Antichrist will end in the Year 1710, or in some of the Years following to the Year 1714 (24); so he expresses himself in Page 22; and there are his Words in Page 28. 'We will place the approaching Fall of the Empire of Antichrist in the beginning of the XVIIIth Century. I believe it would be difficult to pitch upon the precise Year; for God in his Prophecies is not so exact, a few Years under or over make no difference; yet we may say that it ought to happen between the Year 1710, and the Year 1715 (25). This Empire, says he in Page 33, was born about the Year 450; it will die about the Year 1710, just 1260 Years after its Birth. This may happen sooner; for the Roman Empire under Valentinian, whom I reckon the last of the Roman Emperors, was already very much dismembered; but I do not see that it can go any farther, unless perhaps to the year 1714, to reckon the 1260 Years from the Death of Valentinian; this I own seems to me something more than bare conjecture (26).'

PROPHETICAL
Calculations of Mont. Jurieu
refuted.

(19) Jurieu Accompl. des Prophetes, Tom. II,
cap. ii, pag. 20,
of Edit. 1.

(20) Id. ibid.

(21) Id. pag. 21.

(22) Id. pag. 22.

(23) Id. pag. 29.

(24) Id. pag. 22.

(25) Id. pag. 25.

(26) Id. pag. 33.

A Man who had been wise enough to have profited by the Errors of another, would have abandoned Joseph Mede as to his fourth Calculation, as well as to the three first; for is there any thing more scandalous than to say on one hand, that the pure Church should continue 360 Years, and on the other, that these 360 Years should begin in the Year 94 of the Christian Æra. The Church then had not been pure till that time, since its Purity began only in the Year 94; what can be imagined more absurd? It is certain therefore, if Joseph Mede deserves any Credit, that the Duration of the pure Church must have ended in the Year 360, or in the Year 393, and consequently that the Empire of Antichrist would have ended either in the Year 1620, or in the Year 1653. Now it is as flourishing, or rather more so, in the beginning of the XVIIIth Century, as in the Year 1653. Joseph Mede therefore has laid down nothing but Reveries, which ought to have prevented the Minister of Rotterdam from tumbling into the Mire.

The

against those who have so often foretold the approaching Fall of Popery, without taking warning by the Disgrace of their Companions; they ought to be sent to the School of a Pagan Poet, who would not suffer to consult the Babylonian Numbers,

Tu ne quæsieris scire (nefas) quem mihi quem tibi
Finem Dii dederint, Leuconoe: nec Babylonios
Tentâris numeros: — (b)

(b) Horat. Od.
xi, lib. i.

*Ab do not strive too much to know
My dear Luconoe,
What the kind Gods design to do
With thee and me.
Ab do not you consult the Stars,
Contented bear thy Doom, &c.*

and

The Example of this Man ought to be a warning to new Calculators, and yet they continue to foretel. What appearance is there that his fourth Calculation will succeed better than the three first? Let us reflect a little upon this Passage; we shall see at what time Popery should have begun to be cut down. 'If you account these 180 years from the year 1517, the time that Luther began to preach against Popery, that brings us to the year 1697; if you count them from the year 1520, the Date of the Bull of Leo X, that brings us to 1700; take away ten years, because seven times fifty make but 350, and the prophetic year is of 360 Days, or 360 Years; this falls exactly in 1690, and that is the time which I think ought to be the beginning of the Vintage; now the Witenesses shall rise at that time, after which France shall break with the Pope, as I judge, before the end of the Century; and in the beginning of the next, the rest of the Empire of Antichrist shall be totally abolished; so that all comes to my Calculation, which is that we cannot be far from the end of the Empire of Popery (27). We must not forget one of the reasons which made him believe, that the Rupture between the King of France and the Pope would have so speedy, and so happy, Consequences. It is, says he (28), that the Bishops of France have lately declared, that it is not lawful at any time to disobey the King on pretence of Religion. I look upon, continues he, what has happened in England, as another Preparation to this Event. A King of a Religion contrary to that of the State is suffered to reign there peaceably. Providence will accustom the People to submit to Princes who are Enemies to the prevailing Religion. How happy was this Man at Conjectures; he did not know that in two Years time England would drive out her Popish King, which would be a Proof that Providence did not intend to accustom People to submit to a Prince, who was not of their Religion, but rather dispose the French Nation, by a fresh and neighbouring Example, to disobey their King, in case he made any Alteration in Religion. Observe, that this Writer has reckoned several Miracles among the Causes which drove James II out of the Throne (29). He had made therefore an ill Judgment of the Design of Providence; but let us leave that and shew him more directly the Fallhood of his Prophecy.

France has been so far from breaking with the Pope between the year 1690 and the year 1701, that, on the contrary, they are become more Popish. We know the Advantage which Innocent XII obtained, by causing things to be placed on the old foot, in the Year 1693 (30). We know the Complaints which have been published, on the Subject of the Pope's Brief against the Archbishop of Cambray, in 1699. The Minister of Rotterdam himself has maintained, that it is a Bull which absolutely destroys the Liberty of the Gallican Church (31). This is, says he (32), the most terrible Blow that could have been given to the Liberties of the Gallican Church; there they are all destroyed by one single Thunderbolt. Gerson, and his Apologist Rieber, the Jesuit Maimbourg himself, Gerbais, Father Quæfnel, Ellis du Pin, and all the rest, to whom the Quarrel between Innocent XII and King Lewis XIV, had given Courage to lift up their Heads against the Usurpations of the Court of Rome, are overthrown, as well as the great number of Arrêts made by the Court of Parliament for the Preservation of the Liberties of the Gallican Church. So many Regulations, Decisions, and Declarations made by the Clergy of France tending to the same end, all is come to 'nothing.' If that Author had said all that he thought, he would have added, this is also the most terrible Blow that could have been given to my Prophecies. I am sure that the Vexation, which he shews at the Clergy of France (33), is occasioned partly because his Predictions have been so ill seconded by Lewis XIV, and his Prelates. I omit the other Successes which have happened to Popery, between the year 1690 and 1700; the Edict of the Emperor of China in 1692; the IVth Article of the Peace of Ryswic, in 1697; the Cession which the Turk has made of so many Places, by the Treaty of Carlowitz, in 1698. I omit also the Complaints which a Minister of Groningen has given out in a Piece published in 1701 (34), which shew that the Church of Rome has not been weakened in the last ten Years of the XVIIIth Century, and that on the contrary she has oppressed the Protestants in several places (35).

The beginning of the XVIIIth Century has produced nothing prejudicial to the Empire of Popery; the Pope was never so much taken notice of as he is at this Day by the Catholic Princes. The Emperor, the King of France, and the King of Spain, strive who shall make their Court to him best. It is true that the most powerful Protestant States have made a Confederacy, but they think on nothing less than harassing the Court of Rome; they have Affairs to manage which they think more pressing, and if they act against one Catholic Prince, it is only in favour of another Catholic Prince; and in case France should turn her Arms against Rome, they would be the first to send the Pope Succours: so that we do not see that the fourth Calculation is likely to have better Success than the other three. And yet there is Mr Allix, after the ill Success of Mr Jurieu, has entered the Field to declare to the Public, that Antichrist shall perish either in the year 1716, or in the year 1720, or at least in the year 1736 (36). Mr Gurtler, Professor of Divinity at Deventer, does not express himself so exactly; he fixes upon no Year, but he believes that the Apocalyptic Babylon shall fall intirely in the Course of the XVIIIth Century (37). I will observe by the by, that one of Mr Jurieu's Proofs is very weak: 'It is certain, says he (38), that since the year 1620, Images and Saints have lost their Credit prodigiously, and we shall find, since that time, more People, who, even in Popish Countries, disbelieve these false Worship, than were to be found in all Ages before. In like manner the Tyranny of the Pope has been ever since that time manifestly declining. In the last Century the Popes were pretty well recovered of the Blow which the Council of Constance had given them - - - but since the year 1620 - - - the Power of the Pope has been constantly diminishing, and is at this day in such a decayed State, that it will never recover from it any more (39). I shall not trouble myself to ask how

(33) Id. pag. 313.

(34) Mr du Vidal in the Epistle dedicatory of his Book, intitled L'Eglise Romaine pleinement convaincu d'Antichristianisme. - - The Roman Church plainly convicted of Antichristianism. He speaks there of the Oppression the Protestants suffer in the Palatinate, in Mombellard, and in Hungary.

(35) It was written in 1702.

(36) See l'Histoire Mytique des Ouvrages des Savants, April 1701, pag. 234, 235.

(37) Nicol. Gurtlerus in System. Theol. Prophet. cap. xxxiii, pag. 563. Edit. Amsterdam, 1702.

(38) Jurieu Accompl. des Proph. Tom. II, pag. 30, 31.

(39) Ibid. pag. 33.

(27) Id. chap. ix, pag. 143, 144. See chap. xii, pag. 222.

(28) Ibid. chap. xii, pag. 208.

(29) See Lettre Pastorale of Feb. 25, 1689.

(30) See the Remark [B] of the Article OTTO BONI, and Mr Jurieu, pag. 216, of his Traité Hist. sur la Theologie Myst.

(31) Jurien, Traité Histor. sur la Theologie Mystique Art. xvii, pag. 304. (32) Id. ibid. pag. 305, 306.

and who thought that God had very wisely covered in thick Darkness the time that is to come:

Prudens futuri tepmoris exitum
Caliginosâ nocte premit Deus:
Ridetque, si mortalis ultra Fas trepidat. — (c)

(c) Horat. Od.
xxix, lib. iiii.

*Future Events wise Providence
Hath hid in Night from human Sense,
To narrow Bounds our Search confin'd,
And laughs to see proud Mortals try
To fathom deep Eternity,
With the short Line and Plummet of their Mind.*

Observe

(40) In his Preservative, and in his Janſenite convaincu de Vaine Sophisti-querie, where he has endeavoured to prove, that the invocation of Saints is still excessive at this day;
and we have seen
that he complains,
in his Traité de la Theol. Myſt. that the Authority of the Pope has been restored to its first Splendor in France.

(41) Jurien Ac-
compl. des Proph.
Tom. II. cap. v.
pag. 86, 87.

(42) Id. in his Avis a tous les Chrétiens, prefixed to the first Volume, pag. 5.

(43) Id. Tom. II.
cap. xii, pag. 214.

(44) Ibid.

(45) Id. pag. 217.

(46) Id. pag. 218.

(47) Id. pag.
214, 215.

this Minister will reconcile those things with what he has said in other Books (40). I confine myself to this single Consideration: The Bounds set to false Worship, and to the Pretensions of Popes over the Temporals of Kings, are rather a Pledge of the future Duration of Popery, than a Mark of it's approaching Ruin. The nearer an Evil approaches to it's Height, the nearer it approaches to it's End; it cannot stand long at it's highest Pitch; the enormity of Abuses favoured Luther, who probably would have effected nothing against ordinary Evils. If Mr Jurieu will not believe me in that, he ought at least to remember what he has said, 'that the prodigious Advancement of the Papal Authority, which in effect brought Antichristianism to it's Perfection, was nevertheless one step to it's Ruin.' If the Popes had kept themselves within the Bounds, which they had kept in the preceding Centuries; if they had not meddled with the Affairs of the World, to dispose of them absolutely, perhaps we should never have known that the See of Rome is Antichrist: but then that Truth became so obvious, that every body perceived it (41). One would wonder for several reasons, that the Chagrin he was in, when he composed this Work (42), had not presented to him the black and frightful Ideas, which presented themselves to most of the Commentators on the Apocalypse; he has not taken in a literal Sense, those Images of devouring Fire, Blood, and Slaughter, which the Holy Ghost presents in the eighteenth Chapter of the Apocalypse (43); 'Certainly, says he (44), these are not the ways which GOD makes use of to establish his Empire. We ought not to take in a literal Sense the Terms of War, and Destruction, which are here used; for Example, that JESUS CHRIST shall tread the Wine-press of the Wrath of GOD; and that he shall give the Flesh of Kings, of Captains, of mighty Men, of Horſes, and them that sit on them, both bond and free, to the Fowls of the Air, &c. These are Images borrowed from War, and we ought to understand them agreeably to the Nature of that spiritual War, which the Lord JESUS CHRIST shall make against Idolatry, Superſtition, Hereſy, and Tyranny; it is against them that he will fight, and not against Men (45): therefore I am afraid that they are deceived, who hope to render to Babylon what we have received from her, and to fill to her double in the Cup, in which she hath filled to us, i. e. to return her Blood for Blood, Torment for Torment; that is not the Spirit of the Church (46). But notwithstanding, he is of opinion there shall be a great deal of Blood shed; he only qualifies the thing, and that is very commendable. 'I am of opinion, says he (47), that he will suffer the Destruction of Rome, as he did that of Jerusalem. I believe also, that this great change of Religion shall be brought about without Effusion of Blood, as it happened in the last Century; but as the City in this Chapter, and generally in the Apocalypse, comprehends the whole Empire of Babylon, we must not imagine that all that great Extent of Country shall be brought to Desolation.'

Our Braunbom was not so pacific; he would have the Sword to be the principal Instrument of the Destruction of Antichrist. He that answered him took it ill that these barbarous Maxims were founded on a Book so obscure, that there had not been two Protestant Commentators that had understood it alike. 'Omnia igitur supplicia irrogare jubet (Braunbomus) exurere, carnes edere, nullum supplicium nimium putare. Verum quoniam est ista barbaries eorum qui hæc præcipiunt, cum non intelligant quid Liber obſcuriſſimus velit? Cum contradictionem implicuerint hoc postremum à sanguinatis & latrocinantibus Theologis, rogo obſteſtorque ut ex tot suorum Scriptoris duos non sibi mutuo, non sibi ipsis contradicentes in hoc judicio, exhibeant; & deinde quâ datâ portâ ruant in nostrum sanguinem? Adde unum præſent, qui non omnibus aliis contradicat, & ecce jugulum præbemus, non jure nec merito; ad unius enim homuncionis pronunciatum meliorem orbis partem exurere, devorare, nec ipsa iniquitatis æquum esse censeret; sed fiducia causæ iniquo judicio experiri placet (48). — Therefore He (Braunbom) commands them to inflict all kinds of Punishment; to burn, eat the Flesh, to think no kind of Torment too great; but what Barbarity is this of theirs who teach these things, not understanding the meaning of that most obscure Book, since they always contradict themselves? Lastly, I desire and beseech these bloody and plundering Divines, out of so many of their Writers, to produce me two that do not contradict each other, and even themselves in this Point, and then rush upon our Destruction by what means they can; nay let them produce one who does not contradict all the rest, and we will yield them our Throats, though without just reason; for even Iniquity herself would not judge it right to burn and destroy the greater part of the World at the Word of a single little Fellow; though in confidence of our Cause we are willing to be tried by this unequal Judgment! The same Author, as we have seen above (49), abused Mr du Pleſſis for having exhorted the King of England to attack the Pope. It must be allowed, that this great Man forgot himself very much on that Occasion, and that his Zeal took a Flight, which made him lose sight of what his Age and Prudence might have suggested to him; he was rallied and insulted cruelly (50), and was not well defended by Mr Rivet, his Apologist. If you desire to know what that great Man's Exhortation was, read these Words: 'The thing (51) is easy, because she is ripe; the Day invites to it, Nature herself aids the Birth, the Destinies open the way, God favouring the Enterprize, of which he is the Author, and assisting and pushing it forward; let there but appear any one who will set about it, who is bold and resolute enough, it will not be in vain, since after so many Poisonings and Parricides, nothing is wanting of the full Measure of her Cruelty; there wants nothing to bring her Impiety to the Height: let us therefore, O King, throw away the Pen; satisfied I here lay down mine; this Generation requires other Conduct; henceforward other Arms are necessary. From Great Britain may there come forth another Constantine to overthrow this Maxentius, this other Pharaoh, and ruin him intirely; may he confirm the Princes and People who are irresolute, unite those that are divided, and compose those that are in disorder. And further, may the Alps carry him on their Necks, the Po dividing of it's own accord, the Apennine making way for him, many running to the Signal of Liberty, others waiting the Event; may he conduct his Troops

(48) Contzen de Hereſion Incre-
mento, pag. 556.

(49) In the Remark [B], Citat.
(11).

REFLECTIONS ON an Epiſtle Dedicatory of Mr du Pleſſis.

(50) See the Remark [E], of the Article SCIOPI-PIUS.

(51) That is to say, the Destruction of Popery.

Observe that I know nothing of Braunbom's Book, but by the Extract of it, given by Adam Contzen, a Jesuit, who refuted it (d).

(d) In a work intituled de Hereseon incremento.

'strait to Rome, never attacked in vain. Who doubts but at the sound of the Trumpets her Hills will lower, her Walls fall, even the Castle of St Angelo itself? May this severe Executor of the Judgments of God go on, and tearing the Thunder from Jupiter in the Capitol, cast him out of his Seat without Hopes of ever returning again; may he sink Babylon like a Mill-stone, that she appear no more; may the Tyber overflow her, and Hell itself be let loose upon her. Let it not come to pass, O mighty King, that you should suffer this Praise to be taken from you, or desire that it should be kept for another, but may you rather chuse to purchase it with the Price of your Blood, of your Life, or of what is yet more dear to you; but Thou, O Eternal God, for whose Interest and Glory this Business is, without whose Aid our Desires, our Sighs, and our Attempts are vain, awake, arise, cloath thyself with Might and Justice, as with a Coat of Mail; call thy Servant by his Name; take thine Anointed by the Hand, and walk before his Face. May the Hills be made plain, the Mountains laid low, and the Rivers dry up; may the Gates open, and the Bars be broken; may the People tremble, and this Jerico fall by the Breath of his Mouth and his Presence. And I, though already above sixty years of Age, may I keep close by his side: may I put off my old Age in the narrow Passes and Rocks of the Alps; may I be found one of the first in the Attack; that in the Triumph, when the Angel sings before us, I may redouble these Words, SHE IS FALLEN; and may I, when totally swallowed up in this holy Gladness, on the brink of Eternity, in Rapture finish my Days. Now, most Serene King, may the Good and Great God, who hath set you apart for this Enterprize of so holy a War, preserve you to his Church, your Kingdom, and all the Faithful, in Health, and Safety from all your Enemies. Amen (52).

(52) Du Pleffis Epist. Dedicatoire of the Latin Edition of his Mystere d'Iniquite. I use the French Edition of this Passage, made by Rivet, pag. 94, &c. of Defence of his Epistles, and the Preface to this Book of Mr du Pleffis.

(53) At Saumur in 1632, in 2vo.

(54) Rivet Defence de la Preface, &c. du Mystere d'Iniquite, cap. v, pag. 93.

* Rev. xviii, 6.

(55) Rivet, Defence, of the Preface, &c. pag. 94.

Andrew Rivet, who was then Minister of Tbouars, published (53) A Defence of the two Epistles and Preface of Mr du Pleffis's Book ----- against the Cavils and Calumnies of Pelletier and du Bray. You need not ask whether he was obliged to attempt to apologize for the Passage I have just recited; every body will imagine that this was one of the Places which afforded the Adversaries of Mr du Pleffis the finest Field for Declamation. They were answered (54), that St John having prophesied that the same Princes, who had given their Power to the Beast, should devour and burn her, he ought not to think it strange, that the Protestants exhorted them to the Execution of that Prophecy, that they address themselves to Princes whose Hearts God had already touched, to the end that, by their Example, they might draw others to the Execution of this Judgment of God against the Whore: and if they cry, after the Voice of Heaven, reward her even as she hath rewarded you, render unto her double, according to her Works, and in the Cup, which she hath filled, fill to her double; Rivet adds, that 'the Epistle to the King of Great Britain tends to this end, and only sets before his Eyes this Prophecy, the Accomplishment whereof now is coming (55). The Advocate and the Client were in the same Illusion; they believed that the Hour of the Accomplishment of the Prophecies was at hand, that the Fruit was ripe and ready to be gathered; they wished for it, and that was the reason they believed it.

Credimus? an qui amant ipsi sibi somnia fingunt (56).

--- May Lovers what they wish believe,
Or dream their Wishes, and those Dreams deceive.

DRYDEN.

The Advocate was more inexcusable, because he had an opportunity of reading some Reflections which the Client had not seen; he knew very well that the Adversaries of Mr du Pleffis considered his Epistles dedicatory to King James as the Action of an Incendiary, who had a mind to draw into France a foreign Army, who breathed nothing but Fire, and Blood, and universal Confusion; who would not spare the Blood of the Infant, nor the innocent Mother that suckled it (57). And that they had boasted, that they were an hundred for one who were obliged to maintain the Authority of the Pope, at the hazard of their Lives; that they had spoken of the Keenness of their Sword; and put them in mind of the Croisade of Simon de Montford, and the Sieur de Beaumont; and promised the Crown of Martyrdom to those who died in that Contest (58). And that they had declared that whoever attacks the Pope attacks the Catholics, and whoever is his Enemy is theirs (59). This was more than sufficient to disabuse Mr Rivet, in the Opinion that he had of the near approach of the Fall of Popery. The Expedition proposed to King James would have served for nothing but to set all Europe in a Flame, and cause a Deluge of Blood to be shed. All the Catholic Princes would have united for the Defence of their Religion; and there was no appearance that the Success of that furious War should be more fatal to them, than to their Enemies: the general Desolation of all the States in Europe, the most execrable Horrors of a War for Religion, were the only things that could appear certain. Now who can deny, that a Man, who makes himself the Intligator of such a Croisade, deserves the Reproaches of Inhumanity and Barbarity, which were made to Mr du Pleffis. His Apologist has not brought him off in this Particular: all his Answers are rambling and illuory.

(57) Rivet. Defence of the Preface, &c. p. 96.

(58) Id. pag. 97.

(59) Id. pag. 190a.

One can never lawfully exhort the Princes who are not Catholics to make War upon the Pope, till such time as his Followers are reduced to so small a Number, that there will be reason to believe, that, without Effusion of Blood, he may be constrained either to renounce the Papacy, or to retire, with a Passport, to some corner of Africa; but so long as the Catholics, and those of a contrary Persuasion in Europe, remain in the Condition they were in when Mr du Pleffis published his Book, and are now at the beginning of the XVIIIth Century, it is endeavouring to introduce Slaughter and Massacre every where, to talk of accomplishing Prophecies. The Books on these Oracles of St John are Oil to the Fire; they serve only to invite an Enemy who is already but too much provoked, and to furnish him with this Excuse for his Persecutions, that, in order to prevent his own Ruin, he is obliged to endeavour that of the Protestants, who are perpetually foretelling that he shall, in a little time, be exterminated by the Sword of the same Princes who formerly adored the Beast (60). If any thing can enervate such an Excuse, it is, that they, who have the Sovereign Authority among the Protestants, do not measure their Conduct by the Predictions or Exhortations of their Writers.

(60) Compare with this what is in the Journal de Trevoux, July and August 1704, pag. 60, Edit. Amst.

BREAUTÉ (CHARLES de), a Gentleman of the Country of Caux in Normandy, made himself famous by a Duel, wherein he died. He was extremely brave, and after the Peace of Vervins, finding no occasion in France to show his Valour, he went into Holland with some French Troopers, where he obtained a Troop of Horse (a). His Lieutenant had the misfortune to suffer himself to be beat by a Party of the Garrison of Boisseduc, which was inferior in Number to that which he commanded. He was taken, and conducted to Boisseduc, from whence he wrote to his Captain to desire him to procure him his Liberty; but his Captain sent him for answer that he would not acknowledge such Persons for his Troopers, as suffered themselves

(a) Thuan. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900a.

(b) His Name was Antony Schetz,
Lord of Grobbendonc.

(c) He had two or three Horses killed under him.

themselves to be defeated by a lesser number of Flemings, instead of beating them, though they had been twenty to forty, as he offered to do in any Rencounter [A]. This Letter being read by the Governor of the Place (b), according to Custom, before it was delivered to the Prisoner, appeared so shocking, that the Commander of the Party of Boisseduc wrote immediately to Breauté, to offer to fight him with an equal Number. His Proposal was very acceptable; but the Superiors on both sides could hardly be persuaded to consent to it [B]. Nevertheless at last they appointed the Day, and the Place, and agreed upon other Conditions. It was resolved that they should fight on Horse-back, Twenty two against Twenty two [C], on the fifth of February, 1600. Breauté would have had the Governor of Boisseduc to put himself at the head of his Flemings; but the Archduke Albert would not suffer it. Their Chief was the Lieutenant of the Governor's Troop, the same Gerard Abraham who had beat the Party. He sent word by a Trumpeter that his Men had sworn not to give any Quarter, for as much as they undertook that Combat much more to defend their Prince's Cause, and that of the Catholic Religion, than for their own Honour [D]. He and his Brother and four more began the Fight with Breauté and five more; the rest engaged each his Man. Breauté killed Gerard; the Brother of the latter, and two others, were also killed: The fifth was so wounded that he died some Days after of his Wounds. But this was all the loss of the Flemings; that of the other Party was much more dismal; for Breauté's Valour (c) could not hinder his Men from being beaten with the utmost Shame [E]. Fourteen of them were killed on the spot,

[A] He offered in a Letter to beat the Flemings twenty to forty in any Rencounter. Thuanus says, that the Writers on the Dutch Side do not ascribe the Cause of the Quarrel to Breauté's Letter, written to his Lieutenant, but to some false Reports: They will have it that it was Grobendonc himself who offered the Combat, having heard, by those false Reports, that Breauté reviled the Flemish Troops (1). Several French Writers (2) say, that Breauté did not send a Challenge till he heard some slighting Words spoken by Lekerbitkem, both of himself and of his Nation (3). Lekerbitkem was he who had defeated his Lieutenant.

[B] Combat was offered him with an equal Number — the Superiors would hardly consent to it. According to Thuanus, Prince Maurice dissuaded Breauté from that Duel as much as he could: He represented to him, that it was an unbecoming thing for a Gentleman of his Quality, who might signalize himself on more glorious Occasions, to expose himself with common Soldiers (4), or perhaps with some perfidious Men, who had been the Authors of betraying Gertrudenberg. He meant Gerard Abraham, and his Brother Antony (5); but Prince Maurice had done better to have interposed his Authority, and not his Remonstrances. The Archduke Albert was very much to be commended for not suffering Grobendonc to play the Gladiator, on that Occasion.

[C] They agreed on a Combat, Twenty two against Twenty two. I have followed Father Gallucci, tho' I have read no Author that makes the Number of the Combatants to be above twenty. We find in a History of the Archduke Albert, printed at Cologne in 1693 (6), the Names of those that went out of Boisseduc against Breauté; they are but twenty. The Author informs us, that he saw those Names in a Picture of that Fight. This should be an authentic Proof, and yet he contradicts himself, for he says, Page 334, 'that when Breauté's Trumpeter came to tell the Belgians at Boisseduc that his Master staid for them with twenty more; Grobendonc commanded one l'Épine, a reduced Officer, to take a Horse out of his Stable, and to join the other twenty that were ready to get on Horseback.' So that here are one and twenty Men. He had said, Page 331, 'that it was agreed to fight nineteen against nineteen; but that the Frenchmen on the Dutch side broke the Agreement, and came into the Field of Battle to the number of twenty; that Grobendonc's Lieutenant being in presence with his eighteen Champions complained of that Trick,' and that after the excuses made for it, he sent to l'Épine to come and join him; that l'Épine came, and that it was he who took Breauté. Here they are but twenty. That Author is not very exact, for he declares, Page 128, that 'it was concluded to fight nineteen against nineteen, and that Breauté at the Head of nineteen Troopers — met Grobendonc's Lieutenant 'at the Head of nineteen Belgians.' What I am going to mention is yet less exact. He says, Page 126, That the Joy the Dutch had for the taking of Fort St André, the eleventh of May 1600 — was abated by an Adventure which deserves to be mentioned in the beginning of the XVIIth Century, viz. by the Combat of Breauté, the fifth of February 1600. I do not question but he took the year 1600 for the first of the XVIIth Century, and so he committed two Faults: For, 1. The year 1600 was the last, and not the first of the Century. 2. If it was the first, it would be the first of the XVIIth Century.

[D] The Flemings — declared, that they fought more for — the Catholic Religion, than for their own Honour. Thus Religion comes in every where. What had it to do with the Fists or Rodomontades of a private Man? it was in truth a Quarrel of Duellists for a vain Reputation of Bravery; and yet they had the Dexterity at Boisseduc to interest the Church in it. Breauté was metamorphosed there into a new Goliath, who insulted the People of God; those that should conquer him were to be accounted, like David, the anointed of the Lord. Care was taken to supply them with the Bread of the Strong (7). They were not sent to the Field of Battle before they had confessed their Sins and communicated: (8) The Dominicans made use of all their Devices to increase their Courage. The Archduke's Council of Conscience approved that his Highness should consent to the Duel (8). But who would not admire the reason, that made the Champions of Boisseduc engage themselves by Oath not to give any Quarter? It was because they pretended to fight for Religion; but that very thing should have left some Remains of Humanity.

[E] All Breauté's Valour could not binder his Party from being most shamefully beaten. I shall set down the Words of an Author, who has wrote concerning the use of Duelling: 'The two Chiefs had distinguished themselves to know each other: Breauté put on a large white Feather, and Lekerbitkem a red one. Breauté advances to encounter his Enemy, fires a Pistol at him, kills him, and breaks through his Men with such Fury that five of them were killed on the Spot, whereof Lekerbitkem's Brother was one. But Breauté was ill seconded. For in the first place, two of the five, who were killed at the first onset, died by his own Hand; which shews, that if his Friends had done like him, the Enemy had not been half a Match for them. Secondly, most of them fled at the second onset, and left him with three more in the midst of fifteen, who besides the Advantage of number had also that of Weapons (9). We shall see the Sequel of this Passage in the Remark [F].

[F] Three

(1) Thuan. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900.

(2) D'Audiguer, usage du duel, cap. xx, pag. 343. Botereus, or Boterius, lib. vii, pag. 519. Cayet, Chronol. Septenfol. 119. See below the Passage of d'Aubigné, in the Remark [I].

(3) D'Audiguer ibid.

(4) Ignobilibus ac gregariis militibus. Thuan. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900. Lekerbeeten was a Soldier of fortune; but he was at that time Lieutenant of a Troop of Horse.

(5) Gerardus & Antonius Abrahami fratres Lekerbitkem vulgo dicti. Id. ibid. Lekerbeeten, i. e. dainty bit, or as Grotius expresses it, Cupidarius, was a Nick-name of that Abraham.

(6) Page 331, 332.

(7) Hist. de l'Archiduc Albert, pag. 330, 333.

(8) Id. pag. 330.

(9) D'Audiguer, Usage du Duel, cap. xx, pag. 343. Botereus relates the thing much in the same manner.

spot, and, of the eight that fled, three died of their Wounds [F]. Breauté and one of his Relations, being mortally wounded [G], in vain begged their Lives with a promise of a good Ransom; but no regard was given to it [H]. His Body, wounded in Thirty six places, was carried to Dort, and drawn to the life, to have that Picture sent into his Country. It exasperated the Friends and Relations of the deceased to such a degree, that one of them (d) went immediately into the Netherlands to revenge his Death. For that purpose he challenged the Governor of Boisleduc to fight a Duel with him; but the same reason, which hindered that Governor from being in the first Fight, excused him again from this. The Victors, to the number of eighteen, among whom four were wounded, were received in Boisleduc, with the Acclamations of the whole Town. Thus the thing is related by the Historians of the Spanish Party, among whom the Author, whom I cite, ought to be reckoned; but all the parts of their Narration are not allowed to be true [I]. This has always been the Fate of such Duels; their Success and Circumstances are always related several ways. Breauté had married the Daughter of Nicolas de Harlai-Sancy, by whom he left a Son. She was a Woman equally beautiful and virtuous, and not above twenty Years of Age. Though she was courted by several People, yet she renounced the Pleasures of the World, and made herself a Nun of St Theresa (e), which Order was but newly settled in Paris. It is said (f), that their Son, intending to revenge his Father's Death, sent a Challenge to the new Lieutenant of the Governor of Boisleduc during the Siege of Breda, and that he was killed in that Duel (g). I cannot tell whether a Marquis de Breauté, who was killed at the Siege of Arras, in the Year 1640, was descended from the Duellist.

(d) Gallucci calls him Hocvincurius. It is probably a fault of the Impression, for Hocvincurius; Hocvincurius is a Family celebrated for Bravery.

(e) Ex Angelo Galluccio de bello Belg. lib. xii, pag. 557, & sequ. Edit. Norimberg.

(f) Ex Thuano, lib. cxxiv, pag. 900.

(g) Histoire de l'Archiduc Albert, printed at Cologne, 1693, pag. 334.

[F] Three of his Party died of their Wounds.] The anonymous Author, who published an History of the Archduke Albert, says, that all the French were killed except three, who fled, and were hanged in Holland (10). What Variations! The anonymous Author of the Memoirs of L. C. D. R. printed at the Hague in the year 1687, multiplies Lies and Confusion (11).

[G] He and one of his Relations were mortally wounded.] This confutes the silly Story which was published by that anonymous Author, that Swords could not hurt Breauté, because he had a Charm. Which was the reason why they knocked him on the Head with the Stocks of their Pistols on the Draw-bridge of the Gate of Boisleduc (12). That Author contradicts himself; for he says, Page 129, that Breauté was burnt in the Head before he set his Foot in the Town (13).

[H] He begged his Life with a Promise of Ransom; but no regard was given to it.] Most Historians, who are not in the Spanish Interest, say, that the Ransom which Breauté offered was accepted, and that he was brought alive to Boisleduc; but that the Governor, vexed at the Death of the two Brothers, reprimanded their Comrades so severely, because they had not revenged their Death by that of the Prisoner, that they killed him immediately in his Presence. Thus, as Thuanus tells us, the Writers of the Dutch Party related the thing. D'Audiguier and Cayet go yet further; they say that Grobendonck had no sooner censured them, but they stabbed Breauté and his Cousin. Bouteroué goes farther still; he says the Governor ordered expressly, that the four Prisoners that were brought, whereof Breauté was one, should be killed in cold Blood. Grotius says only, as a certain thing, that Breauté had already gone a good way, when some Men from Boisleduc killed him with thirty Wounds. 'Pepigisse vitam Galli asseverant, contra Brabant prædictum ne victi aliud quam mortem expectarent. Certè jam multum captivus processerat, cum missi ex urbe orantem ut saltem armato & tanquam viro occumbere liceret, triginta vulneribus conficiunt, digno probrobus hominibus facinore (14). - - - The French assert, that his Life was granted him contrary to the Declaration of the Brabanters, that the conquered should expect nothing but Death. It is certain, he was gone a good way, as a Prisoner, when he was stabbed in thirty Places, by Persons sent from the City; notwithstanding he prayed that, at least, he might die armed, and like a Man; an Action worthy the best of Mankind.' Which irrefragably confutes what is said by some, that he was killed by Leckerbeethen's Seconds, who had engaged to do it by an Oath. See the Remark [D].

[I] All the Parts of the Narration of the Spanish Historians are not allowed to be true.] This appears by the foregoing Remark. But here is an Omission for which they cannot be excused, and which would very much alter the Nature of the Success, if it were true that they were guilty of that Fault. In this Case there would remain but little Honour to the Victors. It is pretended, that the Fight was not with equal Arms, since the French came only with Swords and Pistols, and the other Party brought their Carabines besides. Here is the Sequel of the Passage of d'Audiguier.

Besides the Advantage of Number, they had more over that of Weapons, and that was it that deceived the French, who had no other offensive Arms but Pistols and Swords, when they saw the Enemies with great Carabines, which they fired at a considerable Distance at the beginning of the Fight, and then advanced with their long Pistols against People who had nothing left but their Swords (15). He had said before, that they charged each other, Breauté and his Men with long Pistols, and his Enemies with long Pistols and Carabines. There might be more imprudence in that Case on the French side, than fraud on the other. Perhaps they had only said in their Agreement, that each Party should come armed as usual; and therefore if it had been the Custom of the Flemings to wear Swords, Pistols, and Carabines; and if it had been the Custom of the French to wear only Pistols and Swords; the Flemings would not have acted knavishly: the French only would have been to blame, for being so heedless as not to specify the Number and Quality of the Weapons which were to be used. But suppose the Honesty of the Flemings was untainted, it would at least be certain that their Victory would be no ways glorious. However, let us see how d'Aubigné, a much more credible Writer than d'Audiguier, speaks of this Duel. 'When that Siege was over (16), there happened a Duel between Breauté and nineteen more, with the Lieutenant of Grobendonck, called Lekerbitken, on account of some injurious Words and Challenges sent by some Prisoners. Being agreed on the Time and Place, Breauté, not finding his Enemies, went to look for them very near Boisleduc, and there the two Chiefs, distinguished with white and red Feathers, made choice of each other before their Troops. Breauté killed his Enemy at the first Charge, as also his Brother, who, having dispatched his Adversary, came to his Assistance; but all the Wallons, having other fire Arms besides Pistols, made a second discharge, at which the French, having only their Swords, were overthrown; and Breauté, being forsaken by part of his Men, was taken Prisoner, and Grobendonck, hearing of the Death of the two Brothers, caused him to be killed in cold Blood. The Death of that Gentleman was lamented by Prince Maurice, who had used his Endeavour to dissuade him from that Combat by reason of the Inequality (17).'

K k

(15) D'Audiguier de l'Usage du Duel, pag. 346. See also Cayet, Chronol. Septem. fol. 194.

(16) He speaks of the Siege of St Andrew's Fort in the life of Bomelz; but he is mistaken as to the time. He owns that this Siege was undertaken in May; but the Duel was fought the fifth of February. Bouteroué has committed the same fault; he places the Duel after the taking of St Andrew's Fort.

(17) D'Aubigné, Tom. III, pag. 722.

(10) Pag. 334.

(11) Memoires de Mr L. C. D. R. pag. 164.

(12) Hist. de l'Archid. Albert. pag. 332.

(13) That is, he was shot in the Head by a Pistol. See the same Phrase, pag. 196.

(14) Grot. Anal. lib. 9.

(18) Grotius Anal. lib. ix.

(19) Those things might be reconciled, by saying that the place, where Breauté met the Enemies, proved advantageous to him by chance. Grotius might have made this Observation without swerving from his Laconic Style.

(20) Gallucius de Bello Belg. Part I, lib. xii, pag. 560.

(21) Hist. de l'Archid. Albert, pag. 300.

(a) At Nuremberg.

(b) Taken from the Acta Eruditorum, July 1682, pag. 205.

(1) That James Geusius, a Divinus and Physician of Friesland, published at Groningen, in 1675, a Book intitled Victimæ humane.

(2) Taken from the Acta Eruditorum, July 1682, pag. 205, 206.

(3) Ibid. p. 206.

tius gives the Advantage of the Arms to the Flemings, and that of the Place to the others; Grobendoniani armis validioribus, Breauté loco potior (18). But how shall we reconcile this Advantage of the Place with what d'Aubigné, Bouteroue, Cayet, d'Andiguiet, &c. say, that Breauté, not finding the Enemies in the place agreed upon, went farther till he met them half a League from Boisleduc (19)? And how shall we reconcile this with Father Gallucci, who says, that Lekerbecken coming to the Place of Battle, and not finding his Enemy there, sent a Trumpeter to tell him that he staid for him; and that Breauté dispatched another to let him know that he was come within a Quarter of a League of the Place, and that he would either die or overcome there (20). An Historian, who is very partial for the Spanish Netherlands (21), owns, that Breauté's martial Heat, which made him advance farther than he should have done, was the reason why the Duel was not fought in the place designed for it; They kept, says he, to that Field of Battle where they happened to meet. That Author is far from acknowledging that the Flemings had more fire Arms than the others; for he says of the latter, that they had all their Pistols in their Hands, and that the Belgians had only their Swords in their Hands. He adds one thing that ought not to be omitted: 'The Belgians had the forecast to fasten little Chains behind the Bridles of their Horses, for fear, if the Enemies should happen to cut them, they should not be able to govern their Horses. The French on the Dutch side had not that forecast, which 'contributed much to their Defeat (22).' We may infer from hence that the Flemings fought cunningly; they fell first upon their Enemies Horses; the Bridles being cut it was not easy for the Troopers to save their Horses from being killed. Father Gallucci observes, that at the first onset there were above Twenty six Horses killed. Tbuannus informs us, that almost all the Horses of the French were lost there (23). We find the reason of it in the New History of the Archduke. I cannot pass over in silence the Confusion of Father Gallucci: After he has described the whole Issue of the Fight, he adds, that a little Boy, who had looked on at a Distance, having seen the whole Event (24), got upon a Horse, that he found without a Master, and galloped to carry the News of the Victory to Boisleduc. Presently a Citizen fired two great Guns on the Ramparts. That noise made both Parties fear an Ambush, and obliged the French to run away. How could they have staid till then before they fled, since the Boy did not ride away till after he had seen the whole Event of the Fight? To mend the Narration, it should be said that the two Guns were fired before the Victory had been fully declared for the Flemings. Now the latter being so near home, almost in sight of Boisleduc (25), it is no wonder, if the Cannon of that Town alarmed the French, who were still defending themselves. I find but one fault in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary (26) viz. that the Fight was in the Sight of both Armies.

(23) Dispar fortiorum cum Belgis congressus fuit in quo plures Galli cecidere, equis fere occisis. Tbuann. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900.

(24) Hoc exita animadverio.

(25) Hist. d'Albert, pag. 330.

(26) At the Word Abrahami.

BRENZIUS (SAMUEL FREDERIC), a German Jew, was converted to the Christian Religion in the Year 1614. He immediately published a Book (a) concerning the Motives of his Conversion, and forgot nothing that might render his first Religion odious. It is not known whether any private Discontent directed his Pen, or whether the hopes of persuading the World that his Conversion was sincere, inspired him with the Animosity which he shewed in his Book; but it is well known that he strained things [A]. He gave a horrid Description of the Malice of the Jews, of their Frauds, Crimes, Impiety and Blasphemies against JESUS CHRIST, and against the Holy Virgin; he exhorted every body to have a care of them, and to look upon them as sworn Enemies to the Christian Name, whose only design is to hate, dishonour, and destroy, the Followers of the Gospel. Salman Zebi, who was a pretty learned Jew, took upon him speedily to refute him in a Book, which he intitled Judaical Treacle. He fell into another Extreme, I mean that he extenuated too much the Faults of his Party. This is a faithful Representation of most Controvertists [B]. The Work of the Proselyte, and the Jew's Answer, were translated out of the German Tongue into Latin, in the Year 1681, as shall be shewn here-under (b).

[A] He wrote against the Jews - - - and strained things.] A Christian Author owns it, viz. Mr John Wulfer. See the Notes which he added to the Latin Translation of the two Books I speak of; for he did not barely translate the Book of Brenzius, and that of Salman Zebi, into Latin, but has also interposed his Judgment about the Accusation of the one, and the Defence of the other. He finds that Brenzius is a meer Calumniator in some things. See the following Remark. His Translation and Notes were printed at Nuremberg in the Year 1681. He added a little Book to them which Isaac Viva had formerly published at Amsterdam, with this Title, Vindex sanguinis, hoc est, vindiciæ secundum veritatem quibus Judæi ab infanticidiis & victimæ humane contra Jacobum Geusium (1) vindicantur. The Apology of Salman Zebi was printed at Hanaw, and the Jews animated with envy against the Author, suppressed it with so much care, that no Copies of it were to be found (2).

[B] The Jew, who refuted him, extenuated the Faults of his Party too much. This is a faithful Representation of most Controvertists.] I shall first recite a Passage of the Acta Eruditorum. 'Cæterum ut Judæis multa sola criminandi libidine falso obijcit Brenzius, ita vicissim multa negat, vel certe emollit, aut aliter interpretatur Zebi, quorum tamen Judæi jure optimo postulantur: Uterque interdum commode locutus, aliquando & mentitus est, quod in animadversionibus suis diligenter excussit Jo. Wulferus (3). - - - But as Brenzius charges several things falsely on the 'Jews, merely from a Desire to blacken them; so, on the other hand, Zebi denies, or, at least, softens, or gives another sense to, several things, with which the Jews are nevertheless justly chargeable. Both of them have sometimes spoke to the Purpose, and sometimes told lies; as Jo. Wulferus has carefully observed in his Animadversions. This Behaviour of Brenzius may make one suspect his Conversion. It seems to signify that he forsook Judaism, only to revenge himself for some Injury he had received. They who forsake their Religion from such Motives are in great numbers, and commonly publish a hundred Lies against the Party they forsake. The personal Resentment of some Affront, or of an enormous Injustice, animates them to Revenge, and they find no better way to revenge themselves than Calumny. All new Converts in general are almost forced to speak ill of their old Religion (4); for if they did not, they would give occasion to believe that they love it still. Besides, the Stories which they tell, or publish, concerning the domestic Disorders of the Party, which they forsake, please the new Brethren, and dispose them to give the Proselyte a better Reception. Thus you see how contagious the Impertinence of the Heart are: many Persons are obliged to be dishonest, because their Honesty would be taken wrong, and would give offence. But let us make an end of our Commentary. Most Controvertists aggravate the Evil of the other Party as much as they can, and extenuate the Evil of their own Cause as well as they can. When they attack, they excuse nothing; they take nothing in a favourable

(4) That is, with respect to Morals, Cabals, and such like things, different from the Confession of Faith.

a favourable Sense; they give a malicious turn to every thing; they ascribe the Irregularities of some particular Persons to the whole Communion. But when they make Apologies, they put a favourable Construction upon every thing, they set aside what is most odious, and shew only their fair Side, and they think it very strange that their Adversary should be so unjust as to observe their weak Side, and take advantage of the Faults of some Authors. We find this double Artifice of Rhetoric sometimes in the same Book. If the first Part of a Book is designed for an Accusation, and if the second is designed for an Apology; in the first you see all the Cunning of a Plaintiff Advocate, and in the second that of a Defendant. The Principles upon which the Author builds in the first are refuted in the second; as for example; if in the first he gives an odious turn to a thing that might be favourably construed; he gives in the second a favourable turn to a thing that is susceptible of an ill Construction. This shews that Honesty is not the Soul of those Disputes; it is sacrificed to the Desire of getting the Victory. Sometimes certain Authors are asked, why have you said such a thing? They answer, because it is true: But, replies the Querist, you should have known that it was not fit to be made public. Do not those, who speak in this manner, create just Suspicions, that a zealous Historian suppresses whatever may be prejudicial? How then can one trust an Historiographer, who, out of zeal for his Religion, acts continually the Part of an Apologist, or of an Accuser, and who, properly speaking, turns an History into a Book of Controversy of a new Method?

BREZÉ (PETER de), Lord de la Varenne, and Great Seneschal of Normandy, was in great Favour in the Reign of Charles VII. This made him less acceptable to Lewis XI, the Son and Successor of Charles VII. Therefore it was believed that Lewis XI, soon after he came to the Crown, made choice of him to command the Succours which he granted to Margaret of Anjou, Queen of England, only to be rid of him, because that Succour was so very inconsiderable [A]. Brezé was fortunate in the beginning, and made a considerable Progress against the contrary Party; but it came to nothing; the French were besieged in the Towns they had taken, and obtained no other Capitulation than their Lives, on condition that they should return into France (a). An Historian says, that their Commander and the Queen fell among a Company of Highwaymen [B]. It does not appear that this Expedition of England did any Prejudice to the Fortune of the Seneschal of Normandy; for in the Year 1465 he made a very fine Figure at the Court of France. The War for the public Good, supported by the Count de Charolois, who advanced into the very heart of the Kingdom, was a very troublesome business for Lewis XI. He advised, among others, with Peter de Brezé, what he was to do: He suspected him of keeping Intelligence with the Enemy; and having a mind to be satisfied in it, he asked him himself whether it was so or no? Brezé, who turned every thing into Pleasantry, came off by an Answer in that Strain [C]. He had the command of the Vanguard at the Battle of Montleberi (b), which had been the Subject of the Deliberation; and, whether he was exasperated by some Reproach, or because he was naturally brave, he charged the Enemy with so little Caution, that he was one of the first that was killed [D]. He left a Son, who proved more faithful to the King,

(a) Belcarius, lib. i, n. 4, ad Ann. 1462.

(b) The 27th of July, 1465, according to Comines.

[A] He commanded the Succours sent to the Queen of England, which was very inconsiderable. It consisted only of Two thousand Men, and some Historians make it much less. 'Ludovicus Margareta Andegavenfi --- auxiliarem militem duce Petro Brezeo (Varennium nonnulli à Varennio fundo appellaverunt) Normanniae Seneschallo misit. Hunc Carolo patri in primis charum ac magnis muneribus publicis donatum certis periculis obiectare visus est, siquidem equites peditesque eidem bis mille duntaxat attribuit (1). — Lewis sent some auxiliary Forces to Margaret of Anjou, under the Command of Peter Brezé (de la Varenne some call him from Varenne his Estate) Seneschal of Normandy, with design, as it was thought, to expose the Man to unavoidable Hazards, who had been a great Favourite of his Father Charles, and preferred to several great Posts; for he gave him no more than Two thousand Horse and Foot.' Father d'Orleans says, that the Queen of England obtained only about Five hundred Men of Arms under the Conduct of Brezé (2).

[B] He and the Queen fell into the Hands of a Company of Highwaymen. Monstrelet says, 'That Queen Margaret, her Son, and la Varenne met some Highwaymen; that she fled into a Wood, and said to a Robber that she met, Friend, save thy King's Son; and that she went to Shyrs, and from thence to Bruges; and the Duke of Burgundy had her conducted to her Father (3).' This Adventure of the Queen is very well described by Father d'Orleans (4).

[C] Brezé, who turned every thing into Pleasantry, finding himself suspected --- by Lewis XI, came off by an Answer in that Strain. We learn this from Philip de Comines, who had it from Lewis I. Let us see that great Historian's Words: 'The King consulted the said Count du Maine, the Great Seneschal of Normandy, whose Name was de Brezé, the Admiral of France, who was of the House of Montauban, and some others. — He suspected the Great Seneschal of Normandy, and desired him to tell him whether he had given his Seal to the Princes that were against him, or not? The said Great Seneschal answered he had, and that it should remain with them, but his Person should be the King's. This he said in a merry way, according to his Custom. The King was satisfied, and gave him the Command of his Vanguard and the Guides, because he was willing to avoid the Battle, as has been said. The Great Seneschal, having got his Desire, then said to one of his most trusty Friends, 'I will put them to day so near together, that it will be a hard matter to part them again. And so he did, and the first who lost their Lives there were he, and his Men. The King himself told me this, for I was then with the Count de Charolois (5).' I remember a good Jest of this Great Seneschal: Lewis XI did every thing of his own Head; Brezé upbraided him with it in a pleasant manner one day as they were hunting. The King was mounted on a little Pad: Sir, said he to him, I think there cannot be a stronger Horse than that Pad. How so? said the King. Because, replied the Seneschal, he carries your Majesty and all your Council.

[D] Whether he was exasperated by some Reproach, or otherwise --- he exposed himself so, that he was killed one of the first. Some say that the King was at last of the opinion of those who would have him give Battle. Nay, some say that he resolved upon it first of all, and that he called the Great Seneschal a Coward for being of another Opinion. That Reproach was so nettling, that it made Peter de Brezé desperate. 'Cæteri Regem

(1) Belcarius, lib. i, n. 4, ad Ann. 1462.

(2) Revolut. of Eng. lib. vi, pag. 291.

(3) Monstrelet, cited by Pierre Matthieu, Hist. of Lewis XI, lib. ii, pag. 96.

(4) Revolut. of Eng. lib. vi, pag. 294.

(5) Comin. lib. i, cap. iii, p. 17.

(c) See Father Anselm's Hist. Geneslog. de la Maison de France, pag. 123. He quotes Joh. Chartier, and Montfretet.

(d) Father Anselme, ibid.

King than his Mother [E], and is the same James de BREZÉ, Count de Maulevrier, Great Seneschal of Normandy (c), who married one of the Natural Daughters of Charles VII, by Agnes Sorel [F], and caused her to be killed at Romiers, near Dourdan, the Night between Saturday and Sunday, the fourteenth of June, in the Year - - - He paid dear for it [G]. From that Marriage came Lewis de BREZÉ, Count de Maulevrier, Great Seneschal of Normandy (d), who married the famous Diana of Poitiers, Mistress of Francis I, and afterwards of Henry II.

This Lewis de Brezé died the Twenty third of July, 1531. His Widow caused a stately Monument to be erected for him in the Church of our Lady at Rouen; but she caused a Prediction to be inserted in the Epitaph which has proved false [H]. Note, that Father Anselme did not know the year wherein the great Seneschal James de Brezé caused his Wife to be killed: If he had consulted the Chronique Scandaleuse of Lewis XI, he would have found there that it was done in the Year 1476. That Adventure deserves to be related in the very Words of that Chronicle [I]. Therefore you have it below with some Corrections of Mr Baudrand.

' Regem quoque in priorem de pugna ineunda sententiam concessisse, immo vero ejus authorem fuisse, & Brizeum quod in contraria sententia esset timiditatis arguisset tradunt. Hinc accensum ira Brizeum se inconsultus in medias hostium acies precipitasse, & quadam veluti desperatione in mortem irruisse (6).'

(6) Belcarius, lib. i, n. 20.

(7) History of Lewis XI, lib. ii, towards the end.

(8) Memoires, lib. i, chap. 35, pag. 316.

This way of ridding himself of the Great Seneschal, was yet more sure than the first; I mean than that which this Prince made use of, when he sent him to the Assistance of the Queen of England with a handful of Men: For what will not a brave Man do after such Reproaches? I am apt to believe that Varillas has a little too much embellished the Paraphrase that he made (7) upon Belcarius's Words, which we have seen in the Remark [A]: But he might very well say, that Brezé was a famous Commander. Oliver de la Marche, though he was in the Party of Burgundy, spoke notwithstanding in praise of that Lord. 'My Lord de Charolois, says he (8), kept that Day the Field of Battle (anciently called the Field of Plours). The next Day he encamped at Montleberi, where James de Montmartin and myself had been sent to view the Ground, and there we found the dead Body of the Seneschal de la Varenne laid on Straw, (which was great pity) and also the Bodies of several other French Noblemen.'

[E] He left a Son who proved more faithful to the King than his Mother. Whilst they were endeavouring to end the War for the public Good, by way of Negotiation, the confederated Princes made themselves Masters of Rouen. The most considerable of the Inhabitants were more willing to live under a Duke of Normandy, than under a King of France; for which reason they persuaded the Widow of Peter de Brezé to receive the Duke of Bourbon into the Castle, and most of them took an Oath of Fidelity to the Duke of Berry. 'Hi Brizei pugna Lethera nuper cæsi persuasa uxore vidua, quæ veluti urbi præerat cuique Rex plurimum confidebat, Joannem Borbonium in arcem admiserunt, & paucis exceptis in Biturigis verba jurarunt. Quo comperto Brizei filius non secus ac pater Normanæ Seneschallus sacramento se Biturigi obligare recusavit, & protinus invita matre ad Regem se contulit.' The Son of that Lady, Great Seneschal of Normandy, would not imitate them, and in spite of his Mother went to King Lewis XI (9).

(9) Belcarius, lib. i, n. 37, ad Ann. 1465.

(10) Gallantries of the Kings of France, Tom. I, pag. 119.

(11) He ought to have said Coitini.

[F] - - - And is the same James de BREZÉ who married a Natural Daughter of Charles VII. and Agnes Sorel. A modern Author calls him Lewis. Agnes Sorel, says he (10), had two Daughters by the King; Charlotte, married to Lewis de Brezé, Seneschal of Normandy, who, having surprized her in Adultery, stabbed her in several places with a Dagger; and Mary, who married Oliver de Coitini (11), Lord of Rochefort. James de Brezé, Son-in-law of Agnes Sorel, and Son of Peter de Brezé, who is the Subject of this Article, punished the unfaithfulness of his Wife too cruelly, and out of a Niceness for much the more blamable, because he should have been prepared to see her a Sportswoman by Defect. We shall see that his Revenge brought him into Trouble, and cost him dear.

[G] And that he caused her to be killed at Romiers. - - - He paid dear for it. He caused her to be strangled for Adultery. Lewis XI took it very ill, and designed to bring him to a Trial for it. The Great Seneschal redeemed himself for a Fine of an Hundred thousand Crowns, for which he gave, among other Lands, the County of Maulevrier. He had also caused the Lover of his Wife to be put to death, who was a Gentleman of Picardy, called Lavergne. Lewis de Brezé, his Son, marrying Diana of Poitiers for his third Wife, recovered the Lands that had been given for the Fine. The King granted him that Favour in consideration of that Marriage (12). Messieurs de Ste Marthe do not agree to this, in all the Circumstances. They say, that by Letters of the Month of October, 1481, King Lewis XI gave to Lewis de Brezé, eldest Son of James and of Charlotte de Valois, his Natural Sister, the County of Maulevrier, the Lordships of Becrepin, of Maulni - - - and other Lands in Perigord and Quercy. It was in Favour of the Marriage of that Lewis de Brezé with Joland de la Haye, Daughter of Lewis de la Haye, and of Mary of Orleans (13). The Letters of King Lewis XI import, I. That those Lands had been made over to the King, by James de Brezé, for an Hundred thousand Crowns Fine, wherein he had been condemned for having caused his Wife to be put to death. II. That if Lewis died without Sons, those Lands should come to his Brother John de Brezé, and after him to Gaston de Brezé, his other Brother (14). Note, That Messieurs de Ste Marthe having said this, pag. 525, say, pag. 600, that those Letters of Lewis XI were of the Month of October, 1491.

(12) This is taken from a Memorial which a Lady of great Merit procured me.

(13) She was Daughter of the famous Bastard of Orleans Count de Dunois.

(14) Ste. Marthe Geneslog. of the House of France, Tom. I, lib. viii, pag. 525.

[H] The Widow of Lewis de Brezé caused a Prediction to be inserted in the Epitaph which proved false. The Epitaph contains these four Verses:

Hoc Lodoice tibi posuit Bresæ sepulchrum
Pictonis amisso mœsta Diana viro.
Indivulsa tibi quondam & fidiſſima conjux
Ut fuit in thalamo, sic erit in tumulo (15).
Diana, mournful for her Husband dead,
This Monument, Brezé, has rais'd to thee:
Faithful to thee as in the Nuptial Bed,
So in the Grave inseparable she'll be.

(15) You will find them in the second Volume of an History of the City of Rouen, printed in the Year 1668.

It promises that Diana shall be buried in our Lady's Church at Rouen; which did not come to pass, for her Tomb is at Anet.

[I] The Adventure of James de Brezé deserves to be related in the very Words of the Chronique Scandaleuse. These are the Words of John de Troye; for so the Author of the Chronique Scandaleuse was called, if we believe Naudé (16). 'Upon a Saturday, the thirteenth of June, 1476, the Count de Maulevrier, Seneschal of Normandy, Son to Messire Peter de Brezé, who was killed at the Fight of Montleberi, being a hunting near a Village called Romiers les Dourdan, which belonged to him, and having with him Madam Charlotte of France his Wife, and Natural Daughter to the late King Charles, and Mrs Agnes Sorel; it happened unluckily, after hunting, that they returned to sup and lie at Romiers; and there the said Seneschal went alone into a Chamber to take his Rest that Night, and his said Wife went likewise alone into another. She, as her said Husband reported, full of disorderly Lust, carried in with her a Gentleman of Poitou, called Peter de la Vergna, who was Huntsman to the said Seneschal, and made him lie with her; which was told the Seneschal by one Peter l'Apothicaire, his Servant and Steward; the Seneschal immediately took his Sword, and broke open the Door of the Chamber where the said Lady and Huntsman were; the Huntsman he found in his Shirt, and struck him with his Sword, and thrust it into his Body, so that he killed him; and then he went into a Chamber, where he found his said Wife hid under a Bed wherein his Children were, and took her by the Arm and threw her down; and as he threw her down, he struck her with the said Sword over the Shoulders, and she being down and on her Knees, he thrust the said Sword into her Paps and Stomach, and sent her into the other World, and had her buried with the Service of the Church in the Abbey of Coulons. As for the Huntsman, he had him buried in a Garden joining to the House where he had killed him (17). In the time of the Romans such a Punishment would have been permitted; but our Laws do not suffer a Husband to revenge the Unfaithfulness of his Wife in that manner. Nevertheless it is done sometimes, and those few Examples are but seldom useful.

(16) Naudé Adit. to the History of Lewis XI, pag. 29.

Here is what I find in some Manuscript Notes which were sent me by Mr Baudrand: 'It is not true that this was transacted at Romiers near Dourdan; Lewis de Brezé stabbed his Wife in the Village of Reuvers, on a little River called Pegre, two Leagues from Houdan, and half a League from Anet. It was in his House, joining to the Parsonage, where there are yet some marks of her Blood, together with her Bust, as I have seen it several times, it being in a Seat that belongs to me: And afterwards he caused that Woman to be buried in the Abbey of Coulons, near Neugent le Roy.'

(17) Chronique Scandaieuse of Lewis XI, pag. 329, 330. See also Rob. Gaguin, Annal. lib. x., fol. 276.

BREZÉ (the Mareschal de), acquired great Glory in the XVIIth Century. His Name was URBAN DE MAILLE BREZE: He was of a very ancient Nobility [A], but it is likely that neither this, nor his Courage, did so much contribute to his Fortune, as his Marriage with Nicole du Plessis, Cardinal Richelieu's Sister. That Match, which would have been made more advantageous to him, if he had been less haughty to his Brother-in-law, procured him nevertheless some noble

[A] He was of a very ancient Nobility. Certainly Mr le Laboureur has not very fairly cleared that Genealogy, since Father Anselme, who epitomized him, could hardly make any thing of it; and yet that good Father applied himself very much to that Study. I confess ingenuously, that I have been obliged to read that place of Mr le Laboureur more than once to apprehend it well; and it is true, generally speaking, that Figures are not much more necessary in matters of Geometry than in matters of Genealogy. This is the Idea I have of the Extraction of the Mareschal de Brezé, after having read, with great Attention, what Mr le Laboureur says of it (1).

This Mareschal descended from the House of Maille, which possessed the Lordship of Maille in Touraine (2), and was so ancient, that there are twenty Degrees of Descent to be found in it. A Lord of that Family, whose Name was Peau de Maille, who lived about three hundred Years ago (3), married Joan, Heiress of the eldest Branch of the House of Brezé in Anjou. By that Marriage the Seat of Brezé came into one of the Branches of the House of Maille, viz. into the Branch whereof Peau de Maille was the Head. It remained there till the Death of the Mareschal de Brezé, descended from that Peau de Maille in the tenth Degree. LEWIS DE BREZE, Count of Mauverrier, Great Seneschal of Normandy, Husband of Diana of Poitiers, Duchess of Valentinois, so well known by the Amours of Henry II, descended from a younger Branch of the House of Brezé; so that he was only related to the Ancestors of the Mareschal by the Mother's side. We must conjecture this in reading Mr le Laboureur, for he does not say so in express Words, but rather inspires another Thought. 'Peau de Maille, says he (4), married Joan, Heiress of the eldest Branch of the House of Brezé in Anjou, the Name whereof continued till Lewis de Brezé Great Seneschal of Normandy, who had but two Daughters by Diana of Poitiers, Duchess of Valentinois.' The first sense, and the most natural, that presents itself to any one that reads these Words, is, That the Seneschal of Normandy descended from that Peau de Maille: yet it is not what the Author means; his meaning is (if I can apprehend any thing of it) that though the eldest Branch of the House of Brezé ended by Marriage in the House of Maille, nevertheless the House of Brezé continued, from Male to Male, till the Great Seneschal of Normandy sprung from the younger Branch of the House of Brezé. We shall see in a little time (5), that a famous Historian could not disentangle himself out of this Chaos. I have said that Peau de Maille, who married the Heiress of the Seat of Brezé, was not of the eldest Branch of his House: I must say now, that the eldest Branch ended with Francis de Maille, who left but two Daughters, whereof one was married to Giles de Laval, Sieur de Loué; and the other to Francis de Batainai, Sieur de Boucage (6). The Mother of those two Daughters was Margaret de Rhean. Mr le Laboureur informs us, though in an indirect manner, that the Father of those two Daughters was the Son of Hardouin de Maille and Antoinette de Chauvigni, and that this Hardouin was the Son of another Hardouin, and Petronelle d'Amboise, and Brother of Jubez de Maille, who married Isabella de Chateaubriant. 'Hardouin de Maille, says he (7), younger Brother of Francis (he had just before spoken of that Francis de Maille, who left but two Daughters, and with whom the eldest Branch ended) Son of Hardouin de Maille, and of Antoinette de Chauvigni, Lady of Chateauroux, Viscountess of Bresse, &c. married Frances, Heiress of la Tour-landri, upon condition that he and his Posterity should bear that Name and Arms; and from him is descended the Marquis de la Tour-landri and Jalesne, who is the Head of it, and whose younger Brothers are the Marquises de Carmen in Bretagne, and the Sieurs de Chedrué, de la Gueritaude, and du Flotté, descended from the Marriage of Jubez de Maille, Sieur de Ville Romain, with Isabelle de Chateaubriant; which Jubez was Son of Hardouin Sieur de Maille, the Husband of Petronelle d'Amboise, whose Brother was the before mentioned Hardouin, married to Antoinette de Chauvigni. To bring this within the Comprehension of less attentive Readers, we must say, I. That Hardouin de Maille, the Husband of Petronelle d'Amboise, had two Sons, Hardouin and Jubez. II. That the eldest of those two Sons married Antoinette de Chauvigni, and had two Sons by her; Francis, who left but two Daughters, and Hardouin, who married the Heiress of la Tour-landri. III. That Jubez de Maille married Isabella de Chateaubriant. IV. That the eldest Branch of the House of Maille subsists at present in the Family of la Tour-landri; and that the Descendants of Jubez, Uncle of this same Hardouin, from whom the Marquis de la Tour-landri is descended, are the younger Branch of the House of Maille. As to the Branch of Maille-Brezé, it was divided into some others: there remained no Male in the eldest Branch after the Death of Mareschal de Brezé; but there are yet some in the Branch of the Lords of Benebart and Fleury (8). Father Anselme is much less intelligible than Mr le Laboureur whom he epitomizes (9). He speaks of two Hardouins de Maille, whereof one was the Father of the other; the Father married Antoinette de Chauvigni, the Son married the Heiress of la Tour-landri. A little after he observes, that the Descendants of Jubez de Maille, the Husband of

(6) Mary de Batainai, Grand-daughter to this, was the Wife of William Viscount de Joazeux, Mareschal of France; and so Mademoiselle de Montpensier, the Dukes of Guise, &c. are descended from her. Le Laboureur's Additions to Castelnau, Tom. II, p. 299.

(7) Ibid. p. 299.

(1) Additions to the Memoirs of Castelnau, Tom. II, pag. 298, &c.

(2) At present erected into a Duchy and Peerage by the Name of Loines. Le Laboureur, ibid.

(3) Mr Le Laboureur said this in 1660: it is the Date of his Book.

(4) Page 299.

(5) See the Remark [E], of the Article BREZE, (CLARA-CLEMENTIA).

(8) See Le Laboureur, p. 300.

(9) Of the Original and Progress of the Families of France, pag. 47.

noble Employments. The Cardinal had some Reasons for revenging himself but imperfectly of the bluntness of the Marechal de Brezé [B], and he was so far from punishing the Father's Insults upon the Children, that his resentment moved him to take special care of them. He caused the Marechal's only Son to be made Admiral of France, and to have the Dignity of Duke of Fronsac; and he married the said Marechal's Daughter to a Prince of the Blood, to that Duke of Enguien, who has made himself famous under that Name, and more still under that of Prince of Condé. We shall see the Fate of that Son, and of that Daughter of the Marechal de Brezé, in the following Articles. As for himself, he received the Marechal's Staff, with the Government of Calais, the Twenty eighth of October, 1632, a little after he had signalized himself in the Battle of Castelnaudari (a). He was Captain of the Life-Guards, and the Year following he was made a Knight of the Holy Ghost. He commanded an Army in Germany in the Year 1634, and relieved Heidelberg (b). The next Year, which was that of the Rupture between France and Spain, he had the Command of the Army of the Netherlands jointly with the Marechal de Chatillon. The first Exploit of that War, which was great and glorious to the utmost, I mean the Battle of Avein, which they won the twentieth of May, and which might have been attended with great Consequences, if a good use had been made of it, proved almost insignificant, either because of the great Misunderstandings that arose between the two Chiefs (c), or for other Reasons which it would be hard to give. Some French Writers lay the fault upon the Prince of Orange, who, say they, was vexed that those, who were designed to serve under him, should have obtained such a signal Victory without his Participation (d). They so wholly let slip one of the fairest Opportunities to ruin the Spanish Affairs in the Netherlands, that the next Year the Spainards came and ravaged Picardy, infomuch that the Marechal de Brezé was not able to hinder them from forcing the Passages of the Somme before his face (e). Notwithstanding this Misfortune, he obtained the Government of Anjou, and that of the Cattle of Angers that same Year. He was made Viceroy of Catalonia in the Year 1642, and died in his Cattle of Milly near Saumur (f), the thirteenth of February, 1650. It was the Fifty third Year of his age (g). He was twice Embassador; first to Gustavus [C], and afterwards in Holland (h). They were Embassies of Honour, and not of Negotiation, though they were not altogether without some Business.

(a) Father Anselme's Hist. of the great Officers, pag. 256.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Aubert's Life of Cardinal Richelieu, lib. vi, cap. lxxviii, Tom. II, pag. 262.

(d) See the Memoirs of the Sieur de Pontis; and the Remark [L], of the Article LEWIS XII.

(e) Aubert, ibid. lib. v, cap. xxxvii, Tom. I, pag. 548.

(f) He was Governor of Saumur. See Rem. [K], of the Article AMY-RAULT.

(g) Father Anselme, ubi supra.

(h) The Year 1635, in the quality of Embassador Extraordinary, Ansel. ibid.

Isabella de Chateaubriant, are the younger Brothers of the Marquis de la Tour-landri. 'Jubez de Maillé, continues he, younger Brother of Har- douin, was married to Joan, Heiress of the elder Branch of the House of Brezé in Anjou, whose Name continued till Lewis de Brezé, great Seneschal of Normandy, who married Diana of Poitiers, Duchesse of Valentinois. Pean de Maillé, Lord of Brezé, contracted Marriage with Joan, Heiress of Brezé, who brought that Seat into the House of Maillé, wherein it continued till the Death of the Marechal de Brezé.' What Negligence! what a Chaos! Is not Jubez de Maillé, younger Brother of Har douin, a true individuum vagum? Is this the way to distinguish Persons? Father Anselme had mentioned two Har douins; ought he not therefore to have observed of which of the two that Jubez was the younger Brother? It is not true that this Jubez married the Heiress of Brezé; and he is the same Jubez, of whom Father Anselme had said that he was married to Isabella of Chateaubriant. What deceived him is, that, in these words of Mr le Laboureur, He married Joan, Heiress of the eldest Branch of the House of Brezé, he believed that by He he ought to understand presently Jubez de Maillé; but it is certain, that he should have understood it of another Person. Mr le Laboureur is somewhat the Cause of this Mistake; for, according to the Rules of Grammar, his He ought rather to relate to Jubez de Maillé than to any other. Jubez prevails in all the foregoing Period; the other Persons are only inserted in that Period as Dependencies and Accessories of Jubez; but this Confusion, in the words of Mr le Laboureur, does not excuse Father Anselme; a Man must use his Reason when Grammar does not remove Ambiguity. Now if this good Father had made use of his Reason, he would have given us Jubez de Maillé and Pean de Maillé, both married to Joan, Heiress of the House of Brezé? would he have understood by He two different Persons? would he not have fixed on Jubez, understanding his Author wrong, or on Pean, understanding him right? One can scarce believe how obscure the French Language is, when an Author does not place his Words right, and when his il, his le, and his que, have not their Relation well marked. The Genealogists are commonly very careless of that Part of our Grammar. We shall presently see (10) whether there was any reason to say, that the Prince of Condé under matched his Son by marrying him to Marechal de Brezé's Daughter.

[B] The Cardinal de Richelieu revenged himself, but imperfectly, of the bluntness of Marechal de Brezé. Mr le Laboureur relates, that the Marechal 'had not always that regard, which the Authority, and haughty Humour of his Brother-in-law, Cardinal de Richelieu, required from those that belonged to him; and that his want of Complaisance went so far as to tell him to his Face that he had married his Sister only for her Beauty; and that being vexed to see himself upbraided with the Government of Calais, he resigned it, and it was given to the Count de Charrois. Nevertheless, adds the Author, he (11) gave him other Employments; but he (12) always acquitted himself of them in such an independant manner, that the Cardinal made it his chief Business to raise his (13) only Son Armand de Maillé, whom he made Duke of Fronsac, and Admiral of France, and Clara Clementia de Maillé, his Daughter, whom he married to Lewis de Bourbon, at that time Duke of Enguien, now Prince of Condé (14).'

[C] He was sent Embassador to Gustavus. In the beginning of the Year 1632, when the Affairs of the Swedes were in great Prosperity, several Catholic Princes of Germany sent Deputies to Lewis XIII, to recommend to him the Interests of their Religion, and to desire him not to favour the Protestant Religion, which was become so formidable. Lewis XIII exhorted them to forsake the Emperor's Party, and promised them, that on that Condition he would reconcile them with the King of Sweden: but to shew them his religious Zeal, he sent the Marquis de Brezé, Embassador Extraordinary to the King of Sweden, and charged him to mediate some Accommodation favourable to the Princes of the Catholic League. Gustavus was then at Mentz, where he received the Embassador honourably. The Marquis's Proposals and Instances, and the King's Replies, took up almost a whole Afternoon. The King acquainted him with the Artifices of the confederate

(10) In the Article BREZE, (CLARA CLEMENTIA de), Remark [B].

(11) This he is very wrong, according to the Rules of our Grammar; for it doth not relate to the Person which is the Nominative of the whole Period, but to another Person.

(12) Here is another Grammatical Fault; this second he relates to a person different from that to which the first relates.

(13) Another Grammatical Fault; this his does not relate to the Cardinal, but to another Person.

(14) Le Laboureur Addit. aux memoires de Castelnaud, Tom. II, pag. 298, & seq.

(15) Taken from a Book of Frederic Spanheim, entitled, The Swedish Soldier,
pag. 200, & seq.

confederate Princes; yet upon certain Conditions he granted him a Truce for fifteen Days, on the Assurances that the Embassador gave him, that the King his Master would dispose the Duke of Bavaria, and the other States of the Confederacy, to a reasonable Accommodation; and that, in default thereof, he would not concern himself any more with their Affairs (15). If Brezé negotiated with that great Conqueror, he played also wanton Pranks with him. I have read in a French Writer, what I am going to relate: the Reader may abate of it what he pleases, he has my Consent. 'The great Gustavus spent all his Life in storming Towns, and winning Battles; yet, to divert himself, he played every Evening at Blindman's Buff with his Colonels and Captains; and Mareschal de Brezé said often, that he had played several Farces with him, and that commonly, laying aside all his Majesty, he acted the Part of a Cheat, or a Pickpocket, who was surprized, and beaten at the end of the Play (16).'

(16) Costar's Defence of Vautour's Works, pag. 67.

BREZÉ (ARMAND DE MAILLÉ), only Son of the Mareschal of that Name, was born in the Year 1619. He was raised early to great Employments, for he commanded the Naval Forces of France on the Ocean, in the Year 1640 [A]. He obtained a signal Victory over the Spaniards near Cadiz [B]. He was called at that time Marquis de Brezé: Some time after he took upon him the Title of Duke of Fronzac. I do not relate the Particulars of his Actions; they may be seen in Moreri, who took them word for word out of Father Anselme (a). It is pity that young Lord died so soon; for he was but little above Twenty six Years of Age when he was killed by a Canon-ball on board his Ship near Orbitello, in the Year 1646. Father le Moine, a Jesuit, who had been his Preceptor, made some Verses on his Death (b), in which he said, among other things, that his Spring and Autumn passed together. Several other Poets signalized themselves on the same Subject. Balzac admired the Latin Verses that the Sieur de Peyravede made upon it (c).

(a) History of great Officers of the Crown, pag. 326.

(b) They are inserted in the Peintures morales of that Jesuit.

(c) See his Choice Letters, Book iii, Lett. 37. And the Article PEYRAVEDE, Rame [C].

[A] He commanded the Naval Force of France, in the Year 1640. Father Anselme, whom Moreri follows, affirms, that the Marquis de Brezé commanded the Gallies of France in the Year 1639. I believe he is mistaken; for he says himself elsewhere, that the Marquis de Pont-de-Courlai was General of the Gallies from the Year 1635, to the Year 1643.

[B] He obtained a signal Victory over the Spaniards near Cadiz. Here is what Auberi says of it: The Naval Forces of the Western Ocean, 'commanded by the Marquis de Brezé, attacked and defeated the Spanish Fleet, bound for the Indies, near Cadiz; so that the General, who was the Marquis de Castiglione, was forced to return again into the Harbour with more speed and fewer Gallies than he went out with: which disabled the Spaniards from sending to the West-Indies that Year, and consequently from drawing any Assistance of Money from thence, as they had promised themselves (1). When we consider the Naval Victories that the French obtained over the Spaniards in the time of Philip IV, and the Fleets immensely rich, which the Dutch did often take from the Spaniards, one cannot but be surprized at two things: one is, how that Nation could lose so much; the other is, that the French, who are now stronger beyond Comparison, than they were in those times, either in number of Ships, or in Maritime Experience, have not hitherto (2) been able to undertake or execute an thing considerable against that Nation by Sea, during this last War. Philip II must needs have put his Kingdom into a very powerful Condition, since it subsists still after the great and innumerable Losses it has sustained for the Space near of a hundred Years.

(1) In the Life of Cardinal Richelieu, Book vi, cap. xxxvi, Tom II, pag. 238.

(2) This Remark is written in the Month of May, 1694.

BREZÉ (CLARA-CLEMENTIA DE MAILLÉ), Daughter of the Mareschal of that Name, was married in the Year 1641, to Lewis de Bourbon, Duke of Enguien, and afterwards Prince of Condé. It was thought strange that a Prince of the Blood consented to that Marriage; but the Duke of Enguien was not so much blamed for it, as his Father the Prince of Condé [A]. Many excused him by reason of the trouble he might have brought upon himself by offending Cardinal Richelieu, Uncle of Mademoiselle de Brezé. The Truth is, that the hatred People had for that Cardinal was the chief cause of the Murmurs; for several Marriages have been made between Princes of the Blood and French Ladies, where the under-matching was at least as sensible as in this (a), and yet it does not appear that those Marriages have been criticized. The Prince of Condé made a diligent enquiry into the Nobility of the House of Maille-Brezé, and found it very illustrious and very ancient [A]. A modern Satirist does not know what he says, when he

(a) See the Remark [B].

[A] The Duke of Euguien was not so much blamed for his Marriage with the Lady de Brezé, as his Father the Prince of Condé. A History of the Prince of Condé was printed at Amsterdam in the Year 1693 (1), wherein it is said, that the Father of the Duke of Euguien being at Cardinal Richelieu's, some Days after he had somewhat coldly hearkened to the Proposals of the Marriage, fancied that there was a design to arrest him; and that, to prevent that Disgrace, he shewed himself disposed to give his Consent. The Author adds, Every body blamed the Prince of Condé (2), because it was found out by the great Advantages that he obtained, on account of that Match, that he had acted more out of Interest than out of Fear (3).

[B] The Prince of Condé found the House of Maille-Brezé very illustrious and ancient. 'The late Prince had not so much regard to the Power of the Uncle, as not to desire to be informed of the Nobility of the Niece, before he made that Match; and he was well pleased to hear, since he was necessitated to secure himself against a Man, whose resentment was very much to be dreaded, that the House of Maille had all the Qualifications that he could desire, to defend himself against the Censure of the Vulgar, who generally judge rashly of the Conduct of Princes, and who, either out of Ignorance or Malice, would have it, that there was a Disproportion between this Marriage and those of the other Princes of the Blood. This is what I thought fit to refute here; and because I should not be allowed to make a long Digression in order to give twenty Degrees of Generation, I will content myself with a very singular Observation, of which no Example is to be found, I do not say in any House of France, but of all Europe; which shall serve to shew the Antiquity and hereditary Valour of the House of Maille (4). This singular Observation will be seen in the Remark [D]. Mr le Laboureur gives a short Account of the Genealogy of that Family, and then concludes with these Words: 'Thus have I shewn

(1) The Title says at Cologne for F. That Work is curious, and well wrote. It was reprinted in the Year 1695, revised, corrected, and augmented, by the Author.

(2) That is, the Father.

(3) Histoire du Prince de Condé, pag. 15.

(4) Le Laboureur's Additions to the Memoires of Castelnau, Tom II, p. 298.

he relates the thing otherwise [C]. We find an extraordinary Passage concerning a Knight of that Family [D]. Some very able Historians have confounded it with shewn, in a few Words, the Condition of the House of Maillé, and now I shall not scruple to say, that it is not inferior to that of Beauvais, which was the House of the fifth Grandmother of our King, Isabella de Beauvais, Wife of John de Bourbon, Count de Vendôme; and that it is, without any Comparison, more illustrious than that of Montespèdon, which was the House of Philippa de Montespèdon, Wife of Charles de Bourbon, Prince of la Roche-sur-Yon, a very proud Prince, though descended from one Wast de Montespèdon, a Fleming, Valet de Chambre of John of France, Duke of Berry; and than many others, which it would be needless to name (5).

(5) Ibid. p. 300.

[C] ----- A modern Satirist does not know what he says, when he relates the thing otherwise.] I mean the anonymous Author, who published some

(6) Memoirs of Mr L. C. D. R.

(7) Pag. 74.

Memoirs in the Year 1687 (6). 'The Duke of Anguien, says he (7), eldest Son of the Prince of Condé, had married Mademoiselle de Brezé, the Cardinal's Niece, and his Father had been obliged to agree to that Marriage to secure his Life, or at least his Liberty. His Son, who knew the Violence that was done him, looked upon his Marriage as Fetters that were put upon him, and, taking occasion from thence to slight his Wife, he had already upbraided her with a thousand Faults, which were but too manifest. She was of a noble Birth, and doubtless she was of an ancient Family; but the Duke of Anguien having sent for a Man, skilled in Genealogies, to know the Origin of it; this Man found himself turned so many ways, that, whether it was true or not, he told him that the House of Maillé, of which she was, came from a Bastard of an Archbishop of Tours. This was enough for the Duke not only to insult his Wife, but also to make poignant Jest upon the Cardinal; and as nothing passed but he was told of it; he was so vexed at it, that he waited only for an Occasion to shew his Resentment. An Occasion soon presented itself: Bouteville having fought a Duel, contrary to the Ordinances, and even to the particular Prohibitions that were made him, was so closely pursued, that he was arrested before he could escape into Lorraine. The Count Des-Chapelles, his Cousin, who had been his Second, and who fled with him, was likewise taken; and as it was a Spight to the House of Condé, to put them to death by the Hands of the common Executioner, the Cardinal did it under pretence of Justice, but in reality to revenge himself for a private Quarrel. I have already said several times, and I may perhaps have a hundred Occasions to repeat it, that the Boldness of these Libel-makers cannot be sufficiently wondered at; they assert the falsest things in the World for Truth, though a great many Persons may convict them of Ignorance. It is notorious, that Bouteville and the Count Des-Chapelles were beheaded in the Month of June 1627, and that the Duke of Anguien did not marry Clara-Clementia de Maillé 'till the Year 1641. And yet they dare suppose that the Cardinal caused those Duellists to be put to death to be revenged for the Injuries the Duke of Anguien did to his Wife.

[D] We find an extraordinary Passage concerning a Knight of that Family. Here is what I promised in the Remark [B]. 'Above four hundred Years ago (8), in a Combat between Girard de Bidefort, Grand Master of the Templars, and the Saracens (9), a young Knight of that Order, Jakelin de Maillé, a Native of Tourain, (they are his own Words (10), in white Armour, performed so many Wonders at the Head of a Troop, which he commanded, that those Infidels believing there was something divine in his Valour, took him for St George, honoured by the Christians, and were touched with so much Respect, as to desire him to surrender, promising to send him back again; but though he alone was left of all his Troop, and could not long resist the Fatigue of so long a Fight in the midst of so many dead Bodies, that lay every where round about him,

(8) They are the Words of Mr Le Laboureur, ubi supra, pag. 298. He says he has this Story from a contemporary Author, printed in the Book entitled, Gesta Dei per Francos.

(9) He should have said Turks

(10) That is the Author quoted by Mr Le Laboureur, and printed in Gesta Dei per Francos.

it was impossible for them to daunt his Courage; so that the same Historian says, that after he had trod to dust the spot of Ground which he maintained, which was in a stubble Field, where the Corn had newly been cut, he was at last over-powered by the Multitude that fell upon him, whom the Admiration of his Valour made so superstitious, that they gathered the Dust that was sprinkled with his Blood, to rub their Bodies with, thinking by that means to get some part of his Valour. Lastly, there was one among the rest, who, through a great desire of having an Heir of that Merit, cut off that part where-with he might raise one in his Wife. This cannot be explained more modestly; but on the other hand I could not forget such a strange Testimony of Esteem.

When one considers that the Gesta Dei per Francos is a Compilation of several Authors in two Volumes in Folio, the first of which contains 1206 Pages, and the second 361, without any Table of the Matters contained in it, one cannot sufficiently wonder at the Negligence of a Writer, who, under a general Quotation of the Title of the Book, alleges out of it one of the most surprising things in the World. Ought he not to suppose that all the Readers would be desirous to satisfy themselves by consulting the Original? He should therefore have made that Enquiry easy to them. Must a Reader be obliged to turn over every Page of two great Volumes? Is not this like looking for a Needle in a Bottle of Hay? I will not be guilty of Mr Le Laboureur's Carelessness; the more I have felt the ill Effects of it, the more I find myself disposed to spare my Readers the same Trouble; and I shall not only quote the Page of Gesta Dei per Francos, but also set down many Words of the Original. 'Salahadinus ----- Palestinam violentè aggressus Admiralium Edeffæ Manafaradinum cum septem millibus Turcorum qui Terram Sacram depopularentur, præmisit. Hic autem, cum in partes Tyberiadis processisset [casus] sibi obvios magistrum Militiæ Templi Gerardum de Biddefordia, & magistrum Hospitalis Rogerum de Molendinis, illum quidem fugatum, istum vero interfectum inopino Marte confecit. In quo confictu, cum nostrorum paucissimi ab immenso concluderentur exercitu, insigne quiddam & memoria dignum contigit: nam quidam Templarius, Officio Miles, Nazione Turonius, Nomine Jakelinus de Maillaco, quadam virtutis in se omnium provocabat insultus: cæteris autem commilitonibus suis, qui quingenti æstimabantur, vel captis, vel interfectis, belli totius impetum solus sustinuit: & pro lege Dei sui athleta gloriosus effulsit. ----- Et quia in equo nitido & armis albicantibus tunc casu pugnator incesserat, Gentiles qui Sanctum Georgium in hujusmodi habitu militare noverant, se militem nitentis armaturæ, Christianorum propugnatorem, interfecisse jactabant. Erant in loco, ubi pugnabat, stipulæ, quas messor, post grana paulo ante decussâ, reliquerat inconculsas. Turcorum autem multitudo tanta irruerat, & vix unus contra tot acies tam diu conflixit, ut campus in quo stabant totus resolveretur in pulverem, nec ulla prorsus messis vestigia comparerent. Fuere, ut dicebatur, nonnulli qui corpus viri jam exanimatum pulvere superjecto conspicerunt; & ipsum pulverem suis imponentes verticibus, virtutem ex contactu hausisse credebant. Quidam vero, ut fama ferebat, ardentius cæteris movebatur: & abscissis viri genitalibus, ea tanquam in usum gignendi reservare disposuit, ut vel mortua membra, si fieri posset, virtutis tantæ succitarent hæredem (11). ----- Saladin ----- attacking (11) Historia Hierosolymytana auctoris incerti, in pag. 1157. Operis cui titulus Gesta Dei per Francos, as far as Tiberias, and meeting, by chance, with Gerard de Biddeford, Master of the Knights Templars, and Roger de Molendin, Master of the Hospital, he attacked them unexpectedly, and beat them, putting the first to flight, and killing the other. In which Conflict a very small Number of with that of Brezé [E]. But laying aside all those things, I shall only say, that the Hero, who married the Lady Brezé, used her well enough [F]. She on her side took part in her Husband's Misfortunes. Whilst he was in Prison, she fled with the little Duke their Son to Bourdeaux, whither the Duke of Bouillon brought her safe (b). After she had left that City, she was brought to the Court by the Marechal de la Meilleraye, and earnestly begged her Husband's Liberty (c). Her Conduct on that occasion was praised by an Historian who is no Flatterer [G]. That Princess obtained nothing; she was only permitted to go where she pleased, and she retired to Montrond (d), as she had done before she went to Bourdeaux. She returned to that City, when she heard that the Prince of Condé was there, and staid there 'till the Inhabitants submitted, and the Prince retired into the Spanish Netherlands (e). She went to him thither, and took the Duke of Enguien with her (f), and did not return into France till she came with him after the Peace of the Pyrenees. She died in the Month of April, 1694, at Chateau-Roux in Berry, whither she had retired after a very strange Accident that happened to her, about the

(b) Priolus, lib. v, cap. xiv.

(c) Id. ibid. See also the end of the Remark [G], Citation (20).

(d) It was a Fortress in the Bourbonnois, which has been dismantled.

(e) Priolus, lib. vi, cap. xxxvi.

(f) Condrea cum Enguiano in Belgium ad maritum, Melinia Manlio fuit femine principis. Id. lib. ix, cap. vi.

of our Men being beset by a large Army, a very notable and memorable thing happened: a certain Templar from Tourain, named Jaqueline de Maille, by his peculiar Valour provoked the Attacks of every one against himself: and when all the rest of his Companions, who were about five hundred, were either taken or killed, he alone sustained the brunt of the whole Fight; and approved himself a glorious Champion for the Law of his GOD. --- And because the Warrior by chance at that time fought on a white Horse, and in white Armour, the Infidels, who knew that St George used to fight in that manner, boasted that they had killed the Knight of the white Armour, the Champion of the Christians. There was, in the Place where they fought, Stubble, which, the Corn being but newly reaped, was left ungathered. And so great a Multitude of Turks fell upon him, and he alone fought so long against so great an Army, that all the Field where they stood was trod to dust, and not the least appearance of the Stubble remained. There were some as it was said, who sprinkled the dead Body with Dust, and afterwards put the same Dust on their Heads, imagining they had received some Virtue by touching him. But one, as it was reported, was more earnest than the rest; and cutting off the Man's Genitals kept them as it were for Preservation, that the very dead Members, if possible, might raise him an Heir of so great Valour. This happened in the year 1177.

[E] Some able Historians have confounded the House of Maille Brezé with that of Brezé. When Varillas speaks of the Cardinal of Lorraine's Design to marry his elder Brother to one of the Daughters of the Dukes of Valentinois, he adds this Reflexion: 'That Match was only unequal supposing the Custom of the Princes of Lorraine, who married none but Princesses; for the House of Maille, whereof that of Brezé was a Branch, was accounted, without any Contradiction, one of the noblest and most ancient Houses of France; and it was well known, that besides the famous Jaquelin de Maille, so much celebrated in the History of the Levant, it had afforded some Governors of Provinces from the time of St Lewis (12).' The Author of the Life of Admiral de Coligni (13) has taken notice of that Fault. 'Mademoiselle de Brezé, says he (14), was the Daughter of Mr de Brezé Maulevrier, Seneschal of Normandy, and of Diana of Poitiers. She was of an illustrious Family among the Nobility; and though she was not of that which Mr de Varillas mentions, yet she had some Persons among her Ancestors who had been Governors of Provinces for above three hundred Years. Her Coat of Arms was also very different from that of the other Brezés, whose Sirname is Maille, whereas her's was Brezé. But what deceived Mr de Varillas is, that there is none left of that Family; and he thought, as well as Mezerai, who says the same thing, that it was the same as that of the Maille Brezés.' Varillas made a public Confession of his Fault, wherein he has committed three or four other Mistakes. These are his Words: 'I ingenuously confess, that I believed, on the Credit of a Genealogy which I saw thirty Years ago in the House of Garman, that Peter de Brezé, Great Seneschal of Normandy, came from the House of Maille; but I have found out since, that this Brezé, Husband of Diana of Poitiers, who was afterwards Dukes of Valentinois, was of the ancient House of Brezé in Normandy, and that it was only for want of Male Issue from him, that the Heiress of that Family of Brezé brought the Name of it into the second House of Brezé, a younger Branch of that of Maille, which subsists no more but in the Person of the Princess Dowager of Condé (15). I. The Husband of Diana of Poitiers was called Lewis de Brezé, and not Peter de Brezé. II. The House of Brezé was not of Normandy, but of Anjou. III. It was not for want of Male Issue from the Husband of Diana of Poitiers, that the Heiress of that House brought the Name of it into the second House of Brezé, a younger Branch of that of Maille. Mr le Laboureur says, That Pean de Maille, who lived above three hundred Years ago, married the Heiress of the eldest Branch of the House of Brezé in Anjou (16). Mr Varillas himself tells us (17), that the whole Succession of the Wife of the Seneschal of Normandy was shared between her two Sons-in-law, who were the Duke of Bouillon and the Duke of Aumale. IV. Lastly, The Branch of Maille Brezé was not reduced to the only Dowager of Condé; for Mr le Laboureur speaks (18) of the Marquis de Benegart, who had two Brothers and two Sisters, and who descended from that Branch.

[F] Her Husband used her well enough. I have read a thing in Marigni's Letters that may do Honour to the Prince of Condé's Memory. The Title of that Letter is, A New-Year's-Gift to the Duke of Enguien; it was written, from Frankfurt, in 1658. Marigni relates, That in a dangerous fit of Sickness, which the Prince of Condé had lately had, he had expressed his Zeal for Religion, his Submission to Providence, and his Satisfaction to have the Internuncio for a Witness of his Respect for the Head of the Church, and of the Humanity wherewith he adored the Mysteries of it; and that he had given sincere Marks of CONJUGAL LOVE, of fatherly Tenderness, of Cordiality for his Friends, and of Kindness to all his Servants and Domestics; which were so many Christian and Moral Battles, wherein he had triumphed over the blackest Calumny of his Enemies.

[G] Her Conduct --- was praised by an Historian who is no Flatterer. These are Priole's Words: 'Condrea ad Regis & Regina conspectum admitta sine ulla vilitatis suspitione innocentiam suam tacita exprobratione ingessit: nullius tamen demissionis verba protulit, sed suppliciter tristis tanta modestia sermonem commendavit, & tam concinne merces visa, ut in eisdem cum illa affectus sentirent se omnes mutari (19). --- The Princess of Condé, admitted into the Presence of the King and Queen, without the least Token of Meanness, tacitly upbraided them with her Innocence; but uttered not one Word below her Character, but, suppliantly sorrowful, she managed her Discourse with such Modesty, and so handsomely bemoaned what she had seen, that she infused the same Affection into all the by-Standers. Nihil promissum de viri liberatione quam tam ardentem genibus advolta Regis & Regina postulavit, sed data copia eundi quo velle & recedendi. Repente, relicta aula, per Andegavenfes & M m Turones

(12) Histoire de Hen. II. Book I, pag. 45. Edit. Holl.

(13) Printed at the Hague, in 1686.

(14) Pag. 36.

(15) Varillas, in the Preface to The History of Hen. II.

(16) Le Laboureur's Additions to Casselneau, Tom. II, pag. 299.

(17) Hist. de Hen. II, lib. I, pag. 37.

(18) Pag. 300.

(19) Priolus, lib. v, cap. 27.

the latter end of the Year 1670. One of her Domesticcs was so mad as to draw his Sword upon her, and to give her a thrust with it. He made his escape, but was taken up a little while after. It is said, that That Princess, so far from desiring that he should be put to death, begged his Life, out of a sense of Humanity and Meekness. This Adventure occasioned many Reflexions [H], which was unavoidable in a City so full of Novelists as Paris is; I mean your Political Praters, and who pretend to guess right.

(20) Id. lib. v. cap. 14.

'Turones Montem-Rotundum petiit ubi mariti in libertatem asserti inculcata vitæ norma mandata expectavit (20). ----- Nothing was promised her concerning the Release of her Husband, which she so earnestly begged on her Knees, at the Feet of the King and Queen; but leave was given her to go and retire wherever she would. Immediately she left the Court, and going through Anjou and Touraine, retired to Montrond, where she waited the Commands of her Husband, when he should be set at Liberty, leading a blameless Life.'

[H] One of her Domesticcs ----- did strike her with his Sword ----- this Adventure occasioned many Reflexions. I have just now read some Circumstances of that Action, and of its Consequences, in Mr Patin. 'Three Weeks ago, says he (21), a Man, who had been one of the Prince's Footmen, came into the Place of Condé, and drew his Sword upon the Princess, whom he found at Advantage, and run it into her Body, but the Wound is not mortal. It is thought he had a mind to rob her, but he fled, and is not taken.

(21) Patin's Letter is dated January 14, 1671. It is the 531st.

'All the Devils are not in Hell, nor all the Madmen in Bedlam; many People are weary of their Life. At last he is taken, and his Name is du Val; he asked her for some Money which he pretended was due to him. He is going to be tried. This matter is variously whispered. ----- The Footman du Val, who wounded the Princess, is condemned to the Gallies, and chained with the rest; but they are not yet gone, for he is still at Paris. As for her, it is said she will soon be carried to Chateau roux in Berri, by the King's Command, and her Husband's Order. The Secret of it is not known (22). The Prince of Condé a little while before he died wrote a whole Page with his own Hand, and having caused the Dukes of Enguien and Gournville to read it, he ordered it to be sealed, and given to the Duke his Son after his Death. The Prince spoke in that Writing of his Wife the Princess of Condé, and even desired the King to take care of that Princess, and to prescribe her the manner how she ought to behave herself (23).'

(22) Patin, ibid. Letter 532, pag. 585.

(23) Histoire du Prince de Condé, liv. v. pag. 575.

BRISEÏS, a Concubine of Achilles, was accidentally the cause of a thousand Disorders in the Grecian Army at the Siege of Troy [A]. Her right Name was Hippodamia (a); that of Briseïs is one of those Names which the Grammarians call Patronymical (b). She fell into the Hands of Achilles when that Hero had taken Lyrnessus, and killed her Husband Mynes, who was King of that Place. This is Homer's Opinion, which some Authors do not follow [B]. Achilles had that Prince's Widow for his share of the Booty, and loved her very tenderly (c). She hoped he would take her with him into Theffaly to marry her [C]. When Agamemnon and Achilles were reconciled, the first made many Presents to the other, and returned him

(a) Eustathius & Scholiastes Homeri in Iliad. lib. i. Dict. Cretensis. lib. ii.

(b) That is, formed out of the Father's Name. Briseïs's Father is called Briseus by Homer, II. lib. ix, ver. 392, lib. ix, ver. 132, 274, and Brises by Diogenes Cretensis, lib. ii.

(1) Hom. II. l. i.

(2) Id. tota fere Iliade.

(3) In Iliad. ii, ver. 199.

(4) Meziriac on Ovid's Epistles, pag. 255, conjectures that it ought to be read Ection.

(5) Dict. Cret. lib. 2, pag. 172.

(6) See how Meziriac, ibid. pag. 256, corrects Cedrenus's Text.

[A] She was accidentally the Cause of a thousand Disorders in the Grecian Army at the Siege of Troy. This is the Chain of all those Events. In a Council of War Achilles was of opinion that Chryseïs, the Concubine of Agamemnon, should be returned to her Father: After a great deal of abusive Language on both sides, Agamemnon was forced to yield to that Advice; but to make himself amends he, seized on Briseïs (1). Achilles being provoked with this Affront, laid down his Arms, and from that time the Trojans obtained several Advantages, which put the Army of the Greeks in an ill Condition (2).

[B] She fell into the Hands of Achilles ----- at the taking of Lyrnessus. This is Homer's Opinion, which some Authors do not follow. He says in the second and nineteenth Book of the Iliad, that Achilles took Briseïs in the City of Lyrnessus; and it is easy to conclude from those two Passages, that Mynes, who reigned, and was killed there, was Briseïs's Husband. The Scholiast upon Homer (3) and Eustathius says so in express Words. Diogenes Cretensis is of another Opinion; he says that Fastion (4) was King of Lyrnessus, and Husband of Astynome, the Daughter of Chryseïs, when Achilles took that Town (5). He adds, that, after that Conquest, Achilles went speedily to attack Pedasus, a Town of the Lelegones, where reigned Phryx, whose Daughter, Hippodamia, was taken. Cedrenus follows the Opinion of Diogenes Cretensis (6). We must remember, that Briseïs and Hippodamia are one and the same Person here. However it be, Moreri is greatly mistaken in saying, that Briseïs was a Trojan Lady.

[C] She hoped Achilles would take her with him ----- to marry her. It was Patroclus who inspired her with such hopes, and perhaps he did it only to soften her Grief for the Death of her Husband and of her Brothers, and for the Ruin of her Country. However it be, the Remembrance of those hopes melted Briseïs into Tears, when, at her Return to Achilles, she saw the dead Body of Patroclus.

Οὐδὲ μὲν ἔδ' ἐμ' ἔασκε, ὅτ' ἄνδρ' ἐμὸν
ἀκούς Ἀχιλλεύς
Ἐκλείων, πέρσεν δὲ πόλιν Δείσοιο Μύνητον,
Κλαίειν, ἀλλ' ἐμ' ἔρασκες Ἀχιλλεύῳ Δείσοιο
Κυεσίην ἀλοκὸν ὄσεν, ἀεὶν τ' ἐνὶ νηυσὶν Ἔς φθιν, δαίσειν δὲ γάμον μετὰ Μυρμι-δόνεσσι.

Τῷ σ' ἄμοτον κλαίω τεθνότα μείλιχον αἰεὶ.

Minime tamen, minime sinebas me, cum virum
velox Achilles
Interfecit, evertitque urbem divini Mynetis,
Flere, sed me dicebas Achillis divini Charam uxorem te facturum esse, ducturumque in navibus
Ad Phthiam, celebraturumque nuptias inter Myrmidones,
Ideo te insatiabiliter defleo mortuum, suavem sem-per (7).

Thy friendly hand uprear'd me from the Plain,
And dry'd my Sorrows for a Husband slain.
Achilles' Care you promised I should prove,
The first, the dearest, Part'ner of his Love;
That Rites Divine should ratify the Band,
And make me Empress in his Native Land;
Accept these grateful Tears, for thee they flow,
For thee, that ever felt another's Woe.

POPE.

[D] When

(c) See the Remarks [E], and [F].

(7) Homer, Iliad. lib. ix, ver. 295.

him Briseis, and swore solemnly that he had not touched her [D]. If it be not false that he foreswore himself, it is at least very likely. I do not know what became of that Woman after Achilles was killed. Horace argued wrong, when he alledged Achilles's Example, to prove that a Man ought not to be ashamed of loving his Servant-Maid. Mr Menage's Criticism upon this is very well grounded [E].

Dares

[D] When Agamemnon — restored her to Achilles, he swore solemnly, that he had not touched her.] I swear, said he, by the great God Jupiter, by the Earth, by the Sun, and by the Infernal Furies, who punish Perjuries, that I never laid my Hands on her, either to enjoy her, or on any other Account.

Μὴ μὲν ἐγὼ κέρη Βρισηΐδῃ χεῖρ' ἐπενείκα
'Οὐτ' εὐνῆς πρόσθεν κεχρημένῳ ἔτε τευ ἀλλ',
'Αλλ' ἔμεν, ἀπρόσιμας ἐνὶ κλισίῃσιν ἐμῇσιν.

Me non puellæ Briseidi manum intulisse,
Neque concubitus causa egentem, neque alicujus
alterius rei,

(8) Id. ibid. ver.
261.

Sed mansisse intactam in tentoriis meis (8).

The black-eyed Maid inviolate removes,
Pure and unconscious of my manly Loves.

POPE.

Ovid brings in Briseis swearing, that she lived like a chaste Widow in Agamemnon's Tent, whilst Achilles comforted himself in the Arms of another Mistress for the loss of Briseis.

Nulla Mycenæum sociasse cubilia mecum

Juro: fallentem deseruisse velis.

Si tibi nunc dicam; Fortissime, tu quoque jura

Nulla tibi sine me gaudia facta, neges (9).

(9) Ovidius in Epist. Brise. ad
Achill. ver. 109.

I swear,
And last of all, by thine own Head, and mine,
Whom Love, tho' parted now, did sometimes join,
That I preserve my Faith intire and chaste;
That I no foreign Love or Pleasure Taste:
That no Asperion can my Honour touch:
O that Achilles too could say as much!

CARYL.

Ovid did not believe that Oath of Briseis; for he alledges Agamemnon as an Example of one of his Remedies for Love. That Remedy consists in driving away one Passion by another, in applying one's self to Briseis, as Agamemnon did, in order to forget Cbryseis. What would it avail me to be a King, if I did not lie with this Woman? I had as good yield my Royalty to the vilest Fellow.

Nam si rex ego sum, nec mecum dormiet illa,
In mea Therites regna licebit eat.

Dixit, & hanc habuit solatia magna prioris,
Et prior est curâ cura repulsa novâ (10).

(10) Ovid. de re-
med. Amor. ver.
43.

This is what Ovid makes Agamemnon say; after which he affirms, that Briseis succeeded with that Prince in the Function of Cbryseis. Agamemnon's Temper renders the thing very likely. He was a very lascivious Man; for, whilst the Fleet lay at Anchor for a fair Wind, 'He ran all over Bæotia after a pretty Youth whose Name was Argynnus, whom he pursued dishonestly; till at last, not being able to prevail, he bathed himself in the Lake Copaïs to extinguish his Heat (11). With what Suddenness and Fury did he fall in Love with Cassandra, the Daughter of Priamus, in the Temple of Minerva (12)? His Oath did not persuade Achilles. See one of Libanius's Speeches, wherein Achilles says to Ulysses, 'He swears that he has not touched Briseis; be it so. But will any Body believe it?' 'The Shame of it will therefore stick to me in every Body's Opinion; and to tell you in one word what I think, I give no Credit to Agamemnon's Oaths. Καὶ τὴν οἰμίζεται μὲν Ἀγαμέμ-

(11) Vigenere
on Philostratus, in the Picture of Ajax the Locran.
Ex Plotarcho, de ratiocinio beatissimum.

(12) Id. ibid.

νον. δεδόσθαι δὲ ὡς ἀληθῆς. πείσει δὲ ὁ δῖνα. μένει δὲ τὸ τῆς αἰσχύνης. ὁλ. δὲ, ἔδαμῃ ἢ πῶς οἷς ὁμῶς.

[E] Horace — alledged Achilles's Love to Briseis — to prove — that a Man might love his Servant. Mr Menage's Criticism upon this is very well grounded.] These are his Words; 'I had designed to make an Ode on William Colletet's loving Servant-Maids, in Imitation of Horace, who made one upon one of his Friends, who had the same Passion; but I have not done it. Examining that of Horace, I found it was all wrong. He praises his Friend for imitating the Ancients, who had also loved and married their Servant-Maids. He quotes Achilles for an Example, who married Briseis; but Briseis was no Servant, she was a Slave who was a Queen, and had been taken by the Right of Arms (13). This Thought of Horace is very odd, and contains a pitiful Argument (14). Achilles was not ashamed to love a Queen, whom the Chance of Arms put into his Hands; Agamemnon did not blush in the midst of his Triumph to love the Daughter of King Priamus; therefore you need not blush to love a Slave you have bought. I own that he endeavours to mend the Matter a little, by supposing it was likely his Friend's Maid might be of a good Family, considering the good Qualities wherewith she was endowed; but this does not repair the Fault. We should now-a-days call a Man fool and extravagant, if he encouraged his Friend to love a Servant-Maid, under pretence that some Generals of Armies, who had taken a Count, or a Prince of the Empire, Prisoner, with his Wife and Daughters, would make no difficulty to entertain their the Prisoners with amorous Addresses, and to marry them. I know very well, that Men do not judge of the same Things alike in all Ages, and that I ought not to insist upon my Parallel without any Restriction; but Horace's Argument will never be justified, and at the worst it will appear, that, in Homer's Time, the Ideas of Reason were still very much confused, since Achilles expresses himself thus in the Iliad: I loved Briseis with all my Heart, though the Force of Arms made her fall into my Hands.

(13) Menagiana,
pag. 258, of the first Edition of Holland.

(14) Ne fit ancilla tibi amor pudori, &c.
Horat. Od. iv,
lib. ii.

ὥς καὶ ἐγὼ τὴν.
'Εκ θυμῷ φίλεον δεροκτῆσιν περ ἔσσαν.

ut & ego hanc

Ex animo amabam, armis captam licet existitem (15).

(15) Homer
Iliad. ix, ver.
342, 343.

Slave as she was my Soul ador'd the Dams.

POPE.

If Alexander had argued thus in Relation to Darius's Wife and Daughters, would it not have been said, that he did not know what he said? Perhaps I venture a little too much, since we read, in Quintus Curtius, that this Conqueror justified his Marriage with Roxana, by this Reason, that Achilles did not scorn to lie with a Prisoner. Achilleum quæque a quo genus ipse deduceret cum captiva coisse (16). Ovid makes use of the same Argument as Horace, to justify the Trade he drove with the Maid of his Corinna. He was not contented with the Mistress's Favors; he went as heartily to work with the Chamber-Maid, protesting, nevertheless, when Corinna complained to him about it, that a Man must have lost his Judgment, to mind Servant-Maids.

(16) Q. Curtius
lib viii, cap iv,
n. 25.

Quid quod in ancilla si quis delinquere posset,
Illum ego contendi mente carere bona?

Theſſalus ancillæ facie Briseidos arsit:

Serva Mycenæo Phœbas amata duci.

Non ego Tantalide major, nec major Achille:

Quod decuit reges cur mihi turpe putem (17)?

(17) Ovid. Amor.
lib ii, Eleg. viii,
ver. 9.

What

BRISEÏS. BRISSOT.

(d) Printed at Paris in 1620,
in 8vo.

Dares Phrygius represented Briseïs as a charming Woman [F]. He says her Eyebrows joined each other, which would not pass in our Age for a Beauty. Du Souhait, in his Translation of the Iliad (d), very ridiculously calls Briseïs a Virgin [G], when she was taken from Achilles's Tent, and brought to that of Agamemnon.

What though I call it a disgrace to prove Steln Sweet, or make a Chamber-Maid my Love;
Achilles wanton'd in Briseïs Arms,
Atrides bow'd to fair Cassandra's Charms:
Since I am less than these, then what can bring Disgrace to me, that so became a King?

CREECH.

Pheroras, Herod's Brother, was so passionately in love with a Servant-Maid, that he chose rather to persist in that mean Amour, than to marry Herod's Daughter. Pheroras impuros ancillæ complexus Herodis filia impolluto cubili prætulit (18). If ever any Body makes the Catalogue mentioned by Mr Menage (19), he will do well to enlarge it with those who have imitated Pheroras.

I must say something, by the by, of Mr Dacier's Remark on these Words of Horace,

Hunc amor, ira quidem communiter urit utrumque (20).

One robb'd of what he eagerly desir'd,
Was rais'd by Love; but both by Fury fir'd:

Here is a Judgment of Horace that is very remarkable, says Mr Dacier (21). Speaking of Achilles and Agamemnon, he says, 'that Love burns the latter, and that both are equally inflamed with Anger, Achilles is not therefore in Love; which is true. Homer, who was thoroughly acquainted with the Passions, did very well see that Love could not possess a Man of Achilles's Character.' Mr Dacier cites two Passages of Homer, which make him conclude, 'That Achilles is only sensible of the Affront put upon him, by taking a Prize from him, wherewith his Valour had been honoured; Love has no share in his Complaints. It is not so with Agamemnon; he loved Briseïs; he expresses his Passion thus.' Mr Dacier quotes here some Verses of the Iliad which concern Chryseïs, and not Briseïs, and then he adds, 'It was very important to distinguish those two Characters of Achilles and Agamemnon: For many have been mistaken about it, thinking that Homer had made Achilles in love with Briseïs. Horace took care not to commit that Fault.' It would be difficult to reconcile this with the Verses of the ninth Book of the Iliad, which I have quoted above (22). See also Plutarch, who affirms, that Achilles was in love with Briseïs (23), and therefore it must be said, that when Propertius observed that Achilles suffered many Things for the Love of the fair Briseïs, Omnia formosam propter Briseïda passus (24), he did not make use of the Privilege of Poems of Gallantry, wherein Love is brought in as the Cause of all; he went upon the Notion of Homer, who grounds Achilles's Anger on taking away from him an Object that was dear to him (25). All the other Poets went upon the same Notion: see the Index Achilleus, Article 184, 185.

[F] Dares Phrygius represents Briseïs as a charming Woman. He says, she was very handsome, fair, of a middle Size, and of a strait Shape; that she had fine Eyes, the Eyebrows joined, a sweet, modest, and mild (26) Humour, without any Art: Briseïdam formosam, nec alta statura, candidam, capillo flavo & molli, superciliis junctis (27), oculis venustis, corpore equali, blandam, verecundam, animo simplici, & piam. All the Authors, who have spoke of her, make her very handsome: see the Index Achilleus, Article 305.

[G] Du Souhait — very ridiculously calls Briseïs a Virgin. He renders these Words of the first Book of the Iliad. Παρθένος ἔειπεν ἄγων (28), thus, Patroclus brings him the Virgin. See also his Translation of the 345th and 346th Verses of the same Book. Patroclus, says he, in Obedience to his Friend delivered the Virgin. He repeats the same Word in other Places. This is altogether impertinent: There is no Consequence to be drawn from one Language to other Languages; and therefore under pretence that the Greeks might give a Woman the Name of ἄγων, which was chiefly designed to signify a Maid; it does not follow, that in French those that have been married, or Concubines, may be called, puelles, filles, vierges, (Maid or Virgins). That Translator could not be ignorant, that Briseïs had lost her Husband at the taking of Lyrnessus (29), and that she had lain a long time with Achilles. The Latins were as free as the Greeks in the use of the same Words to signify a Maid, and a Woman: they called those Puellas & Virgines who had had Children, or who had a Husband. Dr Drelincourt has produced a great many Examples of the Greeks and Romans in the 370th Article of the second Edition of his Index Achilleus (30). He has acquainted me with the Mistake of the Sieur du Souhait. He does not mention it in his Book, as he mentions that of Dausquejus.

Quam (Briseïda) Dausquejus oscitantur cum Chryseïde confundit, Not. ad Sil. Ital. lib. xv. pag. 656. (31). — Whom (Briseïs) Dausquejus carelessly confounds with Chryseïs. These are Dausquejus's Words, 'Agamemnon in Achillem fuit injurius abrepta Chryseïde ejus captiva. — Agamemnon did wrong to Achilles in taking away his Prisoner Chryseïs.

(24) Propert. lib. ii. Eleg. viii.

(25) Iliad, lib. ix. ver. 342.

(26) The Latin Word may signify devout.

(27) See concerning those kind of Eyebrows, the Authors quoted in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Novembre 1684. Article. viii.

(28) Homer, Iliad. lib. i. ver. 337.

(29) Homer says so in express words, Iliad. lib. xix. ver. 291.

(30) See concerning the first Edition of that Work, Hist. des Ouvrages des Savans, May 1693, pag. 511, and the Dutch Journal intituled Boekzaal van Europa, September 1693, pag. 286; concerning the second see the Journal of Mr Chauvin, intituled Nouveau Journal des Savans dressé à Rotterdam par les Sieur C, July and August, 1694, pag. 4-98; and concerning the third, the Journal des Savans of Jan. 6. 1698, pag. 8.

(31) Drelincourt, in Indice Achilleo. n. 184. pag. 63. Edit. 2.

(18) Joseph. Antiq. Jud. lib. xvi. cap. xi, pag. 564. apud Drelincourt. Indic. Achill. pag. 62. Edit. 2.

(19) Menagiana, pag. 253, of B. dit. 1. of Holl.

(20) Horat. Epist. ii. lib. i. ver. 13.

(21) In the 8th Vol. of his Remarks on Horace, pag. 147. Edit. Holl.

(22) Citat. 15.

(23) *Οτι τῆς Βρισηίδος ἔργον. Plut. de audiend. Poëtis, pag. 33.

(a) In 1502.

BRISSOT (PETER), one of the most able Physicians of the XVIIIth Century, was the Son of an Advocate of great Repute, and was born at Fontenai-le-Comte, in Poitou, in the Year 1478. About the Year 1495, he was sent to Paris, where he went through a Course of Philosophy under Villemor, one of the most famous Professors of those times. It was by the Advice of that Professor that he resolved to be a Physician: He studied Physic there four Years, and then began to teach Philosophy in the University of Paris (a). After he had done it for the space of ten Years, he left it off to prepare himself for the Examinations, which he was to undergo at Paris, before he could be admitted Doctor of Physic. He began to prepare himself for it in 1512, and took his Doctor's Degree the Twenty seventh of May, 1514. Being one of those Men, that are not contented with Custom and Tradition, but will examine Matters carefully, he made an exact Comparison between the Practice of those Times, and the Doctrine of Hippocrates and Galen; and he found that the Arabians had introduced many things into the Practice of Physic, that were contrary to the ancient and true Method of curing Diseases, and to the Doctrine of those two great Masters, as also to the Knowledge that Reason and Experience might furnish. He therefore went about to reform Physic, I mean to re-establish the Precepts of Hippocrates and Galen, and to explode the Doctrines of the Arabians. It was almost impossible, at that time, to imagine another Reformation. First of all, he undertook publicly to explain Galen's

Galen's Books, instead of those of Avicenna, Rhasis, and Mesue, that were commonly explained in the Schools of Physic. He caused one of Galen's Works to be printed at his own Charge (b), according to the Edition and Translation of Leonices, and explained it so learnedly, that he made it appear, that the Arabian Physicians understood nothing of it. Then he proceeded to the Explication of another Piece of Galen (c), and to that of John Mesue (d). He mistrusted this last Explication, either because he was ignorant of Botany, or by reason of that Physician's Obscurity. He resolved therefore to travel, in order to acquire the knowledge of Plants, and put himself in a capacity of reforming Pharmacy. But, before he left the City of Paris, he made the Public sensible of an inveterate Error. The constant Practice of Physicians, in the Pleurisy, was to bleed, not on the side where the Distemper was, but on the opposite Side; I mean, that, if the Pleurisy was on the left Side, they let Blood in the right Arm, and vice versa. Brissot had a Disputation about it in the Schools of Physic, confuted that Practice, and shewed that it was falsely pretended to be consonant to the Doctrine of Hippocrates, and Galen. Moreover, he made use of a quite contrary Practice, the Success whereof proved wonderful, and by that means he suppressed that Abuse. Brissot being fully resolved to travel, even as far as the new World, if there was occasion, left Paris in the Year 1518, and went into Portugal. He stopped there in the City of Ebora, where he practised Physic. His new way of bleeding in the Pleurisy did not please every body; but he justified it by a learned Apology, which he wrote in answer to a long and disobliging Letter he had received from a Physician (e). He would have published that Apology, if Death had not prevented it, in the Year 1522 [A]. His Friend Antony Luceus (f) caused it to be printed three Years after at Paris. It was re-printed at Basil in the Year 1529. Renatus Moreau published a new Edition of it at Paris, in the Year 1622. with a Treatise of his own, De missione sanguinis in Pleuritide, and the Life of Brissot, out of which I have taken this Article. The Endeavours that were used to suppress the Practice, which this French Physician endeavoured to introduce in Portugal, deserve a Reflexion [B]. Brissot composed some other Books, but the Manuscripts were lost. He would never marry, being of opinion, that Marriage did not well agree with the Muses (g). He cared so little for Gain, that it is said, that, when he was called to any sick Person, he looked into his Purse, and, if he found but two Testoons in it, he refused the Practice. He loved his study so well, that it was difficult to take him from it (h).

(b) Opus hupacis ad Glauconem.

(c) Viz. περί της πνεύμονος ασθνης.

(d) He explained it in private, [privatim], to the Apothecaries.

(e) His Name was Denys, and he was Physician to the King of Portugal.

(f) A Native of Ebora.

(g) Cælebs vixit comitibus tædii vitans, quocumque Mus perpetuum diffidum interesse distulabat. Ren. Moreau in ejus vita.

(h) Laboris tam patiens, studii tam avilus, ut libris tanquam faxis Polypos adherereciet. Id. ibid.

[A] His Death prevented it in the Year 1522.] Merklinus is therefore in the wrong, to say that he flourished under Clement VII (1); for that Pope was not elected before 1523. The Author, whom I censure here, has forgot the first Edition of Brissot's Apology. It is that of Paris, printed for Simon Colines, in 1525, instead of which he mentions one in the Year 1538, printed for the same, and at the same Place, and altogether unknown to the curious Renatus Moreau; which might in some manner make it suspected of Falsity.

[B] The Endeavours that were used to suppress his Method in Portugal deserve a Reflexion.] The Dispute between Denys and Brissot raised a kind of Civil-War among the Portuguese Physicians. The Business was brought before the Tribunal of the University of Salamanca (2), where it was thoroughly discussed by the Faculty of Physic; but whilst they were examining the Reasons pro and con, the Partizans of Denys had recourse to an Expedient which seldom fails those who are the strongest: they bore down the others by the Authority of the Secular Power, and obtained a Decree forbidding Physicians to bleed in the same side in which the Pleurisy was. At last the University of Salamanca gave their Judgment, importing that the Opinion ascribed to Brissot was the true Doctrine of Hippocrates and Galen. The Followers of Denys appealed to Cæsar about the Years 1529. They thought themselves superior both in Authority and Number, so that the matter was brought before Charles V. They were not contented to call the Doctrine of their Adversaries false, but they said

moreover that it was impious and mortal, and as pernicious to the Body as Luther's Schism to the Soul. They did not only blacken their Adversary's Reputation by private Arts, but also openly accused them of Ignorance and Rashness, of attempting on Religion, and of being downright Lutherans in Physic. It fell out unluckily for them that Charles III, Duke of Savoy, happened to die of a Pleurisy, after he had been bled according to the Practice which Brissot had opposed. Had it not been for this, the Emperor, as it is thought, would have granted every thing that Brissot's Antagonists desired of him. But though that Accident should have made the good Cause triumph, no other Good resulted from it, but that the thing remained undecided. It is true that from that time several Books were published all over Europe on that Question, wherein the Practice of the Arabians was highly condemned (3). Renatus Moreau, in the Work which I have cited, gives a very curious List of those Books, and of those wherein that Practice was approved. But who would not admire, on the one side, the Infatuation of Men, in favour of the Opinions commonly received, though they be ever so ill grounded; and on the other side the Readiness of Magistrates to declare for or against certain Remedies: for since it happens but too often that they condemn some, which in time are generally approved, for very good Reasons grounded upon Experience, it may be said that they judged without Knowledge, being led away by the most noisy and violent Cabal? Antimony is a Proof of what I say. See Furetiere's Dictionary (4).

AN INSTANCE of the ill Custom of interesting Religion into the Disputes of the Learned, to alarm the People and the Magistrates.

(3) Ex vita Brissoti per Renatum Moreau.

(4) At the Word Antimoine.

BRITANNICUS (JOHN), an Italian, was one of the best Scholars of the XVth Century. He was born at Palazzolo, near Brescia. He published Notes on some Classical Authors, on Perfius, Terence, Statius, Ovid, and Juvenal; some Rules of Grammar, several little Tracts, and Letters, and a Panegyric upon Bartolomew Cajetan, a brave and learned Man (a). Britannicus taught with great Application: He did it long enough at Brescia, to acquire the Method and Practice of teaching

(a) Leonardo Cozzando, della Libreria Bresciana, pag. 155.

VOL. II,

N n

a Form

a Form. He died in that City in the Year 1510 [A]. When he dedicated his Commentary on Juvenal to the Senate and City of Brescia, he gave a reason for it, which was, that the Commentaries, he had already dedicated to them, had procured him a considerable Present [B]. Was not this asking for another? Those who have said that he was the first who commented upon that Poet are very much mistaken [C]. He took the Name of Britannicus because his Ancestors were of Great Britain (b).

(b) Ghilini, Teatr. d' Huom illustri, Parte I, pag. 78.

(1) Bibliot. Gefneri, fol. 393.

(2) Ghilini, Teatr. Parte I, pag. 78.

(3) Britann. Epist. Dedicat. Juvenal.

(a) Vignier, in the Theatre de l' Antichrist, Parte I, cap. 22. Thuanus makes him Subalpinus; and Spondanus, Pedemontanus.

(b) He was afterwards Professor at Franeker.

(c) Voetius, Disput. Theologic. Tom. II, p. 1075 who quotes the Preface of Lambert Daneau's Commentary on the Minor Prophets.

(1) Vide Voetii Disput. Tom. II, pag. 1075.

(2) In the Remark [B].

[A] He died - - - in the Year 1510.] Who would believe this, when he reads in a Work printed in the Year 1545, Joannes Britannicus claret in civitate Brixiana, & varia composita opuscula (1). - - - Joannes Britannicus flourishes in the City of Brescia, and writes several Works. 'Honest Gefner, [will some say] had found these Words in some Book wherein they were true, and, without thinking that the time was altered, transcribed them Word for Word. It were better to write fewer Books, and to take the Pains to accommodate to the present time what our Predecessors said.' I answer that he had this from Tritemius, and that his Preface may hinder any body from being deceived in it. Ghilini's Mistake is more gross; he believed that Paul Manutius flourished at the same time as Britannicus did. 'Non li fu difficil cosa non solo d'agguagliare il valore di Paolo Manucci - - - ma di superarlo ancora (2). - - - It was not hard for him not only to equal the Merit of Paulus Manutius - - - but even to exceed it.'

[B] His Dedications had procured him a considerable Present.] These are his Words; 'Quod autem lucubrationes meas vobis amplissimi Patres dicandas esse censerim, illud me maxime impulit quod memineram superioribus annis quum in Achilleida Statii, & Satyras Persii commentarios edidisset, vobisque nuncupassem alteros, ita placitos fuisse, ut me non mediocriter solum laus & gratulatio vestra secuta sit, sed insuper AMPLISSIMUM MIHI MUNUS publico totius Senatus consulto decretum fuerit (3). - - - But what moved me, Most Noble Fathers, to dedicate my Lucubrations to you was this, that I remember some Years ago, when I published Notes on the Achilleid of Statius and the Satires of Persius, and dedicated the latter to you, you were so pleased that I not only had

'great Commendation and Thanks from you, but further, a very handsome Present was decreed me by a public Act of the Senate.'

[C] Those who have said that he was the first who commented upon Juvenal, are very much mistaken.] Cælius Secundus Curio published some Notes on that Poet in the Year 1551. He declares that he found it a very laborious Piece of work, because none but Britannicus had yet explained that Author. 'Unum modo Joannem Britannicum habuit explicatorem, qui quamvis illa ætate eruditissimus fuerit, non tamen Poëtæ sensum est affectus: neque mirum, fuit primus, neminem habuit quem sequeretur (4). - - - He has had only one Expositor, who though he was a very learned Man at that time, yet did he not hit the Sense of the Poet; and no wonder, for he was the first, and had no body to follow.' It is a greater Fault than is commonly believed, not to read the Prefaces and the Epistles Dedicatory. But especially those that write Books are very much in the wrong not to read them: if Curio had read the Epistle Dedicatory of Britannicus, he would not have given out such an inexcusable Falsity. Britannicus acknowledges that some learned Interpreters had commented upon Juvenal before him: 'Juvenalis Satyras est temporibus nostris à nonnullis aliis egregie literatis commentatoribus vel cum magna ipsorum laude enarratæ fuerant, aggressi sumus, quod omnino animadverteremus in toto opere multa ab iis five incuria quadam, five consulti opera præterita esse (5). - - - I have attempted the Satires of Juvenal, notwithstanding they have been explained in our time by some other learned Commentators, with great Reputation, because I have observed through the whole Work that they have omitted many things either through Negligence or Design.'

(4) C. Sec. Curio in Epistola nuncupatoria.

(5) Britann. in Epist. Dedicat. Juvenal.

BROCARDUS (JAMES), an Apocalyptic Author, and one of the honest Visionaries of the XVIth Century, was a Venetian (a). He embraced the Protestant Religion, and expressed a great Zeal against Popery. He published several Books in Holland [A], wherein he maintained that the particular Events of the XVIth Century had been foretold by the Prophets. After he had applied the Oracles of the Scripture according to his Fancy to things already happened, he took the liberty to apply them to future Events, and, by virtue of such and such Passages, he foretold that such and such a thing would happen to the Prince of Orange, Philip II, Queen Elizabeth, the Emperor, &c. The Synods of the United Provinces were afraid, not without reason, that People would think they approved those extravagant Notions, if they were wholly silent about them. Wherefore the National Synod of Middleburg condemned, in 1581, that Method of explaining the Scripture, and enjoined Lambert Daneau, Professor of Divinity at Leyden, and Martin Lydius, Minister of the Church of Amsterdam (b), to speak to Brocard about his Visions. The Author, from whom I have this, thinks he remembers that Brocard, not being able to answer the Objections raised against his System, promised to leave off meddling with such Prophecies (c). That Visionary had inveigled a French Gentleman, who was a good Protestant [B], so as to persuade him by I know not how many

[A] He published several Books in Holland.] His Commentary on St John's Revelations, and his Mystical and Prophetical Explication of Leviticus, came out at Leyden, in the Year 1580. Two other Books, Alter ad Christianos de Prophetia quæ nunc compleatur in his quæ sunt secundi adventus Domini; alter ad Hebræos de primo & secundo ejusdem adventu, were printed at Leyden about the same time (1). We shall see hereafter (2) at whose Charges those Books came out of the Press. If the Author had not wrote in Latin, it might be thought strange, that no Bookseller would venture to be at the charge of printing them; for such Works in the Vulgar Tongue sell well enough in troublesome Times, or when great Changes are desired. His Treatise De Antibaptismo jurantium in Papam & in Ecclesiam Romanam, deque eorum idolo xeli, was printed at Leyden, in the Year 1580, and contains Seventy seven Pages in 8vo. I shall speak hereafter of his Commentary on Genesis. See the Titles of some other Treatises in the Remark [C].

[B] He had inveigled a French Gentleman, a good Protestant.] His Name was Segur-Pardailan. 'Jacobus Segurius Pardallianus, è præcipua Aquitanie nobilitate, homo Calvinisticæ factioni addictus (3). - - - Jacobus Segurius Pardallianus, one of the principal Nobility in Guienne, a Man of the Calvinistic Faction.' It is a very illustrious Family in Guienne. Thuanus speaks of him thus: 'Segurius

(3) Thuan. lib. lxxix. ad Ann. 1583. pag. 500.

many Passages of the Scripture, which he explained in his way, that a Protestant Prince would quickly overthrow the Pope's Throne, and make himself the Head of all the United Christians. That Gentleman, who was a faithful Servant to the King of Navarre, thought Heaven designed the King his Master for such a glorious Enterprize, and, big with these hopes, proposed to him to send an Embassy to the Protestant Princes, offering to be his Ambassador. There being nothing in his Proposal but what suited with the Necessities of the Time, it was approved of, and he was actually deputed to those Princes (d). He was a little ridiculed when it came to be known by what Motive he was influenced, and for what reason he had been at the Charge of printing the Books of his Prophet (e). Here is an Instance of what such People can do; they will occasion the attempting of a thousand things, which no body would think of; they are perfect Incendiaries. Doubtless many of them are no Impostors; they are infatuated with their Notions; they believe what they foretel: but some of them design only to cause Wars and Insurrections; they have more Wit than Honesty, and are the plague of Mankind. I do not think that Brocard was a Man of that Stamp. The Catholic Writers abuse him at a strange rate [C]; the Protestants are tender of his Reputation [D]: but the National Synod of Rochelle, in 1581, gave him no quarter [E].

I find

Segurlus homo probo & vivaci nec inerudito ingenio, ceterum credulo, ante aliquot annos, dum in Belgio esset, arctam familiaritatem cum Jacobo Brocardo Subalpino coluerat, vaticinationum argutus ad infaniam sectante, cujus & scripta hujusmodi vanitatis plena ille postea sumptibus suis publicanda curavit. Ab eo cum accepisset, locis scripturæ, ut dictis fidem faceret, ad id de totis, fore, ut non ita multos post annos Pontifex à principe Protestante de sede deturbaretur, isque princeps caput concordie Christianæ futurus esset, eum principem infito erga herum suum affectu protinus Navarrum fore sibi persuaserat, eoque majore studio & ardore pro auctoritate, qua in aula Navarri pollebat, legationem eam, cui & obediendæ se obtulit, promovit, quæ alioqui abque hoc secreto ridiculo, quod tandem emanavit, & ab adversariis postea in Germania illi impropertum est, tanquam in speciem utilis & necessaria multis probatur (4). — Segurius, a Man of a good and lively Genius, not unlearned but credulous, some Years ago, when he was in the Netherlands, cultivated a close Familiarity with James Brocard, a Subalpine, a Man fond of the Secrets of Prophecy even to Madness, whose Books, stuffed with these kind of Vanities, he afterwards published at his own Expence. Having learned from him by Jundry Places of Scripture wrested to that Purpose, in order to gain Credit, that the Pope was in a few Years to be overthrown by a Protestant Prince; and that That Prince should become head of all Christianity united; he, out of hearty Affection to his Master, immediately judged that That Prince should be the King of Navarre; and he more zealously and industriously used all the Interest he had there in the Court of Navarre to promote that Embassy, which he offered himself to undertake, which, if it had not been for this ridiculous Secret, which was at last discovered, by the opposite Party, who upbraided him with it in Germany, is thought by many to have been otherwise useful and necessary to amuse his Enemies. Surely, says David, Men of low degree are Vanity, and Men of high degree are a Lie (5).

(4) Id. ibid.

(5) Psal. lxxii, 9. Lie (5).

(6) Mart. del Rio, Disquis. Magicar. lib. iv. cap. i. quest. iii. sect. vi. pag. 197, 198.

[C] The Catholic Writers abuse him at a strange rate. Martin del Rio maintained, That James Brocard was the Devil's Instrument, and that his Revelations were diabolical. 'Quid quæso aliud est liber ille manuscriptus Jacobi Brocardi Calvinistæ revelationum ad Elizabetham Angliæ Reginam, & Prefatio in Genesim, aliæque nonnulla ejusdem opuscula, nisi farrago quædam daemoniacarum revelationum, quarum præcipuum de anno 1580, jam tempus mendacii convicit (6)? — What else I pray is that Manuscript of Revelation to Queen Elizabeth, by James Brocard, the Calvinist, and his Preface to Genesis, and some other Works of his of that kind, but a heap of devilish Revelations; the principal of which, concerning the Year 1510, Time has already proved to be false.' We learn from this Passage, that some Manuscript Copies of the Revelations, which this Man inscribed to Queen Elizabeth, were handed about, and that his chief Prediction concerned the Year 1580, and proved false: I would fain know what it was. We have seen that Thuanus does not spare that Mystical Commentator. Spondanus, who gives the substance of what Thuanus says concerning Pardaillan's Embassy, is no less satirical. 'Qui (Segurius) cum ante aliquot annos in Belgio à Jacobo Brocardo Pedemontano inepto & fatuo hariolo (cujus & scripta inanum vaticinationum plena edita fuere) accepisset fore non ita multos post annos ut Romanus Pontifex à principe quodam Calvinistarum de sede deturbaretur, isque Caput concordie Christianæ futurus esset, &c. (7). — Who (Segurius) having learned some Years before in Holland, from James Brocard, a Piedmontois, a silly foolish Predictor, (who was also Author of some Pieces full of empty Predictions, which have been published) that in a few Years the Pope should be pulled down from his See by a Calvinist Prince, who should become Head of the Christian League, &c.' He laughs at Pardaillan's Credulity, and says, that a Piece was published at Ingolstadt against his Deputation, entitled Incendium Calvinianum (8). He is so ingenuous as to confess that there are some Fanatics in his Communion, who put upon great Designs, and fill with vain Hopes, those that trust to their Promises, and he gives a fresh Instance of it. He names no body; but if I am not very much mistaken, he means Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy. All this is to be found in a long Parenthesis; for long Parentheses are but too common with him. 'Id etiam testimonio Sacre Scripturæ firmans, he speaks of James Brocard, (quales fuerunt singulis sæculis qui ejusmodi sua deliria apertissimis sibi, ut fingunt, sed occultissimis aliis scripturæ auctoritatibus fulcire non dubitarent: & fuit non ita pridem vir apud nos probæ ac religiosæ vitæ magnique apud eos qui ejus opera utebantur habitus, qui similibus fanaticis persuasionibus, ex Joannis Apocalypsi somniatis, nobilem principem in grandes impensas vana spe cujusdam imperii conjecit, qui tamen nec parvum suum statum defendere potuit, & fere omnium rerum inops mortuus est) (9). — Confirming this also by Testimonies of Holy Writ, (such there have been in all Ages who do not stick to build such like Whimsies of their own on certain Scripture Authorities, which as they pretend are plain to them, but most obscure to every body else: there was lately in our Country, a Man of a good and religious Life, and a very useful Man to those who stood in need of his Assistance, who having formed the like fanatical Dreams out of St John's Revelation, caused a noble Prince to put himself to great Charge in vain hopes of a certain Empire, who could not so much as defend his own little State, and died in want of almost every thing). Florimond de Remond insults poor James Brocard very rudely. See the following Remark.

[D] The Protestants are tender of his Reputation. Voëtius rejects the Opinion of Brocard, who believed that the HOLY GHOST denotes all sorts of Events by one sole literal Sense, which may be a thousand

(d) In the Year 1583.

(e) See the Remark [B].

(7) Spondan. Ann. Eccles. ad Ann. 1583. n. 9.

(8) The Jesuits, says Thuanus, lib. lxxix. pag. 523, were the Authors of that Piece. They supposed as omnia Navarro ab Araujonensi infusata hujus telæ textore, quo cladem quam rebus suis pertimebat, excitato in Gallia & Germania motu, à se averteret.

(9) Spond. Ann. Eccles. ad Ann. 1583. n. 9.

I find in Bongar's Letters, that our James Brocard retired to Nuremberg, where he met with some charitable Patrons, who did him very good Offices [F]. He had not yet received, in 1593, the Three hundred Crowns which Segur left him by his Will (f). He was still living in 1594. The Writers of the League took advantage of his Predictions; but they committed two Faults, of which Mr du Pleffis Mornai quickly informed the Public [G].

(f) See the Remark [F].

(g) In the Remarks [C] and [D].

We have already seen, in general (g), that Florimond de Remond treated him ill; but in this new Edition I shall insert his own Words [H].

thousand times mystically applied to particular Occurrences; but he adds, that he was otherwise a good Man, very orthodox and pious. 'Fuit hic Brocardus cætera vir probus, orthodoxæ ac pietatis studiosus, uti videre est ex libello ipsius, tit. 'De Antibaptismo jurantium in Papam & Ecclesiam Romanam, deque eorum idolo zeli (10). — This Brocard was otherwise an honest Man, a Lover of Orthodoxy and Piety, as appears from his Book, intitled, De Antibaptismo, &c.' Nicolas Vignier goes farther, for he grants, That in some things he had the real Gift of Prophecy. These are his Words: 'I must say something of James Brocard, a Venetian, who is very much abused by Remond. It were to be wished, that this Man, who was no Ecclesiastic, had not been so forward to publish his Thoughts upon the Holy Scripture. For tho' he does not depart from the Purity of the Gospel Doctrine, and the Analogy of Faith, yet he too frequently lays aside the true meaning of the Words, and the literal Sense, to run into mystical Interpretations. Nevertheless, so far as God's Power is infinite, and he imparts his Gifts to whom he pleases, those who have been familiarly acquainted with the said Brocard, witness that he had wonderful Revelations of particular things, the Truth whereof was confirmed by the Event, as the Venetians, among others, experienced by the loss of Cyprus, and of their Arsenal, as he had foretold them (11).'

(10) Voeth's dissertation, Theol. Tom. ii, pag. 1075.

(11) Vignier, Theatre de l'Antichrist, Parte I. esp. xxii. p. 339.

(12) See Mr. Quick's Synodicon in Gallia Reformata.

(13) Bongars Letter vi, to Camerarius, pag. 129. Tom. I. printed at the Hague, 1695.

(14) Id. Epist. lxxxiii. Tom. II. pag. 335.

(15) Id. Epist. lxxxix. pag. 301.

[E] The National Synod of Rochelle, in 1581, gave him no quarter. That Assembly drew up an Act importing, That having seen and examined a Latin Book upon Genesis, written by James Brocard, a Piedmonteze, and printed at Rebelle, they have declared, and do declare, that it is full of Impiety and horrid Profanations of the Holy Scripture, and pernicious Errors, especially about Revelations and Prophecies: And that therefore they exhort all the Faithful to beware of being deceived by such a Book (12). Here is a Synod much more vigorous than that which was held at Middleburg in the same Year. What might be the Reason of this Difference? Are the French less moderate than the Dutch? This Reason cannot be alledged; for I could instance some Synods, wherein the French Spirit prevailed, that shewed a greater Moderation than that of Middleburg. Perhaps some will say, that Brocard was in Holland, when these two Synods condemned him; which was the Reason why he had some Friends at Middleburg, and none at Rebelle; but I would advise no body to rest satisfied with such a Solution.

[F] He retired to Nuremberg, where he met with charitable Patrons, who did him very good Offices. Bongars praises their Charity, and the Person to whom they were so kind. 'I hear, says he in a Letter to Camerarius (13), that your Republic has kindly received the good old Man J. Brocard, who in his Youth appeared among the most polite and learned Men. I have been lately well pleased to see him in your Town, and am obliged to Mr Bongars for it. By this means you heap up for yourselves a Treasure in Heaven.' This he wrote the third of February 1591. He expresses the same Affection for Brocard, in a Letter of the sixteenth of November 1594. 'Non possum quin & tibi gratias agam ob miserum, bonum tamen, senem Brocardum tam benigne & liberaliter habitum (14). — I cannot but even thank you for your kind and generous Treatment of the poor, but good, old Brocard.' 'I am mightily pleased (says he in another Letter dated from Frankfort the Twenty fourth of July 1593 (15), with the great Affection you express for M. Brocard. He does certainly deserve that some Persons, of such a Probity as yours is, should take care of him. As for me, I am hardly in a Capacity to oblige him. I leave no Stone returned to procure him the Payment of

'Three hundred Gold Crowns, which Mr Segur left him by his Will.'

[G] The Writers of the League - - - committed two Faults, of which Mr du Pleffis Mornai informed the Public. They mentioned Segur's Embassy among the Expedients which the King of Navarre made use of after the Death of the Duke of Anjou, to secure his Succession to the Crown of France. 'He has sent, said he (16), Segur Par-dailan, one of his Gentlemen, into Germany, Sweden, Denmark, and England, to renew the ancient Confederacies he has contracted with all the Heretics, and to make new ones, and set all his Friends against you, that being assisted with their Forces he may usurp a Crown, from which he is excluded by Reason. To this he has been instigated by the Minister Brocard, a Trumpet of Satan, who, being out of his Wits, is fully persuaded, and has made him believe, that he is spoken of in the Revelations, and that he is to be King of France, and to expel the Pope from his See.' Mr du Pleffis Mornai answered, that Segur was sent Embassador a Year before the Duke of Anjou died, and that his Highness was then in very good Health. - - - Note, adds he (17), that Brocard is an old Italian, who neither is, nor ever was, a Minister, who was condemned by their Synods, who never saw the King of Navarre, nor ever set his Foot in France. He does not deny Segur's Credulity, nor Brocard's prophetic Fancies; he answers nothing upon that Head. One may conclude from his Silence, and from a Passage of d'Aubigné, that those things were real Matter of Fact. D'Aubigné's Words are these: 'Some body proposed the Opinion of the late Segur, who said, That Madmen are accounted Prophets in Turkey, and that every thing went on prosperously in that Country; so that France would be in a happy State, if Brocard's Prophecies were more credited (18).'

(16) Avertissement des Catholiques Anglois aux François Catholiques, p. 33.

(17) Du Pleffis Memoires, Tom. I, pag. 631.

(18) Baron de Farnette, Book iii. chap. xxii. pag. 179.

(19) Segur Par-dailan. See Remarks [B] and [C].

[H] I shall here insert the Words of Florimond de Remond. 'They are Persons, who - - - have had, as they say, Inspirations from Heaven, like this new Prophet, James Brocard, of whom a Gentleman of our Guienne (19) has formerly told me several strange things. He revered him as a second St Paul, and had such Confidence in him, that he reckoned the ruin of the Church already certain; this poor Man built on that the hopes of his Fortune, when I told him that these were Réveries: these Réveries, says he, are no less than the best digested Thoughts of the greatest Man that has been these several Centuries. Not long ago one of my Friends, who cannot yet shake off that Opinion, entertained me pleasantly with the Sallies and Whimsies of that Spirit which had filled their Heads with a Notion of a great Battle, which was to be fought on the Rhine, where the Catholic Name was to be entirely extinguished. On the Descent of that great and terrible Army of so many thousand Pistoleer Reifers, Suiss, and Lansquenets, who came to fall upon us; they expected to see the Accomplishment of their Prophecy, on the Banks, not of the Rhine, but of the Loire, where God stopped their Progress. These are nothing but Réveries and Non sense like those of the Protestants in the Year 1546, which Aretius himself laughed at, as our pretended Reformed do at what Brocard foretold should happen in the Year 1580, which was promised, as he said, by Jeremiah. In order to see what this Brocard was of whom they made so great Account, I took the Pains, or rather I put myself on the Rack, to read his Works; for what greater Torture is there, than to see Books from which, after a great deal of Pains and Sweat, you can learn nothing, nor gain any thing but the Trouble? - - - Such is this Brocard - - - after I had carefully read him over and over, and not found a single Page in which he does not mention Antichrist; I could at last learn nothing unless it be this, that some Phrensy seized him at Venice, in the Year 1583, which he calls a Vision, or Revelation of the HOLY GHOST, when, coming from a Debauch, he set himself to read to the Bible. Whereupon he tells a thousand Whimsies of the Spirit that appeared to him, and how he was carried to the Inquisition, which is nothing else, says he, but the Abomination of Desolation foretold by Daniel and St Paul. He does not say how he got out, or whether he promised to be wiser for the time to come. Scarce all the Hellebore, that Antychrist ever produced, would have sufficed to cure this distempered Brain, which has formed a Notion of a second coming of the Son of GOD, in this Century, and a thousand other Réveries, which were revealed to him by an Angel that GOD sent to him, as he has said both in his Notes on Genesis, and in a Discourse dedicated to the Queen of England, which I have seen in Manuscript (20).

(20) Florim. de Ramond. de l'Antichrist, cap. 18, n. 3, fol. 53.

BRODEAU (JOHN), in Latin Brodeus, born at Tours, was a learned Critic. He flourished in the XVIth Century. His chief Works are, a Commentary upon the Anthologia, ten Books of Miscellanies, Notes upon Oppian, Euripides, &c. Consult Moreri's Dictionary; but observe the Faults he has committed, which I shall take notice of [A]. Lipsius falsely believed that Brodeus was a young Man [B]: He had more reason to be sorry that he was not celebrated in proportion to his Merit. I must observe, that, if he was Sixty three Years of age when he died in 1563, as Sammarthanus affirms, Sigismund Gelenius had been wrong informed concerning his Age, for he makes him but Twenty nine Years old in 1594, and makes this a ground for greater Commendations [C]. I am now prepared to give a Supplement touching the Nobleness of his Extraction [D]. If I did not observe it before, nor the Merit of some of his Relations, it was because I referred to Moreri, who has made ample mention of them, and I could add nothing to what he has said.

[A] Observe the Faults of Moreri, which I shall take notice of. I. If Brodeus died in 1563, being Sixty three Years of Age, as Moreri affirms, after Scævola Sammarthanus, he did not live in the XVth Century; and yet Moreri says he did. II. He did not well understand the Latin Words of Sammarthanus concerning the learned Men with whom Brodeus contracted a Friendship in Italy. Brodeus went twice into that Country, with the French Embassadors: He went to Venice, in the Retinue of George de Selve, and to Rome in that of George d'Armagnac, and, during those two Journeys, he contracted Acquaintance, and particular Friendship, with Sadolet, Egnatius, Bembo, Flamininus, and other Men eminent for their Learning. Hos Brodeus omnes PARTIM Venetiis PARTIM Romæ --- Et vidit familiariter, & propter studiorum conjunctionem facile sibi conciliavit (1). Mr Moreri, instead of mentioning Brodeus's Stay at Venice and at Rome, as Sammarthanus does, ascribes all to his Stay at Rome. It was in the Capital City of the Christian World, says he, that Brodeus got the Friendship of Sadolet and Bembo, both Cardinals, and of Baptist Egnatius, and many learned Men. Those who know that Egnatius was Professor at Venice, and did not stir out of his House at that time, must needs own, that it had been better for Moreri to translate Sammarthanus faithfully. III. It was not by the Advice of those Illustrious Friends, that he applied himself to the Study of the Mathematics, and the Hebrew and Chaldaic Languages. What was Moreri dreaming of, when he found that pretended Advice in the Words of Sammarthanus, which signify only that Brodeus exceeded those Gentlemen, in that, besides polite Learning, which he cultivated as well as they; he understood also Mathematics, Hebrew and Chaldaic: 'Hoc etiam aliquanto superior, quod ad eas quibus pariter incumbant elegantiores literas, ille & Mathematicas artes & Hebræam Chaldaicamque linguam insuper adhiberet' (2). IV. Moreri should not have said, that he died in the beginning of the Civil Wars of Religion, but about the end of the first Civil Wars of that kind. Sub exitum primi civilis ob religionem belli capiti levi tentari febri-cula, sed ad extremum exitiali. These are Sammarthanus's Words, which, however easy, were not understood by Moreri. V. He grew old at Tours in St Martin's, which he called a College. So have been translated these Words of Tbuanus, Apud B. Martinum cui Collegio nomen dederat --- consensit (3). It is certain, if a School-boy did not translate better, he would be laughed at by his School-fellows, and would well deserve Correction. This Blunder was not committed by Moreri, but by the good du Rier of the French Academy. Moreri only copied it from Mr Teiffier (4). Tbuanus means, that Brodeus grew old in St Martin's Church, where he was a Canon.

[B] Lipsius falsely believed, that Brodeus was a young Man. Colomestus made this Observation before me. Nescivit Lipsius, Brodeum obisse sexagenario majorem. Juvenis etiam vocatur a Claverio in Claud. 1602, pag. 9 (5). --- Lipsius did not know that Brodeus died above sixty Years of Age. He is also called a young Man by Claverius. These are Lipsius's Words: 'Joh. Brodeus hæc de Ulyssis errore in Miscellaneis scite coarguit: Brodeus, vir, five adolescens potius, acris ingenii, probi judicii, lectionis diffusæ, quem non magis in ore famæ esse miror, imo indignor (6). --- Brodeus, in his Miscellanies, has very well refuted all this concerning the wandering of Ulysses: Brodeus is a Man, or rather a Youth, of an acute Genius, good Judgment, extensive reading; I wonder, nay, am grieved, that he is not more famous. The most learned Critics, Scaliger, Grotius, and many others, bestowed great Encomiums upon Brodeus (7); nevertheless it may be said, That some Writers, inferior to him in Learning, have been much more talked of; which, it may be, proceeded from his great Modesty, which hindered him from putting himself forward. See how Baptist Sapin Counsellor to the King praises him for his Modesty (8).

[C] Gelenius makes him but twenty nine Years of Age, in 1549, and makes this a Ground for greater Commendations. It is in the Epistle dedicatory to Brodeus's Notes on the Epigrams in the Anthologia: this Epistle dedicatory is dated from Basil, the first of September, 1549; these are Gelenius's Words: 'Commentariorum Autor est juvenis multijugæ lectionis, idemque $\mu\eta\nu\sigma\iota\nu\alpha\tau\alpha$ (9). Johannes Brodeus, Turonensis, ut mirum sit in ejus ætatem tam variam exactamque omnis generis Librorum cognitionem cadere. Aiunt enim vix dum undetrigesimum annum ingressum. --- The Author of these Commentaries is John Brodeus of Tours, a young Man of great Variety of Reading, and an extraordinary Memory, that it is a Wonder so various and exact a Knowledge of Books of all kinds could be got at his Age; for they say he is scarce yet entered into his Twenty ninth Year. 'I am almost twice his Age, adds he, and yet he has cited Authors of which I did not so much as know their Names.' The other Commendations which he bestows upon him are very exquisite.

[D] I am now prepared to give a Supplement touching the Nobleness of his Extraction. JOHN BRODEAU, Marquis of Chabres and Candé, formerly a Justice in Eyre of the Woods and Forests in France, is the eldest of the Family. He retains the original Titles of the House, which first became Illustrious in Victor Brodeau, who was ennobled by

(1) Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. ii, pag. 125.

(2) Ibid.

(3) Tbuan. lib. xxv, pag. 715, ad Ann. 1563.

(4) Elog. tirez de Mr de Thou, Tóm. I, p. 227.

(5) Colomest. Gall. Orient. pag. 32.

(6) Lipf. in Germaniam Tacitii.

(7) Colomest. Gall. Orient. pag. 32, & 267; Sir Thomas Pope Blount censur. Author. p. 464, have collected them.

(8) Prefat. in Brodeus notæ ad Euripidem 1561, apud Colomestum, Gall. Orient. pag. 30.

- 9) Mercurius Gallant of the Month of May, 1702, pag. 164, 165.
- (10) Idem. May, 1702, pag. 185.
- (11) Idem. 186.
- (12) Idem. 171.
- (13) Id. Feb. 1703, p. 70, 71.
- (14) Id. pag. 69.
- by Philip Augustus, in the Field before Acre, in Egypt, for his Father's and his own Glorious Actions (9). Peter Julian Brodeau, Lord of Mancherville, is the eldest of another Branch, who has been twelve or thirteen times at Sea in the King's Service in Quality of Commissary; he has been in several different Actions, and has been wounded in some of them, particularly at the Battle which the Marechal de Tourville gave to Papachin, Vice-Admiral of Spain (10). --- He has for some Years quitted the Sea Service, and addicted himself to Letters (11); he published a new System of the Universe, in the Year 1702. You will find the Analysis of it with great Commendations in the Mercurius Gallant, and also an Account of other Works which he intends to publish (12). You will find him there Author of a Work, intituled, Jeux d'Esprit Et de Memoir, of which above Six thousand Copies have been printed in France (13); and also of another Book printed at Tours, in the Year 1703, and intituled, Moralitez curieuses sur les premiers Jours de la Creation du Monde (14). ---
- Curious moral Reflexions on the six first Days of the Creation of the World. JULIAN SIMON BRODEAU, his Brother, Lord of Oiseville, heretofore Counsellor in the Parliament of Metz, is now Lieutenant-General at Tours (15); they are Sons of Julian Brodeau, who died Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris, the Twenty sixth of March, 1702 (16); who was the Son of Julian Brodeau, that famous Advocate of Parliament, who, always preferring his Function before the most exalted ones of the Robe, chose to die in it (17). He has published, among other Books, the Life of Charles du Moulin, and Notes on the Decrees of Louet, which makes Boileau say in his first Satire, Et feuilletant Louet allongé par Brodeau, --- And perusing Louet prolonged by Brodeau. The Father of this Advocate was called Charles Brodeau, and was Advocate-General to Henry the Great, at that time King of Navarre, and Son of Francis Brodeau, Counsellor of State, and Master of Requests to Antony of Bourbon, King of Navarre (18).

BROSSE (JAMES de la), a great Warrior in the XVIth Century, was born in the Bourbonnois [A]. It is said that he was thirty Years of Age, when he began to bear Arms (a). He quickly got a great skill in the Art of War, and acquired the Esteem of Francis de Lorraine, Duke of Guise, whose Lieutenant-Colonel he afterwards was. He was made Governor of a Duke of Longueville (b), and then he was appointed, together with Sansac, to watch over the Conduct of Francis II, and teach him good Maxims (c). Brantome says, that he was the mildest, and the most courteous Soldier that ever was seen, and that he gave his Advice in such gentle and obliging Words, that every body esteemed him for it; whereas Sansac (d) was on the contrary a bestowing and churlish Man, both in War and at Hunting (e). La Brosse being entirely devoted to Messieurs de Guise, he was chosen to command Two thousand Men, which were sent into Scotland to the Queen-Regent their Sister, in 1559 (f). He departed from his Character, which was Mildness and Clemency, and complied with the Humour of Cardinal de Lorraine [B], or rather he was obliged to act as he was directed by him. That proved very prejudicial to France, because the Scotch, in concert with the English, made it their Business to get themselves rid of his Troops. The French were besieged in little Leith, and shewed as much Courage and Conduct as could be expected from Troops consummate in the Art of [A] He was born in the Bourbonnois. Le Laboureur, who knew so many Families, and Genealogies, owns (1), 'That he knows nothing of the Birth of this Mr de la Brosse, because there is nothing extant about it, and because his Family was extinct by the Death of himself and his Son at the Battle of Dreux.' I have found by chance, in Belcarius's History, what Province he was of. 'Franciscus Rex præclaræ indolis, cujus adolescentiæ moderandæ Jacobus Brosianus Bonus ac Sansacus attributi erant, ille vir prudentissimus & rerum bellicarum peritissimus, iste ingenio turbido, sed non malo, id (2) non permittet, nam supra ætatem sapere jam cœperat, ut mihi idem Brosianus sæpius confirmavit, eramus enim vicini ac per familiares (3). --- Francis, who was a King of an extraordinary Genius, whose Governors in his Youth were James de la Brosse, of the Bourbonnois, and Sansac, the former a very prudent Man, and well skilled in Military Affairs; the latter of a turbulent, but not evil, Disposition, would never have suffered it; for he began then to have Understanding above his Age, as the said la Brosse has often told me, for we were Neighbours, and very intimate.' Mezeray was not ignorant that la Brosse was a Native of that Country. 'The Earl of Lenox, says he (4), brought some Troops of Francis I into Scotland, in the Year 1543, but that young Man, having lost their Muster-Money at play, went into the Service of the King of England, who married him to his Niece. La Brosse (5), a Gentleman of Bourbonnois was sent in his Room, and then Lorges Earl of Montgomerie. Thus he speaks under the Year 1545. He says under the Year 1559, That a Succor of three thousand Men was sent to the Queen Regent of Scotland, Commanded by la Brosse, a Bourbonnois. I think he is in the wrong to believe, that this Gentleman was sent thither before the Year 1545.

[B] He complied with the Humour of the Cardinal of Lorraine. Hear Mr le Laboureur: 'Henry Clutin, Lord of Ville-Paris, commonly called d'Oysel, who was sent to her as her Lieutenant, and afterwards la Brosse, though he was naturally inclined to Mildness, and Nicolas de Pelvé, Bishop of Amiens, who were likewise sent thither, exasperated the People by their Maxims and bold Undertakings, being not sufficiently supported by France, from whence they received more Counsels and Orders, than Money and Troops, but particularly from the Cardinal of Lorraine; who is accused of an Intention to carry things to the last Extremity with the same Boldness and Confidence he shewed in the Administration of Affairs in France (6). One of la Brosse's Maxims was, 'That in order to secure Scotland, it was necessary to settle in it a Colony of a thousand French Gentlemen, who should be put in Possession of the Estates of those, who were to be out-lawed on Account of Religion (7). The Scotch, being informed that he had given such Advice, conceived a great Aversion for the French. They discovered it by some intercepted Letters, if we may believe Buchanan. 'Labrossius equestris loco natus, sed (8) qui magnum in militari usum habebat --- censabat, omnem, sine discrimine, Scotorum Nobilitatem esse extinguendam: in eorum autem prædiis mille Catafractos equites, Gallos, collocari posse: reliquam multitudinem servorum loco habendam. Id consilium, literis ejus ad Gallum interceptis, divulgatum, mirum, quantum Gallorum odium, jam aliis de causis natum, auxit (9). --- La Brosse, who was Son of a Knight, but had great Experience in Military Affairs --- was of opinion, that all the Nobility of Scotland ought to be cut off without Distinction: and a thousand Frenchmen at Arms be placed on their Estates; and that all the rest should be counted Slaves. This Advice being discovered by intercept-

(1) Additions to Castellan's Memoirs, Tom. II, pag. 96.

(2) To wit, that Catherine de Medici should govern the Kingdom.

(3) Belcar. lib. xxviii, n. 37, 51.

(4) Mezerai, Abr. Chron. Tom. IV, pag. 632.

(5) It is so said in the Dutch Edition: It should be Brosse.

(15) Idem. May 1702, pag. 91.

(16) Id. p. 163.

(17) Id. ibid.

(18) Id. p. 164.

(6) Le Laboureur's Additions to Castellan's Tom. i, p. 436.

(7) Mezerai, Vie de François II, pag. 16, Tom. III, of the F. lib. Edit.

(8) This sed, [but] does not seem worthy of Buchanan; for Men of a noble Extraction do commonly apply themselves to the Art of War.

(9) Buchanan's re- rum Scotic. lib. xvi, sub fin.

(g) See Brantome in his Encomium upon the Prieur de Martignac, who commanded in the place.

of War (g); but at last they were obliged to capitulate, and to leave that Country for ever. La Brosse performed his Duty very well during the Siege, notwithstanding he was Seventy five Years old [C]. He was killed at the Battle of Dreux, with his Son, in the Year 1562 (b). He was Knight of the Order, and, if he had not been killed in that Battle, he would certainly have been made Marshal of France [D]; for he received the Pension of a Marshal from the time that he and Sanfac were appointed to attend King Francis II (i). None but he and Sanfac took care of the King's burial.

(b) See some curious Circumstances in the Remark [D].

(i) Brantome, in his Encomium upon the Marshal de Vieille-Ville.

ing his Letters to France, most strangely encreased the Hatred which had been conceived against the French on other Accounts. Belarius does not deny that Pelleus and la Brosse advised to confiscate the Estates of the Calvinist Gentlemen, and to give them to a thousand French Gentlemen, and to lay a Tax, as in France, upon all other Families (10).

(10) Belarius, lib. xxviii, n. 51.

[C] La Brosse performed his Duty very well during that Siege, notwithstanding he was Seventy five Years of Age. The General for the King, in the Town, was that venerable old Man, and great Captain, the good Mr le Brosse, Seventy five Years of Age, an old Register of War, whose Valour, wife Conduct, and Intrepidity were of great Use in the Siege (11). If he was then Seventy five Years old, he could not be eighty when he was killed at the Battle of Dreux; for there are but two or three Years between this Siege and that Battle. However, I will not be too critical upon Brantome; for he uses a Restriction: That old Man, says he, died at the Age of eighty Years or very near.

(11) Brantome, in his Encomium upon Mr de Martignac, pag. 246.

[D] If he had not been killed at the Battle of Dreux — he would certainly have been made Marshal of France. At that time this Dignity was bestowed only on a Vacancy: There was one after the Battle of Dreux, where the Marshal de St André lost his Life. Brantome says, that the Duke of Guise would have procured that Dignity to M. de la Brosse, for he had a great Affection and Esteem for him; and he deserved it, having been a Man of Honour, and without blemish. And though the Duke of Guise was a very great Captain, he always consulted that good and honourable old Man, who, both in my Opinion and that of other People, was very well skilled in the Art of War (12). I remember (continues Brantome) that very early in the Morning on the Day that the Battle of Dreux was fought, it being very cold Weather, as they were drawing up the Army in Order of Battle, that good Man passed by M. Beaulieu, Captain of the Guards, and me. We put off our Hats to him very respectfully; he did the same to us, and said, How, Gentlemen, do you pull off your Hats this cold Weather? We answered him, Sir, who deserves it better than you, who are one of the most honourable and ancient Captains of this Army? Gentlemen, replied he, I am one of the most inconsiderable; and then he added, I do not know what will be the Success of this Battle, but I fancy I shall be killed. And indeed I have lived too long, and it is a shame for me to bear a Lance, and imbrue it in Blood, when I should be at Home begging of God, that he would forgive me the Sins of my Youth: And thus he left us, because the Duke of Guise sent for him, being always desirous to consult him.

(12) In his Encomium upon the Marshal de Vieille-Ville apud de Labureau, Tom. II, pag. 97.

BROSSIER (MARTHA), a Woman who pretended to be possessed by the Devil, was like to have occasioned great Disorders in France, towards the latter end of the XVIth Century. Her Father, who was a Weaver at Romorantin, found it more convenient to ramble about with his three Daughters, one of which had the Art of making a thousand Distortions, than to stay at home and mind his Trade. He therefore went up and down through the neighbouring Towns, showing his Daughter Martha as a Woman possessed by the Devil, who stood in great need of the Exorcism of the Church. A prodigious multitude of People resorted to that Spectacle. The Cheat was found out at Orleans, and for that reason, in the Year 1598, all the Priests of the Diocese were forbid to proceed to Exorcisms on pain of Excommunication. Nor was the Bishop of Angers (a) more easy to be imposed upon [A]. He quickly smelt out the Cheat; for, having invited Martha to Dinner, he caused some Holy Water to be brought her instead of common Water, and common Water instead of Holy Water [B]. Martha was caught; she was not at all affected

(a) His Name was Charles Meron.

[A] Martha's Cheat was found out at Orleans — Neither was the Bishop of Angers more easy to be imposed upon. The thing is related by Tibullus in this Order: I do not know whether he narrowly considered the Matter; for the other Historians tell us, That the Cheat was found out first at Angers, and then at Orleans; nay, they say, that the Theologal of Orleans promoted this Imposture by his too great Credulity, before Martha had been examined by the Bishop of Angers (1). This Trick being found out, that Prelate was contented with having deceived the Devil, who had a mind to deceive the World, and sent her away, threatening to punish her, if she returned into his Diocese. She was carried to Orleans, where two cunning Devices were thought of, in order to try her. I. They presented to her Despauterius's Grammar in an old binding. Martha, looking upon it as the Scourge of the Devil, trembles at the bare Sight of the Cover, and the two Copper-clasps. They opened that Book, and bid her read in it. She lights by chance upon some Verses made up of hard Words without any Signification, which she takes to be the most violent Exorcisms, and, having imperfectly pronounced them, throws herself upon the Ground making a thousand Motions. II. As it is said, That the Devils are pleased with

(1) Cayet, Chronol. Septenaire, Book II, fol. 89, verso. Matthieu, Hist. de la paix, lib. II, narrat. III, pag. 335.

† Imposturam fecit & passus est. D. GALLIENI. TREBELL. Pol. lib.

‡ Martha lights upon these Words of Despauterius Nexo xui, xum vult Texo xui, indèque textum.

Perfumes, and grow fat with Vapours †, they presented to her a Perfume, composed of Drugs and Herbs, so stinking, that as soon as the Vapour came near her Nose, as she was set tied to a Chair, and struggling with her Feet, being overcome with the Fire, and the horrible stink, she cried out, Gentlemen, forgive me, I am choked, he is gone. By that means the Official of Orleans discovered the Imposture, and forbade the Clergy of his Diocese to exorcise her upon pain of being suspended (2).

[B] The Bishop of Angers — caused some common Water to be brought to her for holy Water. I do not know what to think of a Story of d'Aubigné concerning that same Prelate (3). The Bishop ordered the Demoniac to be brought to him, and made a very strict Enquiry about her: He desired to know what were the most violent Signs that gave occasion to believe that she was possessed with Devils. One of the Protocols answered him, That the Violence of her Torments appeared by two things; one was, when her Skin was touched by a Cross wherein there was a piece of the true Cross; the other Proof was manifest, by her roaring and contortions, when some Text of the Gospel was read to her. The Bishop had about his Neck one of those Crosses, whereof I shall speak † Mali daemones gaudent libamine & nidore quibus eorum corpusculum pinguescit, vivit enim id vapouribus, & robatur nidoribus. Porphy. de Ab. inentia.

(2) Matthieu, ibid. pag. 337, See also Cayet, ubi supra, fol. 90.

(3) Confeff. Cath. de Sancy, lib. I, cap. VI, pag. 352.

fectured when she drank the Holy Water, but she made a thousand Contortions when the common Water was presented to her. Thereupon the Prelate calls for the Book of Exorcisms, and reads the beginning of the Aeneid. Martha was trapped a second time; for thinking those Latin Verses of Virgil were the beginning of the Exorcism, she put herself into violent Postures as if she had been tormented by the Devil. This was sufficient to convince the Bishop of Angers that she was an Impostor: however he only reproved her Father in private. The Knave did not care to go back to Romorantin with his Daughter, as the Prelate had advised him; but, on the contrary, he carried her to the great Stage of the Kingdom, I mean to Paris, where he hoped to be supported by credulous and ill-affected People, and by those whom the Edict of Nantes had lately exasperated against the King. He pitched upon St Genevieve's Church to act his Farce. The Capuchins, who immediately took up the Business, lost no time, and quickly exorcised the wicked Spirit of Martha, without a previous Enquiry, as it is ordered by the Church, into the Life and Health of that Woman. The Postures she made, whilst the Exorcists performed their Function, easily made the common People believe that she was a Demoniac, and the thing was quickly noised about all over the Town. The Bishop (b) being willing to proceed orderly in the matter, appointed five of the most famous Physicians in Paris to examine the thing: They unanimously reported, that since it did not appear that Martha had any Skill in Greek or Latin [C]. The Devil had no hand in the matter, but that there was a great deal of Imposture, and some Distemper in it (c). Two Days after, two of those Physicians seemed to waver, and, before they answered the Bishop, desired the three others might be sent for, and time granted them till the next Day. Thus on the first of April, 1599, a critical Day for the Cause, Father Seraphin, on the one side, renewed his Exorcisms, and Martha re-iterated her Convulsions on the other: She rolled her Eyes, lolled out her Tongue, quaked all over her

(b) Henri de Gondi.

(c) Unanimi ab his consensu, Episcopo rogante, responsum est, nihil à spiritu, multa fida, paucà à morbo esse. Tbuanus, lib. cxxiii, pag. 880.

in the Chapter concerning Relics; for his Father, who informed me of the most secret Passages of the late King's Life, had received the same Jewels with others, and cleverly cured them of their Cancers; (this by the by). The Leader of the Demoniac, who saw that Crows about the Bishop's Neck, turned up her Petticoats, as she lay on the Ground, to her Knees, and made a Sign to the Prelate to touch her with the Crows subtly. But that wicked Man pulled the Crows from his Neck, and with his other Hand cunningly took a Key out of his Pocket, and the Jade no sooner felt the cold Key upon her Thigh, but she frightened the Assistants with her Gambols. In order to a second Tryal, the Gospel was to be read in her Presence. The Bishop took a Petronius out of his Pocket, which he carried instead of a Breviary, and began to read, Matrona quædam Epheſi, &c. Then she fretted and fumed, and when the Bishop came to these Words, placitum etiam pugnabis amoris, she fell into a Swoon. That Prelate, who is half Lutheran, says he cannot countenance those Impostures. — He has been severely reprimanded for it, and therefore he proved more favourable to the second Demoniac called Martha, who was lately brought to him by a Capuchin who had instructed her. She has two Devils, the one called Belzebub, and the other Astaroth, &c.

EXAMINATION of a Story related by D'Aubigné.

I must needs say, that I suspect the Truth of this Story; and when I compare what Tbuanus says of that Bishop's Conduct towards Martha with d'Aubigné's Narrative of his Conduct to a former Demoniac, I find nothing in it but what puts me in mind of the Custom and Method of satirical Writers. One would think, that the Rules of their Art impose upon them the Necessity of altering such Circumstances as are not diverting enough, or so disadvantageous as they would have them, and to put, in the Room of them, some that are more ridiculous, or more disobliging. To say that a Prelate recited a Verse out of Virgil, instead of the Formula used in Exorcisms, is not a satirical Stroke; but to say that he took a Petronius out of his Pocket, which he carried about him instead of a Breviary, and that he pitched upon the Story of the Epheſian Matron, is a cruel Raillery upon a Prelate. The unhappy Rules of Satire required therefore, that, instead of keeping to Tbuanus's Account, Petronius should be put in the Room of Virgil, &c. (5). But because it was well known that Petronius had not been made use of upon Martha Brosſier, there was a necessity to mention another Woman possessed by the Devil instead of her. And because Tbuanus

(5) In the Baron de Fœnellet, chap. v, of the second Book, pag. 60. D'Aubigné supposes that the Bishop read an Epigram of Marſial.

observes, that this Passage of the Exorcism, Et homo factus est, struck the greatest Blow, there was a necessity to suppose a like Circumstance in the pretended Exorcism of Petronius, and, in order to it, to pitch upon these Words, Placitum etiam pugnabis amoris? A satirical Writer ought to be mistrusted; for he does not relate things as they are, but as he wishes they were, that he might be a Slanderer, without being a Liar. They are generally his own Ideas; he gives us not Realities. The Liberty d'Aubigné took, contrary to the Accounts of all Historians, can never be excused, if it be seriously considered. He charges the Bishop of Angers with a fraudulent Conduct towards Martha; This may give occasion to draw Conclusions; and it is to be feared some Consequences will be drawn from it, against his other Stories, and that, when this is observed, People will say, Accipe nunc Danaum insidias, & crimine ab uno Disce omnes (6).

(6) Virgil. Æn. lib. ii, vers. 65.

Now see how well the Greeks their Will dignify'd, In this our Crime, behold the rest compriz'd.

[C] She seemed not to have any Skill in Greek or Latin.] See the Remark [B] of the Article GRANDIER.

Observe, that the People had been made to believe, that Martha Brosſier understood and spoke many learned Languages. Being at Cleri, she was asked how the Devil got into her Body (7)? and she answered, That it was for the Glory of God. This was a wrong Answer. Being asked the Manner how the Thing was done; She answered, why it was done (8). 'Nevertheless from that very time it was said, that she understood and spoke Greek; and because upon such Occasions a common Report increases daily, it was further said, that she spoke Hebrew, Arabic, and Chaldaic; so that it was impossible to bring off the People from their Belief that Martha was truly possessed by the Devil (9). This is a remarkable Instance, how easily the Bulk of Mankind suffer themselves to be imposed upon, and what a vast Difference there is between the Judgment of the Vulgar, and that of the Learned, who examine Things with an unprejudiced Mind. The latter found that the pretended Demoniac understood neither Greek nor Latin, and alledged this Ignorance as a Proof of the Cheat; but the greatest Part of the People believed, that Martha Brosſier spoke High-Dutch, English, Latin, Hebrew, and all sorts of Languages (10).

(7) Πῶς ἡδράσθη, ἡ τοῦ δαίμονος. Matthew, ibid. pag. 335.

(8) Id. pag. 336.

(9) Id. pag. 336.

(10) Cayet. Chronol. Septem. fol. 90.

[D] She

Body; and when the Father came to these Words, Et homo factus est, she fell down, and skipped and capered from the Altar to the Door of the Chapel. Whereupon the Exorcist cried out, that if any one persisted still in his Incredulity, he needed only fight that Devil, and try to conquer him, if he durst venture his Life. Marescot, one of the five Physicians, answered, that he accepted the Challenge, and immediately took Martha by the Throat, and bid her stop. She obeyed, and alledged, for her Excuse, that the evil Spirit had left her, which was confirmed by Father Seraphin. Marescot inferred from thence, that it was he that had frightened the Devil away. The Bishop ordered, that the Exorcisms should be carried on: At first Martha was not moved with them; only when she saw that Marescot was ready to struggle with her, she said, that he, Riolan and Hautin, would do better to mind their Physic: But when she knew they were gone, she threw herself upon the Ground, and began again her mad Tricks. They returned, and quickly made her quiet, and maintained to Father Seraphin that there was nothing supernatural in the Case, exhorted the Maid to deceive the People no longer, and threatened her with the Rack. They consulted again about it, and laying great stress on Martha's confessing, when asked several Questions in Greek and Latin, that she was ignorant of those two Languages, they all concluded, except one, that she was not possessed by the Devil (d). It is true, there was another (e), who notwithstanding the Signs of Imposition, which he acknowledged, gave his Opinion, that she should be observed three Months longer. Two Days after some other Physicians were sent for, the first being dismissed. Father Seraphin attended by one of his Fraternity, who was an Englishman, repeated his Exorcisms; and then Martha, besides her usual Postures, answered some Questions that were asked her in Greek and English (f) [D]. Whereupon, the Physicians asserted, that she was truly possessed by the Devil: Marescot confuted all the Arguments they alledged for it. People being divided in their Opinions about it, and there being reason to fear that some Answers might be suggested to that Maid, which might raise a Sedition, under pretence of the Edict granted to the Protestants; Henry IV was advised not to neglect the matter. He was sensible of the Importance of it, and enjoined the Parliament of Paris to use their Authority in the Affair. The Parliament ordered Martha to be put into the Hands of the Lieutenant-Criminal, and the King's Attorney in the Chatelet. They kept her forty Days, during which time they shewed her to the best Physicians, who asserted, that they observed nothing in her that was beyond Nature. In the mean time the Preachers gave themselves a prodigious Liberty (g) [E]: They cried out, that the Privileges of the Church were incroached upon, and that such Proceeding was suggested by the Heretics. Andrew du Val, a Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Archangel Du-Puy, a Capuchin, were the most furious among those seditious Declaimers. The Parliament had much ado to silence the latter; but at last they made him sensible of their Power, and on the Twenty fourth of May, 1599, the Provost was ordered to carry James Brossier and his three Daughters to Romorantin, and the Father forbid to let his Daughter Martha go abroad without leave from the Judge, on pain of corporal Punishment (h). Thus the Devil was condemned by an Arrêt (i). We shall see, in another place (k), what became of her.

(d) His Name was Duret.

(e) Called Hautin, Altrius. The Author of the Notes upon the Confession Catholique de Sancy, pag. 486, of the Edition of 1603, calls him Aubin, and ascribes to him a Book against the Judgment of the Monks. He says he follows Thuanus, but I find no such thing in that Historian.

(f) Observe, that she always answered in French.

(g) Non propterea plebis jam commotæ tremulus aut concionatorum ex ambone licentiosæ voces cessant, libertatem ecclesiasticam à magistratû regio eripi quantiam. Thuanus, lib. cxxiii, pag. 882.

(h) Taken from the 123d Book of Thuanus's History.

(i) Du Chesne, Antiq. des Villes de France, pag. 269.

(k) In the Text of the Article ROCHEFOUCAUD (ALEXANDER DE LA).

[D] She answered some Questions that were asked her in Greek and English. Marescot was in the right to say (11), I. That it was not certain that Martha had answered the Questions put to her in Greek and English. II. That if she had answered them, it was a meer Trick, she being taught to give a certain Answer to some Greek and English Words, that had been agreed upon: For, said he, if she understands Greek, why did she say, that she understood not Latin, when she was asked some Questions in that Language, which is so common among us? And why, being afterwards interrogated in Greek, did she make no answer? What Montagne says somewhere, was never better practised than upon this Occasion. The Exorcists, perceiving that Martha's Ignorance of the learned Languages was objected to them as a great Difficulty, helped the Matter as well as they could, by suggesting to Martha an Answer to some Questions in Greek; and having an English Monk at their Disposal, it was an easy thing to add the English-Tongue to the Greek. But let us hear Montagne: 'I have seen, says he (12), the Rise of several Miracles in my time; and though they are stifled in the Birth, yet one may see what course they would have taken, if they had lived their full time; for it is but finding the end of the Thread, and you may wind off as much as you please; and there is a greater Distance from nothing to the least thing in the World, than from the least to the greatest. The first Persons, who are well seasoned with the beginning of a Miracle, when they come to publish their Story perceive by the Opposition that is made where the Difficulty of gaining belief of it lies, and patch up that Place with some false Piece.'

[E] The Preachers took a prodigious Liberty. When I think that the wretched Daughter of a Weaver, carried from Town to Town like a Bear, and at last engrossed by two or three Monks, who pretended that she was a Demoniac, made Henry IV, the Parliament of Paris, and all honest Frenchmen, very uneasy: when I think that such a Creature gave occasion to fear that a large Kingdom would fall again into a Combustion, which was but just quenched; when I think that, upon the News of her going to Rome, the Agents of the French Court were ordered to omit nothing with the Pope in order to ward off that Blow (13): I say, when I consider all these things, I cannot but pity the Fate of Sovereigns, and their unavoidable Dependence upon the Clergy. Whether they be devout or not, they will be always obliged to have a regard for them, and to fear them; they are a true Imperium in imperio. It is true, the Kingdom of JESUS CHRIST is not of this World; he says so himself (14): but those, who pretend to represent him, are frequently Masters of the Kings of the Earth, and will give, or take away Crowns. And those, who talk so much of the Church Militant, are more in the right than they think. This Title of her's cannot be called into question; she is too much concerned in Wars,

(11) In the Confutation of the Writing of the Physicians who declared that Martha was possessed by the Devil. Apud Thuanus, lib. cxxiii.

(12) Essais, lib. iii, cap. xi, pag. 436.

(13) See the Text of the Article ROCHEFOUCAUD (ALEXANDER DE LA).

(14) John xviii 36.

Wars, her Arms are too formidable, to contend with her about it. It is true, she pretends to be unarmed; but what does this signify to those who are afraid of her, since she has a thousand ways of arming the World, and shewing the Futility of the Maxim, Nemo dat quod non habet. - - - - No body gives what he has not. How many Men has she, of each of whom one may say what the Poet says of Misenus?

----- quo non præstantior alter

Ere ciere viros, martemque accendere cantu (15).

(15) Virgil. Æn. lib. vi, ver. 164.

(a) Samuel Clark's Observation. selecte ad Rem. Literariam Speculat. Tom. III, pag. 198.

(b) Broughton scribit in Apocalypsim profecto magnas nugæ, ut fecit in Daniel: est furiosus & maledicus. Scaligerana secundus, pag. 38.

(c) See the Title of it below, in the Remark [B].

BROUGHTON (HUGH), an English Divine, who died in the Year 1612, was very learned, and published a great Number of Books. He was so laborious, that, unless some considerable Affair hindered, he studied twelve or fourteen, or often sixteen Hours a Day (a). His Commentaries on the Apocalypse, and on the Prophet Daniel [A] are very poor, and he himself is a furious and abusive Writer, if we may believe the Scaligerana (b). He was extraordinarily attached to the Discipline of the Church of England, and rigorously condemned that of the Presbyterians. The Oration he addressed to the Inhabitants of Geneva (c) [B], shews it in a very lively manner; he aimed particularly at Theodore Beza, and it is he who reproached him with what we have seen elsewhere [C]. He wrote him very rough Letters, and communicated the Copies of them to the Jesuit Serarius, with full Permission to publish them [D].

[A] He wrote a Commentary on the Prophet Daniel. What he writ in English on this Prophet was translated into Latin, and published at Basil in the Year 1599, by a young Man, who was afterwards Pensionary of the Province of Zealand, named Adam Boreel (1).

[B] He addressed an Oration to the Inhabitants of Geneva. It was printed in Greek, at Mentz, apud Johannem Albinum, in the Year 1601 in 8vo, under this Title. Ἀρχὴ πρὸς τοὺς Γενεύαιους περὶ τῆς κατὰ δόξαν εἰς ἑσέως, τί δέλει τὸ πρῶτον. Oratio ad Geneveses de descensu ad inferos, quid locutio velit. An Oration to the Inhabitants of Geneva concerning the Signification of the Expression of descending into Hell. It contains Ninety three Pages in 8vo, and is a very learned Piece. Præclara est & rebus scitu dignissimis referta. Facile trecenti auctorum textus ut plurimum sine auctorum nomine & librorum allegatione recitantur in opusculo illo. Defectum est ejus de Beza, Billono, Barleo (2), ac aliis judicium, & nemini non placere potest (3). - - - It is excellent, and full of things worthy to be known; there are at least three hundred drest Authors cited in that little Work, generally without the Authors names, or Titles of their Books; his Judgment concerning Beza, Billon, Barlow, and others is clear, and must please every Body.

He complains, that he had heard it said at Geneva that a certain English Lord was an Apostate from the Faith, because he believed that the Discipline of Geneva was not Apostolical. Quæ Broughtonum se cum Genæ esset, audivisse refert de imputatâ Domino suo Apostasiâ ex hoc Capite quod non crederet Geneveses τὴν ἀποστολικὴν κρατεῖν πολιτείαν. Verba ejus adscribere non pigrabimur; ita vero illa habent: Παρ' ὧν ἂν ἀκηκοα, τὸν ἐμὸν κύριον ἀποσύναι τῆς πίστεως, ὅτι ἔπεισέται ὑμᾶς τὴν ἀποστολικὴν κρατεῖν πολιτείαν. Quinam ille sit Dominus quodam modo ex sequentibus colligere pronum est; nam paulo post, ut Broughtonum Latine loqui non nemo fecit, Geneveses ita compellat: Diligentiam præterea adhibete ut tandem Beneficio adficiatis eos, qui vobis succurrerant in extremâ paupertate vestra octo chiliadibus coronatorum, quibus mei Domini, Henricus Comes Vindoniensis & Franciscus Valsinghamus & Gualterus Mildemæus, &c. vobis inferoierunt (4). - - - What Broughton says, when he was at Geneva, concerning the Imputation of Apostasy to his Lord, on this Account, because he did not believe that they of Geneva held the Apostolic Discipline. I have transcribed his Words, which are these: When I was amongst you I heard that my Lord had apostatized from the Faith, because he does not believe that you hold the Apostolic Discipline. Who that Lord is may in some measure be gathered from what follows; for a little lower, Broughton, as some body has translated him, speaks thus to the People of Geneva: Furthermore, take care at length to requite those who assisted you in your extreme Necessity with eight thousand Crowns, with which my Masters, Henry Earl of Winchester, Francis Walsingham, and Walter Mildmay, &c. assisted you. A Physician of Vratislaw has a Greek and Latin Copy of that Oration, accompanied with Notes; and he designs to deposit it in some public Library, or impart it to the first Person that comes, who has a Mind to print it (5).

[C] It was he who reproached Theodore Beza with what we have seen elsewhere (6). That is to say, the continual Alterations of his Notes on the New Testament in every new Edition. Mr Columies believed that the Letter wherein this Charge is found was Drusus's (7); but he is mistaken, and probably only followed the Error of the Jesuit Rosweide. We will go to the Source; the Jesuit Serarius having said that Casaubon had observed some Faults committed by Beza on the New Testament, adds, that another Author, not a Catholic, promised to point out a greater Number of them. Presently he repeats the reproachful Terms used by this other Author in accusing Theodore Beza of Ignorance, and cites Oratio πρὸς τοὺς Γενεύαιους (8); some Pages after he recites the Passage in question, and observes that he takes it from a Letter written to Theodore Beza by an Innovator, whom he had cited before (9): it is certain he means the Author of the Oratio πρὸς τοὺς Γενεύαιους; and yet the Jesuit Rosweide was of Opinion, that Drusus was the Author of that Letter; for in copying the Passage mentioned by Serarius, he puts in the Margin Joh. Drus. epist. ad Beza (10). But Sixtus Amama shewed him that Drusus was not the Author of that Letter, and that Serarius pretended to attribute it to Hugh Broughton, a Man who had had great Differences with Theodore Beza and Liveleius. Novit universa Anglia, omnis Germania, quam acris contentiois ferram (nec enim est quod hoc dissimulemus, nec est quod Papistæ eo nomine nobis insultent;

Trojanos intra muros peccatur & extra) cum Beza & Liveleio reciprocaverit. Norunt hoc optime Moguntini Jesuitæ qui à se oleum in hunc ignem contra Legis præscripta injectum non ibunt inficias. Drusii itaque non est. Nota, Hy-lus, & libri ejus repugnant. Norunt omnes qui ipsum, testes sunt libri ejus quam de Liveleio præclare fenserit. Culpam ergo agnoscat Rosweidus aut alia prodat documenta (11). - - - All England and Germany are acquainted what a warm Contest he had with Beza and Liveleius (for we have no occasion to dissemble it, nor had the Papists room to insult us on that Account,

That Crime's committed both in Camp and Town),

The Jesuits of Mentz know it very well, nor will they deny that they poured Oil into that Flame contrary to the Direction of the Law; therefore it is not Drusus's: the Character, Style, and his Books, shew the contrary. All who knew him know, and his Books testify, how good an Opinion he had of Liveleius; therefore let Rosweide acknowledge his Fault, or bring other Proofs.

[D] He communicated to the Jesuit Serarius Copies of his Letters to Beza, with full Liberty to publish them. A Canon of Cologne soon discovered this Game; for he inserted in a Book, which he published

(5) Ibid. p. 200.

(6) In the Remark [E], of the Article BEZA.

(7) See the same Remark.

(8) Serarii Minervæ, lib. ii, cap. vi, pag. 39. See also lib. iv, cap. iii, pag. 89.

(9) Id. ibid. lib. ii, cap. x, p. 47.

(10) Rosweyd. in Anti Casaubono, pag. 31.

(11) See the Letter which Sixtus Amama wrote to Sibrandus Sicama, prefixed to the second Edition of the Treatise of Drusus de Hæresis, &c. fol. ††† 3, verso.

(1) Voëtius Polit. Eccles. Tom. III, pag. 772.

(2) It should rather have been Barlo, for it is Dr Barleo that he abuses.

(3) Observat. select. ad Rem. Literariam Speculat. Tom. III, pag. 199, Edit. Hæle Magdeb. Ann. 1701.

(4) Ibid. p. 199.

* Hanc Epistolam Brochtonus Francforto Moguntiam misit ad Doctissimum virum Nicolaum Serrarium qui mihi communicavit. Auctor ut Serrario publicaret permittit. — Broughton sent this Epistle from Francfort to the most learned Nicolas Serrarius. The Author gave Serrarius leave to publish it.

published in the Year 1602, a Letter communicated to him by this Jesuit, which Broughton had wrote to Theodore Beza a little before. It is very proper to shew the Animosity of this English Doctor. Idem iste Brochtonus in Epistola Græcâ ad Beza * tria crimina gravissima illi exprobat, quam Epistolam Græcam fideliter Latine translatam, ut ab omnibus melius intelligatur, ad eorum speiendi & publicanda diffidia, subijcio. Multa habeo adversus te, ô Theodore, de quibus me accusasti: quare te omnino injuriarum postulare cogor. Primum crimen est, quod duo testes Magnates Angliæ contra testificari perhibentur, quæ jam typis excuduntur. Posteaquam eorum gratiæ quæ de rebus Bizantium ad te scripsi, me, sicuti nunc omnibus palam feci, vanum hominem cognominasti: Nisi ostendas hos testes non locuples, ac fide dignos esse, tuam stoliditatem promulgabo. Volui etiam Genève typis mandare nuncupationem, ac illam Hebræi Epistolam illustre encomium Heroine Angliæ continentem. Ac permittente Synodo & Syndico tu obstitisti, pari modo admonitus, quam inconsiderate & absurde, & cum fidei periculo, interpretemini illud, descendere ad inferos, obduratus es, neque cedis. Tertium est illud quod mendaciter contra Senatum vestrum locutus es: quasi mihi ut homini turbulento, & in Angliæ Reginam maledico, necem allaturus esset. Hæc enim ad Prælatem Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ scripsisti. Expecto quid sis ad ista solide responsum. Literas tuas celebri medico tradas, Domino novæ turris, hospiti meo: Ipse dabit operam ut ad me perferantur. Quod si nihil respondebis, polliceor tibi rem omnibus Ecclesiis me patefacturum, etiam exhausta jam prope tibi vita. Opinor autem & mihi ipsi adhuc paululum vitæ superesse, ideoque conabor offensionis expers, videri. Vale, Francforti decima Aprilis 1601.

Tuus BROUGHTONUS.

* Inscriptio Epistolæ erat,

Theodoro Beze, multi nominis Viro, Genève (12). — This same Broughton, in a Greek Letter to Beza, upbraids him with three heinous Crimes: The Greek Letter I subjoin, faithfully translated into Latin, that it may be understood by every body, in order to discover their Contents, and make them public. I have many things against thee, O Theodore, of which thou hast accused me, wherefore I am absolutely obliged to charge you with having done me wrong. The first Fault is what is disproved by the Testimonies of two English Peers, which are already in the Press, in as much as you have called me a vain Man, on account of what I write concerning the Affairs of Constantinople, as I have now published to the World; unless you shew that these Witnesses are not substantial and credible, I will proclaim your Folly. I had a mind also to print a Discourse at Geneva, and that Epistle of the Hebrew, containing a notable Encomium on the Heroine of England, and when the Synod and Syndic had given me leave, you opposed it. In like manner, when you were admonished how inconsiderately, absurdly, and to the hazard of the Faith, you interpret that of descending into Hell, you hardened yourself and would not yield. The third is what you falsely have said against your Senate, as if they were about to put me to Death, as a turbulent Person, for speaking ill of the Queen of England; for so you wrote to the Primate of the Church of England. I want to know what solid Answer you will give to these things. You may deliver your Letter to a noted Physician where I lodged; he will take care to convey it to me; but if you make me no Answer, I promise you I will lay the matter before all the Churches, even though your Life be almost at an end; for I think I have yet a little time before me, wherein I will endeavour to approve myself void of Offence. Farewell.

Yours BROUGHTON.

Francfort 10 April 1601.

The Letter was directed,

To the celebrated Theodore Beza, at Geneva.

The same Author had just before cited several things taken from a Letter, which Broughton wrote to Serrarius, which was prodigiously violent against Theodore Beza. * Pacificus, ut apparet, Calvinista Hugo Broughton in Epistola manuscripta ad doctissimum virum D. Nicolaum Serrarium doctorem Moguntiae in Collegio Societatis Jesu, ait Genevesem rabiem prorumpere in Cyclopæcam immanitatem, nullam fovere lenitatem, neque placide differere, unde fiat, ut Pacifici cum seditiosis in unam mentem coalescere non possent (13). In eadem epistola scribit se de Beza mendaciis conquestum fuisse ad summates Angliæ, ad Senatum Genevesem, ad Tigurinos, Morgisianos, Basilenses, & complures alios. Nam cum scriberet de usu Sadaie Arabici ad Mosen & Persici commentarii; & scriberet Græcè de multiplici Rabbiorum varietate, Beza non destitit ipsum vexare maledictis omnino nolens credere talia studia sibi nota vel utilia fuisse. Rabiem autem Beza inde ortam fuisse conjicit, quod sancto aliquid pervenerit ad illius aures spretum suum studium, ad Novum Testamentum: quod cum LXX posuissent 2000 vocabula sic exponi ut apud se ex altera parte respondeant linguæ Judaicæ, & plurima sint à S. Apostolis divinitus accommodata ad Prophetas, & serè totum Novum Testamentum constatum ex stylo piorum Rabbiorum, ut etiamnum hodie exstant vestigia sparsim in eorum libris, & minima pars sit merè graugena oratio usu ex ethnico, hoc ultimum attulit secum Beza, inops abs reliquis, uti fesse sæpè affirmasse contestatur. Detestatur idem hoc etiam in Beza quod testimonia veteris Testamenti citata ab Apostolis directè ad suam causam, ut etiam Judæi antiquissimi assentiuntur, secus Beza cum Calvino interpretatur, ut cabalistica vis tantum concedatur Apostolis; quod & recèntes Judæi libenter jam annos 500 ut Aben-Ezra in Præfatione ad Mosen abjectare conspiciuntur. Hæc in Beza, inquit, reprehendi sæpius, & hinc illius persecutio & maledicta adversum me (14). — Hugh Broughton, a peevish Calvinist, as it should seem, in a manuscript Letter to the learned Dr Nicolas Serrarius, a Tutor in the College of the Jesuits at Mentz, says, that the Rage of those of Geneva breaks out into monstrous Cruelty, exercises no Lenity, nor can dispute patiently, whence it comes that the pacific cannot join in one Mind with the seditious. In the same Letter he writes, that he had complained of Beza's Lies to the chief Men in England, the Senate of Geneva, of Zurich, of Morges, of Basil, and several other places; for when he wrote of the use of the Arabian Sada on Moses, and of the Persian Commentary, and wrote in Greek concerning the great Variety of the Rabbins. Beza was continually speaking ill of him, nor would by any means believe, that he was acquainted with these Studies, or that they were of any use; and he conjectures that Beza's Rage rose from this, that he had by some means or other heard that he had spoke slightly of his Commentary on the New Testament. For whereas the LXX requires Two thousand Words to be so explained, that they may exactly correspond to the Hebrew Tongue, and a great many things are by the Apostles divinely accommodated to the Prophets, and almost the whole New Testament composed in the Style of the pious Rabbins, of which there remains some Footsteps to this day in their Books, and very little of it is merely Hebraistical according to the Heathen use: Beza has at last introduced this, being unprovided with any thing else, as he himself has often affirmed. He likewise detests this in Beza, that he interprets the Testimony of the old Testament, cited by the Apostles, directly to their purpose, as the most ancient Jews allow, differently from Calvin, leaving to the Apostles nothing more than the force of the Cabala, which the later Jews have generally laid aside for these 500 Years, as Aben Ezra in his Preface to Moses. This, says he, I have often blamed in Beza; and hence comes his Persecution and Railing against me.

(13) Ibid. fol. 2, verso.

(14) Idem.

(12) Ex Corneli Schellingii, Epist. Dedicat. Tom. IV, Biblioth. Catholice & Orthodoxæ, fol. 3.

BRUYN (JOHN de), Professor of Natural Philosophy and Mathematics at Utrecht, was born at Gorcum, the Twenty fifth of August 1620. He went through a Course of Philosophy at Leyden, under the Professor Heerboord, and then pursued his Studies at Boisleduc, where he was very much esteemed by Samuel Marcfus, who taught there Philosophy and Divinity. From thence he removed to Utrecht, and applied himself diligently to the Mathematics, under the Professor Ravensberg, who had a particular Affection for him. He went afterwards to Leyden, where he obtained leave to teach Mathematics. Ravensberg, finding himself declining, so earnestly recommended him to the Magistrates and Curates of the University, as a very fit Man to fill up his Place, that they made him Professor of Natural Philosophy and Mathematics; and because the Professors of Philosophy had agreed among themselves, that every one of them might teach at home such a part of Philosophy as he should think fit, de Bruyn, not contented to teach what his public Professorship required, made also Dissections, and explained Grotius's Book De Jure Belli & Pacis. He had great skill in dissecting Animals; he was a great lover of Experiments; and made also Astronomical Observations. The Dissertations he published, De vi altrice; de corporum gravitate & levitate; de cognitione Dei naturali; de lucis causis & origine, &c [A], are manifest Proofs of his Worth. In the Year 1652, he married the Daughter of a Merchant of Utrecht, Sister to the Wife of Daniel Elzevir, the famous Bookseller of Amsterdam, by whom he had two Children, who lived but few Days. He departed this Life the Twenty first of October, 1675, after he had been a Professor for the space of Twenty three Years (a).

(a) Taken from his Funeral Oration pronounced by M. Grævius, Novem. 5, 1675.

[A] He wrote a Treatise De lucis causis & origine. He had a Dispute upon this Subject with Isaac Vossius, to whom he wrote a Letter of Sixty eight Pages in 4to, printed at Amsterdam in 1663, wherein he criticizes Vossius's Book, De natura & proprietate lucis, and strenuously maintains the Hypothesis of Cartes. He wrote also an Apology for the Cartesian Philosophy against a Divine, named Vogelsang.

BRUN (ANTONY le), Ambassador of Spain, at the Conferences held at Munster, was an excellent Negotiator. He was a Native of Franche Comté, and discharged the Office of Attorney-General in the Parliament of Dole, when he was sent Ambassador to Munster. All the Plenipotentiaries of Spain took Place of him; but he exceeded them all in Capacity: He knew better than they the Affairs of the Low-Countries, and being a Man of a more complying Humour [A], and of a more pleasant Conversation, he was better qualified for a Negotiation. The King of Spain was particularly beholden to him for the Peace which the Dutch made at Munster, exclusively of France. As a Reward for that Service, he was appointed Ambassador to the States of the United Provinces, and then a considerable Office was bestowed upon him in the Finances at Brussels. — He was very well beloved at the Hague, where he would have been very useful to his Master, had not his Employment ended with his Life, when he began to be well known, and esteemed on account of his Merit (a). He left behind him four Sons (b), I do not know what was their Fate. He was an intriguing Man, and made himself dreaded by the French Ambassadors [B], not without Reason, since he overcome the Difficulties which kept back the Treaty of Peace between Spain and the United Provinces [C]. He received an Affront for concerning himself

(a) Wicquefort, de l'Ambassadeur, Tom. II, pag. 422, 423.

(b) James Richard, King at Arms of the King of Spain, and his Consul at Amsterdam, Description of Franche Comté in Blaeu's Atlas.

[A] He was of a complying Humour. Others say, that he was a very popular Man, and consequently very fit to impose upon the Multitude. Ingenio populari aptissimoque fuco plebi faciundo (1); and that Servien, who affected Stateliness in every thing, was not for that very reason so well qualified to succeed in Holland as le Brun, who had a Citizen-like Behaviour. Huic (Serviano) omnia nobilia, magnifica, excelsa fuere: Bruno vero vulgaris & popularis omnis ratio: eo factum uti quo similior his cum quibus agebat, ita & apud ipsos validior fuerit (2). — He (Servien) was in every thing noble, magnificent, and lofty: but le Brun's manner was altogether low and popular; wherefore as he was more like those with whom he had to do, so he had more Prevalency with them.

(1) Labardeus de rebus Gallicis, lib. v, pag. 252.

(2) Id. pag. 259.

[B] He made himself dreaded by the French Ambassadors. That was the Reason why Mr Servien would not consent that Mr le Brun should be permitted to go to the Hague in his Return from the Low-Countries to the Conferences of Munster. When the seventy Articles had been signed, the eighth of January, 1647, between the Plenipotentiaries of Spain, and those of the United Provinces, Antony le Brun, one of the Plenipotentiaries of Spain, set out from Munster the very next Day, to carry the News of it to Brussels. Whilst he was there, he sent to the States desiring a Passport to go to the Hague. His Design was to observe and thwart Servien's Negotiation, who was about a Treaty of Guarantee; but Servien opposed the granting the Passport, and so contrived the Matter, that the States having consulted the Prince of Orange, refused Mr le Brun (3). Mr de la Barde expresses with greater force Mr Servien's Uneasiness upon hearing that Mr le Brun was to come to the Hague. Mr Servien declared, says he (4), that if the Passport was granted, he would immediately retire. He adds, That the Princes of Orange favoured le Brun upon that Occasion; but the Prince was of Opinion, that Servien should be satisfied, and so le Brun was obliged to negotiate by way of Letters. He wrote to the States; Servien answered his Letter (5): le Brun made a Reply (6). Mr de la Barde observes, that there was a personal Hatred between those two Ambassadors.

(3) Wicquefort, de l'Ambassadeur, Tom. I, pag. 413, 414.

(4) Labardeus, lib. v, pag. 252.

(5) Id. pag. 253.

(6) Id. pag. 259.

[C] He overcame the Difficulties which kept back the Treaty of Peace between Spain and the United Provinces. The Difficulties were Foreign and Domestic. The former were started by the French Ambassadors, and were the least considerable. If Mr le Brun had not been warmly and dexterously seconded by Mr Pauw and Mr Knuitt, the Dutch Plenipotentiaries, and had nevertheless concluded the Treaty of Peace, he would much more deserve to be praised for it than he does; for it must be confessed, self with the domestic Differences that arose in Holland, in the Year 1650 [D]. But, because he was not easily discouraged, he countenanced those who desired, that the Dignity of Stadtholder should be suppressed [E]. He made use not only of Libels [F], but also of false Suppositions [G], for the Service of his Master. The French Writers took delight in reflecting upon him [H].

This

confessed, That those two Plenipotentiaries did very much clear and smooth the Difficulties for him. Every thing was made use of, even Contradictions, to oppose those who were for continuing the War. The Misery and Power of France were both alledged to that end (7). Sometimes she was represented so exhausted that she could no longer support her Allies; and sometimes so powerful, that it was to be feared the Continuation of the War would make her formidable to her Neighbours. Mr Servien one Day so strangely inveighed against Mr Pauw and Mr Knuit in the Assembly of the States-General, that he made bold to say, That they were the Pudenda of the Republic. Le Brun turned the thing to their Advantage; he called them the virile Parts of the State, which Servien designed to cut off, that the Republic might lose that manly Vigor, without which it could not maintain itself. 'Quandoque dicendi studio cum apud Federatos Ordines de republica differeret, elatus eo evasit, ut ambos pudenda reipublice appellaret, quod est ab Bruno haud illepidè correctum, ubi Serviani Scripto postea respondit, eodem rei Sociarum Civitatum publicæ virilia appellando, quæ Servianus execrare vellet, ut huic minus masculæ virtutis inesset, quo tutari se aut adversum hostes possent, aut adversum socios æque prope damnosos, qui videlicet omnem societatis fructum sibi habere studerent, de sociorum commodis nihil solliciti (8). - - - One time, in a Speech which he made before the States-General, in the Heat of his Discourse, he launched out so far as to call them two the Pudenda of the Commonwealth, which was wittily enough corrected and turned to their Advantage by le Brun, in his Answer to Servien's Memorial, by calling them the virile Parts of the Commonwealth, which Servien had a Mind to cut off, that the Commonwealth might have less manly Virtue, to defend themselves against their Enemies, and against their Allies, who are almost as hurtful to them, in that they sought to reap all the Benefits of the Alliance themselves, taking no care of the Interest of their Allies.' But if what Mr de la Barde says were true, there would be less reason to wonder, that the Intrigues of two Dutch Embassadors, seconded by le Brun, should have overcome the Obstacles to the Peace. He will have it that the Princes of Orange, being offended that Cardinal Mazarin had not paid her all the Honour she expected, endeavoured to make a separate Peace during the Sickness of her Consort. 'Hic (Knuitius) Zelandiæ publicæ Legatus, privatum Araulphi cliens erat, qui tum ob perditam valetudinem, sicuti ferme homines tali suo tempore, in uxoris Solmiz fuit potestate: quæ quoniam ab Mazarino haud satis se cultam arbitrabatur, eo nobis infesta erat, atque omni ope nitebatur, uti pax Hispanos inter, & Socias Civitates, post-habito foedere nostro, fanciretur, de qua re Knutium continuo, sicuti & Batavorum Civitas Pavium, fatigabat (9). - - - He (Knuit) was in his public Character Embassador of Zeland, privately a Creature of the Prince of Orange, who, by reason of his ill State of Health, was then, as Men commonly are at such times, intirely led by his Wife Solmia, who, because she did not think she had sufficient regard paid her by Mazarine, was therefore our Enemy, and used her utmost Endeavour to settle a Peace between the Spaniards and United Provinces, exclusive of our Alliance, about which she was continually teasing Knuit, as the State did Pauw.'

[D] He met with an Affront for concerning himself with the domestic Differences of the Low-Countries in 1650.] M. de Wicquefort gives the following Account of it: 'In the Year 1650, there arose some Differences between the Prince of Orange and the States of Holland. Some of their Deputies were confined to the Castle of Lovestein, and the Prince brought the Troops of the State before the City of Amsterdam. Antony le Brun, Embassador of Spain, otherwise a dexterous and very wise Minister, thinking to please the Prince, offered him the Forces of the King his Master to reduce that Town; but the Prince answered him, That the King of Spain needed not concern himself with the domestic Affairs of his Country, and that neither he nor the States wanted his Assistance: That if the King should cause his Troops to advance, those small Differences would be quickly laid aside, and all the Forces of the States would immediately be re-united to oppose the Foreign Troops. And indeed, those differences were quickly over; and the same Embassador, thinking to mend his first Fault, committed a second, by asking Audience of the States, to compliment them about the Reconciliation. It was granted him; but, when they came to know the Subject of it, they sent him word, tho' he was already at the Foot of the Stairs, where their Deputies were to receive him, That they were obliged to desire him not to take it ill, that he should be put off till another time: So that he went home with a kind of an Affront, for having had a mind to speak of a domestic Affair, which he should have taken no notice of (10).

[E] He countenanced those, who desired that the Dignity of Stadtholder should be suppressed.] M. de la Barde gives us the substance of M. le Brun's Speech both to the States-General, and the States of the Province of Holland. What he said was very disobliging to the most Serene House of Orange: he spoke not in that manner till after he had been at Brussels, to confer with the Ministers of his Catholic Majesty. On the contrary, the Court of France sent an Embassador Extraordinary to the States in favour of that House (11).

[F] He made use not only of Libels.] He published several during the Conferences of Munster, wherein he abused France. Those Pieces were written in a pleasant Stile, and with a great deal of sprightliness; but his Satires were too comical, and too much like Burlesque, if we believe the Author I have quoted. 'Hic (Brunus) fori rerum in quibus ætatem egit prudens, neque aliarum ignarus est, cæterum ingenio populari, artificiosoque fuco plebi faciundo. Eâ gratiâ libellos sæpius apud Monasterium Vestfalorum edebat, haud illepidos hos quidem, sed qui saperent Atellanum, & quibus plebejâ planè lasciviâ ipsi ab natura infusa maledicta in Legatos, cæterosque Gallos jaceret, omnemque eorum tam in bello gerendo, quam in pacis negotio rationem vituperaret (12). - - - This le Brun is very well acquainted with all the business of the Bar, in which he has spent his time, and has a good knowledge of other Things; but is of a popular Disposition and well cut out to impose on the multitude. For that purpose he frequently published Books at Munster, which were not unpleasant, but smelled of the Buffoon, suberein, with meer mobbish wantonness, natural to him, he cast his reproaches on the Embassadors, and on the French in general, blaming all their Conduct both in managing War and Peace.

[G] but also of false Suppositions.] M. de Wicquefort, speaking of some Embassadors, who spread false News, does not forget to say, That some do no scruple to publish Letters, pretending they have been intercepted, to cry down the Affairs and Conduct of those, whose Prosperity makes them uneasy. He says, That during the War of the Barberini, the Spanish Embassador dispersed a Letter at Venice, wherein Cardinal Mazarin exhorted Cardinal Richelieu to do nothing too hastily &c. That those Letters were sent to all the Courts of Europe, but that the Cheat was quickly found out. Le Brun (continues he), Embassador of Spain at Munster, went more cunningly about it, but with no better success. He knew the Plenipotentiaries of France were not well pleased with those of Sweden, and that they would express their Discontent in their first Dispatches to the Court; wherefore

(7) See a piece printed in 1648, intitled la Confession de l'Impprimeur.

(8) Labardeus, pag. 259.

(9) Id. pag. 247.

(10) Wicquefort de l'Ambassadeur, Tom. II, pag. 93, 94.

(11) Labardeus de Rebus Gallicis, lib. ix, page 623.

(12) Id. lib. v, pag. 252.

This Article had been printed some Months, when I received a Memorial, which enables me to give a clearer and more certain Account of Mr le Brun. Messire Antony le Brun, born at Dole, in the Year 1600, was a considerable Man, not only for his Parts and Employments, but also for his noble Extraction, and his Father's Merit [I]. He was Attorney-General in the Parliament of Dole, and discharged the Duties of that Office with great Ability, during which time he was employed in all the State Negotiations which concerned the Province. See the History of the Siege of Dole, written by President Boivin. He was sent afterwards by Philip IV to the Diet of Ratisbon, and from thence to the Court of the Emperor Ferdinand III. He was then made Counsellor of the Council of State for the Affairs of Flanders and Burgundy. I have said before, that he was one of the Plenipotentiaries of his Catholic Majesty, at the Conferences of Munster, that he continued there alone, intrusted with that important Negotiation for a considerable time, and that after he had concluded the Treaty of Peace between Spain and the United Provinces, he was sent Embassador to the Hague. The Services he did there to Philip IV, were so acceptable to That Prince, that he made him Counsellor in the Supreme Council, and in the Council of State, and then the Head of his Finances in the Low-Countries. This last Office was always filled up by Persons of Quality, and often by Knights of the Golden Fleece. The Count d'Isenburg, associated to Mr de Brun in that Office, was one of those Knights. Mr de Brun was honoured at that time with the Dignity of Baron, for him and his Male Issue (c). He died at the Hague, during his Embassy, and was buried in the Church

(c) You will find among his other Titles, that of Baron d'Alpremont in Blacw's Atlas, in the Map of Franche Comté, dedicated to him.

wherefore he found means to get a Letter, wherein the Humour and the Proceedings of Oxenstern, and his Father the Chancellor, were sharply reflected upon. Le Brun, who thought it necessary to go beyond the Letter, altered some Passages in it in such a manner, as was not only very offensive to those two Ministers, but might have occasioned a Rupture between the two Confederated Crowns. He went too far in the Matter, and thereby gave an advantage to the French, who being able to discover the falsity, found it no difficult thing to render every thing else suspicious, and to cause a belief that it was all a Cheat (13). One may argue, upon this Occasion, quite contrary to Virgil. If Servants, said he, are so bold, what will not Masters do?

(13) Wicquef. de l'Ambassadeur, Tom. II, p. 138, 139.

(14) Virgil, Ecl. III, v. 16.

Quid domini faciant audent cum talia fures (14)?

What Nonsense would the Fool, thy Master, prate,
When thou, his Knave, can'st talk at such a Rate:

DRYDEN.

But we may say, if the Embassadors of the greatest Kings do not scruple to divulge false News, and Calumnies forged by themselves, what may not one expect from those Men, who without a Name, and without being owned, take upon themselves to write about the present Affairs for a Livelihood, and to satisfy their detaching Humour. Is it any Wonder, that such People should venture to publish the most absurd Fictions, and give out, as Matter of Fact, the Falsities which they invent to indulge their Passions, and comply with the public Distemper? They meet with some Casuists, who flatter that Passion; for I make no doubt, that there are several Escobar's and Baun's, who absolve private and public Persons, that forge Calumnies for the Good of their Country; and I know that a Protestant Minister, the same who by so many Pastoral Letters set up, as it were, for an Oecumenical Pastor, or for an Universal Bishop, has declared, That every thing is lawful and fair against an open Enemy (15). Wicquefort, who was a Statesman, and not a Divine, had a better Sense of Morality, as it appears from the following Words: Having said, that a Minister of the Court of Vienna (16) forged a very scandalous Piece in the Year 1672, as if it had been a Discourse made by the Commander of Grenonville, a Minister of France, to the Emperor's Council against the United Provinces, he adds: 'A Public Minister ought to abhor those Impostures and wicked Contrivances; he ought to be above those mean Tricks, which are only the Productions of a weak and perverse Mind (17).'

(15) He only excepts Assassination in another place. See the Entretiens sur la Cabale Chimérique, pag. 86, & seq.

(16) Probably the Baron Lifela.

(17) Wicquef. ibid. pag. 140, 141.

(18) Intituled, Jugement de tout ce qui a été imprimé contre le Cardinal Mazarin, depuis le 6. Janvier jusques à la déclaration du 1. Avril, 1649.

[H] The French Writers took delight in abusing him. The following Passage is in a Book written by Naudé (18). His Design is to shew, That the Spaniards prevented the Conclusion of the Peace at Munster, and he uses these Words. 'The particular Agreement of the Dutch was no sooner concluded, but Pegneranda made it his whole Business to break with us, and to raise Difficulties, not only about the Articles, not yet agreed upon, but also about those wherein there was no longer any difficulty; inasmuch that he went away from Munster, where he only left le Brun without any Power; which the whole Assembly was the more offended at, because tho' he had been provided with a full Power, no body could believe that the King of Spain would trust his most important Interests to a Burgundian, or have that great Work concluded by a Man of so inconsiderable Quality, at the very same time when he recalled his chief Plenipotentiary, whom le Brun was used to obey, as a Servant obeys his Master (19). Every body will perceive, that Naudé knew not how great a Trust the Court of Spain reposed in M. le Brun. Another French Writer, who could not deny it, and who acknowledges the Credit of that Minister, finds fault with him only about the Meanness of his Equipage. 'Ab Hispanie rege comes Penneranda cui additus Antonius Brunus à Sequanis, qui duobus servulis, scissili veste, & rheda femilacera, plus ponderis rebus addidit, quam dimidia pars totius cœtus (20). On the part of the King of Spain was Count Penneranda, with whom was joined Antony de Brun, a Burgundian, who, with two Servants, a ragged Coat, and a worn out Chariot, was of more weight in the Affairs, than half the whole Assembly.

(20) Priolus de rebus Gallicis, lib. x. n. 3. pag. 341.

[I] He was considerable for his noble Extraction, and his Father's Merit. It has been a Noble Family ever since the time of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy. It appears by some public Acts, registred in the Chamber of Accounts at Dole; that John Brun was an Esquire, and possessed some Lands and Lordships in Fief, which he held of that Duke, and for which he paid him Homage in the Year 1447. The Act of that Homage is signed by the same Duke. The Arms of that Family (21) are, Or, three Grapes purple, supported by two Lyons Or, armed, and languid, Gules. The Father of our Antony de Brun, was Charles Brun: He was Counsellor in the Parliament of Dole in the Year 1595. The King of Spain sent him twice to the Court of France, when Marshall de Biron, Governor of the Duchy of Burgundy, occasioned some Troubles, and when the Neutrality of the two Burgundies was renewed. He was likewise sent to the Duke of Savoy, the Duke of Lorraine, and the Duke of Wurtemberg, for some important Affairs of the House of Austria. He was also deputed by his Parliament, and his Province, to pay the Homage of Fidelity to the Archduke Albert, and the Infanta Isabella Clara Eugenia, when the King of Spain yielded to them Franche Comté and the Low-Countries. He acquitted himself of those Employments to the Satisfaction of the Public

(21) They may be seen in the Map of the County of Burgundy, in Blacw's Atlas.

(d) Taken from a Manuscript Memorial.

Church of the Carmelites at Mechlen (d). I shall speak of his Children [K]. These Words of Balfac ought not to be forgotten: 'I refer it to the French and Burgundians, to M. Brun, the Demosthenes of Dole; and to M. le Maître, the Cicero of Paris (e).'

(e) Balzac, Discours 2, to Cardinal Bentivoglio, printed with the Socrate Chretien, pag. 472.

(22) Taken from a MSS. Memorial.

and of his Prince. His other Son, JOHN BRUN, was Counsellor in the Parliament of Dole (22).

[K] I shall speak of his Children.] He married Donna Magdalena de Acosta, a noble and ancient Family of Spain, by whom he had many Children of both Sexes. Don LORENZO de BRUN, one of them, Baron d'Asprement, &c. was Captain of Caraffiers in the Service of the King of Spain against the Portuguese, when he was killed at the Battle of Villaviciosa. Two of his Brothers died in the same Service, without being married. There remains a fourth, who married in Languedoc, and has a Family. He resides in Burgundy (23), and is Knight of Honour in the Parliament of that Province. A Seat of his has been erected into a Marquifate (24).

(23) I think Franche Comté is meant by it.

(24) Taken from the same MSS.

BRUN (CHARLES le), Chief Painter to the French King, Director of the Manufactures, &c. [A], was one of the greatest Men that ever France produced for Painting. His being elected Prince of the Academy of Painters at Rome, where they pretend to have exceeded, for so many Ages, all other Nations in the Knowledge of the Liberal Arts, is a sufficient Proof of his Ability. He was born in the Year 1618, with so many Dispositions to become a great Painter, that, at three Years of Age, he took Coals out of the Fire, and sketch'd upon the Hearth, and against the Chimney, having no Light but that of the Fire. When fourteen Years old, he drew the Picture of his Father (a), who was a Sculptor, and performed it so well, that the Picture is still accounted a very good Piece. At that time there was no Painter in France more esteemed than Mr Vouët [B]. Mr le Brun, who lived in his House, and distinguished himself from his other Scholars, got the Affection and Esteem of Chancellor Seguier, who gave him a good Pension, and afterwards sent him to Rome, where he maintained him for some Years. His easy way of drawing, and the Correctness of his Works, surprized the most famous Painters, and the best Sculptors of Italy. He saw there the finest Pieces that could be seen, both Ancient and Modern, and perfected his good Taste, which has been so much admired since. He always preserved a deep sense of Gratitude for Chancellor Seguier, and gave an admirable Instance of it after the Death of his Patron, by the divine Service that was performed for him in the Church of the Fathers of the Oratory, and by a Mausoleum erected there according to the Draught he had made of it, and under his Direction. At his return from Rome he very much distinguished himself from the best Painters of Paris; and the first President de Bellievre proved a new Patron to him. He painted Madam du Plessis Belliere, Mother to Marshal de Crequi's Lady, so well, that her Picture was, and is still, accounted a Master-piece. Cardinal Mazarin came to know him by some other Pictures which he drew for the same Lady; and, as he was a good Judge of Painting, he expressed a great Esteem for Mr le Brun's Pencil, and made him famous every where. After the Peace of the Pyrenees, the King, being resolved to make the Liberal Arts flourish, found no body better qualified than Mr le Brun to preside at the Gobelins with the several Employments he bestowed upon him; which put him in a capacity of discovering the whole Extent of his noble Talents. He was not only an excellent Painter, but also a Man of a vast and inventive Genus, and fit for every thing. He knew the History and Manners of all Nations. In an Hour's time he cut out Work enough for many different Artists. He supplied the King's Sculptors and Goldsmiths with Designs, and gave many of them to paint whole Apartments, and to make Cabinets and Hangings. When he was about the large Picture of Darius's Family, from which one of the five Pieces of Tapestry of Alexander's History was made, and which is now in the King's great Apartment at Versailles, His Majesty spent near two Hours every Day at Fontainebleau to see him paint; and some time after sent him his Picture, and then a Patent of Nobility (b), and a Coat of Arms (c). The Great Duke of Tuscany conceived so great an Esteem for him, that he did him the Honour to ask him for his Picture, and to inform him that he would willingly keep Correspondence with him. The great Esteem he was in at the French Court appeared during the Sickness of which he died on the twelfth of February, 1690 [C].

(a) Mr Perrault, in his Homages to the Arts, pag. 216, says that le Brun, being but ten or twelve Years of Age, drew the Picture of his Grandfather, who was a Sculptor at Paris.

(b) Dated December, 1662.

(c) Which are a Sun in a Field Argent, and a Flower de-luce Azure, with a Crest Felle.

[A] Director of the Manufactures, &c.] To fill up this Sc. cetera, I observe, That Mr le Brun was Director of the Royal Manufactures of the Household Goods of the Crown; Director, Chancellor, and Rector, of the Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture, and Prince of St Luke's Academy at Rome.

[B] At fourteen Years of Age he drew his Father's Picture. - There was not at that time any Painter in France more esteemed than Mr Vouët. I mean Simon Vouët, who had two Brothers Painters also. See the Book entitled Noms des Peintres les plus celebres, or, Names of the most famous Painters, printed at Paris, Anno 1679, pag. 48.

He had a Pension from the King, and lodged in the Galleries of the Louvre. It was he, who painted the Vault of the Chapel of St Germain en Laye, and the most excellent Painters in France, as Mignard, Bourdon, Tetelin, and le Sueur, were his Scholars. He was a Native of Paris, and died in the Year 1690.

[C] The great Esteem he was in at the French Court appeared in his last Illness. The King and the greatest Lords often sent to know how he did. Mr de Louvois sent him the most famous Physicians. He was visited by the Prince of Condé, and many Lords of the first Rank.

He was buried in the Chappel he had built for himself, in the Church of St Nicolas du Chardonneret, his Parish, where he founded two Masses to be said every Day for ever. He also left a Fund to marry three poor Maids every Year. He died without Issue, and therefore Mr le Brun, his Nephew, Auditor of the Accounts, will be his only Heir after his Wife's decease (d).

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, we have seen an Encomium upon Mr le Brun, written by Mr Perrault, in his Hommes Illustres. I could take many Particulars out of that Book, but I rather chuse to refer the Reader to it. The Widow of that excellent Painter died in the Year 1699.

BRUNUS (LEONARD). Look for ARETIN (LEONARD).

BRUNUS (JORDANUS), a Native of Nola, in the Kingdom of Naples, was a Man of great Parts, but he made an ill use of his Knowledge; for he wrote not only against Aristotle's Philosophy [A], at a time when such a thing could not be done without occasioning great Disorders, and exposing one's self to many Persecutions, but also against the most important Truths of Religion [B]. Being expelled from Italy he retired into a Country less dangerous for such Philosophers as he was (a). He run over Germany, France, &c. and it had been well for him if he had gone on, for, when he returned into Italy, he was burnt there, say some, as an impious Man, in the Year 1600. I shall set down the Titles of some of his Works [C], and mention some things relating to four or five of his other Books [D].

He

(a) See the second Letter of Acidalius: it was written in 1592, to Baron Forcetti, who was then at Padua. Acidalius asks him whether it was true, according to common Report, that Jordanus Brunus taught at Padua.

[A] He wrote against Aristotle's Philosophy. See the Book intitled, Jordani Bruni Nolani Cameracenensis Acrotismus, seu rationes articulorum Physicorum adversus Peripateticos Parisiis propositum, &c. It was printed at Wittenberg in the Year 1588, in 8vo. You will find in it a Letter which Brunus wrote to Henry III, one that he wrote to the Rector of the University of Paris, and one he wrote to the Friends of the true Philosophy. Parisensis & alii d. generosissimi Galliarum regno philosophis sensationis philosophiae dogmatum amicis & defensoribus. You will find in it, Excubitor, seu Jo. Hennequinus Apologetica declamatio habita in auditorio regio Parisiensis Academiae in festo Pentecostae anno 1586, pro Nolani articulis; and at the end of the Articles are these Words: 'Articuli de Natura & Mundo à Nolano in Principibus Europæ Academiae propositi: quos Jo. Hennequinus nobilis Parisiensis sub ejusdem felicibus auspiciis contra vulgaris & cuiuscunque adversariae Philosophiæ Professores triduo Pentecostes in Universitate Parisiorum defendendos evulgavit: brevibus adjectis rationibus (1). — Theses concerning Nature and the World, proposed by Nolanus in the principal Universities of Europe, which John Hennequin, a Noble Parisian, put up to defend in the University of Paris, the third Day after Pentecost, against the Professors of the common or any contrary Philosophy; with short Reasons added thereto. It appears from these Words, that Brunus acted the part of a Knight-Errent in point of Philosophy, being always ready to engage any one that was willing to enter the Lists with him, &c.

[B] And the most important Truths of Religion. It is said that he wrote some Books, wherein he maintained, that there are a great many Worlds, all eternal; that the Jews only descended from Adam and Eve, and that all other Men were sprung from a Race created by God long before; that all the Miracles of Moses were an Effect of Magic, and exceeded the Wonders performed by the other Magicians only because he had made a greater Progress in Magic; that he himself forged the Laws he delivered to the Israelites; that the holy Scripture is a mere Fiction, &c. John Henry Urfinus, who informs me of this, adds, that Brunus was burnt at Rome, in the Field of Flora, for those impious Doctrines, on the ninth of February, 1600 (2). He mentions all these things upon the Credit of Scio-pianus, who had given a full Account of them in a Letter. Nicodemus, in his Additions to the Bibliotheca Neapolitana, says, that it is not certainly known whether every thing related by Urfinus be true. It is somewhat strange that one should not know at eighty Years end whether a Dominican (3), was burnt at Rome in a public Place for his Blasphemies. When Facts of this nature are uncertain, they are very like to be false.

[C] I shall set down the Titles of some of his Works. He fell into Raymund Lullius's Notions, and refined them, and invented several Methods of Artificial Memory; all this, say they, discovers a great Genius; but there is so much Obscurity in them, that they can be of no use. See Morbo-fus's Polyhistor (4). However it be, here are the Titles: De specierum scrutinio & Lampade combinatoria Raymundi Lullii, Prague, 1588, in 8vo. That Book was put in the Index of the Inquisition (5): It has been reprinted several times with a Tract of the same Author, de progressu logicae venationis, among Lullius's Works. Jordanus Brunus de monade, numero & figura: item de innumerabili, immenso, &c. Frankfort, 1591, in 8vo. Jordani Bruni Nolani de imaginum, signorum, & idearum compositione, ad omnia inventionum, dispositionum, & memoriae genera libri tres (6). Frankfort, 1591, in 8vo. De umbris idearum, Parisi, 1582. Cantus Circeus ad memoriae proxim ordinatus quam ipse judicariam appellat, Parisi, 1583. De compendiosa Architectura & complemento artis Lullii, ibid. 1580 (7). Artificialium perorandi. Alstedius published it at Frankfort in 1612 (8). Vossius, page 510 of the first Volume of his Theological Disputations, quotes Jordanus Brunus de Hereticis; but he should have said Conradus Brunus.

[D] ——— and some things relating to four or five of his other Books. I have seen none of Brunus's Books mentioned in the foregoing Remarks; but I have seen some others which are not to be found in the Catalogues I have consulted (9). I have seen the Book intitled Giordano Bruno Nolano, De causa, principio, & Uno. It was printed at Venice in the Year 1584, in 12mo, and dedicated by the Author to Michael de Castellano, Seigneur de Mauvissiere, Embassador of France to Queen Elizabeth. I find in the Epistle Dedicatory, that this Lord protected Giordano Bruno against the Malice of his Enemies. Mi riduco à mente come — mi siete sufficiente & saldo difensore ne gl' injusti oltraggi ch' io patisco. — Brings to my Mind how effectual and solid a Protector you have been to me against the unjust Outrages which I suffer. The Author pretends that his heroic Firmness prevented his falling into Despair; for his ill Fortune was attended with a thousand Disgraces: nothing was wanting to complete it but the malicious disdain of a Mistress. 'Wherefore I had need to have been of a truly heroic Spirit, not to submit, despair, or yield to such a rapid Torrent of criminal impostures; whereby they have with all their Might drawn upon me the Envy of the Ignorant, the Presumption of Sophists, the Detraction of the Malevolent, the Murmurs of Slaves, the Whispers of Mercenaries, the Contradiction of Domestic, the Suspensions of the Stupid, the Scruples of Tale-bearers, the Zeal of Hypocrites,

(4) Pag. 365, & seq.

(5) Toppi Bibliotheca Neapolitana, pag. 151.

(6) Nicodemus, ubi supra.

(7) Du Verdier in Supplem. Bibl. Geogr. pag. 33.

(8) Morhof. Polyh. pag. 355.

(9) I speak thus as far as I can remember, and I even except la cena de Ceneri; for it is a Book, the Title of which is to be found in du Verdier, ubi supra.

(2) Joh. Henr. Urfinus in Praefatione Tractatus de Zoroastre.

(3) Urfinus says that Brunus was profusione Dominicanus.

He wrote some that were not Philosophical; for in the Year 1582. he published an Italian Comedy at Paris, intituled Candelais (b). He gave himself the Title there of Academico

(b) Du Verdier
in Suppl.
Bibl. Gein. pag.
33.

Hypocrites, the Hatred of the Barbarous, the Fury of the Vulgar, the Madness of the Popular, the Lamentations of the Abandoned, the Cries of the Chastitatis; certainly there wanted nothing, but the unkind foolish and malicious Disdain of a Woman, whose false Tears alone are more powerful than the most swelling Waves, and rigid Tempests of Presumption, Envy, Detraction, Murmurs, Treachery, Disdain, Hatred, and Madness. Doue bisognava che fusse un animo veramente eroico per non dismettere le braccia, disperarsi, & darsi vinto à si rapido torrente di criminali imposture, con quali à tutta possa m'havve fatto empeto l'invidia d'ignoranti, la presuntion di sopsisti, la detraction di malevoli, la murmuration di servitori, gli susurri di mercenarii, le contraddizioni di domestici, le suspitioni di stupidi, gli scrupoli di riportatori, gli zeli d'hypocriti, gli odii di barbari, le furie di plobi, furori di popolari, lamanti di riproscisti, & voci di castigati. One altro non mancava ch' un disortese, pazzo, & malitioso sdegno femminile, di cui le false lacrime soglion esser piu potenti, che quantosivoglia tumide onde, & rigide tempeste di presuntioni, invidie, detractioni, mormorii, tradimenti, ire, sdegne, odii, & furori. The same Epistle Dedicatory contains the Substance of the five Dialogues of which that Work consists. The first is an Apology for la Cena de la Cineri, which is the Title of a Book I shall speak of hereafter. The second treats of the first Cause or Principle, and shews how the efficient and formal Cause are reunited in one Subject, which is the Soul of the World; and how the formal general Cause, which is but one, differs from the formal particular Cause, which is infinitely multiplied. The Author declares, among other things, that his System removes the fear of Hell, which, says he, spoils the sweetest Pleasures of Life (10). He shews in the third Dialogue, that David of Dinant was in the right to look upon Matter as a Divine Thing. He maintains that the substantial Form is never destroyed, and that Matter and Form differ only as Power and Act: from whence he concludes, that the whole Universe is but one Being. He shews in the following Dialogue, that the Matter of Bodies is not different from that of Spirits; and lastly, he concludes in the fifth Dialogue, that the Being which really exists is One, Infinite, Immoveable, and Indivisible. Senza differenza di tutto & parte, principio & principiato. -- Without distinction of Whole and Part, Cause and Effect: That an infinite Extension is necessarily reduced to an Individuum, as an infinite Number is reduced to Unity. This is a general Notion of what he expresses more particularly in his Summaries, and more at large in his Dialogues; from whence it appears, that his Hypothesis is in the main altogether like Spinozism. There is at the end of the first Dialogue a Digression in Praise of Queen Elizabeth.

Here follows another Book, which he dedicated to the same Mr de Castelnau. Giordano Bruno Nolano. De l'infinito Universo & Mondi. Stampato in Venetia. Anno M.D.LXXXIV. in 12mo. It consists of five Dialogues, wherein he alleges many Reasons to shew that the Universe is infinite, and that there is an infinite number of Worlds. He declares for Copernicus's Opinion concerning the Motion of the Earth round the Sun. I have also seen his Spaccio de la bestia trionfante, proposto da Giove. Effettuato dal consiglio, Revelato da Mercurio, Recitato da Sapia, Uitto da Saulino, Registrato dal Nolano. Diviso in tre Dialogi, suddivise in tre parti. -- Stampato in Parigi M.D.XCIV. in 12mo. He dedicated it to Sir Philip Sidney, who had done him many good Services in England. 'Tis a Moral Treatise, oddly composed; for the Author represents the Nature of Vices and Virtues under the Emblems of the Celestial Constellations turned out of the Sky to make room for new Asterisms, which represent Truth, Goodness, &c. Du Verdier Vau-privas reckons, among the Works of our Giordano, la Cena de la Cineri descrittà in cinque dialoghi, per quattro interlocutori contre considerazione circa doi Sogetti. Stampata nell' anno 1580 (11). The Copy I have seen is in 12mo, and was printed in 1584. That Book was dedicated by the Author to Mr de Castelnau, unico refugio de le Muse, during his Embassy in England. The reason of the Title is, that those Conversations are supposed to have been a Table-talk the first day in Lent. The Opinion of Copernicus is maintained among other things in that Work; and it is added, that there is an infinite number of Worlds like this, and that they are all intellectual Animals, which have Vegetative and Rational Individuums as there are upon Earth. The contrary Opinion is called childish. La quarta afferma esser conformi in materia quello mondo nostro ch' è detto globo della terra, con gli mondi che son gli corpi de gl' altri astri, & che è cosa da fanciulli haver creduto & credere altrimenti. Et che quei son tanti animali intellettuali: & che non meno in quelli vegetano & intendono molti & innumerabili individui semplici, & composti, che veggiamo vivere & vegetar nel dorso di quello (12). The fourth affirms, that this World of ours, which is called the Globe of the Earth, is composed of like matter with the Worlds which are the Bodies of the other Stars: and that it is childish to believe otherwise. And that they are so many intellectual Animals, and that there are in them innumerable, vegetable, and intelligent Individuals, simple and compound, as well as we see here on the Surface of this Globe. Lastly, I have seen li Heroici Furori of that Writer. They contain two Parts, each of which is divided into five Dialogues. The Author wrote them during his stay in England, and dedicated them to Sir Philip Sidney. There are many Italian Verses in that Work, and many Cabalistical Notions; for, under certain Figures, which seem to represent the Transports and Disorders of Love, he pretends to raise the Soul to the contemplation of the most sublime Truths, and cure it of its Imperfections. There are some Poems at the end, wherein he celebrates the Beauty of the London Women.

VOL. II.

Two general Observations may be made upon the Notions of this Author: One is, That his chief Doctrines are a thousand times more obscure, than the most incomprehensible things that have been advanced by the Followers of Thomas Aquinas, or John Scotus (13). For can any thing be more contrary to the Notions of our Minds, than to maintain that an Infinite Extension is wholly in each point of Space, and that an Infinite Number does not differ from Unity? L' uno, l' infinito, lo ente & quello che è in tutto, è per tutto anzi è l' ineffezzo UBIQUE. Et che così la infinita dimensione per non essere magnitudine coincide con l' individo, come la infinita moltitudine, per non esser numero coincide con la unita (14). The other Observation is, That he ridiculously fancies, that whatever he says is repugnant to the System of the Peripatetics, which is the Sophism called Ignoratio Elenchi. There is nothing but a Dispute about Words between Him and Them, as to what concerns the Immutability or Destructibility of Things. They never pretended that Matter, as it is a Substance, and the common Subject of Generation and Corruption, is capable of any change. But they maintain, that the Production and Destruction of Forms supposes, that the Subject, which acquires and loses them successively, is not immutable and unalterable. Brunus cannot deny it, but by taking the Words in a particular sense; and therefore it is only a misunderstanding and an equivocation. It appears from the following passage, that he acknowledges a Mutability in his one Being: 'Per il che, says he (15), non vi sonora mal nel orecchio la sentenza di Heracito, che disse tutte le cose essere uno, il quale per la MUTABILITÀ' hà in se tutte le cose; & perche tutte le forme sono in esso, conseguentemente tutte le definitioni gli convegnono; & per tanto le contraddittorie enunciationi son vere. Et quello che fa la moltitudine ne le cose non è lo ente, non è la cosa: ma quel che appare, che si rappresenta al senso & è nella superficie della cosa. --- Therefore (11) Du Verdier, Suppl. Bibl. Gein. pag. 33.

(12) Giordano Bruno, Epist. Dedicat. della Cena de la Cineri.

(13) That is, Followers as to Philosophy.

(14) Giordano Bruno, Epist. Dedicat. del trattato de la causa, Principio & Uno.

(15) Id. Dialogo quinto del medesimo trattato, pag. 127.

Academico di nulla Academia, detto il Fafidito. Some ingenious Persons pretend that Mr Des Cartes has borrowed some of his Notions from him [E].

'fore the Opinion, Heraclites, will not sound ill in your Ears, which says that all things are one, because MUTABILITY contains all things, and because all Forms are in it, consequently all Definitions agree to it; and thus contradictory Propositions are true, and the cause of the multitude of Things is not the Being, not the Substance, but those things that appear are only represented to the senses, and are the superficies of the Substance of the thing. A Peripatetic would grant him the greatest part of what he says here, if the Equivocations were once removed. Pray take notice of this Absurdity: He tells us, that Being is not the Cause of the Existence of many Things; but that this Multitude consists in what appears on the Surface of the Substance. In answer to which, I ask, Whether those Appearances, which strike our Senses, exist or do not exist? If they exist, they are Beings: and therefore Beings are the Cause of the Multitude of Things. If they do not exist, it will follow that Non-Entity acts upon us, and becomes sensible; which is absurd and impossible. There is no getting out of this Difficulty, but by the Help of an Ambiguity. Spinozism is liable to the same Inconveniences.

Sorel mentions and confutes some of our Bruno's Opinions, and even endeavours to excuse him; but he does not go the right way about it. Read what follows. 'Though Jordanus Brunus, says he (16), might be in an Error as well as some others; yet we ought to consider the Nature of his Work, which is a Poem, and that since Authors have been allowed at all times to make use of Fables and Fictions in such Books, it is no wonder he did it. His Performance seems to be the more diverting, because he has ingeniously described an Infinity of Worlds, and informs us, how Metadorus, Leucippus, Epicurus, and some other Philosophers, understood it. — He always affirms, that God is every where, and fills up all Things, ascribing to the supreme Essence whatever is due to it; and as he does not meddle with any Articles of the Christian Faith, he might have come off, notwithstanding some few Words in his Commentaries, that seem to those who understand them to be a little too free, by giving out all those things as meer Hypotheses and Suppositions, which he did not approve, and had wrote in Germany, where he had been for some time, and where those Opinions were acceptable, and there was more Liberty than in Italy (17). It may be answered, I. That since Sorel acknowledges (18), as he has done, and was obliged to do, that Bruno's Poem is like that of Lucretius, he should not have said, that the Author might very well insert several Fictions in it; for there is a great difference between that sort of Poems, and those of Tasso and Ariosto; those are dogmatical Books, but these are full of Fictions. A Man is no less answerable for an impious Thing which he dogmatically advances in a System written in Verse, than when he teaches it in a System written in Prose. II. It ought to be known, that Bruno wrote some Books in Prose, wherein he advances the same Opinions as in his Poems. Sorel was not altogether ignorant of it (19). III. God's Immen- sity, &c. are not Doctrines less impious in Jordanus Brunus than in Spinoza: Those two Writers are extravagant Unitarians; they acknowledge but one Substance in Nature. Sorel cannot be excused for not knowing this. IV. It is not true, that the Opinions concerning an infinite World, and innumerable Earths and Suns, were acceptable to the Germans at that time. It is a sad thing (thus he concludes (20) that a Man who wrote very fine Books, should meet with such an unfortunate Death. These Words depend upon what he had been saying in the foregoing Page: 'Father Merfenne mentions some of Brunus's Opinions in his Book against the Deists, wherein he represents that Author as an Atheist and a Teacher of Impiety, who was burnt at Rome by a Sentence of the Inquisition. Perhaps it was for something else than what is contained in his Books de Minimo, and de Immenso (21).'

We are told of one Brunus, who wrote a Panegyric upon the Devil (22). I do not doubt but that it is the same Brunus of Nola, who is the Subject of this Article.

[E] Some ingenious Persons pretend, that Mr Des Cartes borrowed some of his Notions from him. Mr Leibnitz cites a learned Mathematician, who observes, that Mr Des Cartes suppresses the Names of the Authors whom he pirates, and that he is indebted to Jordanus Brunus, and to Kepler for his Vortices. See the Journal of Leipzig 1682, pag. 187. The learned Mr Huet, Bishop of Avranches, gave a long List of the Hints that this Brunus might have furnished Des Cartes. 'Exstitit inter novitios Philosophos Jordanus quidam Brunus Nolanus, quem Cartesianæ doctrinæ antesignanum jure dicas: adeo accurate omnem propædædum ejus compositionem præsignavit in eo libro quem de immenso & innumerabilibus inscripsit (23). — There was, among the new Set of Philosophers, one Jordanus Brunus of Nola, who may justly be called the Founder of the Cartesian Philosophy; he has so exactly pointed out almost his whole Composition, in his Book concerning Immensity and Innumerables.'

(19) Brunus Nolanus — — — composid some Poems, on which he himself wrote a Commentary in Prose. — The first Poem is de Minimo — then comes his Poem de Mensura & Figura — to make way for his Poem de Immenso & innumerabilibus seu de Universo & Mundo. Id. ibid. pag. 238.

(20) Id. ibid. p. 242.

(21) Sorel de la Perfection de l'homme, pag. 241.

(22) Joannes Bruno Italus laudavit diabolum Wittemberge publice, Kecherm. Syst. Rhet. special. lib. 1, c. xviii. pag. 1647, Tom. II. Oper. Edit. Genev. 1614, in Fol. If I am not mistaken, the Word Joannes crept in instead of Jordanus.

(23) Huetii Centura Philosophiarum Cartesianæ, cap. viii, pag. 215. Edit. Paris 1698.

(16) Sorel, ubi infra, pag. 238, & seq.

(17) Sorel de la perfection de l'homme, p. 241.

(18) Ibid. p. 242.

(a) Bruschi in Poematis, pag. 336.

(b) Melch. Adam in vitis Philof. pag. 183.

(c) Bruschi. ubi supra, pag. 320, ult.

(d) Id. ib. p. 314.

(e) Id. ibid. pag. 338, 366.

(f) Ib. pag. 318.

(g) Ibid. p. 316.

(h) Ibid. 315.

(i) Melch. Adami Vitæ Philofoph. pag. 183.

BRUSCHIUS (GASPAR), was born at Egra, in Bohemia, the nineteenth of August, 1518 (a). He had a great Inclination, and a great Facility, to make Verses. He could make a very great Number extempore, which were not bad (b). Nothing was more fluent, nor of a more easy and natural Strain, than his Latin Verses. He began early to publish some of them on several Subjects. He got a Reputation by them, and attained to the poetical Crown, to the Dignity of Poet Laureat, and of Count Palatin: He received that Honour at Vienna from Ferdinand of Austria, King of the Romans, in the Year 1552 (c). His business thither was to present a Work to Maximilian, King of Hungary, which he had dedicated to him (d). It was the first Century of the German Monasteries. In his return from Vienna, he stopped at Passau, where he found a Protector and Benefactor in the Person of Wolfgang of Salms, Bishop of that Place. He resolved to settle there, and to remove his Library and Family thither (e), and hoped he might go on there conveniently with a great Work that he had undertaken. It was The History of all the Bishoprics and Bishops of Germany. He had travelled much (f), and looked into several Records and Libraries, to gather Materials for his Purpose. I cannot tell whether this new Settlement continued long; for I find that Bruschi was at Basil in the Month of June, 1553 (g), and had got the Cittadel of Oporin, Arcem Oporinianam, so they called that famous Printer's House (h), which stood on a rising Ground (i). There it was that he published some Writings he had finished at Passau, some in Prose, and others in Verse. He spake very freely in them of the Corruption of Manners that he had observed in Vienna, and of the Ravages which the Troops of Maurice, Elector of Saxony, that were sent to the Assistance of Hungary

(k) Brusch. in Poemat. p. 366.

(l) Id. ibid. pag.
381.

(m) Melch. Adam in Vitis
Philosoph. pag.
113.

gery against the Turks, had committed on the very Lands of the King of the Romans [A]. He was married (k), but had no Children, when, in the Month of January 1553, he recommended his Nephew Gaspas Bruschi to the Principal of the College of Passau (l). He was far from being rich, and would have had much ado to maintain himself, if he had not been assisted by those for whom he made Verses. He received Presents also from the Abbots and Abbeſſes, whose Monasteries he described. He was very well received by the Abbets of the Convent of the Caczi (m); he supped and danced with her, and obtained some Presents from her, a Gold Crown, and a Handkerchief, &c (n). The Liberalities of some Abbots, while he was with Oporin at Basil, enabled him to buy a new suit of Clothes: But when he found that appearing well dressed in the Streets, procured him many marks of Respect from the Vulgar, he tore his new Finery to Pieces, as a Slave which had usurped his Master's Honours [B]. Some say, that his

Treatises

(n) Descriptio Il-lius Canonici (Cacziensis) antiquitates, dis-
cessuro à 2244
dñ. nova cor-
dedit coronatum aureum, sudari-
um, cornu ibici, & alia plurima.
---- When he had described the Antiquities of that Convent, and was about to depart,
the good Abbeſs
made him a present of a Gold Crown, a Handkerchief, a Roebuck's horns, and several other things. Id. ibid.

[A] He spoke freely of the Corruption of Manners which he had observed in Vienna, and of the Ravages which the Elector of Saxony's Troops committed on the Lands of the King of the Romans.]
I shall transcribe some of his Verses: they will serve two Purposes, to comment on my Text, and to give a Specimen of that Author's Muse.

Luxuriat tanquam tuta omni parte Vienna,
Luxuriat miris Austria tota modis.
Et cum copia nunc sit Bacchi, ita vivitur illic
Ac si Turca ferox nullus in orbe foret:
Aut procul ad Tanaim à nostris diffitus oris
Non nostras raperet barbarus hostis opes.
Tantum indulgetur genio, mereantur ut omnes
Austriaci recte hoc nomen agreste viri:
Quo Paschaléri populo dicuntur ab omni
Quàm latè nomen Rhenus, & Ister habent;
Paschata dum semper celebrant, jejunia nunquam,
Dum semper Baccho, dum Cererique vacant.
Nullus ibi aut rarus timor est Dominique Deique, Rarus honos legum, rara pudicitia.
Et quia vulgus ibi variis ex partibus orbis
Collectum est discors nil nisi colluvies.
Nunc Hispanorum succumbunt ense Croatae:
Nunc Germani etiam Pannonique viri.
Vidi Germano stillantes sanguine favos
Hispanorum enses non equidem ipse semel:
Imo impunè etiam fieri hoc, nec rursus ad ullum
Supplicium hæc adeo noxia monstra rapi (1).

Vienna lies in Luxury and Ease,
All Austria revels in surprising sort;
Dissolv'd in flowing Wine they live secure,
As tho' no Danger threaten'd, no furious Turk
Were in the World, nor any barbarous Host Come from the distant Banks of Tanais, Plunder'd our miserable Countries Store.
So pamper'd are their Lives, they merit well
The Nick-name Paschalers, by which they're known Far as the Rhine and Danube take their Course.
With them 'tis Easter e'er: no Lent they know,
To Wine and Feasting they devote each Day.
Reverence of Deity, Regard for humane Laws,
Or Chastity, with them, are Virtues rare:
And as the People are a lawless Mob
Gather'd from various Climes; Croations now,
Now Germans, and in turn Pannonians, fall
A Sacrifice to Spanish Cruelty;
Reeking with German Gore I've often seen
The Spaniards Swords, and yet no Justice done:
Free and unpunish'd the dire Monsters pass.

Thus much for what Concerns the Corruption of Manners at Vienna, and the Impunity that the Audaciousness of the Spaniards found there. Here follows the Description of the good Discipline of the Auxiliary Troops:

Descendit nuper dux auxiliaribus armis
Saxonicus, secum millia multa trahens:
Ingentes equidem peditumque equitumque cohortes

Instructos animis militiaque viros:
Sed quos absmiles Turcisque Getisque profecto
Si recte inspicias, dixeris esse parum.
Qui quamvis Christo sint per baptismata renati
Inferitque Deo, & turba professa Deum
Quem scelorum ultorem norunt, quem sumere

poenas
A raptoribus, à furibus atque sciunt,
Per fas perque nefas nihilominus obvia quæque
Sunt ausi hostili diripuisse manu.
Vidi egomet, quantam furtis cladem atque rapinis Intulerint Boiis Austriacisque casis.
Imo casis non tantum & haris: sed & omnibus aris
Divorum templis, muneribusque sacris.
Nil fuit intra etiam divum penetralia tutum,
Nec puerile genus, nec muliebre genus.
An tales homines evertent Turcica regna?
Barbarico qui ipsi sunt magis hoste mali?
Si corvus corvum, lupus aut laniabit avaro
Dente lupum, nostro milite Turca cadet (2).

The Saxon Duke came lately to our Aid,
With many thousand Troops, a mighty Force,
Of Men well skill'd in Arms, of Bravery try'd,
Both Horse and Foot, but mark them well you'll find Twixt them and Turks the Difference is but small:
Who notwithstanding they're to GOD united
By Baptism, and to CHRIST regenerate;
Professing Worship of a righteous GOD
Avenger of all Crimes, and whom they know
Of Theft and Rapine Punisher severe,
Yet impious dare with hostile Hand to spoil Whate'er they meet with. I myself have seen How desolate their Plunderings have made
The Dwelling of the poor Inhabitants
Of Austria and Bohemia: nor content
With plundering these they ravag'd Altars too.
Devoted Off'rings, Temples, could not 'scape,
Nor ought be in most sacred Cloysters safe.
Nor Sex, nor Age would their fell Rapine spare.
Shall these Men then destroy the Turkish Pow'r, Themselves than our Barbarian Foes far worse?
When Vulture Vulture kills, or ravenous Wolf
With greedy Jaws his fellow Wolf pursues,
Then shall these Raveners the Turk destroy.

One of the Calamities of War is, that the Soldiera designed to repulse the Enemy are almost as much to be feared by the poor People, as the Enemy himself.

[B] Seeing that a new Suit of Cloaths gained him Respect ---- he tore it to pieces as if it --- usurped it's Master's Honours.] Let us recite the Relation of Melchior Adam in this Place. 'Basilea in arce Oporiniana (sic enim domum Oporini
' ob situm excelsum vocabant) tenui re familiari
' vivens, à vicinis Abbatibus stipe corrogata, novis
' vestibus ornatus in publicum aliquando prodit.
' Ibi plebecula splendorem vestitus more suo admi-
' rata, exurgendo caputque aperiendo honorem ho-
' mini exhibuit. Tunc ille honorem non sibi,
' sed vestibus deferri animadvertens, domum revertitur,

(2) Id. ibid. pag.
383.

(1) Bruschius in Poemat. cum Tractatu de Lau-
reaco & Patavio Germanico im-
pressis, pag. 358.

Treatises of the Ecclesiastical History of Germany favour too much of Lutheranism, with which he was already tainted [C]. This will be seen in one of my Remarks (o), and something also concerning his Writings [D]. He was killed in a Wood,

(o) In the Remark [C].

(3) Melch. Adam. in vitis Philosph. pag. 183.

titur, & vestimenta partim concidit, partim deturpat: tanquam improba mancipia sui domini gloriam præcipientia accusans (3). — When he lived at Basil, in Oporin's Tower (for so Oporin's House was called from it's Situation on an Eminence), on a small Income, Collection being made for him by the neighbouring Abbots, he happened to go abroad, dressed in a new Suit of Cloaths. The People, according to their Custom, admiring the fineness of his Dreß, paid their Respects to him by rising up and uncovering their Heads. He perceiving that the Respect was not paid to him, but to his Cloaths, returned Home, and cut his Cloaths in some places, and dawbed them in others, accusing them as wicked Slaves that robbed their Master of his Glory.

[C] Some say that his Treatises of the Ecclesiastical History of Germany favour too much of Lutheranism, with which he was already tainted.] Let us cite Gewoldus: 'Levissimam quamque occasionem arripit perquam avide, says he (4), Romæ & Romano Pontifici obloquendi: sed jam tum in Lutheri hæresin, Cereis Bacchique mancipium, Bruschi totus propendebat. — Bruschi takes every, the most slight, Occasion of speaking ill of Rome and the Pope: but he, a Slave of Gluttony and Drink, was then strongly inclined to Luther's Herefy.' He acknowledges however that the Work which that Writer composed on the Monasteries of Germany is not despicable (5). The Jesuit Gretser shall be my second Witness. 'Bonam operam navavit Gaspar Bruschius Ægranus, tametsi jam quinti Evangelii genio afflatus, cum Catalogos Episcopatum, & qui eos administrant Episcoporum, &c. collegit, ejus vestigia alii postea secuti, accuratius quadam dioceseon, & præfulum indices texuerunt (6). — Gaspar Bruschi of Egra did a good Work, notwithstanding he was already tainted with the Spirit of the fifth Gospel, in collecting Catalogues of the Bishops and the Bishops that held them; others have followed his Example, and composed more accurate Indexes of some Dioceses and Bishops.' Note, that Nicolas Serrarius, and Christopher Brower, have spoken of our Author with much Contempt, the first in his History of Mentz, and the last in his Antiquities of Fulda. See Zeillerus at the Place I have cited. It will appear in the following Remark, by the Title only of some of Bruschi's Books, that he relished Luther's Opinions pretty early.

[D] Here is something concerning his Writings.] The Catalogue of them is to be seen at the end of a Book of the Abbot Engelbert (7), which he himself published; as also in the Epitome of Gesner's Bibliothèque, to which I refer my Reader: Nevertheless, I shall set down some Titles. In 1537 Bruschi published, at Tubingen, Tabula Philosophiæ partitionem continens. So that he was an Author at the Age of nineteen Years. The Title of one of his Books is, Capita doctrinæ Christianæ versu elegiaco comprehensa: another is intitled, Narratio tumultus cujusdam Magdeburgi à Monaco quodam Carmelita excitati, heroico carmine scripta. He translated Melanchibon's Catechism and his Postilles into German, as also a Letter of his to the Count de Weda, and the Treatise of George Major de Autoritate Verbi Dei. He translated a German Book into Latin, wherein Luther had explained the Dominicals, and his Treatise of Consolation; and wrote a Preface to some Canticles of the same Luther. These Labours are Proofs of Lutheranism. Here are other Titles: De omnibus totius Germaniæ episcopatus epitomes tomus primus, Archiepiscopatum Moguntinum cum aliis 12 episcopatus qui Moguntino subsunt comprehendens, at Nuremberg 1549. Monasteriorum Germaniæ præcipuorum ac maxime illustrium centuria prima, at Ingolstadt, 1551. These two Books are not in Verse, as is affirmed in the Supplement to Moreri. Our Bruschi laboured much on the Description of the Fichtelberg, and on that of the four Rivers which have their Source in that Mountain (8). He made a Map of it, with a Treatise wherein he gave a very large Description of the City of Egra, and the adjacent Countries. That Treatise was inserted in the Cosmography of Munster, and was reprinted at Wittenberg, in 1540, in 4to (9). His Treatise de Laureaco, veteri admodumque celebri olim in Norico civitate, & de Patavio Germanico, ac utriusque loci Archiepiscopis ac Episcopis omnibus, was printed at Basil by Oporin, in 1553, in 8vo, with a Collection of the Latin Poems he made in Bavaria. The City which he calls Laureacum (a), was formerly an Archbishop's See. It was situated at the Place where the River En discharges itself into the Danube, three Miles below Lintz (10). As for the Patavium Germanicum, it is the City now called Passau. He declares in the Epistle Dedicatory of this Treatise, That if he relates things contrary to the common Tradition, and if he speaks disadvantageously of some Prelates, it must be imputed to the Obligation he was under of following the Laws of History.

multa hic scripta legentur
Dicta videbuntur quæ nec clementer in ipsos
Pontifices quosdam Latios, neque sat reverenter
De summis aliquot vestra Pastoribus urbis.
Invenietis & hic non pauca inserta, quibus cum Pugnabunt vestri Annales fortassis. Ad ista,
Quod res est, breviter respondeo: plurima summis
Esse à præsulibus Romanæ facta cathedræ, Que laudare bonus (nisi quis vel tartara cœlum, Cuncta vel atra velit candentem dicere lucem)
Nemo potest; quæ qui laudaverit haud bonus ille
Esse potest: veluti qui non reprehenderit, idem Nec bonus esse potest, verum ex Acheronte
profectus
Est Dæmon. Sive est igitur de Patribus urbis
Romulæ, seu de vestris Primatibus istic
Dictum aliquid durum: sic dictum credite vero
Ut servandus honos fuerit suis & mihi leges Historiæ quoque non violandæ, aut transgrediundæ (11).

many things
Will here be found, which on some Popes perhaps,
May seem to bear too hard, and not to shew
Sufficient Reverence to your City Primates,
And some things, possibly, may not agree Exactly with your Annals. Briefly thus
I answer. 'Tis the Truth, that many Fathers
Have by the Heads o' the Roman See been done
Which no good Man can praise; none who'd not call Hell Heaven, or Darkness Light: for who commends Or spares to blame 'em, is a Devil sent from The infernal Regions. And if therefore ought,
Or of the Popes, or City Primates said,
Has too severe a Look, judge it to be Spoke from a strict regard to Truth, and to
The Laws of History, which to violate
I dare not.

The Principles, he sets forth in these Verses, are the justest in the World, and it is very strange, that an Historian, who follows them religiously, should be reputed a Satirist. The Corruption of Manners has been so great, as well among those who have lived in the World, as among those who have lived out of it (12), that the more a Person endeavours to give faithful and true Relations, the more he runs the hazard of composing only diffamatory Libels. Doubtless there is a great Difference between History and Satire, but a small matter suffices to metamorphose the one into the other. If

(8) Munus, Egra, Nabs, Sala.

(9) See the Bibl. German. of Michael Hertzius, n. 90.

(a) It is yet a Town called Lorch, in the Map of the Danube, by N. de Per. R.E.M.C. 17.

(10) Bruchius de Laureaco, p. 20.

(4) Christoph. Gewoldus, Tom. I, Metrop. Salisburg. fol. 436. apud Zeiller de Hist. Parte II, pag. 26.

(5) Id. Tom. II, Metrop. fol. 495. apud Zeill. ibid.

(6) Gretf. Hist. Catal. omnium Episcop. Eyflett. init. præfat. apud Zeill. ibid.

(7) Engelbertus Abbas Admontensis.

(11) Id. ib. Epist. Dedicat.

(12) That is to say Churchmen.

Wood, in the Year 1559. Thuanus relates this, where he mentions a Prophecy that Bruschius had published [E].

on the one hand, you take from Satire that Spirit of Sharpness, that Air of Anger, which discovers that Passion has a greater share in the Scandals reported, than a love of Virtue; and if you add the Obligation, one is under, of relating indifferently the good and the bad, it is no longer reputed Satire, but History. Let a Historian, on the other hand, faithfully relate all the Crimes, Weaknesses, and Disorders of Mankind, his Work shall be reputed rather a Satire, than a History, if he discover but ever so little Emotion in himself at the thoughts of so many condemnable Facts which he exposes to public View. I do not believe that That Coolness of Temper, with which a Judge ought to pronounce Sentence against Robbers and Murderers, is always to be exacted from a Historian. Some pointed Reflexions do not become him ill.

[E] He was killed in a Wood, in the Year 1559. Thuanus relates this in mentioning a Prophecy which Bruschius had published. He says, I. That Regiomontanus, the ablest Astronomer since Ptolemy, had predicted, that the Year 1588 should be memorable for great Revolutions. II. That that Prophecy, contained in four German Verses, was published in the Year 1553. III. That Gaspar Bruschius, who inserted it in a small Book of the Abbot Engelbert (13), de ortu & fine Romani Imperii, put it into Latin, and altered the Sense of it, though he understood the German Tongue very well. IV. That his bad Translation was a new Prophecy more surprizing than that of Regiomontanus; for he noted that those great things should happen under one Sextus. Thuanus adds, That he had often admired that Conduct of Bruschius, and thereupon observes, that he was killed in the Year 1559, a long time before Sixtus V., who was Pope in 1588, attained to the Papacy. Here are his Words: 'Joannes --- Regiomontanus --- diu ante id præmonuerat, quatuor versibus seu rhythmis vernacula lingua exaratis, qui in Castellensi superioris Norici cœnobio hodie leguntur, ante XXXV annos à Gaspare Bruschio Egrano, cum Engelberti Abbatis Admontensis, qui sub Rodulfo Habsburgio floruit, libello de ortu & fine R. Imperii publicati, quos cum ille interpretaretur, quod mihi mirari sæpius subiit, quamquam minime linguæ suæ ignarus, tamen dum verba Germanica aliter, quam scripta erant, latine reddit, vaticinium Regiomontani longe alio majore cumulavit. Si quidem id, quod ab illo prædictum erat, sub Sexto quodam eventurum tradit; atqui diu est, ex quo Bruschius satis concessit; anno videlicet hujus sæculi LIX à ficariis juxta Rottenburgum ad Duberam interfectus, multo antequam Sixtus V. summum magistratum in ecclesia iniret, & Regiomontani verba, sicuti dixi, id minime significant (14). — Johannes Regiomontanus had foretold that long before, in four Verses written in the German Tongue, which are still to be found in the Convent of Castel, in Upper Austria, and were published about Thirty five Years ago, by Gaspar Bruschius of Egra, with a Book concerning the beginning and end of the Roman Empire, written by Engelbert, Abbot of Aumont, who flourished under Rodolphus of Habsburg. In translating these Verses, though he was very well skilled in that Tongue, yet by reading the German Words in Latin, otherwise than they were written, he has encreased the Prophecy of Regiomontanus with another much greater, which I much wonder at. For he says, that what Regiomontanus had foretold, was to happen under one Sixtus; but it is long since Bruschius died, for he was murdered in the LIXth Year of this Century, near Rottenburg, upon the Tauber, long before Sixtus V. came to the Papacy, and Regiomontanus' Words, as I have said before, have no such Signification. Note, That it was believed, that some Gentlemen, against whom Bruschius was about to write something, caused him to be assassinated. He was murdered in the Forest of Stalingenbach, between Rottenberg, on the Tauber, and Winheim. See Crusius in his Annals of Swabia (15). If the same Advice had been given our Poet, which Horace received, to forbear flandering, or else expect to lose his Life (16), it would at least have been as prophetic as the four Verses mentioned by Thuanus.

(13) He lived under Rodolphus of Habsburg.

(14) Thuanus lib. xc, init. pag. 176.

(15) Parte III, lib. x, cap. vii, apud Zellier de Hist. pag. 27.

(16) O puer ut sis Vitalis metuas, & majorum ne quis amicus Frigore te feriat. Horat. Sat. 1, lib. ii, v, 60.

BRUTUS (LUCIUS JUNIUS), Son of one of Tarquin's Sisters (a), was obliged to feign himself stupid, that he might not be thought capable of revenging the Death of his Father and Brother; for if Tarquin, who ordered them to be put to Death, had found him a Man of Parts and Courage, he would not have let him live (b). This feigned Stupidity got him the Surname of Brutus (c). Under this false appearance of Brutishness, he impatiently waited for an Opportunity to expel Tarquin. He found it, when Lucretia killed herself after the Injury she received from the Tyrant's eldest Son; and he made so good use of it, that in a little time the City of Rome was changed from a Monarchy to a Commonwealth. This Revolution happened in the Two hundred and forty fifth Year of Rome. The Dignity of Consul was instituted to be enjoyed by two Persons for one Year. He and Collatinus, the Husband of Lucretia, were the first on whom it was conferred. He did not long survive his Work, I mean the establishing of Liberty; for before the Year of his Consulship was expired, he was killed in a Battle [A], having engaged in so sharp a Combat, hand to hand, with one of Tarquin's Sons [B], that they

(a) See Remark [D].

(b) Dionys. Halicarnass. lib. iv.

(c) Id. ibid. Livius, lib. i, Plut. in Valerio Publico.

[A] Before the Year of his Consulship was expired he was killed in Battle. Livy and Dionysius Halicarnassensis say it expressly. Florus committed a great Fault then, which I do not find censured in the Variorum of Holland. He pretends that the Death of Brutus followed the Peace which Proffenna made with Rome. 'Et rex quidem tot tantisque virtutum territus monstris valere liberolique esse jussit. Tarquinius tamdiu dimicaverunt donec Aruntum filium regis manu sua Brutus occidit, superque ipsum mutuo vulnere expiravit, plane quasi adulterum ad inferos ulque sequebatur (1). — The King, terrified with so many and so great Prodigies of Valour, left them to enjoy their Liberty. The Tarquins fought so long until Brutus killed Aruns, the King's Son, with his own Hand, and expired upon him of a Wound he had received from him, as if he pursued the Adulterer to the Shades.'

(1) Florus, lib. i, cap. x.

[B] Having engaged in ----- Combat hand to hand against one of the Sons of Tarquin. The Passage of Florus, which we have just now cited, might induce us to take these Words literally; yet it is better not to take them so; for it is certain that Brutus and Aruns (2) fought on Horfeback, and that they ran at each other with their Lances. Thus Livy and Dionysius Halicarnassensis relate it. Notwithstanding all the Violence which animated Brutus against the Tarquins, yet it was not he that was the Challenger, but Aruns, who, having singled out Brutus, run towards him, insulted, reviled, and provoked him to a single Fight. But Brutus, who accepted the Challenge, met the Aggressor with equal Fury. Each thought only on killing his Enemy, without defending himself: 'Adco infestis animis concurrerunt, neuter dum hostem vulneraret sui protegendi corporis memor, ut contrario ictu per parvam uterque transfixus duabus hærentes

(2) That was Tarquin's Son's Name.

VOL. II. N^o. XXXVI.

S

hærentes

they died on the spot. He lived long enough to shew, by a vigorous Action, that he preferred the Safety of his Country to that of his own Sons (d) [C]. The Roman Ladies mourned for him a whole Year, because he had so well revenged violated Chastity (e). I censure but one Passage in Moreri [D].

Among all the Attempts that ever have been formed to change the Civil Government, and dethrone Kings, there is hardly any so reasonable as this; for in short, this King of Rome, whom our Brutus endeavoured with so much Success to expel, was doubly a Tyrant [E]; his Reign was unjust and violent, and he had usurped the Sovereign Power: He had dethroned his Father-in-law who was the rightful Possessor, he caused him to be murdered, and in this he acted against the People's Intention; nor did he ever get his Usurpation approved by Law, but maintained himself in it by all kinds of Violence. It was happy for Rome that she had never had a Tyrant King before, or a Citizen so great a Lover of Liberty as Brutus; for had it been reduced to a Democracy under the preceeding Reigns, before it had been brought to a due Confidence, it could never have subsisted, but

(d) Dionys. Halicarn. lib. iv. v. Livius, lib. i. ii. Plut. ubi supra.

(e) Matronæ animum ut parentem eum luxerunt, quod tam acer ultor violatæ pudicitie fuisset, Livius, lib. ii, pag. 41.

(3) Livius, lib. ii. See also Dionys. Halicarn. lib. v. & Plutarch in Valer. pag. 201.

(4) Livius, lib. ii. Plut. in Val. Public. pag. 98.

(5) Dion. Halicarn. lib. v.

(6) Livius, lib. ii. Vide quoque Dionys. Halicarn. lib. v. & Plutarch in Valer. Public. pag. 99.

(7) Lib. iv.

(8) Livius, lib. i, pag. 43.

(9) Id. ib. Dionys. Halicarn. lib. iv.

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Dion. Halicarn. ibid.

(12) Livius, lib. i, pag. 23.

hastis moribundi ex equis lapsi sint (3). — They engaged with such Fury, that neither of them, so he could but wound his Enemy, took any care to defend himself; so they were both of them run through their Shields, and fell dead from their Horses, stuck on the two Spears.

[C] He shewed that he preferred the Safety of his Country, before that of his own Sons. He had married a Wife of the Vitellian Family (4), by whom he had two Sons, who had not yet attained to Man's Estate (5). They suffered themselves to be engaged by two of their Uncles on the Mother's side, and by some others, who loved the Kingly Government better than a Common-wealth, in a Plot to recal Tarquin. The Conspiracy was discovered, and Brutus himself condemned his Children to death, and had them executed in his Presence. 'Consules in sedem processere suam: missique lictores ad sumendum supplicium nudatos virgis cædunt, securique feriunt: cum inter omne tempus pater, vultusque & os ejus, spectaculo esset, eminente animo patrio inter publicæ poenæ ministerium (6). — The Consuls took their Seats, and the Lictors, who were ordered to do the Execution, stripped them, and scourged them, and then cut off their Heads. The Father's Countenance and Aspect was all the while the Object of every one's Observation, the Love of his Country eminently appearing during the Execution of public Justice.'

[D] I censure only one Passage in Moreri. He says that Brutus was Son of a Daughter of Tarquinius Priscus, King of Rome. I own this is the Opinion of Dionysius Halicarnassicus. Brutus, says he (7), was the Son of Marcus Junius, descended from one of Aneas's Companions, and his Mother was Tarquinia, Daughter to the first Tarquin. This does not hinder my saying that Mr Moreri asserts a Falsity, and that he ought to say, with Livy (8), That Tarquinia, the Mother of Brutus, was Sister of the last Tarquin. My Reason is this: It is certain Brutus was very young when his Father was killed (9); he was much about the Age of Tarquin's Sons, and was educated with them: It is true, it was rather to serve them for a Buffoon, than for any thing else (10). It is moreover certain, than his Father was not put to death, 'till after Tarquin's Usurpation (11); it may therefore reasonably be supposed, that Brutus was not above fifteen Years of Age when Tarquin usurped the Crown. His Mother must needs then have been very old when she was brought to bed of him, if she had been the Daughter of Tarquinius Priscus. She must have been the Daughter of Tanaquil, for Tarquinius Priscus had no other Wife but Tanaquil. That Tarquinius came to Rome by the Advice of his Wife, in the Reign of Ancus Martius. He had attempted in vain to have a Share in the Government of his own Country. Considering the manner in which she argued with her Husband, to engage him in that Journey to Rome (12), she could not be a Girl of fifteen or twenty; she must be at least about Twenty five Years of Age; her Ability in explaining Auguries confirms my Supposition. They must have been married a considerable time, since they hoped for nothing in their own Country. One is not disheartened 'till after divers Attempts. They lived several Years at Rome, and made themselves so considerable there, that Tarquin, being chosen Tutor to the King's Children, secured to himself the Succession of Ancus Martius. It is not too much to allow ten Years to an Abode which had Consequences so very important. Say then, that they came to Rome ten Years before Ancus Martius died. By this means Tanaquil must have been Thirty five Years of Age when her Husband became King of Rome. Nor can her last lying-in be later than the fifteenth of her Husband's Reign. Let us suppose then that the pretended Mother of Brutus, the Daughter of Tarquinius Priscus, was born in the fifteenth Year of her Father's Reign. Thus she must have been Twenty three Years of Age when her Father died (13); to which if we add the Forty four Years that Servius Tullius reigned, we shall find that she was Sixty seven Years of Age when Tarquin the Proud seized on the Throne. Now we suppose that Brutus was then fifteen Years of Age, he must then be born when his Mother was Fifty two Years old. If that be not impossible, it is at least very improbable. Now a judicious Historian never puzzles himself, but in the utmost necessity, with Chronological Accounts, which clash with Appearances. It is dragging, as we may say, the Devil by the Tail, to be obliged to place the Marriage of Daughters at twelve or fifteen, to adjust his Account, and make them fruitful 'till fifty. See Laurentius Valla, who reckons, That if the Mother of Brutus had been the Daughter of Tanaquil, it ought to be concluded that she was the Mother of a young Man at above ninety Years of Age (14).

[E] The King whom Brutus expelled from the Throne was doubly a Tyrant. We must not therefore alledge this Conduct of the Romans, as an Example of the Rights of the People exercised against a lawful Sovereign who abuses his Power. Tarquin the Proud was not only a Tyrant in his Administration, but was also a Tyrant by Usurpation. Read these Words of Livy: 'Conscius deinde male quaerendi regni ab se ipso adversus se exemplum capi posse, armatis corpus circumsepsit. Neque enim ad jus regni quicquam præter vim habebat; ut qui neque populi iussu, neque autoribus patribus regnaret. Eo accedebat, ut in charitate civium nihil spei repenti metu regnum tutandum esset: quem ut pluribus incuteret, cognitiones capitalium rerum sine consiliis per se solus exercebat, perque eam causam occidere, in exilium agere, bonis multare poterat, non suspectos modo aut invisos, sed unde nihil aliud quam prædam sperare posset. Ita patrum præcipue numero imminuto, statuit nullos in patres legere, quo contemptior paucitate ipsa ordo esset, minusque per se nihil agi indignarentur. Hic enim regum primus traditum à prioribus morem de omnibus Senatui consulendi solvit; domesticis consiliis Rempubli- cam administravit; bellum, pacem, fœdera, societates per se ipse cum quibus voluit, injussu populi ac Senatus, fecit, diremitque (15). — Besides being conscious that Example might be taken against him, from himself, of seizing the Kingdom by ill means, he set Guards about his Person; for he had no other Right to the Crown than Force, as reigning neither by Consent of the People, nor the Authority of the Senate; to this may be added, that as he reposed no Confidence in the Love of the

(13) The Reign of Tarquinius Priscus lasted 33 Years.

(14) See his Dissertation against Titus Livius, on the Question, If Tarquinius Superbus was the Son of Tarquinius Priscus.

(15) Titus Livius, Dec. I, lib. i, pag. 30, 31.

but must have been destroyed by the Factions and Discords which the Tribunes of the People raised at every turn, under the specious Pretence of Liberty [F]. Nothing is finer in all the Romances that have appeared under the Name of Mr de Scuderi, than what concerns Brutus in the Romance of Clelia.

However austere and stern his Virtue was, nevertheless he mitigated an Article of Religion so remarkably, that instead of human Sacrifices, it cost only the Heads of Poppies [G].

'the People, his Government was to be secured by Fear; which that he might spread the more, he himself took Cognizance of all capital Causes, without any Council, and by that means could put to death, banish, or fine, not only whom he suspected, or hated, but others, for no other reason but to plunder them; by this means, having lessened the number of the Senators, chiefly he resolved to abuse none into the Senate, that the Order of it might become contemptible by the smallness of their Number, and not take it so much amiss, that all things were done without them; for he was the first King who changed the Custom, practised by his Predecessors, of consulting the Senate in every thing. He administered the Government by private Councils; he, of his own Head, went to War, made Peace, Treaties, or Alliances with whom he pleased, or broke them again, without consulting either the People or Senate.' This is a very elegant Description of Tyranny.

[F] If Rome had had a Tyrannical King, or such a Citizen as Brutus, sooner ----- which the Tribunes of the People raised on pretence of Liberty.] This Reflexion is not mine; it is Livy's, and serves to shew that Author's Judgment and good Sense. 'Neque ambigitur, says he (16), quin Brutus idem, qui tantum gloriæ Superbo exacto rege meruit, pessimo publico id facturus fuerit, si libertatis immaturæ cupidine priorum regum alicui regnum extorisset. Quid enim futurum fuit, si illa pastorum convenarumque plebs transfuga ex suis populis, sub tutela involuti templi aut libertatem aut certe impunitatem adepti, soluta regio metu, agitari cœpta esset tribunitiis procellis? & in aliena urbe cum patribus serere certamina, priusquam pignora conjugum ac liberorum, charitatis ipsius soli, cui longo tempore affluebat, animos eorum confocisset? dissipatæ res nondum adultæ discordia forent; quas fovit tranquilla moderatio imperii, eoque nutriendo perduxit, ut bonam frugem libertatis maturis jam viribus ferre possent. ----- There is no doubt but even Brutus, who merited so much Glory for expelling Tarquin the Proud, would have done the Public a great Prejudice, if out of too hasty desire of Liberty he had wrested the Kingdom from any of the former Kings; for what would have been the Case, if that Multitude of Shepherds and Strangers, who had fled from their own People, had obtained either Liberty, or Impunity, by the Privilege of an inviolable Sanctuary, and being freed from the Fear of a King, had began to be agitated by the Commotions of the Tribunes, and to enter into Contentions with the Nobility in a strange City, before the Pledges of Wives and Children, and Love of the Place itself, to which they had been long accustomed, had cemented their Minds? their State, not yet come to Perfection, would have been destroyed by Discord, which was cherished by an undisturbed and moderate Monarchical Government, and nursed up to its full Strength, when it was able to bear the good Fruit of Liberty.' The first Inhabitants of Rome had need of a Monarch. Their new City would soon have sunk, if it had been exposed in its Infancy to the continual Contentions of the Patricians and Plebeians. It is next to a Miracle that they suffered it to maintain and aggrandize itself.

[G] He mitigated an Article of Religion so remarkably, that instead of Human Sacrifices they only offered the Heads of Poppies.] Tarquin the Proud, having re-established, according to the Order of Apollo, the Compital Games in honour of the Dii Penates, and the Goddess Mania, they thought themselves obliged to sacrifice Children to Mania, the Mother of the Lares, for the common Good of their Families; for the Oracle had told them, they must offer Heads if they would preserve Heads. This Custom continued some time; but Brutus, after the Expulsion of Tarquin, interpreted the Words of the Oracle favourably, and ordered them to offer the Heads of Garlic and Poppies, and by that means abolished the Cruelty of the Sacrifice. This we learn from Macrobius: 'Qualem nunc permutationem sacrificii ----- memorasti invenio postea Compitalibus celebratam, cum ludi per urbem in compitibus agitantur, restituti scilicet à Tarquinio superbo Laribus ac Maniæ ex responso Apollinis: quo præceptum est, ut pro capitibus, capitibus supplicaretur; idque aliquandiu observatum, ut pro familiarium sospitate pueri mactarentur Maniæ. Deæ matri Larum: quod sacrificii genus Junius Brutus Consul, pulso Tarquinio, aliter constituit celebrandum; nam capitibus allii & papaveris supplicari iussit, ut responso Apollinis satisfaceret de nomine capitum, remoto scilicet scelere infauitæ sacrificiationis (17). ----- Such an Alteration of a Sacrifice ----- as you have now mentioned, I find afterwards practised in the Compitalia, which Games were celebrated throughout the City in the open Streets, being restored by Tarquin the Proud, to the Lares and Mania, by the Direction of the Oracle of Apollo: whereby it was ordered that they should sacrifice Heads for Heads, which was observed for some time, and Children were offered to Mania, the Mother of the Lares, for the Safety of Families: which kinds of Sacrifice Junius Brutus, after he had expelled Tarquin, ordered to be celebrated otherwise; for he commanded them to offer only Heads of Garlic and Poppies, to satisfy the Oracle, as to the Names of Heads, and remove the Wickedness of the abominable Sacrifice.' This Author adds, that they hung up the Effigy of Mania at the Doors of the Houses, to avert the Dangers, with which the Family might be threatened. That Effigy doubtless was very hideous; for ugly Masks, such as fright Children, were called Maniæ (18). I wish Macrobius had attempted to resolve a Question proposed by Plutarch, Why they prayed to the Goddess Geneta Mana, (the same with Mania, she who presided at Births) that nothing that was born in that House might become good (19)? Plutarch's Answers are not very satisfactory to nice Minds. He says, in the first place, I. That perhaps this was only understood of Dogs, a domestic Animal, which one would wish to be bad, and apt to create Terror: but what appearance is there that the Ancients should use a general Expression (20), if they understood no more than one Species. In the second place he conjectured, II. They wished that nothing might die, and cites an Authority to prove that the Expression make good sometimes signified to kill. This is straining things with a Witnells. A French Writer (21), has conjectured that Goodness was used then for that dull Simplicity which we understand, when we say a Man is a good natured Fellow. Boxhornius had used this Explanation of Berault, but he owns it is more subtle than true (22).

(17) Macrobi. Saturnal. lib. i. cap. vii. pag. 154. Lond. Edition, 1694, in 8vo.

(18) Scholiastes Persii in Sat. vi. ver. 56.

(19) Plutarch. in Quest. Romanis, pag. 277. Edit. Francof. Anno 1620, where there is twice ἀρχαῖος instead of ἀρχαῖος.

(20) Καταρχαῖος τὰ μὲν ἀρχαῖα ἀρχαῖα τῶν ἀρχαῖων. Voto petunt nequis domi natorum bonus fiat. Id. ib.

(21) John Berault in his Notes on Barclay's Euphormion, says, in his Epistle Dedicatory, that he has seldom found any body who has not had the misfortune to have, at his Birth, the assistance of the Goddess Geneta Mana, to whom the Ancients made Vows, that nothing good might be born in their Family; Nequis nascitur aut probus, It may be doubted whether the Word probus, which does not signify soft and simple, as Plutarch's Word ἀρχαῖος does sometimes, be here properly used.

(22) Boxhornius in Plutarchum de Quest. Roman. pag. 114.

BRUTUS

BRUTUS (MARCUS JUNIUS), the Son of Marcus Junius Brutus, and of Servilia, the Sister of Cato, was one of the Murderers of Julius Cæsar. He was the greatest Republican that ever was known. He did not believe that any body was obliged to keep Faith, or the sacred Oaths, to those who usurped a tyrannical Power in Rome [A]. He was so full of the great and noble Ideas of Liberty, and that Love of his Country, which the Greek and Roman Authors have described so pompously: I say he was so bewitched to these, that neither the Obligations he had to Julius Cæsar, nor the certain Prospect he had of aggrandizing himself as much as he pleased under that new Master of Rome, could balance the Ambition he had of restoring things to their first State by the Murder of the Tyrant. He conspired against him with several others, and their Plot was so well concerted and carried on, that Julius Cæsar was stabbed in the Senate, the fifteenth of March, 709. The People applauded that Action at first, but all on a sudden, like a Sea agitated by contrary Winds, they grew exasperated against the Murderers. These were forced to seek their Safety by flight. Brutus and Cassius were not discouraged; they endeavoured to support their Party in the Provinces abroad; they made a stand in Macedonia, at the head of some very good Troops; but Fortune declared for the Oppressors of Liberty. These two grand Republicans, who were called the last of the Romans [B], were defeated by Octavius and Marc Antony, and reduced to the necessity of killing themselves, in the Year of Rome 711. Brutus is condemned for having employed his last dying Words in decrying Virtue (a) [C]: he was not so much in the wrong as is imagined [D]. It is

(a) See Plutarch in the Life of Brutus.

(1) Appian. de bellis Civil. lib. ii, pag. 282.

(2) Tacit. Annal. lib. iv, c. xxxiv.

(3) Sueton. in Tiber. cap. lxi.

(4) Plut. in Brut. pag. 1005.

(5) Ἀναβοήσας τὸ δὴ τὸ Ἡράκλειον, ὁ τῶν ἄνθρωπων λόγος ἄρ' ἦν. Ἐγὼ δὲ σὺ ὡς ἔργον ἔσθαι οὐδ' ἄρ' ἐθέλεις σὺ γὰρ. Atque voce recitato Hercules ista dixit, O infelix virtus heane quum nihil quam nomen effices ego te tantum rem aliquid quam exercui, quam tu fortunæ servieris. Dio, lib. xlvii, sub fin. See Plutarch, de superst. init.

[A] He did not believe that any one was obliged to keep Faith ---- with those that usurped a tyrannical Power in Rome.] In one of his Speeches to the Roman People, in the Capitol, he told them, Οὐδὲν πιστὸν ἐστὶ Ρωμαίοις πρὸς τυράννους, ἐδ' ἑσέχοι: Cum tyranno Romanis nulla fides, nulla jurisjurandi religio (1). — The Romans are obliged to no Faith with a Tyrant, nor to keep any Oath. This Maxim seemed unreasonable to Grotius: See how he has refuted it in the fifteenth Paragraph of the thirteenth Chapter of the second Book De Jure Belli & Pacis. Boetius approves this Refutation in his Notes on the Fifty sixth Chapter of the second Book of Velleius Paterculus. However, this Maxim of Pagan Rome is more excusable, than that which Christian Rome is said to have established in the Council of Constance, That Faith is not to be kept with Heretics.

[B] He and Cassius are called the last of the Romans.] Crematius Cordus, according to Tacitus, said this of Cassius only: Postulatur ---- quod editis Annalibus laudatque M. Bruto C. Cassium Romanorum ultimum dixisset (2). — He was arraigned ---- for that in the Annals which he had published he had commended M. Brutus, and called C. Cassius the last of the Romans. But Suetonius affirms, he said it of both. Objection & Historic quod Brutum Cassiumque ultimos Romanorum dixisset (3). ---- It is objected to that Historian, that he had called Brutus and Cassius the last of the Romans. That Historian, whom Suetonius does not name, is undoubtedly Crematius Cordus. The Elogy he gives these two Republicans was given to Cassius by his Companion Brutus, when the News of his Death was brought him (4).

[C] He employed his last dying Words in decrying Virtue.] Unhappy Virtue, cried he, how have I been deceived in thy Service! I believed thou wert a real Being, and devoted myself to thee on that Account; but thou art only a vain Name, a Phantom, the Prey and Slave of Fortune. He was not the first that made use of these Words. A Greek Poet had put them in Hercules's Mouth (5). I do not believe that it is known who that Poet was, since a learned Man was contented to give him the indefinite Title of a Tragic Poet. It is in a Translation of one of Plutarch's small Pieces, that these Words are to be found: Though all is not seen in it that Dion makes Brutus say, yet in recompence something is to be seen in it, that Brutus never did say, but which is a Consequence natural enough from what he said. According to Plutarch, he, who made these Complaints for having followed Virtue as a real Being, added, that he had forsaken Injustice, the fruitful Source of Riches; and Intemperance, the plentiful Dispenser of all kind of Pleasures. Ἀπαίς τὴν πλεονεξίαν ἀδικίαν, καὶ τὴν γόνιμον ἀπάσας ἡδονῶν ἀπολαίαν. Omissa divitiis largiente injustitia, & omnis voluptatis ferace intemperantia (6). I cannot tell why the Translator, of whom I speak (7), has given quite another Sense to the Original. That which he substitutes does not countervail what he has omitted, and does not so well represent the Indignation of a Person who repented for having followed the Ways of Virtue, and who reckons it an ingrateful and barren Soil. Note, That Florus has given his Approbation of this Complaint of Brutus. Sed quanto efficacior est fortuna, says he (8), quam virtus! & quam verum est quod moriens efflavit, non in re sed in verbo tantum esse virtutem! victoriam illi prælio error dedit. — But how much stronger is Fortune than Virtue! and how true is that which he uttered when he was dying; that Virtue was not a Thing but a Name; the Victory in that Battle was owing only to a Mistake.

[D] He was not so much in the wrong as is imagined.] He is so far from deserving to be condemned in all Respects, that, on the contrary, we ought to say that perhaps never Pagan said a thing more just and reasonable. But to discover this, we must put ourselves in that Roman's Place. He had considered Virtue, Justice, and Right, as absolute and real things; I mean as Beings, whose Force was superior to that of Injustice, and which soon or late would place their Followers above the Accidents and Outrages of Fortune; but he experienced quite the contrary. He saw the side of Justice, the Cause of Liberty, a second time at the Feet of a rebellious Party: He saw Marc Antony, the most profligate Man alive, with Hands imbrued in the Blood of the most illustrious Citizens of Rome, pull those to the Ground who were asserting the Liberty of the Roman People: Thus he found himself miserably abused in the Idea he had formed of Virtue; he had gained nothing in it's Service but the choice of killing himself, or becoming the sport of an Usurper, while Marc Antony was favoured with Occasions of gratifying all his Passions in the Service of Injustice. This made Brutus say, That Virtue had no Reality, and that a wife Man, and one who would not be bubbled, ought to look upon it as an empty Name, and not as a Reality. But was he not wrong in saying this? Let us distinguish: in the general Thesis, and absolutely speaking, he advanced a great Absurdity, and an impious Falsity. According to his own Hypothesis, and considering the System he had formed to himself, his Complaints were well grounded. It may also be said, that the Pagans, in the Obscurity wherein they lived, as to another Life, reasoned very inconsequentially on the Reality of Virtue. It belongs to Christians alone to argue upon it aright, and, if those good things to come, which the Scripture promises the Faithful, were not joined to the Exercise of Virtue, That is a pity he fulfilled, by the Murder of his Benefactor, a Combination of the greatest Qualities that a Man can possess [E]. His Action was condemned by several Romans of those Times (b), and it can hardly be denied that it was at least ill (b) See, in Remark [F], Citation (18), the Words of Tacitus. You will find the Proof of this in Dio Cassius [F]. He followed the Sect of the Stoics: He loved and Innocency might be placed in the Number of those things, on which Solomon pronounces his definitive Decree, Vanity of Vanities, all is Vanity. To trust to one's Innocency, would be to trust to a broken Reed, which pierces the Hand of him that leans upon it. God, as being the Disposer of Events, and the Distributer of good and bad Success on Earth, has submitted Virtue and Innocency to general Laws, no less than Health and Riches. One of the most considerable States of Europe lost and gained by turns, as long as it made only unjust Wars; nay, it gained more than it lost. Ever since it has been engaged only in just Wars, it does nothing but lose. How happens this? It was powerful at that time, and now is not so. To conclude, whoever shall go upon Brutus's System, and look upon Virtue as the Fountain of good temporal Successes, may happen one Day to complain, as he did, of having taken that for a Reality which is only a Name.

(6) Plut. de Superstit. pag. 165.
(7) Mr le Fevre of Saumur.

(8) Florus, lib. iv, cap. vii. circa fin. pag. 116.

A CONFUTATION of those who pretend that Injustice is a means of Prosperity.

(2) This was written in 1698.

(10) That really happened.

(11) See above, Citat. (82), of the Article BEL-LARMIN.

(12) Note, that on some Occasions they miscarry, because they dare not be wicked enough.

But let us beware of the heady Reflexions of those extravagant Spirits, who pretend, that to have an ill Cause is the readiest way to carry it. Say we on the contrary, that, all things being in other Respects equal, Reason and Justice on one's Side is a good Step towards the Victory. How great soever the Disorders of human kind are, they are not yet come to such a Height, that it can with truth be said, that Right averts or retards the Victory. I was not long ago (9) in Company where the Discourse turned upon two Princes, who had been named for a very high Dignity: Opinions were not much divided; almost all agreed, that such an one would baffle the Pretensions of his Competitor (10). They grounded themselves on several Reasons which were particularized, as the Interest of all Europe to favour one of the two Pretenders, the Situation of the Countries from whence each was to expect Assistance, the overgrown Power of the Promoter of him whose ill Success was foretold, and an hundred other Considerations besides (11). And now you think you have said all, said a Frenchman suddenly, who had not spoken a Word before, but it is a Mistake, I will give you one Reason stronger than all. Such an one has Right of his Side; his Election is regular, and therefore he must sink: The Election of the other has all possible Defects; it is contrary to the most essential Formalities, and to the fundamental Laws of the Nation; that alone were enough to secure him the Superiority and the Triumph. This Argument was laughed at; but some, who were by, were willing to give themselves the Trouble of examining it in cold Blood, and these alleged, That Injustice, in itself, is fitter to prejudice a Cause than to forward it, and that it is only by accident that Justice is an Obstacle to good Success on several Occasions. It happens very often that they who are concerned for a good Cause, are less active than their Adversaries. They flatter themselves, like Brutus, that Heaven will declare for them; they imagine, that Right needs less Support than Injustice; hereupon they slacken their Vigilance, and sometimes they are such honest People, that they would not make use of ill means to support the good Cause. But they, who are engaged in bad Causes, scruple not to add Iniquity to Iniquity; and if they doubt the Success, they have recourse, with an extreme Activity, to all imaginable Expedients; they forget nothing that may either forward their own Work, or retard the Progress of the Enemy (12). It may also be supposed in the Hypothesis of good and bad Angels, that, from the same Principles, the latter are much more active. However it be, there is no arguing from the Justice, or the Injustice of a Cause, to it's good or ill Success; and except in Cases where God works by Miracle, which happen but seldom, the Fate of a Business depends on the Circumstances, and the Concurrence of the means that are used; whereby it sometimes happens that Injustice miscarries, and that one may say, tandem bona causa triumphat, — The good Cause triumphs at last.

VOL. II.

[E] He fulfilled, by the Murder of his Benefactor, a Combination of the greatest Qualities that a Man can possess. The most extravagant Flatterers of the Descendants of Cæsar found only that one Exception to Brutus. 'Hunc exitum M. Bruti partium septimum & trigessimum annum agentis fortuna esse voluit: corrupto animo ejus in diem quæ illi omnes virtutes unius temeritate facti abstulit (13). — (13) Patereulus, lib. ii, cap. lxxii. Fortune had decreed this for the last Scene of the Life of M. Brutus, who was in his Thirty seventh Year: his Mind being disordered from the Day, when he tarnished all his Virtues by one rash Action.' I confess, he, whom he killed, deserved Death; an hundred thousand Lives, if he had had them, would not have sufficed for the Expiation of his Crime; but it was not the Business of three or four private Persons to undertake to punish him. Let us then apply the Maxim Passio justa actio injustissima. — The Punishment is just, the Action most unjust. Besides, the Attempt was against the Interest of the Country; the Event shewed it, and it was not hard to foresee it. See Seneca, who proves solidly that, as things then stood, they were not to hope for a Return of the Republican Government. The Manners of the Romans were altered; the Prize of Ambition was too great; the Post, from whence they would make the Conqueror of Great Pompey fall, was so coveted, that it was easy to foresee that, as they thrust one Person out of it, several others would present to fill it up. 'Cum vir magnus fuerit (M. Brutus) in aliis, in hac re videtur vehementer errasse; ibi speravit libertatem futuram, ubi tam magnum præmium erat & imperium di, & serviendi; aut exilium civitatem in priorem formam posse revocari, amissis pristinis moribus; futuramque ibi æqualitatem civilis juris, & statutas suo loco leges, ubi viderat tot millia hominum pugnantia, non an servirent; sed utrum. Quanta vero illum aut rerum naturæ, aut urbis suæ tenuit oblivio, qui uno interempto, defuturum credidit alium, qui idem vellet, cum Tarquinius esset inventus post tot reges ferro ac fulminibus occisos (14)? — (14) Seneca de Benef. lib. ii, cap. xx. Marcus Brutus, though a great Man in other Respects, seems to have been very much mistaken in this Affair; in that he hoped that Liberty could be there where there was so great a Prize, both for commanding and obeying; and judged that the City might be reduced to it's former State, when their ancient Manners were lost. That there could be an Equality of civil Right, or the Laws maintain their Ground, where he saw so many Thousands of Men contending, not whether they should be Slaves, but to whom. How intirely had he forgotten either the Nature of Things, or his own City, who believed that when one was killed there would be never another to attempt the same thing, when Tarquin arose after so many Kings had been killed with the Sword and Thunder?' [F] That Action was - - - unreasonably committed. You will find the Proof of this in Dio Cassius. That Historian observes two things. I. That a wicked Fury seized some who envied Julius Cæsar, and hurried them on to kill him unjustly. II. That though they alleged the fair Pretence of re-establishing Liberty, yet their Action was really impious, and threw back the State into Seditions, when it began to taste the Advantages of a good Administration. He afterwards declares, that Monarchy is to be preferred before Democratical Government, and that both Greek and Roman History shew, that Cities and private Persons have enjoyed greater Blessings, and felt less Adversity under the Authority of a single Person, than under a popular Government; that if there have been States which have flourished under such a Government, it lasted no longer than till they had attained a certain Point of Greatness and

T t

Power,

(c) Gravitatem
Bruti. Quintil.
lib. xii, cap. x,
pag. 580.

(d) See Cicero in Bruto, in Philippici & alibi.

loved Books, and had wrote some [G]: He was a good Orator; and as he had for his own part always made choice of a concise and grave Stile (c), no wonder if he thought Cicero's Eloquence wanted Nerves [H]. He had an excellent Panegyrist in the Person of that Orator, by whom he had been infinitely esteemed from his Youth (d). He was older than Paterculus supposes [I]. No one ought to affirm that he was descended from that Brutus who expelled Tarquin [K], or that he had been Power, beyond which nothing but Discord had been seen, the Fruits of Envy and Ambition; and therefore since the City of Rome saw itself at that time Mistress of a great many Nations, and glutted with Riches and Glory, it was impossible but the Inhabitants should give a loose to their Passions in the midst of the Republican Liberty; and yet more impossible, that, while none of them restrained their Desires, they should agree among themselves. 'Αδύνατον μὲν ἐν δημοκρασίᾳ σωφροσύνας, ἀδυνατώτατον δὲ μὴ σωφροσύνας ὁμονοῦναι. In populari republica statu impossibile erat cives animis suis moderari; atqui continentia sublata ut concordēs permanerent, id adhuc minus fieri poterat (15). That if Brutus and Cassius had well considered these things, they would never have killed the Head of the Republic, nor thereby plunged themselves and the whole Roman Empire into endless Calamities (16). Note, that Xiphilin has disapproved Dio Cassius in this (17); but I do not believe any Person can reasonably deny, that at that Point of Greatness to which the Romans had attained, which had accustomed them to Luxury and Ambition, they could have enjoyed any Tranquillity, either in the Provinces or Capital City, under a Democratical Government. Rome had already been a pretty long time a Republic only in Name. The Alteration of Government will always be inevitable in popular States which amuse themselves with Conquests. If they intend to preserve their Liberty, they must avoid all offensive Wars as the Plague, and be satisfied with a small Extent of Land; they must aggrandize and fortify themselves intensively, and not extensively, if I may be permitted to make use of the School Distinction.

I have said in the Body of this Article, that several Romans disapproved Brutus's Action. I am to produce a Witness. 'Die funeris (Augusti) milites velut praesidio steterē, multum inidentibus qui ipsi viderant, quique a parentibus acceperant diem illum crudi adhuc servitii, & libertatis impio, prospere repetitae, cum occisus Dictator Caesar aliis pessimum aliis pulcherrimum facinus videre-tur (18). — On the Day of Augustus's Funeral the Soldiers stood upon Guard, which was very ridiculous in the Eyes of those that had seen or heard from their Fathers of that Day, when Slavery was yet new, and the Renewal of Liberty unsuccessfully attempted, when the killing of the Dictator Caesar seemed to some a very wicked, and to others a very laudable Action.' Consult Forsterius on this Passage of Tacitus, and Boetius on the Fifty sixth Chapter of the second Book of Paterculus.

[G] He loved Books, and he had wrote some. Plutarch relates, that, in the greatest Heat of the Civil Wars, Brutus employed some part of the Night in Study (19). He abridged the Roman History of Fannius (20), and that of Antipater (21). He wrote a Book de Officiis, cited by Charisius and by Priscian. Doubtless it is that which Seneca calls περὶ καθήκοντος (22). Cicero (23) and Seneca (24) speak of that de Virtute: Diomedes makes mention of that de Patientia. There are still extant some of Brutus's Letters, either in Greek that were printed apart, or in Latin among those of Cicero. He had made an Elogy on Cato, and Caesar found that Piece not very well written. Bruti Catone lecto se sibi visum disertum (25). — When he had read Brutus's Cato he imagined himself learned. The Oration he made in the Capitol upon the Murder of Caesar, pleased Cicero very well, though they had not the same Taste in Oratory. See the first Letter of the fifteenth Book to Atticus. I cannot tell whether he finished the Abridgment of the History of Polybius, on which he was at work in Pompey's Camp, the very Night that preceeded the Battle of Pharsalia (26).

[H] He thought Cicero's Eloquence wanted Nerves. The Author of the Dialogue de causis corruptae eloquentiae informs us of this: 'Ciceronem, says he, male audivisse à Bruto, ut ipsius verbis utar, tanquam fractum atque elumbem. — Cicero was blamed by Brutus, to use his own Words, as feeble and weak. Cicero was even with him: he thought Brutus's Stile negligent and loose: Ciceroni visum Brutum otiosam atque divanum (27). Brutus's Stile has another Defect, which is that it was full of Verses; Versus bi fere excidant, quos Brutus ipso componendi datus studio sepiissime facit (28). Cicero confesses, that Brutus found fault freely enough with his Taste, in point of Eloquence. See the twentieth Letter of the fourteenth Book to Atticus.

[I] He was older than Paterculus supposes. He was born ten Years after Hortensius began to plead (29), which was under the Consulship of Lucius Crassus, and Quintus Scævola (30). That Consulship falls in with the Year of Rome 658 (31). Brutus then must have been born in the Year 668. So that having died in the Year 711, he lived Forty three Years. Paterculus must therefore be in the wrong, to give him but Thirty seven Years of Age (32).

[K] It should not be affirmed that he was descended from that Brutus who expelled Tarquin. Dionysius Halicarnassensis maintains, that our Marcus Brutus was not descended from him (33). He says it is the Opinion of the Historians who had examined this Matter with the greatest exactness (34), whereof they bring divers proofs, and among others this following. The Junius's and the Brutus's of later times were of a Plebeian Family, as appears by the Tribuneships of the People which they had held. Now it is certain that the Junius's of Tarquin's Time were of a Patrician Family. The Historian, I have cited, thinks this a very strong Reason Τεκμήριον συσπντίκετον. Signum cui facile contradicere non possit. Dio plainly declares, that the first Brutus caused the two only Children he had to be put to Death, who were yet but Youths (35). This, without doubt, is of greater weight than Plutarch's Authority, who says, that Brutus had several Children. Ἀδελφὸν γὰρ αὐτῶν ὁ Βρῦτος εἶχε καὶ παῖδας ἐξ αὐτοῦς ἀκείνοιας. Sororem eorum (Vitelliorum) habebat Brutus in matrimonio, & ex ea numerosam prolem (36). — Brutus had married their Sister (the Vitellii) and had by her a numerous Offspring. Cicero having spoken in his Philippics as an Orator, and not as an Historian, is not very fit to weaken the Testimony of Dionysius Halicarnassensis and of Dio: However, he is a good Authority to shew that the Brutus's of his Time pretended they were issued from him, who delivered Rome from the Tyranny of Tarquin; and Dio does not deny but they made use of the Conformity of Names, at Rome, to incite Brutus to conspire against Caesar, as the ancient Brutus, of whom he was descended, say they, had conspired against Tarquin the Proud (37). Some may be pleased to find Cicero's Words here. 'Fuerit ille L.

Brutus qui & ipse regio dominatu Rempublicam liberavit, & ad similem virtutem & simile factum stirpem jam prope in quingentesimum annum propagavit (38). Si auctores ad liberandam patriam desiderarentur illis auctoribus, Brutos ego impellerem, quorum uterque L. Bruti imaginem quotidie videret, alter etiam Ahala. Hi igitur his majoribus ab alienis potius consilium peterent quam à suis, & foris potius quam domi (39). — Lucius Brutus, who both freed the Common-wealth from Kingly Government, and left Posterity, of like Virtue, to perform a like Action, almost five hundred Years after. If we wanted Leaders to deliver our Country, when these Men have lead the Way, I would stir up the Brutus's, who both every Day see the Image of Lucius Brutus, and one of them that of Ahala too. Shall these Men therefore, descended from such Ancestors, ask counsel Abroad, rather than at Home? No great stress is to be laid on these Words, because an Orator

(27) Dial. de
Causis corr. eloq.

(28) Quintil. lib.
ix, cap. iv. pag.
443.

(29) Cicero in
Bruto, pag. 447.
(30) Id. ibid. pag.
343.

(31) Sigonius in falsis.

(32) Patercul.
lib. ii, cap. lxxii.

(33) Dionys. Ha-
lic. lib. v.

(34) Ὁς οἱ τῶν
Ρωμαίων ἐπιστάται ἐκταύτες γράψαν-
τι, οἱ ἑκατέρω Ρωμαῖοι ἐν-vestigant, scrip-
to tradiderunt.

(35) Dio, lib.
xliv.

(36) Plut. in Va-
lerio, pag. 98. D.

(37) Dio, ubi supra.

(38) Cicero,
Philipp. i.

(39) Id. Philipp.

(15) Dio Cassius,
lib. xlv, p. 273.

(16) Taken from Dio Cassius, lib.
xlv, init.

(17) Xiphil. E-
pist. Dio, lib. xlv,
init. pag. 25.

(18) Tacit. An-
nal. lib. i, c. viii.

(19) Plut. in
Bruto, pag. 100.
E.

(20) Cicero, ad
Attic. lib. xii,
Epist. v.

(21) Id. ibid. lib.
xiii, Ep. viii.

(22) Seneca, E-pist. xclv.

(23) Cicero Tuf-
cul. i, & de fin.

(24) Seneca Con-
sol. ad Helviam,
cap. ix.

(25) Apud Cicero.
Epist. xlv, ad
Attic. lib. xii.

(26) Plut. in Bruto, p. 98, E.

been adopted by Julius Cæsar [L]. Yet Moreri says it positively. I say nothing of his Faults of Omission.

I cannot pass over in Silence the Proof, that our Brutus gave of his Love of Justice in the beginning of the War between Cæsar and Pompey. He was the Son of a Man whom Pompey had ordered to be put to death, so that he had the greatest Reason in the World to hate Pompey: he had not dissembled his hatred; he never vouchsafed to salute or speak to him; this caused a Belief that he would take Julius Cæsar's part; nevertheless he embarked in Pompey's Cause, which he took to be the best, and justest [M], and most for the Interest of his Country, which he judged ought to be preferred before any personal Considerations (e). I shall not mention the Tenderneſs Cæsar expressed for him before the Battle of Pharsalia, by the Orders he gave his Commanders to give him good Quarter, or even to let him escape if they could not prevail with him to yield (f): Nor will I mention the kind Reception he gave him after the Battle: but I shall say a Word or two of the private Conversation he had with him concerning the Rout that Pompey might have taken. Brutus spoke his Opinion after such a manner, as made Cæsar judge that Pompey had bent his Course towards Egypt (g), and in that he was right. Some pretend that Brutus was much to blame in giving such a hint to the Conqueror [N].

is not so much concerned whether such Facts be true or no; he is satisfied if only a part of the People believe them (40). But here is an Historian, who appears of Cicero's Side, and alleges Proofs. Plutarch affirms, that Marcus Brutus was descended from him who expelled Tarquin, and that none but Julius Cæsar's Friends, in hatred to the Murderer, maintained, that the first Brutus left no Posterity, and that the other Brutus's were descended from the Steward of the first (41). He adds, that the Philosopher Pofidonius affirmed in one of his Books, that Lælius Brutus had three Sons, the last of whom was the Stock of the Family of the other Brutus, and that there were illustrious Men of that Family in his own time, whose countenance resembled the Statue of Lucius Brutus. Add to this, that the reason, which seems so strong to Dionysius Halicarnassensis, is not unanswerable, seeing there are examples of Patrician Families which became Plebeians (42). A learned Man sets forth, that, according to Plutarch, the Enemies which Brutus had made himself, by the Murder of Julius Cæsar, maintained, that this had happened to the Family Junia. 'Sed & fieri potuisse ut Junia gens 'a patriciis ad plebem transiverit, & scribit Plutarchus id ab iis qui ob Cæsaris necem Brutus erant 'infernū fuisse jactatum (43). Had Plutarch said this, he must have clashed directly with common Sense. What is to be done in this Conflict of Arguments and Witnesses? Quite the contrary to what Mr Moreri has done; that is, we must remain neuter; but if one would be decisive, he ought to prefer the Authority of Dionysius Halicarnassensis, and Dio, to that of Cicero and Plutarch.

[L] Or that he was adopted by Julius Cæsar. I do not think any credible Author ever said this. It should have been said, that Cæsar called him his Son (44), and that he even believed himself to be his Father, because of his Gallantries with Servilia the Mother of Brutus. See that Lady's Article, Remark [B].

[M] He engaged in Pompey's Party because he took it to be the best, and the justest. He was not one of those who hate the Tyrant, but not the Tyranny; or of those that love not Liberty, but the Person of him who declares for it. He hated Pompey, and yet he sided with him: he had all the reason in the World to love Cæsar, and yet he conspired against him; it was because he believed that Pompey maintained the Cause of the Country, and that Cæsar was become a Tyrant. That Integrity of Heart in him was never contested; People judged otherwise of his Colleague Cassius; and most were persuaded that he laboured more for his private Interest, than for the Advantage of Rome. Παντός μάλλον ἀνὴρ πολεμῆν, καὶ κινδυνεύειν, ἀντὶ τινος δυνάσεως καλᾶσκουαζόμενον, ἐν ἐλευθερίᾳ τοῖς πολίταις. Omnino arbitrabantur (Cassium) bellum gerere & circumscutire, & discrimina subire potius ad quærendam sibi potentiam, quam civibus libertatem (45). — They were intirely of Opinion, that Cassius waged War, and encountered Dangers, rather to seek Power for himself, than Liberty for the City. This may be confirmed by another Place of Plutarch. Ἀλλὰ Κάσσιος, ἀνὴρ θυμωδὴς, καὶ μάλλον ἰδίᾳ μισοκαίσαρος ἢ κοινῇ μισοτύραννός. ἐξέκαυσεν καὶ κατήπεισεν, λέγειν αὐτὸν μὲν τὴν ἀρχὴν βαρύνεσθαι, Κάσσιος δὲ τὸν ἀρχοῦν μισεῖν. Verum ferocis vir animi Cassius, magisque privatim Cæsari, quam publice tyranno infestus, incendit & stimulat Brutum. Dicitur Brutus regnum non tulisse, Cassius odisse regem (46). — But Cassius, a Man of a furious Spirit, and rather a private Enemy to Cæsar, than a public one to the Tyrant, provoked and excited Brutus. Brutus, it is said, could not bear a Monarchy, Cassius hated the Monarch. It was thought that Pompey would not have made a good use of a Victory in case he had obtained it, but that he would have maintained himself in an absolute Power under the Title of perpetual Dictator or Consul, or some other less invidious Name; Cinna, Marius, and Carbo, took up Arms only to become Tyrants: the Conquest of their Country was the Prize they proposed to themselves (47); but People had quite another thought of our Brutus; his very Enemies acquitted him in this Point. Several had heard Marc Antony say, that he was the only Man among the Conspirators, who was carried away by the seeming Beauty of that Action. Plutarch's Words have much force. Βρῦτος δὲ λέγουσιν μὴδὲ τῆς ἐχθρῆς περὶ σὺνδάλαν τοιαύτην μετὰβῆναι, ἀλλὰ Ἀντωνίου γε καὶ πολλὰς ἀκούσαι λέγοντος, ὅς μόνον ἑαυτοῦ Βρῦτον ἐπιδέσθαι Κάισαρι, περὶ τὴν αὐτῆς τῆς λαμπρότητος καὶ τῷ φαινομένῳ καλῶ τῆς πράξεως, τὸς δὲ ἄλλους ἐπὶ τὸν ἀνδρα συστῆναι, μισούντας καὶ φθονούντας. At Brutus perhibent ne hostes quidem eam objectasse varietatem: imò ex Antonio etiam multos audivisse, quum diceret solum se putare Brutum adortum Cæsarem facti splendore & opinato bono adductum, alios in illum conspirasse odio proventos & invidia (48). — But they say, that even Brutus's Enemies never charged him with such Diffimulation; nay, that several People had heard Antony say, that he believed, that Brutus was the only Person, who was induced to attack Cæsar from the Glory, and supposed Good, of the Action; that the rest had conspired against him out of Hatred and Envy. This probably was the thing which obliged Marc Antony to do so much honour to the dead Body of Brutus (49), and Othavius to leave the Statue of that illustrious Conspirator intire at Milan (50). [N] He conversed with Cæsar concerning the Rout which Pompey had taken — he is blamed for giving such a Hint to the Conqueror. I cannot approve the Apology which Don Francisco de Quevedo endeavours to make for that Action. He pretends, that, as things then stood, Brutus was permitted to revenge his Father's Death, by discovering to Cæsar the Road by which he was to pursue the conquered. If there were no better Thoughts than this, in that Spaniard's Book (51), it never would have been so much esteemed as it justly is. I should rather alledge in Brutus's Justification, I. That he was not entrusted with Pompey's Secret concerning the Choice of a Place of Retreat. II. That he did not see how, by communicating his Conjectures to Cæsar, he could make the unhappy Fate of the Fugitive worse; for perhaps he imagined, that

(51) It is a Commentary on a part of the Life of Brutus, by Plutarch. It has been translated out of Spanish into Latin, by Grafwinckle. That Latin Translation was printed at the Hague, Anno. 1663, in 4to, but does not come up to the Original.

(e) Plot. in Bruto, pag. 985. See him also in Pompeio, p. 653.

(f) Id. in Bruto, ibid.

(g) Id. ibid. pag. 986.

(40) See what will be said in the Article CASSIUS, a Family, Remark [B].

(41) Plut. in vita Brutii, init. pag. 984.

(42) Suetonius, in the second Chapter of the Life of Augustus, gives the Othavian Family as an Example.

(43) Abram. in Cicero, Philippicam I, pag. 438.

(44) Thus he called him, when he saw him among the Conspirators. Sueton. in Julio, cap. lxxiii.

(45) Plot. in Bruto, p. 997. D.

(46) Id. ibid. pag. 987.

(47) Id. ibid. pag. 997. D.

(48) Id. ibid. D.

(49) Id. ibid. pag. 1009. C.

(50) Id. ibid. pag. 1011. D.

Egypt would be thought so good a Retreat, that they would not think fit to attack the Great Pompey there. However it be, we may here admire the Sagacity of his Judgment: he guessed very right what Way the conquered Chief had chosen. He was no worse a Prophet in another Conjunction, which was, when he condemned Marc Antony's

Imprudence, who, having had it in his Power to be named among the Brutus's, the Cassius's, and the Cato's, had joined himself as a Second to Octavius. If they [Marc Antony and Octavius] are not beaten together, said he, they will soon be seen in Arms against each other (52).

(c2) Plot. in
Bruto, pag. 997.

BRUTUS (JOHN MICHAEL), a learned Man in the XVIth Century, was a Native of Venice; and there happened something, I know not what, which obliged him to leave it [A], and might make him be looked on as an Exile. He studied at Padua, and applied himself chiefly to hear the Discourses and Lectures of Lazarus Bonamicus (a). He travelled much [B]; but that ambulatory Life did not hinder his becoming a learned Man and an Author. He wrote politely; though he condemned the Scruples of the Ciceronian Sect (b), and he may pass for a very good Humanist. His Notes on Horace, Cæsar, Cicero, &c. are very good Proofs of it. We shall see what he answered to those who accused him of Plagiarism [C]. He was

(a) John. Mich.
Brutus, Epistol.
pag. 596, Edit.
1698.

(b) Ibid. p. 588.

[A] He was a native of Venice, and there happened something, I know not what, which obliged him to leave it. The Words that I am going to copy, which are taken from the One thousand and sixty seventh Page of the new Edition of his Letters, testify that he did not leave his Country willingly, and that, nevertheless, he left it without any blemish to his Honour. 'Nam quod illa (patria) hoc tempore careo, neque ulli illius culpa hoc, neque dedecore ullo meo accidit, sed fortunæ injuria. Ejus enim mihi iniquitate ereptus est inter meos locus quem Majores per CCC annos retinuerunt honestissimum. — For that I am now deprived of it (my Country) is owing neither to any Fault of my Country, nor any Disgrace of mine, but to the Iniquity of Fortune. For by her Frowns I was robbed of that Place amongst my Countrymen, which my Ancestors had held with the greatest Honour for Three hundred Years.' This, you will say, does not prove that he was of Venice; but you will not doubt it if you consult the Sequel of that Passage: 'Quo quidem, continues he, speaking to a Venetian, who exhorted him to write the History of the Republic of Venice, cum adsum, non possum æquo animo carere, fore ut aliquando eundem cum pristina fortuna recuperem, tua gratia fretus non despero. Sed ne hæc nos cura magnopere angat, quot patria nostra habet (1), qui has illi partes possunt egregie præstare? Neque enim est Petrus Bembus jam, & Andreas Navagerius mortuus, summi homines, & quorum est apud posteros merito futurum semper illustre nomen, simul etiam cum iis est lumen eloquentiæ in civitate extinctum. — Without which, If I return, I cannot live to my Satisfaction; but relying on your Favour I do not despair, but that I shall one Day recover it together with my former Fortune. But least this Thought disturb us too much; how many are there in our Country who could perform this excellently? For though we have lost Peter Bembus and Andreas Navagerius, both very great Men, whose Names will be deservedly famous to all Posterity, yet is not the Spirit of Eloquence extinguished in the City.'

(1) He says, at pag. 1071, At ne cui tamen videri esse oblitus hanc mihi patriam esse.

(2) See p. 1109, of his Letters, Edit. of Berlin, 1698.

(3) Ibid. pag. 1065.

[B] He travelled much. He passed part of his Life in Spain, England (2), France, Germany, Transylvania, and in Poland. He says, he had suffered several Hardships in his Travels in Spain (3), but that he had seen most of the other Courts of Europe quietly, and thereby had acquired Experience enough to write the History of it. 'Magna quædam res est historiam scribere: qua quidem ego in re ita sum per multos annos versatus, ut me longa jam exercitatio doceat, quam prudenter ea sit & cunctanter attingenda. Quam autem ego re confusus & scribere jam instituerim, & nunc quidem — scribendi studio insitum, dicerem, si id mihi per meam modestiam liceret: certe ut non me destituat spes eo perveniendi, quo contendendo, non ingenio confido magis, cujus haud me penitet tamen, quam diligentia & studio, usu quidem rerum tanto, quantum esse in eo homine æquum est, qui magnam Europæ partem, aulas fere Regum omnium maximorum, per summum otium lustravit. Itaque si quæ mihi incommoda (id quod necesse fuit) tot terras obeunti obtige-runt, fit quidem fructu, quem ex his capio, maximo quidem ac uberrimo, eorum etiam ut mihi fit jucunda recordatio (4). — It is a great Work to write a History: in which I have been so conversant for several Years, that long Practice has taught me how cautiously and deliberately it is to be undertaken. What emboldened me first to undertake to write, and now to continue writing, I would say if my Modesty would give me leave: it is certain I am not without Hopes of attaining what I aim at, not so much out of an Opinion of my Genius (tho' with that I am not dissatisfied) as Diligence and Care, and such a knowledge of Affairs, as might be expected of a Man who has seen great part of Europe, and the most considerable Courts in it, at full Leisure. Wherefore, if I have met with any Inconveniences (as of course I must) in travelling through so many Countries, the great and valuable Advantages I reap from them make the Remembrance of them pleasant. He is right in maintaining, that the Knowledge which is acquired by travelling is very useful to those who compose a History. They ought all to deserve, that what was said of Ulysses might be applied to them:

(4) Jo. Mich.
Brutus Epistol.
pag. 1064. See also pag. 432.

Qui mores hominum multorum vidit & urbes (5). (5) Horat. de Arte Poët. ver. 142.

[C] We have his Notes on Horace, Cæsar, Cicero. — We shall see what he answered to those who accused him of Plagiarism. His Observations on the four Books of the Odes of Horace, and on the Epodes, were printed at Venice, by Paulus Manutius, with those of Lambinus, in the Year 1566, in 4to. His Scholia on Julius Cæsar were printed by the same Manutius in the Year 1564, in 8vo. They are inserted in the Edition of Jungerman at Frankfurt, in the Year 1606, as the Journalists of Utrecht (6) observe, who observe also that he caused the Works of Cicero, with Notes, to be printed in duodecimo, by Anthony Gryphius, in the Year 1571. They tell us, what I have to say on the other Point of my Text. He had been accused of having made use of Lambinus's Observations on Cicero; he wrote to Lambinus, That he might go to the Fountain-head as well as he, and when he made use of another Writer's Thoughts, he cited him punctually; whereby he secured himself from all Reproach of Plagiarism; for this was borrowing and not stealing: 'Falsam hanc opinionem Lambinus eripere conatur, his inter alia verbis utens: Quisquis is est, qui me in his, quæ scripta edidi, surripuisse ab ullo affirmet, quæ transferrem in mea; is neque plane me novit, & facit ipse ut se prodatur, tacente etiam me: Ut enim qui aqua indigent, ubi facultas sit, de fonte sumere, quam de rivo, malunt; egentes, divitum adire, quam infirmorum, domus: Ita, mi Lambine, ut bene sis à literis & ab ingenio paratus, cum mihi iidem fontes pateant, de quibus tu haussisti, (nondum enim exaruerunt) æque pateant eorum penetralia, &c. stulte faciam, si de tuo surripiam, non minus quam tu, si inducas animum surripere de meo (7). Postea addit, se sumpsisse quidem ab aliis, non vero surripuisse. Sumere enim eum, qui, à quo mutuatur, indicet; & laudet, quem auctorem habet: Surripere vero qui taceat, qui ex alterius industria

(6) In July and August, 1698, pag. 566.

(7) Brutus, pag. 599, Epistol. Edit. 1698, cited ibid.

was not content with only writing Books, but he took pains also to search for Manuscripts, and publish them [D]. He passed some Years at Lyons, from whence he went in all likelihood to Basil. He there received great Civilities from the learned Theodore Zuinger, Author of the Theatrum vitæ humanæ (c). He was in Transylvania from the beginning of the Year 1574 (d). He was invited thither by Prince Stephen Battori, in order to compose a History of that Country (e) [E], and values himself mightily on the Reception he met with there (f). One of his Letters, dated from Crasow, the Twenty third of November, 1577, informs us, that he had followed that Prince, then King of Poland, to the Expedition of Prussia (g). He had a convenient Apartment assigned him in the Castle of Cracow (h), that he might apply himself more conveniently to his Function of Historiographer [F]. He left Poland after the Death of that Monarch (i), and lived with William of St Clement, Embassador from the King of Spain to the Imperial Court. He was honoured with the Title of his Imperial Majesty's Historiographer (k). He was at Prague on the first of January, 1590, which is the Date of that Book which he dedicated to the Spanish Embassador whom I have mentioned (l). He must have been at that time Seventy three Years of Age, since, in a Letter, dated the nineteenth of August, 1582, he takes notice that he had attained to his Sixty fifth Year (m). He makes mention of his Daughter's Marriage, in a Letter dated from Clausenburgh, the Twenty third of January, 1574 (n). He had a great share in the Friendship of Dudithius, and Crato. The latter had persuaded the Emperor Maximilian to retain him in his Service (o). I cannot tell what became of John Michael Brutus, after the Year 1590, nor where, or when, he died. His Writings, which were become very scarce, were so earnestly fought after by the best Judges, that there was great Joy in the Republic of Letters, on hearing that Mr Cramer (p) had undertaken

(c) Id. ibid. pag. 291, item. p. 69.

(f) Id. ibid. pag. 511. See also pag. 293.

(g) Id. ibid. pag. 330.

(h) Ibid. pag. 328, 329.

(i) Ibid. pag. 898.

(k) Ibid. pag. 901.

(l) Ibid. pag. 900.

(m) Ibid. pag. 335.

(n) Ibid. pag. 510.

(o) Ibid. pag. 283.

(p) I speak of him towards the end of the Remark [C], of the Article GRETHERUS. He had been Preceptor to the Prince Electoral of Brandenburg.

to

(c) Id. ibid. pag. 59.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 515.

(8) Journal of Utrecht, July and August, 1698, pag. 565, 566.

(9) Brutus Epit. pag. 220.

industria fructum querat; quod quidem à se omnino alienum esse dicit (8). ----- He endeavours to convince Lambinus of his Mistake, using these Words among others: Whoever he be that affirms, that, in any Writing which I have published, I have stolen any thing from any Author's Work to insert in my own; he is, in short, both unacquainted with me, and betrays himself, though I were silent: For as they, who want Water, would rather, when they have Opportunity, take it from the Fountain than from the Stream; and the Poor go rather to the Houses of the Rich than of the meaner for; so, my Lambinus, thou art you are well furnished with Learnings, and a good Genius, as the same Fountains from whence you drew are open to me (for they are not yet dry), and their inmost Recesses are as open, &c. I should act as foolishly in stealing any thing of your's, as you would if you should take it in your Head to steal from me. He afterwards adds, that he has borrowed from others, but not stolen: for that he is a Borrower, who tells from whom he borrows, and gives the Author the Honour: But he steals, who says nothing, who seeks to reap the Benefit of another's Industry; which he says he utterly abhors. These Gentlemen cannot tell us, whether his Book de Infaturatione Italiae was ever published: Neither do I know any thing of it. He mentions it in the Six hundred and twentieth, One thousand and seventh, One thousand and Seventy first, Pages of his Epistles, and cites Fragments of it. By the way, what he composed on Caesar did not consist wholly in Scholia and in Varie Lectiones. He gives a more advantageous Idea of it in the Passage I am going to transcribe: 'Habeo in manibus Caesaris Commentarios, multis à me animadversionibus emendatos, quibus justum volumen accedet, in quo, certo ordine, politissimi scriptoris voces phrasisque omnes, tum, quod permagni faciendum est, rerum omnium descriptiones, in locos communes redactæ habentur; ut si cui sit scribenda historia & lauta supellex, & luculenta ex tanti scriptoris monumentis, ad ea ornanda atque illustranda quæ velit, suppedientur. Eum librum Basilæ excusum animus est inscribere Transylvaniæ principi (9). ----- I have in hand Caesar's Commentaries which I have improved with a great many Animadversions; to which will be added an entire Volume, in which all the Words and Phrases of that most polite Writer, and, what is most valuable, all his Descriptions of things reduced to common places in proper Order. So that any Writer of History may here be furnished, from the Monuments of so great a Writer, with a smooth, elegant, and beautiful Stock, to adorn and illustrate whatever he has a mind. This Book I think to print at Basil, and to dedicate it to the Prince of Transylvania.'

VOL. II.

[D] He took pains to search for Manuscripts and to print them.] He was the first that published the ten Books of Bartholomew Facius, de rebus ab Alphonsio I. rege Neapolitano gestis. He got them printed at Lyons, by Gryphius, in the Year 1560, in 4to. Two Years after he published, in the same place, Francisci Contarenti libros tres de rebus in Hetruria à Senensibus gestis; a Work that was reprinted at Venice in the Year 1623, in 4to. In the Year 1582, he published in Poland the three Books of Callimachus Experiens de rebus gestis Uladislai Ungarorum & Polonorum Regis (10). [E] He was in Transylvania ----- invited thither by Prince Stephen Battori, to write a History of that Country.] Simon Forgats, who had a Design to write a History of Hungary, desired to have John Michael Brutus with him, to be assisted in that Labour (11), and to that end proposed to him such honourable and advantageous Conditions, as he thought might draw him into Transylvania. Brutus was then at Venice, and did not seem very fond of that Journey (12); for nothing was concluded eight Years after (13); at last the Business was brought about; he sent word by a Letter, dated from Basil, the first of June 1572, that he would speedily set forward (14), and yet he took a Journey into France before he began the other. I find that he wrote a Letter to the Prince of Transylvania, dated from Lyons the first of June 1573 (15), and that he departed from Lyons, the seventeenth of October of the same Year (16). He arrived at Vienna in Austria the twenty fourth of November following (17).

[F] He applied himself ----- to his Function of Historiographer.] He was to begin where Bonfinius had ended, and to carry on the History of that Country to his own time (18). It appears by a Letter he wrote to the King of Poland, the first of December 1579, that he applied himself diligently to that Function, and that of the twelve Books, into which the Work was to be divided (19), four, which reached to the Year 1542, were finished. He owns that he makes use of Paulus Jovius's History; but that he rectifies it in several Places, where that Author is mistaken, or wanted ample and exact Instructions. He proposed, after he had finished these twelve Books, to write the History of Stephen Battori in particular (20). A Letter, which he wrote the fifteenth of January 1578, testifies the extream Passion he had to perform all the Duties of an Historian well; for he desired very earnestly that he might be permitted to consult the Records, and to send for the Library which he had left in Transylvania (21). He observes,

U u

(10) Idem. ibid. pag. 366.

(11) Ibid. p. 221.

(12) Ibid. p. 225.

(13) Ibid.

(14) Ibid. p. 216.

(15) Ibid. p. 86.

(16) Ibid. p. 222.

(17) Ibid.

(18) Ibid. p. 294.

(19) Ibid. p. 74.

(20) Ibid. p. 80.

(21) Ibid. p. 206.

(22) Ibid. p. 207.

to publish a new Edition of them. The first part of that design is already accomplished [G], and the rest is promised in a little time. It is said, that the History of Florence, composed by our Brutus, and printed at Lyons, in 1562, is not favourable to the House of Medicis (q), and that it displeased the Duke of Florence very much. Among the Letters of this Author, I have not found that which he had promised to add to them, wherein he designed to treat of an ill Custom introduced a long time ago, of giving the same lofty Titles to Persons whom we write to in Latin, as are given in the Vulgar Tongue [H]. Ancient Rome had no such Usage in the time of it's greatest Glory, and of it's most accomplished Politeness. Brutus would not conform to the new Stile, not even in writing to some Polish Lords [I]. Let us not forget that he endured much Vexation in Poland; he had

Enemies

- observes, that it was not large, but consisted of choice Books, and of the best Editions; ut numero non ita copiosa est, at libris optimis, atque ex elegantissimis editionibus est instructa (22). He had put the Charges of the Carriage of his Books in the Articles of Agreement, and he declared that he could not live without his Library. Præmissis, cum aliis impedimentis, bibliotheca, qua quidem carere, ut dixi, nisi ut vita simul mihi cendum sit, baud facile possum (23). He observes also that the Bookellers of Basil were enquiring already for his History of Hungary (24). He informs us in a Letter written from Cracow, the seventh of February 1580, that as to the Bulk, his Labours equalled the three first Books of Cæsar (25), and reached to the taking of Lippa: He adds, that he had made very good use of the Work of Ancianus Centorius (26), and that they who would examine after what manner he wrote, would not think it strange that his Book was so small. Multum inquis? imo tum videbitur multum, ubi leges non quantum scriperim solum, sed quid & quemadmodum id adeo scriperim (27). — Much do you say? you will think it a great deal when you read not only how much I wrote, but what, and how it is done.

[G] Mr Cramer undertook a new Edition of his Works, the first part of which Design is already accomplished. See the Book intitled, Job. Michaelis Bruti opera varia selecta, nimirum epistolarum libri V. de historię laudibus, sive de ratione legendi scriptores historicos liber: præceptorum conjugum liber, epistolis & orationibus compluribus editione Cracoviensi auctiora. It was printed at Berlin in the Year 1698, in 8vo, and contains Eleven hundred and Fifty five Pages. That second Edition is more ample the first, which is that of Cracow 1582; for two Letters are added to it, which Mr Grævius had obtained from the Library of Breslaw, and the Letters of our Brutus, which were inserted in the Collection Epistolarum Clarorum Virorum, which he had caused to be printed at Lyons, in the Year 1561.

[H] He designed to speak of an ill Custom — of giving the same lofty Titles in Latin, that are given in common Languages. This I found in a Letter which he wrote to Crato in the Year 1582. Credo te miraturum, cum mihi summi homines multi, in his sint maximi reges appellandi, parcum me esse his, titulis honestandis, cum nullo meo incommodo liceat in hoc genere officii effuso esse. De quibus titulis adeo mihi parum opportunis animus est epistolam scribere, quam aliis attexam (28). — I believe you will wonder, as I am to mention in this Work several Men of the first Rank, and great Kings, that I am so sparing in giving them Titles, of which I might, without any Inconvenience to myself, be profuse. Concerning these Titles, which are very disagreeable to me, I purpose to write a Letter, which I will join to the rest. He afterwards exclaims against the reigning Vanity among the meanest private Persons, of expecting, in the Addresses of Letters, and in public Acts, the Title of magnificent, clarissimi, atque amplissimi, and the necessity of having recourse to the Substantives, Majesty, Highness, &c. in speaking to Kings and Princes. He adds, That on pretence that the Title of Excellency was abused by having been bestowed on Physicians and Lawyers, the Lord of a small State had used so many Arguments and Intreaties with the Pope, that at last he had granted him the Title of Highness. See here his Words at length: Tanta autem hominum levitas in hac nescio qua gloriolæ titillatione, ut nullus sit hoc tempore in Europa regulus, quin

se Altum, Sublimem, Excelsum appellari velit: nullus tam tenuis census privatus, quin sibi clamet insignem fieri injuriam, nisi illi magnifici, clarissimi, atque amplissimi nomen in literarum inscriptionibus, publicis actis, regum diplomatis extet, quasi tituli viros pariant, non titulos viri. Quid? quod cum est nobis cum regibus & viris principibus loquendum, cogimur ab his recedentes per abstracta nomina, quibus vulgo utuntur in Philosophorum scholis, cum eorum majestatis loqui, altitudines affari, & quas vos Germani in vexillis celsitudines, nostris Sublimitates invidentes. Nihil verius est quam tenuis ditionis principem hoc tempore, cum Excellentia contempta, quasi obsolevisset inter medicos & legulejos, ac minorum gentium regulos, majora ambiret, diu egisse apud pontificem maximum, ut se altitudinis titulo honestaret; cum minus illo æquo uteretur, non prius orare, fatigare precibus, contendere desisisset, quam exoratum in sententiam traduxerit. Quod frustra contendisse N. civitas dicitur, cum Serenitatis titulum Venetorum principum, propter civitatis amplitudinem concessum, pontifex negaret se passurum vilescere per minores potestates evulgatum (29). — The Vanity of Men is so great in this unaccountable lib after a little Glory, that there is not at this time a petty King in Europe, but requires the Titles of High, Sublime, Mighty. No private Man, of ever so low Condition, but thinks he is highly affronted, if he has not the Titles of Magnificent, Famous, Great, in the Addresses of Letters, public Acts, and Kings Patents, as if Titles made Men, and not Men Titles. Why, when we are to speak to Kings or Princes, are we obliged to take no notice of them, but speak in abstract Terms, such as are commonly used in the Schools of Philosophers, to their Majesties, or address their Highnesses or Celsitudes, which you Germans have introduced to match the Italian Titles, Sublimities? It is certain that a Prince of a small State, not satisfied with Excellency, as if the Title were debased among Physicians, Lawyers, and petty Princes, lately desired a greater, and treated a long while with the Pope to obtain of him the Title of Highness; the Pope making some difficulty of it, he never ceased praying, soliciting, and pressing him, till he had obtained his Purpose. A certain State, as it is said, solicited the like in vain, the Pope alledging that he would not suffer the Title of Serenity, given to the Duke of Venice, on account of the largeness of that State, to be debased among smaller Powers. The last part of this Passage informs us, that the Pope was inexorable with regard to a small Republic which desired the Title of Serenity. Things are strangely altered for the worse, since the Death of John Michael Brutus. Such a Title, as would have satisfied the most excessive Vanity in the Year 1582, is at present an intolerable Burden, of which People endeavour to be delivered by the Acquisition of some more pompous and sublime Expression. I shall doubtless have a favourable Occasion of giving Collections on this Subject.

[I] Brutus would not conform to the new Stile, not even in writing to some Polish Lords. There are but few Countries in which they are more nice in this Point than in Poland, and yet our Brutus dispensed with all Ceremonies that might make him deviate from the Purity of the ancient Language of Rome. This was his only Motive: Pride had no part in his Conduct; he considered no other Interests than those of a good Latin Writer. Hæc meæ sunt literæ ad te primæ, (says he, in a Letter to John Ponetowski)

Enemies there, who did him several ill Offices, and blasted his Reputation (r): his Salary was so ill paid, that he was afraid he should be obliged to contract new Debts (s), and that Fear could not but be most uneasy to a Man like him, who had more than once felt the Rigour of Creditors. He had reduced himself for a long time to a small Expence, the better to maintain his Credit, without troubling any body [K], and by that Frugality had laid up something out of his first Year's Salary, which served to pay the most pressing Debts. He proposed to save as much out of his second Year's Salary, and still with the same good Design (t).

(r) Brutus, Epist. pag. 312, & alibi.

(s) Ibid. pag. 520.

(t) Ibid. pag. 502.

Ponetowski) quas ut soleo ad regem etiam, Romano more. Alia possum à me omnia impetrare, te colere, observare, ferre in oculis, id quod mea sponte, tuo merito maximo faciam: cum Latine quid ad te scribendum, patere me nulla tua cum offensione ex usu Latini sermonis scribere: non enim ad amplitudines nescio qua tuas, & magnificencias, cum nullæ sub orbe lunæ sint, sed ad te cum scribendum mihi esse intelligo (30). - - - This is my first Letter to thee, which I write in the Roman Manner, as I use to do even to the King. I can bring myself to every thing else, I can love you, obey you, and always regard you, which I shall do very willingly, as you highly deserve; when I have any thing to write to you in Latin, permit me, without any Offence, to write according to the use of the Latin Tongue; for when I write I do not understand that I am writing to your Greatnesses, your Magnificencias, which exist no where on this Side the Moon. I

(30) Brutus Epist. lib. iv, pag. 449, 450. See also pag. 555.

write to you. See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (31).

[K] He had reduced himself to a small Expence, the better to maintain himself without incommoding any Body. See how he expresses himself: 'Ut mihi liceret nullo cujusquam incommodo tueri meam fidem, hoc à me impetravi jam pridem, ut victu frugi uterer, mensa tenui, parvo lare, uno aut altero puero, LX annos nata muliercula quæ domestica ministeria obiret (32). This was declaring that he bid farewell to all good Cheer, that he was content with one Servant or two, and that he got a Woman of sixty Years of Age to keep his House. Doubtless he made choice of one of that Age to avoid all Suspensions, to which those expose themselves, who have neither the Prudence, nor it may be the Virtue requisite to make a good Choice of the Governesses of a Family. What would not his Enemies have said, if they had seen the House of an Italian Widower governed by a young Maid?

(31) For the Month of September, 1684, Art. 4, pag. 682, 683, Edit. 1686.

(32) Brutus, ibid. pag. 302.

BRUTUS (STEPHEN JUNIUS), a disguised Author of a Book of Politics, intituled, Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos. See LANGUET.

BUCER (MARTIN), a Protestant Divine, born at Schelestadt (a), in 1491, and who died at Cambridge, in 1551 (b). He was one of the ablest Ministers of that Century. He not only preached and composed Books and Lectures, but was also very fit to manage Business; and there were but few Ecclesiastical Negotiations in which he was not employed. He laboured with great Zeal, and with much Dexterity, to pacify the Differences between the Lutherans and the Zuinglians, but could not compass it. He wished that both Parties had been less rigid; and if all the Heads had been Persons of a reconciling Temper like him, that great Affair might have succeeded happily. He did not throw away his time, in England, in running down the Hierarchy; he did nothing less than follow Calvin's Opinion in this Point [A]. The Bishop of Meaux endeavours to make him pass for a Dissembler,

(a) Melch. Adam. in vit. Theolog. pag. 211. Correct then Prætorius in Elencho Hæretic. pag. 106; Father Gaultier, in Tabulis Chronol. pag. 756, and several others who make him a Native of Stralbourg.

(b) Melch. Adam. ibid. pag. 220.

[A] He did not throw away his Time, in England, in condemning the Hierarchy; he did nothing less than follow Calvin's Opinion in this Point. I have read in one of Volpius's Letters, that Calvin's Friends accused Bucer of introducing a new kind of Popery, which they called Bucerism, in opposition to Calvinism. This Bucerism consisted principally in his approving of Episcopacy. Traducebant Calvini amici Bucerum quasi novum Papiſmum erigeret. - - - Bucerum negat à se hoc nomine accusari Calvinus, sed optare tamen ut ne anſam præbeat calumniæ dum sic mediam - - - infilit viam. Quod cum ex cunctis ejus pateat scriptis, tum præcipuè à forma reformationis, præscripta Hermanno Archiepiscopo Colonienſi, & illis quæ Anglicanæ Reformationis ergo scripsit. Cum vero Bucer propius ad Romanam Ecclesiam accederet, quam Lutherus; Calvinus longius ab ea abiret, quam idem Lutherus; extra Lutheranismum, duæ ortæ Appellationes, Bucerismi, & Calvinismi: & fatebatur Calvinus, Bucerismum esse magis tolerabilem, quam Calvinismum, si non ad obruſam Scripturæ rem exigi oporteret. Nunc Bucerum paci nihilum dare, se omnia metiri veritate. Sed Calvini verba audiamus. Fruſtra mihi excuſas, novo Papiſmo erigendo - - - te non studere; sed vellem aliis omnibus sic exploratam esse puritatem tuam, ut ne ſuſpicionis locum relinqueres. Fruſtra etiam id te dare operam, ne quid Calvinismi admisceatur. Si à ſcripturâ ſemel deſeſtendum ſit, non ignoro, quam ſit tolerabilior Bucerismus, quam Calvinismus, &c. (1). - - - Calvin's Friends traduced Bucer, as if he was ſetting up a new Kind of Popery. - - - Calvin denies that he ever laid this to Bucer's Charge, but wiſhes that he do not give a handle for Calumny, while he thus ſolves the middle way, which is manifest from all his Writings, but especially from the Form of Reformation, prescribed to Herman, Archbishop of Cologne, and what he wrote for the Reformation of England. Now as Bucer came nearer the Church of Rome than Luther; Calvin departed further from it than the same Luther; so that there arose two Denominations besides Lutheranism, viz. Bucerism and Calvinism: and Calvin confessed that Bucerism was more tolerable than Calvinism, if the matter were not to be tried by the Scriptures, and that Bucer studied Peace too much: but he himself measured all things by Truth. But let us hear Calvin's Words. You have no occasion to make any excuse to me, that you are not erecting a new Popery; but I would have your Integrity so well known to all the World, that no room might be left for Suspicion. It is also needless for you to endeavour not to take in any thing of Calvinism: if we might vary from Scripture, I know very well how much more tolerable Bucerism is than Calvinism, &c. Here is another Passage in which Calvin exhorts Bucer to order matters so, that the Reformation of England may be well purged of all Remains of Popery. He lets him know that if he does not take pains, he will never be able to wipe out the ill Suspicions which several had conceived of his inclining to both sides. Dominum Protectorem, ut volebas, conatus sum hortari, ut flagitabat præſens rerum ſtatu: tuum quoque erit modis omnibus inſtare, ſi modo detur audientia (quod te facere ſum perſuaſus) præſertim vero, ut ritus, qui ſuſpitionis aliquid redolent, tollantur à medio. Hoc tibi nominatim commendo, ut te invidia liberet, qua te falſo gravari apud multos non ignoras: nam mediis conſiliis vel auctorem, vel approbatorem ſemper inſcribunt. Scio hanc quorundam animis

(1) Volpius, Epist. cccclvii, p. 403, col. 1.

(c) See his first Volume of his Histoire des Variations.

sembler, and alledges the Testimony of Calvin for it (c) [B]; but it is better to believe that for the sake of Unity, and out of an ardent and sincere Desire of Peace, Bucer invented Expressions that were likely to please both Parties. It is very probable that he always believed good Works meritorious [C]. There has been

(2) Calvinus, Epist. ad Bucrum. It is the 93d in my Edition, which is that of Hanaw, 1597, pag. 199.

'animis suspicionem altius infixam esse, quam ut eam revellere facile sit, etiam si nihil omitas. Et sunt qui te maligne nullo errore inducti calumniantur. Denique fatale quodammodo hoc tibi malum est, quod fugere vix possis. Cavendum tamen ne imperitis detur male suspicandi occasio, improbi vero obloquendi pretextum arripiant (2). - - - I shall endeavour according to your Desire to advise the Lord Protector, as the present State of Affairs require; it will be your Business to press him every way if you can but gain Audience (as I am persuaded you do), but chiefly that all Ceremonies may be abolished, which any way savour of Superstition. This particularly I recommend to you, that you free yourself from the Envy, which you know you labour under, without cause, among several Persons; for they always call you the Author, or Approver of indifferent Counsels. I know that this Suspicion is so deeply rooted in some People's Mind, that you will scarce be able to remove it, though you omit nothing: and some there are who stander you, not out of Mistake, but meer Malice. In short this Evil is as it were destined for you, and you will hardly be able to escape it, but you must take care not to give occasion to the Ignorant to think ill of you, or a handle to the Wicked to reproach you.' It does not appear that Bucer took any notice of these Admonitions. Yet Calvin testifies that he expected great things from him, if Death had not taken him away too soon. Dum mecum reputo, quantum in unius hominis morte iacturam fecerit Dei Ecclesia, fieri non potest quin novo subinde more excreuer. Angliæ multum profuisset. Plas aliquanto in posterum sperabam ex ejus scriptis, quam hæcenus præstitit (3). - - - When I consider with myself, what a Loss the Church of GOD has suffered, by the Death of this one Man, I cannot but every now and then renew my Grief; he would have done great Service to England. I hoped for something greater from his Writings hereafter, than he had hitherto performed.'

(3) Ibid. Epist. cxxiii, pag. 246.

(4) Histoire des variations, liv. iv, n. xxv, pag. 167. Edit. Holl.

[B] The Bishop of Meaux calls him Dissembler, and alledges the Testimony of Calvin.] These are Mr de Meaux's Words (4): 'Now whether Bucer had a formal Design to trifle with the World by affected Equivocations, or whether any confused Idea of Reality made him believe that he might sincerely subscribe to Expressions so evidently contrary to the figurative Sense, I leave to the Judgment of the Protestants. What is certain is, that Calvin, his Friend, and in some measure his Disciple, when he would express a blameable Obscurity, in a Profession of Faith, said that There was nothing so perplexed, so obscure, so ambiguous, so winding in Bucer himself.* There are Calvin's own Words: 'Tu Buceris obscuritatem vituperas & merito. At nihil est in Bucero adeo perplexum, obscurum, flexiloquum, atque, ut sic loquar, tortuosum (5). I do not rely on the disadvantageous Judgment that a Divine of Saxony made of Bucer, after the Conferences of Marpurg, in the Year 1529. In Zuingle, says he, agresse quoddam est & arrogantulum: in Oecolampadio mirabilis bonitas naturæ & clementia: in Hedione non minor humanitas ac liberalitas ingenii: in BUCERO calliditas vulpina, perverse imitata acumen & prudentiam (6). - - - There is in Zuingle something rustic and a little arrogant: in Oecolampadius a wonderful good Nature and Clemency: in Hedione no less Humanity and good Nature: in BUCERO a Fox-like cunning, wretchedly imitating Sagacity and Prudence.'

* Ep. Calvin. pag. 50.

(c) Calvin, Epist. xlii, pag. 94.

(6) Justus Jonas in relatione de conventu Marpurgensi apud Seckendorf. Histor. Lutheran. lib. ii, pag. 140.

[C] It is very probable that he always believed good Works meritorious. While we are on this Subject, it will not be useless to consider what this Doctor thought of it, who was one of the Heads of the second Party of the new Reformation, in a solemn Conference where he spoke in these Terms: Seeing GOD will judge every one according to his Works, it must not be denied, that good Works performed through the Grace of JESUS CHRIST, and which he operates himself in his Servants, DO MERIT eternal Life; not indeed by their own Dignity, but by the Acceptance, and the Promise of GOD, and through the Covenant made with him: For it is to such Works the Scripture promises the Reward of eternal Life, which therefore is not less a Grace in another Respect, so much as those good Works, to which so great a Reward is given, are themselves the Gifts of GOD.† This is what Bucer writes in 1539, in the Dispute of Leipzig, that it might not be thought that these were things written in the beginning of the Reformation, and before People had time to look about them. Upon the same Principle, the same Bucer decides in another Place, that it must not be denied that one may be justified by Works, as St James says, seeing GOD will render to every one according to his Works.‡ And, continues he, the Question is not concerning THEIR MERITS: We do not reject them in any wise, and we acknowledge that eternal Life is MERITED according to that Word of our Lord: He who forsakes all for my Sake, shall receive an hundred Fold, and inherit everlasting Life. One cannot possibly acknowledge more clearly the Merits which every one may treasure up for himself, even with regard to Life eternal. But Bucer goes yet farther: And as the Church was accused of ascribing Merits to the Saints, not only for themselves, but also for others, he justifies it in these Words: As for what concerns the Public Prayers of the Church, which are called Collects, wherein mention is made of Prayers, and of the Merits of the Saints; seeing that, in those same Prayers, whatever is asked of that kind, is asked of GOD, and not of the Saints, and also that it is asked through JESUS CHRIST; it follows, that all they who offer up that Prayer, acknowledge that all the Merits of the Saints are Gifts of GOD freely granted. And a little after: For we confess also, and preach with Joy, that GOD does not only reward the good Works of his Servants in themselves, but also in those for whom they pray, seeing he has promised that he will do good to those who love him unto a thousand Generations. Thus Bucer disputed for the Catholic Church in 1546, in the Conference at Ratisbon (7). To these Passages may be added that which Vossius mentions in the Letter I have cited: 'Non possum non sanius judicium optare quibusdam, qui hoc nostro sæculo plurimos admodum turbant hoc paradoxo; sola nos fide servari. Cum viderent tamen hoc eo rapi, ac si iustitiam sola animi exultatione finirent, & bona opera secluderent. Quæ jam illa Charitas, quæ huic malo uno verbulo mederi designatur, ut dicerent, fide formata iustificamur, aut per fidem bonorum operum voluntatem ac ita iustitiam consequimur, aut fides fundamentum & radix est iustæ vitæ, ut Augustinus dixit. Neque veris enim quisquam est offendendus, &c (8). - - - I cannot but wish a more sound Judgment to some Persons, who have disturbed many in this our Age with this Paradox; that we are saved by Faith only. Though they saw that the thing was carried so far as to confine Righteousness only to the Opinion of the Mind, and excluding good Works. Where is their Charity, who refuse to cure this Evil by one Word or two? it is only to say, that when Faith is formed we are justified, and that through Faith we obtain a Disposition to good Works, and consequently a righteousness: or that Faith is the Foundation and Root of a righteous Life, as Augustin said. For no Man is to be offended with Truth, &c.' Vossius observes, that these Words are taken from the Edition of Strasburg 1529, and that they have been corrupted in the Edition of Geneva 1554. He observes in general, that, to know that Minister's Moderation, his Writings must be consulted as printed in Germany, and not the Editions of Geneva. Consulendæ sunt editiones illæ quas nobis Germania produxit, non † Disput. Lips. an. 1539.

‡ Resp. ad Ambrinc.

(7) Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux, Histoire des variations, liv. iii, n. 42, 43, pag. 124, 125.

(8) Bucerus commentar. in Psalm. li, apud Vossium Epist. cccclvii, pag. 403, col. 2. Note, that I have corrected the Faults that are crept into this Passage of Vossius.

been much Talk of a Letter which he wrote to Calvin [D]. He had several Children.

* non quæ ex sententia Calvini castratæ prodierunt
* Genevæ. — Cum vero omnia fere Bucer sint
* moderatissima, tum imprimis præfatio in commen* tarios super quatuor Evangelistas in editione Argen-
* toratenſi anni 1530. quæ & ipsa præterita * in editione Rob. Stephani 1530. LIII (9). — — —
* We must consult those Editions which we have from Ger* many, and not those which were castrated at Cal-
* vin's Pleasure at Geneva. — — — Now as all Buc-
* er's Works were very moderate, so particularly was
* his Preface to his Commentary on the Evangelists,
* in the Edition of Strasburg, in the Year 1530,
* which was intirely omitted in Robert Stephens'
* Edition in the Year 1553.

(9) Vossius, ibid.

(10) Thus it ought to be read,
as Vossius had said
a little before,
and not 1553.

(11) See Apolo-geticus pro vera pace Ecclesiastica,
by Rivet, Tom.
III, pag. 1071,
the Grotianæ dif-
cus Aduersus
ibid. pag. 1140,
and the End of
the Remark [K].

(12) Rivetus in Apologetico pro
vera Pace Eccle-
siæ, Tom.
III, pag. 1071.

Vossius is mistaken when he says, that the Preface to Bucer's Commentary on the four Evangelists was suppressed in the Edition of Geneva, printed by Robert Stephens, in the Year 1554 (10). Gro-tius, to whom he wrote this, makes this Remark in his Votum pro Pace; but he gave no good Answer to Andrew Rivet, who affirmed to him, that this Preface is contained in Robert Stephens's Edition (11). The Integrity of that Printer was much better justified in this Article, than in respect to his Deprivation of a Passage in the Commentary on the second Psalm. Rivet endeavours to persuade, that the Difference which is between the Edition of 1539, and that of 1554, is owing to the Author's correcting himself, and retracting from time to time. The Passage which I am about to cite, being very proper to shew the Genius of this Author, may seem in a manner necessary. 'Soli-tum — — — fuisse Bucerum, quod plerisque doctis accidit, quam diu vivunt Lucubrationes suas recensere, addere vel demere quædam, nonnulla etiam retractare. Id de se profuturum Bucerus in præfat. in Enarrationem Evang. quam nescio cur dicat
D. Grotius omisum fuisse in Stephanica editione.
'In meo enim exemplari eam reperio totam integris sex foliis constantem, in qua hæc lego. Per-turbat postremo & hoc nonnullis quod non dubitant plerisque offensum iri, quod videtur jam ipsi pa-rum nobis constare. Et post pauca: Quia Dominus donavit ut quædam loca nunc solidius intelligam quam aliquando intellexi, id quod cum mihi tam benigne largitus est, cur non impartirem liberaliter fratribus & domini benignitatem ingenue prædicarem? Quid inconstantiæ sit proficere in causa sa-lutis? & quis in hoc sæculo vel superiore Scrip-turas tractavit qui non expertus sit hoc quoque in studio priorem diem discipulum esse posterioris?
'Postea exemplum Augustini proferit in retractioni-bus: optatque ut hac tempestate plures edi retractionum libros videremus. Si Bucerus profutur ipse quod multa retractavit ex prioribus suis meditationibus, qua consequentia, vel etiam conscien-tia, posteriores ejus editiones corruptas esse probat aliquis, si in illis non omnia totiusmodi verbis reperiuntur in nonnullis locis expressa (12). — Bucer used, as often happens with learned Men as long as they live, to revise his Lucubrations, to add or take away some things, and even to retract some.
Bucer declares this concerning himself in his Preface to his Commentaries on the Gospels, which Grotius affirms to have been omitted in Ste-phens's Edition. For what reason I know not; for I have it intire in my Copy, consisting of six whole leaves; in which I have these Words.
Lastly, this also disturbs some, because they make no doubt but many will be offended that I now seem not very consistent with myself. And a little after: Because the Lord has given me to understand some Places more fully than I formerly did, which as it is so bountifully given to me, why should I not impart it liberally to my Brethren, and ingenuously declare the Goodness of the Lord? what inconstancy is there in profiting in the Work of Salvation? and who in this Age, or the last, has treated of the Scripture, and has not experienced, that even in this Study the former Day is the Scholar of the latter. Afterwards he produces the Example of Augustin in his Retractions, and wishes that we had more Books of Retractions published at this Day. If Bucer

VOL. II.

* himself declares that he retracted many things of
* his former Meditations, by what consequence, or
* even with what conscience, can any Body assert, that
* the later Editions of his Works are corrupted, if
* in some Places of them every thing be not found * expressed in the very same Words? I shall observe, by the by, that David Paræus made a Confession like this of our Bucer (13), and that he was insulted on that Account by a Jesuit of Mentz (14).

[D] There has been much Talk of a Letter he wrote to Calvin. It is said he writ to him, You judge according as you love, or according as you hate; or you love and hate from meer Fancy. Vossius, who was a good Arminian in his Heart, takes this up a little too smartly, and tells us (15) what Calvin answered to so injurious a Reproach. 'Calvinus
'sic à magno viro increpatus respondere: hæc
'esse genii potius sui, quam judicii; & (ut Calvini
'ipsius verba ad Bucerum retineam) sic scribere, Ut
'verum fatear, nulla mihi cum maximis, & plu-
'rimis vitiis meis, difficilior est lucta, quam cum
'ista impatientia; neque certe nihil proficio, sed
'nondum id sum consecutus, ut belluam placè do-
'muerim. Hæc sane satis modeste, si id postea con-
'secutus. Illud vero concoquere non potuit, quod
'idem Bucerus, qui eum vel norat, vel nosse pu-
'tabat, non veritus esset scribere; Judicas prout
'amas, vel odisti; amas autem, vel odisti, prout
'lubet. Quod cum legisset, literas scripsit, qua-
'rum hoc initium. Cum literæ tuæ mihi sub
'cænam allatæ essent, tanto gaudio perfunctus fui,
'ut non meminerim tribus totis mensibus lætio-
'rem mihi horam affuisse. At cum eas super cæ-
'nam, utcumque percurrissem, lætione ipsa sic fui
'flagellatus, ut proxima nocte irrequietus semper
'æstuarim, nec toto post triduum fuerim apud meip-
'sum, &c. — Calvin, when thus rebuked by
'this great Man, answered, that That was the 'Fault of his Temper rather than of his Judg'ment, and (to keep to Calvin's own Words to 'Bucer) writes thus; To tell the Truth, I have 'a harder Struggle with this Impatience than
'with all my other great and numerous Vices;
'and I do profit a little, but have not yet pre'vailed so far, as intirely to have conquered that 'Passion. This is modest enough if he had after'wards attained a Victory. But he could not digest
'what the same Bucer, who either knew him or 'thought he knew him, ventured to write. You 'judge as you love or hate, and you love or 'hate just as you please; on reading of which he 'wrote this Letter, which begins thus: When I 'received your Letter, just before Supper, I was 'so rejoiced, that I do not remember that I have 'been so well pleased this three Months; but 'when I had cursorily run it over, at Supper, I 'was so nettled with the reading of it, that I 'could not rest all Night, nor was I myself again
'for three Days, &c.' In all probability we should never have known of this Letter, if Francis Baudouin, who lodged with Calvin, had not been so dishonest as to reveal the Secret. He did it by degrees: First, he only said, that, in Bucer's Judgment, Calvin kept no measure either in his Love or Hatred, or that he either raised People above the Heavens, or sunk them down to Hell.
Calvin protested with an Oath, that Bucer had never censured him so: 'Quin etiam Bucer ju-
'dicium recitat (Baudouin) quod ab ipso impro-
'bissime confictum esse Deum & Angelos ejus
'testor. Bucerus, inquit, aliquando tibi dixit,
'nullum te fervare odii vel amoris modum, sed
'ea te esse vehementia, ut vel supra cælos attol-
'leres, vel ad inferos usque dejiceres. Ita vero
'mihi propitius sit Deus, si quid unquam tale au-
'dierim. Quin potius vir ille, quem loco patris
'reverebam, tanta comitate vicissim fraternam me-
'cum amicitiam coluit, ut ægerrime passus sit Ar'gentina me avelli. Certe ad extremum usque con-
'tendit, quibuscunque fieret modis me retinendum.
'Extant etiam ejus ad Senatum nostrum literæ,
'quibus conqueritur cum maxima Ecclesiæ totius ja-
'ctura me huc retrahi: ac demum eo usque pro-
'vehitur, ut dicat me inter sanæ doctrinæ ministros

(13) In his Pro-legomena on the Prophet Holca.

(14) See the Jesuit Mulhufius, in Chap. II. of the Auctarium primum Speculi miseriarum Davidis Paret.

(15) Epist. 457.
pag. 403, col. 2.

(16) That is to say, to be transported against the who are not of his Opinion.

X x

dren [E], but I cannot well tell what became of them. What several Writers affirm, (17) Calvinus in Respons. ad Balduinum, pag. 367, col. 2. Tractatum Theologorum.

'niferos nemini esse secundum, paucos vero habere pares (17). --- He [Baudouin] recites the Judgment of Bucer, which I call God and his Angels to witness is a wicked Fiction of his own. Bucer says he told you once that you kept no measure in your Hatred or Love, but were a Man of such Vehemence, that you either extol a Man above the Skies, or debase him to Hell. But may God so prosper me as I never heard any such thing; on the other hand, that Man, whom I revere as a Father, cultivated a mutual brotherly Friendship with me, with so much Affection, that it grieved him very much that I left Strasburg. It is certain he strove to the utmost to retain me by any means whatsoever. There is extant also a Letter of his to our Senate, wherein he complains that I was recalled hither to the great Loss of the whole Church, and in short goes so far that he says, that I am inferior to none of the Ministers of sound Doctrine, and have but few Equals. Baudouin confesses, in his Answer, that he had not seen what Bucer had wrote to Calvin, but he brags he had Calvin's Answer to Bucer. He says that Answer was of Calvin's own Hand, and that he shewed it to several, who knew the Author's Hand-writing, and he maintains, that That Letter testifies that Bucer had taxed Calvin with judging according to his Passion, judicas prout amas, amas autem prout libet (18). It appears by that Work of Baudouin, that his Adversary had complained that what Bucer had said in general, and without excluding himself, was applied to him personally judicamus prout amamus, &c (19). But Baudouin maintains, that Calvin had made the Application of it to himself. The only thing that sticks in this Process, is Calvin's Oath; yet it is easy to ward that Blow, by maintaining that Baudouin had expressed himself in such a manner as to make People judge, that Bucer had made use of that hard Censure in Conversation. Now it is certain, that Calvin had never received this Reproach in such a manner; so that he might safely swear what he did. Read what follows; it is the Apology that Beza made for him in this Point: 'At enim, inquis, imprecatus est sibi Calvinus si quid unquam tale ex Buceris audisset. Verum cur tu omittis quod ad rem maxime facit, sycophanta? Nam hæc sunt Calvini verba, Bucerum inquit Balduinus aliquando mihi dixisse, nullum me servare edii vel amoris modum: sed ea me esse vehementia, ut vel supra caelos attollerem, vel ad inferos usque deicerem. Ita vero mihi propitius sit Deus, si quid unquam tale audierim. Vides, manifeste, sycophanta, etiam si iracundia & odio cæcus nihil vides, quæ de Buceris objurgatione obscure scripseras, Calvinum ut de quopiam colloquio accepisse, ac proinde memorem ejus suavissimæ, & nunquam interruptæ conjunctionis, quæ inter se & Bucerum fuisset, non temere in vocem illam erupisse. Nihil hoc igitur ad literas, quas ipsas etiam corumpis. Neque enim scripserat Bucerus, cujus ἀπολογίζομαι habemus, Ita judicas ut amas, sed, Ita judicamus ut amamus: sic nimirum ut sese in hoc etiam numero comprehenderet, & commune hominum vitium deploraret (20). --- But you say, Calvin cursed himself if he ever heard any such thing from Bucer; but why, Sycophant, do you omit what is most to the purpose; for these are Calvin's Words: Baudouin says, that Bucer once told me, that I kept no measure in my Hatred or Love; but was a Man of that Vehemence, that I either extolled a Man above the Skies, or debased him to Hell. But may God so prosper me as I never heard any such thing. You see manifestly, Sycophant, though you are so blind with Rage or Hatred that you can see nothing, that what you wrote obscurely of Bucer's Rebuke, Calvin understood as of some Conversation, and therefore, remembering the sweet and uninterrupted Friendship that had been between him and Bucer, did not rashly break out into that Expression; therefore this is nothing at all to the Letter, which you have corrupted too; for Bucer, whose Letter I have in his own Hand-writing, did not write You judge as You love, But We judge

(18) Franciscus Balduinus in Responsione altera ad Jo. Calvinum, pag. 56. Edit. Coloniae apud Jo. Bathenium, 1562.

(19) See Theodore Beza, respons. ad Franciscum Balduinum, pag. 211.

(20) Beza, ubi supra, pag. 212.

'as We love: so that he comprehended himself in the Number, and deplored a common Fault of Mankind.' Beza remarks among other things, that those two great Men soon altered their Style in writing to each other, and that there are Letters of Bucer to Calvin of a later date, and full of Mildness.

[E] He had several Children.] Herman de Wida, Archbishop of Cologne, having a mind to settle the Reformation in his Diocese, sent for Martin Bucer in the Year 1542 (21); most of the Canons opposed the Enterprize, and published a Work wherein they mixed a great many Invectives against Bucer. They taxed him, among other things, with Bigamy. Melancthon, in confuting that Piece, did not forget this Article: He maintained, that the Nun, whom Bucer had married for his first Wife, did well in forsaking the Church of Rome, after she had discovered the Idolatry of it's Worship. He added, that she had led a very exemplary Life, by her Chastity, Modesty, and Piety, that she had been brought to Bed thirteen times, and that she died of the Plague, which he might have escaped if she would have left her Husband. 'In matrimonio tredecies puerpera, pietate, pudicitia, & in omni actione modestia multis bono exemplo fuerit. --- Tandem peste quam, nisi marito ex statione sua non recedenti adesse maluisset, effugerit potuerit, obierit (22).' It would have been pity so fruitful a Girl should have remained in a Nunnery. And as there may be many others, as fit to people the World, who are hindered by Monasteries, one may easily judge what a prejudice these Monastical Vows do to the temporal Good of the State. Bucer married a second time to a Widow, which gave the Canons of Cologne occasion to reproach him with another Irregularity; because, according to St Paul, a Bishop ought to be the Husband of one Wife only, that is, as they pretended, that he ought not to marry a second time, nor to people a Widow. 'Verbum Dei docet adsciscendum Ministerio, oportere esse virum unius uxoris, 1 Tim. iii. & Tit. i. quod Canones Apostolorum, & Apostolici patres in hoc usque tempore sic intellexerunt, ut secundis nuptiis copulatus, aut qui viduam accepit, non possit esse ex numero eorum qui ministerio sacro deserviunt (23).

--- The Word of GOD directs, that who is called to the Ministry should be the Husband of one Wife, 1 Tim. iii. and Titus i. which the Canons of the Apostles, and the Apostolical Fathers have ever to this Day understood in this Sense, that he who enters into a second Marriage, or marries a Widow, cannot be one of those that serve in the holy Ministry. Melancthon confutes this Objection easily. Mr de Meaux says, that Bucer married a third time; he says (24), 'That Bucer was a Man pretty well learned, of a flexible Spirit, and more fertile in Distinctions than the most refined Scholastics, a fine Preacher, somewhat heavy in his Style; but was respected for his Stature, and the sound of his Voice. He had been a Jacobin, and married as others did, and, as one may say, more than others; for, his Wife dying, he married a second and a third time. The holy Fathers did not receive those into the Priesthood, who had been twice married while Laymen. This Man, being a Priest and a Monk, married three times during his new Ministry, without scruple. It was a Recommendation among the Party, and by those bold Examples they affected to confound the superstitious Observances of the ancient Church.' What Mr de Meaux observes, that in those Times Marriage was a Recommendation in the Party, is not altogether false; for it is certain, that if a converted Clergyman did not marry, he caused a Suspicion that he had not renounced the Doctrine of Celibacy. I believe Bucer intimated this Reason to Calvin when he pressed him to marry (25). Sanders reports, that the Visitors, who were appointed in England under Edward VI, exhorted the Clergy to marriage, as a certain Token that they had abjured Popery. 'They made strict enquiry about the Continency of the Pastors; and had the Impudence to ask them publicly, How, being in

(21) See the Remark [C], of the Article WIDA.

(22) Melancthon, Parte II, oper. apud Secundorff. Hist. Lutheran. lib. iii, pag. 440, littera u.

(23) Sententia delectorum per venerabile Capitulum Ecclesie Coloniae de vocatione Martini Bucer, fol. 161.

(24) Histoire des variations, liv. iii. n. 3, pag. 89, 90.

(25) See the Critique Generale de l'Histoire du Calvinisme de Maimbourg, Lettre o, pag. 155, of Edit. 3.

firm, that he died a Jew, and what Sanders reports of a certain Conversation, ought to be looked upon as notorious Calumnies [F]. You find in Mr Teissier the Elogies which the learned Historian of the Reformation of England has given this Minister (d). Moreri's Dictionary hath touched upon the chief Actions of his Life, which is the reason why I do not give all the extent that I might have done to this Article. I shall take notice of Mr Moreri's Mistakes [G], which will give

'Health and Youth, they they could possible live chaste? Whether they had the Gift of Chastity, and what assurance they had that it should be always vouchsafed to them? They advised them therefore to marry rather than burn, or fall into such Sins, the holy thought of which gives a Detestation. Lastly, they told them plainly, that they took all those for Papists, and the King's Enemies, who preferred a dangerous Celibacy before a chaste and honest Marriage; especially, having before their Eyes the holy Examples of two famous Archbishops, who had made no scruple of marrying (26).

[F] It is a Calumny to say, that he died a Jew, and also what Sanders reports of a certain Conversation.] The Jesuit Possévin, speaking of Bucer, made use of the following Parenthesis: 'At vero Bucerus (quem morientem scribunt esse professum nondum natum esse Messiam) Sedaris latiore viam stravit (27). — But Bucer (of whom it is written, that at the Point of Death he denied that the Messiah was come) opened a broader way for the Sedaris.' In another Part of the same Book, he relates this as certain Fact: 'Bucerus cum animam ageret fassus est verum Messiam adhuc non venisse, venturum tamen (28).

Bucer when he was expiring confessed, that the true Messiah was not come, but that he would come. Observe, that, according to this Jesuit, this was Bucer's Confession of Faith on his Death-Bed. But to refute this Fable, we only need alledge Sanders, who accuses this Divine of no more than a private Inclination towards Judaism, and of making one who had no Religion his Confident in a Point of Libertinism. These are his Words: you will find that Bucer died in the Profession of Lutheranism: 'As for Bucer, he was inclined to Judaism; and he was also defended from a Jewish Family. It is certain, that, some time after his Death, and in the Reign of Queen Mary, the Baron Paget, Counsellor to the Catholic King, did say, that he had served him one Day for an Interpreter to Dudley, Duke of Northumberland; and that that Duke having asked him, What he thought of the Real Presence of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Holy Sacrament? He answered, That unless the Truth of the Gospels was questioned, none could doubt of the Real Presence; but, added he, I do not believe all that the New Testament tells us of JESUS CHRIST and of his Actions; although hitherto I have not been permitted to deny it (29). He spoke in this manner before a Man, who he knew had not much Religion. However, in his Discourses and Writings, he always, to his Death, made Profession of Lutheranism, accommodated to the new Opinions of England (30). They, who know this Author, need not to be told, that he may be relied on in things which serve for the Justification of Protestants; but is unworthy of all Credit in matters to their Disadvantage. But let us not forget to note, that Possévin is only the Copier of Lindanus, a very bad Author. This Lindanus, having mentioned several Variations in belief, of which he accuses Bucer, concludes thus: 'Sane ut in Christianismo fuit inconstantissimus, ita in paterno Judaismo constantissimus. Præter usuras enim defensas licitas, etiam Christi adventum sub mortem narrant oculati testes revocasse in dubium (31). — Indeed as he was very unsteady in Christianity, so he was always steady in the Judaism of his Father. For, besides that he defended the Lawfulness of Usury, it is also related by Eye Witnesses, that just before his Death he questioned the coming of CHRIST.' Some Pages after, he repeats the same thing: 'Alii, says he, Christum nostrum negant verum illum promissum fuisse, sed alium cum Judæis expectandum, uti Bucerum moribundum testatum reliquisse narrant fide digni, adeoque quidam clarissimi viri, se ab ejus discipulis in Anglia accepisse (32). — Others say, that our CHRIST is not the true CHRIST promised, but that we must expect with the Jews another; as some credible Witnesses affirm, that Bucer declared at the Point of Death: and several very eminent Men have heard the same from his Disciples in England.' Prætorius, and divers others, have not failed to copy this (33). But they have not copied what Surius reports, and what he dares not affirm, which is, That that Minister caused his Son to be circumcised. The Reason why Surius does affirm it, is, because the grave and most learned Person, from whom he had it, knew it only by hear-say. 'Audi divi ego, says he, ex quodam gravi longoque doctissimo viro, fuisse eum Judæum, & cum quodam puerum quendam nescio ex qua familia sustulisset, eum circumcidisse. Utrum autem hæc profus certa sint, non possum affirmare, præsertim quod ille quoque, qui hæc referebat, se ab aliis accepisse diceret. (34). — I have heard a grave and very learned Man say, that he was a Jew, and that he circumcised a Son, which he had by I know not what Woman. But whether these things be certain I cannot affirm, because he who told me them said he had only heard them from others.'

It is an ancient Saying, that every Romance has its Foundation in History. I cannot tell whether that Fable, concerning Martin Bucer's pretended Judaism, has not taken its Original from some Discourses, in which he might have declared, that the Messiah is not yet come, but that he will come under the chief Characters which the Prophets attribute to him, and under which the Jews expect him. I mean, in a triumphant State, and as a Conqueror, who shall establish Piety and Peace every where. If Mr Jurieu has been suspected of favouring Judaism, because he published such an Opinion, and if it has been supposed, that the Synagogue of Amsterdam wrote him a very thankful Letter upon it (35), the Controversists might very well, in Bucer's Time, have built that silly Romance on a like Doctrine, in case Bucer had maintained it. It is certain, that in those Times the Spirit of Lying, and the boldness of grossly exaggerating Calumnies, were at the Height. Had Mr Jurieu lived in the XVIth Century, he would have found himself accused of Judaism by many a Writer, and of receiving a yearly Pension from the Synagogue.

[G] I shall take notice of Mr Moreri's Mistakes.] I. Bucer's pretended Apostacy is wrong placed in the Year 1530; for he was thoroughly confirmed in Luther's Opinions after the Conferences he had with him at Worms in the Year 1521, and ever after made open Profession of it. 'Paulo post, anno millesimo quingentesimo vicesimo primo, cum ad comitia Wormatiæ Vangionum Lutherus evocatus esset: Bucerus eodem venit, cumque Lutherocomplures dies familiariter transiit: sententiamque ejus amplexus, apertè eandem postea est professus (36). — A little after, in the Year 1521, when Luther was called before the Diet of Worms: Bucer came thither also, and passed several Days with Luther in familiar Conversation: and, embracing his Opinions, professed it openly from that time.' Two Years after, he was admitted into the Number of the Reformed Preachers in Strasburg, and he subscribed a Book with them, which they published in the Year 1522, setting forth the Reasons which had induced them to renounce Popery. He assisted, in 1529, as Deputy of the Church of Strasburg, in the Conferences of Marbourg, where they endeavoured to pacify the Dissentions between the Lutherans and the Zuinglians (37). II. It is false, that he begun by being a Sacramentarian. He followed Luther as his Converter from the beginning. III. It is

(d) Teissier, Ad-dit. aux Eloges, Tom. I. p. 30.

(32) Id. ibid. pag. 185.

(33) Prætorius in elencho heret. pag. 107.

(34) Surius, Commentar. rerum in orbe gestarum ad Ann. 1551, pag. 583.

(35) See a Pamphlet intitled, Lettre des Rabins des deux Synagogues d'Amsterdam à Mr Jurieu, traduite de l'Espagnol suivant la copie imprimée à Amsterdam chez Joseph Athias, A Bruxelles, 1746.

(36) Melch. Adam in vita Bucer, pag. 212.

(37) Taken from Melchior Adam, ubi supra. See Seckendorff's Hist. Luther. lib. I, pag. 240, n. 6, where he says that Bucer passed for a Lutheran, Ann. 1522.

(26) Sanders de schisme d'Angleterre, liv. II, pag. 253. I follow the Translation of Maucroix.

(27) Ant. Possévinus de Atheismo hereticorum, cap. viii, pag. 23.

(28) Possévin. ibid. cap. ult. pag. 33.

(29) I have not the Latin of Sanders; but I have the French Version, printed in the Year 1587, where this Passage stands thus: 'I could not believe all that is written in the New Testament, concerning the Actions and Life of Jesus Christ, neither would I, on the other hand, openly deny it.'

(30) Sanders Histoire du schisme d'Angleterre, liv. II, pag. 237, according to the Translation of Mr Maucroix. Edit. of Holl.

(31) Lindanus in Dialogo 2. Dubitantii, pag. 146.

give me occasion to speak of some Facts: But I ought not to forget that our Bucer, in some Cases, shewed that he did not disapprove pious Frauds [H].

When

false, that he made a separate Sect. He continued always united with one of the Protestant Communions, though the stricter sort of each Party did not approve his Remissness. IV. There is nothing more absurd, than to impute to him as particular Errors, 'That the Body of Jesus CHRIST is present in the Eucharist, only in the Act of Receiving; That Baptism does not procure Salvation to Children; That there is no Sin by Incredulity; That Priests are not obliged to Celibacy' (38). The first of these four Propositions is the common Doctrine of the Lutherans. The second and the fourth are the common Doctrines of all Protestants. The third is not imputed to Bucer by those who have made the Catalogue of Heresies: On the contrary, Prateolus imputes to him the maintaining, that Incredulity is the only mortal Sin than can be committed (39): A slanderous Accusation, if ever there were any such. Note, that the Jesuit Gaultier, citing Sanders, says, that Bucer taught, that even Children who have received Baptism are not saved. It is perhaps what Moreri would say, but knew not how to express himself. Hereupon I observe, that, seeing the Protestants teach, that the Children of the Faithful are saved, though they die before Baptism; their Opinion is, that they, who are baptized, do not owe their Salvation to that Sacrament; so that the pretended Error, which Moreri imputes to Bucer, is a general Protestant Doctrine. As to Father Gaultier's Proposition, I am sure that it is falsely imputed to our Bucer, unless it be explained in this Sense, which is, that God, not having grounded the Decree of Reprobation upon the actual Sins of the Children of Adam, he may have reprobated Children as well as the Adult; and in this Case it might happen, that some Children, who died after Baptism, would be damned. Let us say, to the Shame of those Makers of Catalogues of Heresies, as Lindanus, Sanders, Prateolus, Gaultier, &c. that, for the particular Heresies of Bucer, they give us the most general Doctrine of the Protestants. Note, that Prateolus imputes to him the Doctrine of the unprofitableness of good Works. Compare this with the Author of the History of Variations, and you will be strangely surprized (40). Note also, that Surius says, that, at the Conference of Ratisbon, Malvenda reduced Bucer to such Extremities, that he forced him to say, I. That all Sins are Sins of Incredulity. II. That there are none of Weakness and Ignorance; that they are all maliciously committed, and against the Dictates of Conscience (41). As to the first Proposition, Mr Seckendorf maintains, either that Bucer did not say so, or that it was only said according to the Orthodox Sense that Luther gives it, which amounts to this, That as the Sins of the Faithful never exclude from Paradise, the Sins of Unbelievers alone are damnable (42). As to the second, he believes, that it is falsely imputed to Martin Bucer (43). Let us add, That this Minister, if we believe Surius (44), found himself obliged to assert, That a Man, who sins mortally, ceases from believing the Trinity, the Birth and Death of Jesus CHRIST, &c. Mr Seckendorf seems to own, that this Doctrine was advanced (45), and by the manner in which he says Bucer defended himself, it seems he was in some Confusion. Indeed can any thing be more monstrous than to maintain, That all those, who fall into the Sin of Fornication, look on every thing that is contained in the Gospel as a Fable?

[H] He did not disapprove pious Frauds.] He had a great Quarrel with Pomeranus for having caused Martin Luther's Commentary on the Psalms to be printed with Alterations (46). He likewise foisted some things into Luther's Postills, which favoured the Zuinglians, and obliged that Reformer to complain severely that the best of his Works was corrupted. Mr Seckendorf observes, that the Reproaches thrown on him by Luther, on that Account, were suppressed in the Edition of Wittenberg, and that Bucer made some Excuses. 'Offenderat etiam Bucerus Lutherum, quod in editam ejus Postillam, quam vocant, ecclesiasticam, quædam inserisset, quæ pro Helvetica sententia de cæna facerent, ideo in libello illo de verbis institutionis vehementer de Bucero queritur, quod librum suum homiliarum, quem optimum ex omnibus, quos unquam scripserit, vocat, quique etiam Pontificiis placeat, corruerit. Ista exprobratio in editione Tomorum Wittenbergenfis expuncta fuit, indignante & publica apologia culpam à se amoliente Georgio Rorario, ut d. Tom. III. Alt. fol. 740. legi potest. Eandem vero querelam in epistola ad Johannem Secerium Basileensem Typographum prolixè post repetiit; (Id. est. 13.) Sept. hujus anni, vide Epistolæ. Lib. II. pag. 348. b. Non desuit tamen Bucero excusatio (47). -- (47) Id. ibid. Bucer had also offended Luther, by inserting some things in his Ecclesiastical Postill, as they call it, which made for the Helvetic Opinion concerning the Holy Supper, and therefore in his Book, de Verbis Institutionis, he complains vehemently of Bucer, that he had corrupted his Book of Homilies, which he says was the best of all that he had wrote, and which did even please the Popists. This Reproof was suppressed in the Wittenberg Edition of his Works, at which George Rorarius was very angry and made a public Apology to clear himself of that Fault. He afterwards repeated the same Complaint at large, in a Letter to Johannes Secerius, a Printer at Basil. However Bucer was at no loss for an Excuse. I cannot tell whether he alledged the Maxim which Erasmus attributes to him, That a Deceit, which hurts no Body and is useful to many, is an Action of Piety. Erasmus refutes him in this, on Occasion of a Work which Bucer had dedicated to the Dauphin under a false Title. 'Is ficto titulo scripsit librum ad primogenitum Regis Gallie, admixtis aliquot verbis Gallicis, quo videretur à Gallo scriptus ad Gallum: Pius, inquit, dolus est, qui nocet nemini, prodest multis. Primum, nulli nocet hæresis? Hoc protinus audiret ab alio; nam hoc de istis pronunciatum est. Non læduntur tantus Princeps ac natio religiosissima quæ gravatur invidia? Quod autem simile exemplum ab Apostolis, aut probatis Ecclesiæ doctoribus profectum est? Si hic fucus nulli nocet, cur Lutherus tam indigne tulit suos libros per hunc fuisse corruptos? Cur Pomeranus de simili temeritate illius questus est? Quod ab aliis & ab ipsis adeo legibus falsi gravissimo crimine notatur, huic lepido Evangelistæ pius dolus est (48). -- He dedicated a Book, under a feigned Title, to the Dauphin of France, intermixing some French Words, that it might seem to be wrote from a Frenchman to a Frenchman. It is a pious Fraud, says he, which hurts no body, and is profitable to many. First, Does Heresy hurt no body? This would be immediately asked him by another; for these Doctrines are called Heresy. Is not so great a Prince and a most religious Nation hurt, when loaded with Envy? What Example of the like Practice do you find among the Apostles or the approved Doctors of the Church? If this Cheat hurts no body, why did Luther take it so ill that his Books were corrupted by this Author? Why did Pomeranus complain of the like Temerity of his? What is called by others, and even by the Laws, a heinous Crime and Cheat, is, by this fine Evangelist, called a pious Fraud.' I do not mention the false Name he gave himself in the Title Page of one of his Books; for it is a very innocent thing, and was the Cause that his Book was read by Adversaries, who would not have dared to touch it had they known the Author. Read these Words of Naudæus: 'Martinus Bucerus, cum suos in librum Psalmorum Commentarios à Catholicis legi vehementer cuperet, eisdem sub Aretii, quæ Græca vox est Martino respondens, & Felini quod verbum Germanicum Bucer significationem Latine representat, publici juris fieri voluit, ne si proprium suum nomen illis affixisset, quod pridem antea cucullati faceret, dotes diris devoverant, statim eorumdem lectione catholicis

(38) All this is struck out of the Moreri of Holland.

(39) Afferit nullum esse peccatum mortale nisi incredulitatem. Prateol. ubi supra. Father Gaultier copies this from Prateolus.

(40) See above, the Remark [C], where it is shewn, that he taught the Merit of Good Works.

(41) Surius, Comment. Rer. in orbe gestarum, ad Ann. 1546, pag. 527.

(42) Seckendorf. Histor. Lutheran. lib. iii, pag. 626. See the same Seckendorf, ibid. pag. 195.

(43) Ibid. pag. 626.

(44) Surius, Comment. Rer. in Orbe gestarum, pag. 195.

(45) Seckendorf. Histor. Lutheran. lib. iii, pag. 626.

(46) Id. lib. ii. pag. 82. n. 3. ad Ann. 1527.

(47) Id. lib. ii. pag. 82. n. 3. ad Ann. 1527.

(48) Erasmus Epist. lib. xxxi. pag. 2110.

When I said (e), that, in order to procure a good Understanding between the Lutherans and Zuinglians, he chose general and ambiguous Expressions, I might have added, that he acted in the same manner, in order to calm the Disquiet of his Conscience, by a Formulary which did not clearly contain the Opinion either of Luther or Zuinglius; he was embarrassed between these two Opinions; one appeared to him too strong, the other too weak [f]. Probably one might observe the same

(e) See above, after Citat. (e).

(40) Gabr. Nau-dus in Judicio
de Augustino Ni-
pho, pag. 19.
Compare this with Remark [D], of the Article E-RASMUS, in the first Paragraph.

catholicis omnibus interdicere (49). — Martin Bucer, being very desirous to have his Commentaries on the Psalms read by the Catholics, published them under the Name of Aretius, which is the Greek Word answering to Martin, and Felinus, a German Word expressing the Signification of Bucer in Latin, fearing, that if he had put his true Name to them, which was cursed long before by the Monks, the Catholics would immediately be forbid the reading of them. The Inquisition of Spain supposes, that Bucer's Book, Adversus merita bonorum operum, was published as a Work of the Bishop of Rochester, De misericordia Dei.

[f] He was embarrassed between the Opinions of Luther and Zuinglius concerning the Eucharist; one appeared to him too strong, the other too weak. The Doctrine of the Lutherans seemed to him to attribute too much Reality to the Presence of Jesus CHRIST in the Sacrament of the Eucharist: he could not digest the Consequences of it; but he thought also, that the Opinion of the Zuinglians was too narrow, and did not come up to the Ideas which the Scripture, and ancient Tradition, imprint on our Minds. This gave him a deal of uneasiness. See what a Minister of Breda tells us on this Subject. *Legatur Vita Martyris & quæ ibi de fluctuatione Bucerii dicuntur. Videatur quoque in Centuria prima Epist. select. à Belgis vel ad Belgas Ep. 5. quæ est Bucerii ad Joannem à Lasco, Curatorem Ecclesiarum Frisæ Orientalis, ubi tam sollicitè explorat, an etiam agnoscat à Lasco præter vim obsequandi, vim exhibendi ipsum Christum & Dominum, eamque corporis & sanguinis ejus communionem dari ac percipi, quam sumus membra ejus ex parte, & caro de carne ejus, & os de ossibus ejus, qua manemus in ipso, & ipse in nobis, & dari eam atque percipi dum Dominus ipse est in suo ministerio efficax, verba & symbola uti Domini, & ut ab ipso Domino dispensatione libera per ministrum accipiuntur, quam vocant unionem, non sensualem, non localem, non naturalem, sed sacramentalem & pacti, propter illas scripturæ phrasas, quæ loquuntur de Mylterio incorporationis Ecclesiæ, & de communione & manducatione & potatione carnis & sanguinis Christi. Et paulo post dicit Luthero satisfieri, si tantum non inania signa CHRISTI absentis in Cœna sentiamus & explicetur, etiam hic dari & percipi ipsum Dominum, modo quo ipse novit. Et ibidem, pag. 33, hæc Bucerii conquerentis verba ad animum revocentur: Cruciat me, inquit, merito, nos quibus Dominus cætera regni sui mysteria tam benigne revelavit, non potuisse jam intra totos 34 annos convenire de hoc sacratissimo, & omnino populari mysterio, quod non minus intelligere quam usurpare omnes debent (50). — Read the Life of Peter Martyr, and what is said there of Bucer's Fluctuation; see also the first Century of Epistles from Dutchmen or to Dutchmen, Ep. 5, which is from Bucer to John de Lasco, Overseer of the Churches of East Friesland, where he so earnestly enquires, whether de Lasco, besides a Power of signifying, acknowledges a Power of exhibiting CHRIST himself; and that the Lord, and the Communion of his Body and Blood, is given and perceived; whereby we are Members of him in part, and Flesh of his Flesh, and Bone of his Bone; whereby we abide in him, and he in us, and that it is given and perceived, when the Lord himself operates in his Ministry, and when the Words and Symbols are received as the Lord's, and as it were from the Lord himself, by free Dispensation through his Minister, which they call an Union, not sensual, not local, not natural, but sacramental, and of the Covenant on Account of these Texts of Scripture, which speak of the Mystery of the Incorporation of the Church, and of the Communion, and eating and*

(50) Ludovic. Gerardus à Remiffis, Notis in Apologet. Reform. in Belgio Eccles. Epist. p. 102, 103.

drinking of the Flesh and Blood of CHRIST. And a little after he says, that Luther is satisfied, if we own in the holy Supper any thing more than bare Signs of CHRIST absent, and it be explained that the Lord himself is given and perceived here also, in the manner which he knows; and, ibid. pag. 33, remember these Words of Bucer complaining: I am grieved, says he, and not without Reason, that we, to whom the Lord hath so bountifully revealed the other Mysteries of his Kingdom, have not been able now in Thirty four Years to agree concerning this most sacred and most general Mystery, which all Christians ought to understand, as well as use. You see, in these last Words, the Pangs which Bucer felt, on consideration that the Ministers, Reformers of the Church, had not been able to agree concerning the Sacrament of the Holy Supper, after Thirty four Years Labour. It has been observed, that his irresolution did not continue to his Death, and that he died in the Calvinistical Faith. The Author of this Remark is a Lutheran Doctor, who accuses him of acting with so much Fraud and Inconstancy, that it was impossible to discover his real Sentiments: Bucerii nomen nunquam reditum fuisset celebrius, nisi instar Protei aliquid in omnes formas sese transmutasset, & jam a nostris, jam a Zuinglianorum partibus stetit, sue qua consilia, dicta, facta, sic insidiosè & veteratorie inflexisset, ut cuinam Parti ex animo faveret, satis perspectum cognitumque esse haud posset. Quamquam in fide Calviniana tandem spiritum exhalasse, ex postremo ipsius scripto, non tamen ad finem perducto, satis evidenter colligitur (51). — Bucer's Name would never have been famous, had not he, Proteus like, transformed himself into all Shapes, and stood, one while on our side, another on that of the Zuinglians, and so craftily and disingenuously turned all his Counsels, Words, and Actions, that it could never be perfectly discovered which Party he favoured in his Heart, though it is manifest, from the last Piece which he wrote, but did not intirely finish, that he died in the Calvinistical Faith. But, least this Lutheran should be suspected of decrying him in this manner from Party Interest, he cites two Calvinistical Writers, who have painted the Genius of Bucer in the very same Colours: Hoc pulchellum elogium ne à Lutheranis ex præpostero quopiam affectu confictum videri possit, produco Lavaterum Scriptorem aliqui Sacramentarium, Bucerii genium & ingenium his flosculis depingentem: Bucerus ambiguus & obscurus loquendi formulis sententiam suam proposuit, ut in utram partem magis propenderet, colligi plane non potuerit. Toto certaminis hujus tempore ejusmodi phrasibus ipsum studuisse, Josias Simlerus, Scholæ Tigurinæ Professor, in Oratione de Vita & obitu Petri Martyris testatur, quem & ipsum persuadere aliquando conatus fuit suum ut exemplum secutus, talibus loquendi modis, ex quibus nihil certi concludi posset, ut ita utrique parti inserviens, ambiguus illis & flexilivus loquendi formulis diffidum hoc paulatim sopiret atque tolleret. Hæc insidiosas ac subdolas molitiones Tigurini animadvertentes minime probarunt, & libere atque aperte professi sunt, non velle se concordiam fucatam atque insidiosam, quæ juxta Bucerii declarationem, cothurni instar, utrique parti accommodari posset (52). — That it may not be thought, that this fine Elogium is feigned by the Lutherans out of Prejudice, I produce Lavaterus, a Calvinist Writer, who paints Bucer's Genius and Temper in these Colours: Bucer offered his Opinion in ambiguous and obscure Phrases, so that it was absolutely impossible to gather from them to which side he inclined most. Josias Simler, Professor at Zurich, in an Oration on the Life and Death of Peter Martyr, testifies that (51) Leon. Hut-

terus in Irenico vere Christiano,
five de Synodo & Unione Evangelicorum non fa-
cata conciliandâ.
Tract. Theolog.
adversus D. Paræ
Irenicum pag.
130. Edit. Wit-
teb. apud Paul.
Helwigium An.
1618, in Folio.

(52) Ib. ibid.

on his Opinion concerning the Merit of good Works [K]. He spoke more strongly of them than the other Ministers, and, if he varied from himself in that Point, it ought to be imputed to the Difficulties he met with in the Matter, or to the Improvement he made as he grew old. He gave this last Reason in excuse of himself, when he found that some People were offended that he was not sufficiently uniform in his Works (f). However learned and solid his Lectures were, three Defects were observed in them. I. The Abundance of his Learning sometimes led him too far from his Subject. II. He did not always remember the Number of Heads into which he had, at first, divided his Matter. III. There was a certain Obscurity in his Style, as he himself owned; so that his Hearers, if they were not very attentive, could not understand him (g).

(f) See above, Addit. to Remark [C].

(g) Josias Simlerus in vita Petri Martyris, apud Melch. Adam. vit. ext. Theologorum, pag. 37.

Bucer studied such Expressions throughout the whole Contest, and once endeavoured to persuade Peter Martyr to follow his Example, and use such Expressions, as nothing certain could be concluded from, that so, pleasing both Parties, by these ambiguous and equivocal ways of speaking, he might by degrees compose and end the Difference. The Zurichians, observing these insidious and crafty Contrivances, disliked them, and freely and openly professed, that they would not have a patched and insinuating Agreement, which, according to Bucer's Declaration, like a Buskin, serve either side. I do not find the last Lines of this Passage in the Life of Peter Martyr, extracted by Melchior Adam, from the Book which this Lutheran Doctor cites (53); but I find there, that Martyr conformed himself for some time to Bucer's Language, and afterwards left it, when he saw the dangerous Consequences of it, which were, that, on the one hand, it did not fully satisfy the Lutherans, and on the other gave Offence to the weak and perplexed, and embarrassed them in such a manner, that they could not tell what to believe on that Point (54). Martyr and Bucer nevertheless were good Friends, and fully persuaded of each other's Orthodoxy (55). Observe, that Bucer, during his Residence in England, was exhorted to speak more fully and clearly concerning the Eucharist (56).

(53) Oratio Josias Simleri de vita & obitu Petri Martyris.

(54) Melch. Adam. in vita Petri Martyris, pag. 38.

(55) Ib. pag. 39.

(56) Id. in vita Calvinii, pag. 82.

(57) Strasburg, Confession, Meiningen, and Lindau.

(58) Hutterus de Synodo Evangelicor. &c. pag. 130, 131.

[K] --- one may apply --- this Observation to his Opinion concerning the Merit of Works.] The Lutheran Doctor, whom I cite, accuses Bucer of having used a Style accommodated to the Romish Opinions, concerning Justification, in the Formulary of Faith, presented by four Imperial Cities (57), to the Diet of the Empire in the Year 1530; these are the Doctor's Words: 'Articulo IV Confessionis Civitatum explicandum erat, Quomodo fidei Justificatio adscribitur; sed Bucerus stylum, ne pontificios offenderet, ad ipsorum forum sic attemperavit: Quod Concionatores nostri Fidei tantum tribuunt, non eo fit sensu, quasi salus & pietas nostra consistat in otiosis cogitationibus, vel in fide quæ sit charitatis expertis, quam fidem informem sive informatam nominare consueverunt; sed ideo hoc fit, quia fateri cogimur, neminem vere pium esse aut salvari posse, qui Deum non summe diligit, & conformis ipsi fieri summo studio annitatur. Et post pauca: Fides, per quam regeneratur, ea est fides quæ per charitatem est efficax. Hæc Bucerus. Quid vero hoc est aliud, quam sensu Pontificio docere nos justificari coram DEO FIDE FORMATA (58)? In the IVth Article of the Confession of the Cities, they were to have explained, how Justification is ascribed to Faith; but Bucer, that he might not offend the Papists, accommodated his Style to their manner of speaking, thus: Whereas our Preachers attribute so much to Faith, it is not done in this Sense, as if our Salvation and Godliness consisted in idle Thoughts, or in Faith, which is void of Love, which they used to call Faith without Form, or unformed; but it is done, because we are obliged to confess, that no Man is truly godly, who does not love God above all things, and endeavour with all his Might to be conformable to him. And a little after: The Faith, by which we are regenerated, is a Faith which worketh by Love. Thus far Bucer. But what is this else than in the Sense of the Papists to say, that we are justified before God by FAITH FORMED.' He had just before said, that Bucer retracted some time after; and confessed that he had granted certain things in Favour of the Catholics, which he would no longer allow (59). You need not ask whether he was not loaded with many Reproaches on that Account. You will presently be satisfied: 'Quia versipellis iste Bucerus fuit Autor Confessionis Tetrapolitanae, fatente ipso quoque Paræo, facile judicari potest, quo candore & spiritu in ea concinnanda usus fuerit: eo nimis quibuspiam sibi constat, sed tamquam Vertumnus aliquis, nec calidus nec frigidus est. Cuius rei Argumento esse potest, quod ipse Bucer paulo post bene multa Confessionis hujus suæ capita publice tractavit, & falsius est se in gratiam Pontificiorum multa tum concessisse, quæ jam concedere amplius nolit (60). — At that Turncoat, Bucer, was Author of the Confession of the four Cities, as even Paræus himself allows, it is easy to judge what Candour and Spirit he used in composing it; even this, that he is no where consistent with himself, but, Vertumnus like, is neither hot nor cold. A Proof of which is this, that Bucer himself, a little after, publicly retracted several Articles of this his Confession, and owned, that he had then granted several things for the sake of the Papists, which now he would no longer grant.' It is observed, that, in all the fourth Article, which is designed for the Doctrine of the Justification of a Sinner, there is not one Word concerning the Merit of Jesus CHRIST, the chief and sole Foundation of our Salvation (61); and that Bucer, acknowledging his foul Play, retracted the thing some time after: 'Agnovit hanc xucelay & aleatoriam versutiam Bucerus ipse, qui hunc ipsum Articulum retractavit postea, sic scribens: 'Verbum (efficax) tolli debet, aut ita declarari, ut intelligatur de scientia apprehendente misericordiam propter Christum promissam & erigente perterrefactas mentes (62). --- Bucer himself acknowledged this Game and Craft, and retracted that Article afterwards, writing thus: The Word (efficacious) ought to be left out, or explained so that it might be understood of an Assurance expecting Mercy, promised for the sake of CHRIST, and raising desponding Souls.' To convince him of the like unfair Practice on the Article of good Works; these Words of the Confession are urged: Renovatio & restitutio hominis, quæ fit & consistit per fidem, declaratur PERFECTAQUE fit operibus charitatis: --- Tantum vero adest ut bona opera rejiciamus, ut libere fateamur Hominem numquam PERFECTE beatum effici posse, nisi per Christi Spiritum eo perducatur, ut NULLUM penitus ei desit opus bonum omnium eorum ad quæ à DEO est conditus (63). --- The Regeneration and Restoration of Man, which is caused by, and subsists in, Faith, is declared and made PERFECT by Works of Charity --- but we are so far from rejecting good Works, that we freely confess, that a Man can never become perfectly happy, unless he be guided by the Spirit of CHRIST, so that no good Work is wanting in him, for which he was created by God.' I think Reason and Charity require us to believe, that he acted in all this according to his own Persuasion, and not out of Policy. We have seen above (64), what he wrote constantly on the Head of good Works. The Passage, which I have cited from his Commentary on Psalm ii (65), is sufficient, in the Opinion of Grotius, to shew, that the Protestants and Catholics would easily agree on that matter, provided they would but banish scholastic Chicanery and Party Animosity (66). Grotius pretends, that this Passage ought to be read according to that Edition of Strasburg, and not according to that of Robert Stephens, which is wholly corrupted (67). He

(59) Id. ibid. pag. 13.

(60) Id. ibid.

(61) Id. ibid. pag. 131.

* Vid. Librum, Actorum Ratipon. pag. 85.

(62) Hutterus de Synodo Evangelicor. &c. p. 131.

(63) Id. ibid.

(64) In the Remark [C].

(65) In the same Remark, Citation (8).

(66) Grotius in Voto pro Pace Eccles. ad Art. iv, apud Rivetum, Operum Tom. III, pag. 1042.

(67) See the Remark [C], Citation (11).

(68) Rivetus in Apologet. pro verâ pice Eccles. Operum, Tom. III, pag. 177.

(69) See above, the Addition to the Remark [C].

He refers us also to the Preface of Bucer's Commentary on the four Evangelists, which, says he, was also omitted in Robert Stephens's Edition. Andrew Rivet's Answer to Grotius is remarkable; he declared to him (68): I. That the Passage in Bucer's Commentary on the 11d Psalm, as Grotius has related it, contains nothing but what the Calvinists admit, when rightly understood. II. That Robert Stephens's Edition wants nothing as to the Sense of those Words, which Grotius recites from the Edition of Strasbourg. III. That if the Words are not the same in Robert Stephens's Edition, and in that of Strasbourg, Grotius ought to remember that this Work of Bucer's was first printed under the Name of Aretius Felinus, in the Year 1529; a second time under the Name of Martin Bucer, in the Year 1532; and a third time, at Geneva, by Robert Stephens, in the Year 1554: And that the Author owns, that in revising his Works he left out, he added, and even retracted, certain things (69): therefore it cannot be pretended that the last Editions of his Works were corrupted by the Booksellers. May not the Difference between the latter and the former proceed from the Author's Retractions; besides, Bucer's Confession is in his Preface to his Commentary on the Gospels, and Rivet assures us that it was not suppressed by Robert Stephens, as Grotius had given out (70). After this Rivet cites several Passages of Bucer, which prove his Orthodoxy, as to the Doctrine of Justification. Grotius made very little answer; he only says, that if a Man has a Mind to be believed when he affirms, that the Difference of the Editions of Bucer comes from the Author, he ought to give some Proof of it, and that there are some Editions of Geneva, in which the Preface to the Commentary on the Gospels is not inserted (71). He is condemned by his Silence as to Robert Stephens's Edition, from whence it appears that he and Vossius had spoken of it without having seen it (72); an inexcusable Fault!

(70) See in the same Addition, Citation (12), the Latin Words of Rivetus.

(71) Grotius in Difficult. Apologetici Rivetiani, pag. 47. See Rivetus's Works, Tom. III, pag. 1140.

(72) See Remark [C], Citation (9), (10), and (11).

BUCHANAN (GEORGE), was a very able Man, and one of the greatest Latin Poets of the XVIth Century. He was born in a Village in Scotland, in the Year 1506. His Family, which was far from rich, had like to have fallen into extreme Poverty by the Death of his Father, and the breaking of his Grandfather. His Mother, who was left a Widow with eight Children, educated them as well as she could; but she had a Brother that took some care of this. Having found him fit enough for Learning, he sent him to Paris. The young Man lived there two Years, and afterwards was obliged to return to Scotland, by reason of his Poverty, and want of Health. When he found himself recovered, he would try his Fortune in the War, among the French Troops which were landed in his Country; but he soon fell sick again. After his recovery he went to St Andrews, where he studied Logic under the good old Man John Major. He followed him into France that same Year, and after he had passed two Years at Paris, struggling with his ill Fortune, he was called to teach Grammar in the College of St Barbara. This he did for three Years. He was brought back into Scotland by a young Count (a), who had kept him five Years with him in Paris. He would have returned into France again, but the King of Scotland stopped his Journey, by making him Preceptor to his Bastard Son. He had wrote a Poem which displeased the Franciscans. These good Fathers, instead of putting on that Spirit of Patience which so well becomes Churchmen, were incensed at it, and to revenge themselves the more artfully, they cried out, that Buchanan was an impious Man, and an Heretic. These Clamours were the occasion of his inclining to Lutheranism, a little more than he did before (b). About this time the King returned from France (c), and made the Churchmen uneasy; for they were afraid, that Queen Magdalen, whom he brought along with him, had imbibed the new Opinions from her Aunt, the Queen of Navarre. The Death of Queen Magdalen soon dispelled their Fears. Some time after a Plot was discovered against the King, in which this Prince believed, that the Franciscans had not discharged their Duty to him. He commanded Buchanan to write some Verses against them. The Poet obeyed without any Reluctance, but kept within Bounds, and made use of Expressions which might be taken in a double Sense. The King, not thoroughly satisfied with those Verses, commanded him to write sharper, and was obeyed according to his Desire. Buchanan presented him the famous Sylva, which is called Franciscanus. Some time after he was informed, that Cardinal Beton was plotting his Ruin; whereupon he fled into England [A]; but Matters being in such Confusion there, that

(a) Gilbertus Kennedus Castille Comes. — Gilbert Kennedy, Earl of Caithel. Buchananus in Vita propria Poematis prefixa.

(b) Dum impotentiae suae indulgentiae illum sponte sua Sacerdotum licentia infensum acris incendunt, & Lutheranae causae minus iniquum reddunt. Id. ibid.

(c) That is to say, in 1537. Buchanan, in his Life, very seldom puts down the Years.

[A] He fled into England.] I cannot tell why he suppresses his being put in Prison: for it is suppressing it, to say only in an indefinite Manner, that he deceived his Guards. 'Brevi post per amicos ex aula certior factus se peti, & Cardinalem Betonum à Rege pecunia vitam ejus mercari ELUSIS CUSTODIBUS in Angliam contendit. — A little after, being informed by his Friends at Court that there was a Design against him, and that Cardinal Beton offered the King Money for his Life, he deceived his Keepers, and fled into England.' He was Preceptor to the King's Bastard: and therefore it may reasonably be supposed, that the Guards whom he deceived were not Jailors of public Prisons, but only certain Men who had orders to observe him, as a suspected Person. So that he has not explained himself clearly enough. The History of the Reformation of England is more particular in the matter: we there find the very time that he was imprisoned, a Circumstance, which Buchanan ought at least to have set down in the Margin, if he was afraid that the Date of the Years would make his Periods less smooth. We have it then from Dr Burnet, that in the Year 1539, 'The Clergy, being incensed by the Satires that Buchanan had written against them, caused him to be imprisoned, and as the King left all things to them, that great Man would doubtless have been condemned to death, if he had not had the Ingenuity to make his Escape out of Prison (1).' I have said that Buchanan was Preceptor to the King's Natural Son; and I have reason to suppose it: for, as he himself has said that the King bestowed that place upon him, it is to be presumed he would have it believed that he was invested with it, since he neither expressly, nor by any incompatible Fact, notes that he had it not. Now this he has not done: I may therefore suppose that he enjoyed it. But to dissemble nothing in this matter, I must own he makes use of an Expression, from whence it might be concluded that he had not that Employ. He says, that, being by chance at Court,

(1) History of the Reformation of England, Part I, lib. iii, pag. 725. Note, that Buchanan, in his History of Scotland, lib. xiv, pag. 509, says, that he escaped by a Window in his Chamber, while the Guards slept.

(d) He was Em-
bassador of Scotland in France.

(e) This Cardinal wrote to the Archbishop of Bordeaux, to get Buchanan taken up, but he gave the Letter to some intimate Friends of Buchanan. Buchanan in vita propria.

(f) Crimini daba-tur carniū esus
in quadragesima,
à qua nemo in tota Hispania est
qui abstineat.
Ibid.

(g) A Portuguese Jesuit, Author of a Version of the Psalms in Latin Verse, in the Preface to which he censures Buchanan.

(b) That is to say, 1552.

(i) Taken from his Life, written by himself, in 1580. It is printed before his Poems.

in one and the same Day Lutherans were burnt on one side, and Papists on the other, he passed again into France: And for fear Cardinal Beton (d) should play him a Trick there, he retired privately from Paris, and went to Bourdeaux, whither Andrew Goveanus, a learned Portuguese, invited him. He taught three Years in this Place [B], but not without some dread of the Franciscans, and of Cardinal Beton (e), whose Threats he was informed of. After this he followed Andrew Goveanus into Portugal, I say Goveanus, who had Orders from the King his Master, to bring him a certain number of Persons fit to teach Philosophy, and Literature, in the University he had newly founded at Coimbra. All went well as long as Goveanus lived, but after his Death, which happened not long after, the learned Men who followed him, and particularly Buchanan, were vexed all manner of ways. They reproached him with his Poem against the Franciscans; they found fault with his eating Meat in Lent, wherein he only conformed to the Custom of the Country (f). It was pretended, that in his Discourse he had discovered some Indifference to the Catholic Church. They teased him for above a Year together, and after all, for fear of discovering, that they had unjustly harassed a Man of Reputation, they condemned him to remain some Months in a Monastery, in order to be better instructed. It was there he undertook his Paraphrase of the Psalms, an excellent Work, notwithstanding all the Criticisms of Lewis de la Croix (g). Having obtained his Liberty, he passed into England, but made no stay there. He chose to return into France. He arrived there at the time of the raising of the Siege of Metz (h). Some Years after he entered into the Service of the Marechal de Brissac, and was made Preceptor to his Son. That Marechal commanded then in Piedmont. Buchanan continued five Years in that Employ, sometimes in Italy, and sometimes in France. He quitted it in 1560. Returning into Scotland, after the Troubles, which Messieurs de Guise caused there, had been suppressed, he went over openly to the Communion of the Reformed Church. He was made Preceptor to James VI, King of Scotland, in the Year 1565. This is all that he has thought fit to inform us of concerning his Life (i). I cannot tell why he hath affected to say nothing of his great Prosperity. That Silence might appear mysterious to those who are inclined to give things a wrong turn. Such Persons might be capable of believing that Buchanan, full of Confusion and Remorse in his old Age, for having given himself up to the Faction which forced Queen Mary out of her Kingdom, from whom he had received so many Benefits, and whom he praised so highly, durst not shew what he had done in those Times, nor awaken

of which (g)
the English
Archbishop
and the Cardinal

of which (g)
the English
Archbishop
and the Cardinal

Court, he was sent for by the Prince. Rex Buchananum FORTE tum in aula agentem ad se advocat. Has not the Preceptor of a King's Natural Son his ordinary Residence at Court? Is it ever said of such a one, that he was by chance at Court at such a time? I answer, I. That it is at least very possible that he is not there sometimes; that suffices me. II. That it is not the part of a good Writer to relate matters so, that recourse must be had to conjectures to know that things are altered (2). This is the chief aim of my Criticism. Buchanan wrote his History politely; says much in few words, but skips over things that he ought not to forget. It is more difficult than is commonly thought, not to fall into this Defect. Consider my marginal Note.

[B] He retired — to Bourdeaux, and taught three Years there.] Here I shall place the impertinent Story that I have read in the fiftieth Page of The Doctrine Curieuse of Father Garasse. 'It is said, that George Buchanan, Regent of the first Class in the College of Guyenne in Bourdeaux, having taken a little more Wine than he ought, went, when the Class Bell rung, and took a turn as far as England in his Morning-Gown and Slippers, having opportunely found a Ship just weighing Anchor in the Harbour of the Carthusians. A fine walk, continues the same Author, to be taken in a drunken Fit.' This Lie is too ridiculous to be confuted. Buchanan left France at that time to go into Portugal. I shall occasionally examine a place of the Anti-Baillet that does not seem to me very exact. Moreri has wrote in his Dictionary, these are the Words of Mr Menage (3), that Turnebus, Buchanan, and Muret, taught at the same time in the College of Cardinal le Moine, Turnebus the first, Buchanan the second, and Muret the third Class. I have heard Father Bourbon, who very well knew things of this kind, say the same. — If Buchanan taught in the College of Cardinal le Moine at the same time that Muret taught there, as I am in some manner persuaded he did, because Father Bourbon says so, it must have been between 1544, (which is the Date of his Elogy to Tasseus and Tevius) and 1545, for he taught before in the College of Guyenne in Bourdeaux, where he passed three Years as he himself tells us in his Life; and in 1539, the first of December, he made a Speech there to the Emperor Charles V, as he was going from Spain to Flanders. And if Muret had taught before that time in the College of Cardinal le Moine with Buchanan, he must at least have taught there in 1538, and at that time he was but fourteen Years of Age. My Observations on this long Passage are these. I. It does not appear by Buchanan's Life that he taught in any College of Paris after his Return thither upon having escaped out of the Prisons of Scotland in 1539. So that the time when he taught in Paris, if we believe his Life, precedes the Voyage that he made into Scotland with the Scotch Earl. Now after that Voyage he had a Mind to return to Paris: but was hindered by the King his Master, who made him Tutor to his Natural Son. That Prince returned from France with Queen Magdalen, whom he had married in the beginning of 1537. It is plain then that Buchanan must have left Paris to return into Scotland in the Year 1536 at latest, and consequently is is false that he taught at time with Muret in a College of Paris; for in that case Muret must have been a Schoolmaster before ten Years of Age (4). II. Mr Menage ought not to have laid it down as possible, that Muret and Buchanan taught at Paris in the Year 1538, seeing it is certain, that Buchanan was then in Scotland. III. Since he has placed the Birth of Muret in 1526, he ought not, as he does in the same Page, to make him fourteen Years of Age, in the Year 1538. IV. He ought to have said expressly that Buchanan was at Paris in the Year 1544. This is plain from his Elogy to Tasseus and Tevius mentioned by Mr Menage. V. He ought to have said that Buchanan spake of Gelida in that Elogy as of a Colleague (5), and to have drawn a Proof from thence that Buchanan taught at that time

COLLEGES
where Buchanan taught, and at what Time.

(4) Menage,
Anti-Baillet,
chap. lxxxiij,
says, that Muret
was born in 1526.

(5) Ceteraque ut
cessant, Gelidæ
piâ cura sodalis.
Et patris & pa-
trine iustinet ul-
que vicem.
Mr Menage,
pag. 332, rightly
corrects gelidæ for Gelidæ.

in the Mind of his Readers, the remembrance of some Books he had written to the taste of those who were then in Power [C]. These Books have rendered him so odious to the Roman Catholics, that to this the horrible Slanders, published by them against him, may justly be imputed. He has been defamed as the most prophane and impious Drunkard that ever lived [D], and as a Traitor, a Conspirator, time in the College of Cardinal le Moine; for it is certain, that Gelida taught in that College. VI. If, notwithstanding Buchanan's Life, I was to say, that he taught at Paris in the Year 1539, I would rather take Mr Menage's Year (6), than the time which elapsed between his Return to Paris at the raising the Siege of Metz, and that of his being made Tutor to Timoleon de Cossé, the Marthal de Brissac's Son. That Interval comprehends three Years; for he was Preceptor during five Years (7), and he quitted that Employ in the Year 1560 (8).

[C] He wrote Books — to the Taste of those who were then in Power.] We shall speak hereafter of his Dialogue concerning the Right of Kings. He wrote two other Books, which were still more agreeable to the Interests of his Faction than that. The one is the History of Scotland, in which he says many ill things of the Queen's Manners and Conduct; the other is that which he intitled Eclaircissement (9). See how Mr Varillas speaks of it. 'I ought to advertise the Curious, says he (10), that Buchanan's History of Scotland is not the worst of his Works against that Princess, and that there is another to which he durst not set his Name, more satirical, beyond all Comparison, than the other. It was not to be found in the King's Library in my time; but Mr Clement, Counsellor in the Court of Aids, lent it me out of his own Study. It is written in French, and printed at Roche in the Year 1572. For filth and foul Language no Book I ever saw comes near it; and the single Passage of the pretended Lewdness of Queen Mary Stuart, countenanced and imitated by her Maid of Honour, Mademoiselle de Reres, falls little short of those of the Ancient and Modern Authors, who have taken the greatest Liberty in defiling their Reader's Imagination.' It is needless to say, that nothing could be more agreeable to the Interests of that Queen's Enemies than Buchanan's Satires; for one of these two must have been the Cause, either that they who forced her out of her Kingdom were the greatest Villains in Nature, or that she was the most infamous of Women. These are two Scales of a Balance equally poised; you cannot load the one without lightening the other precisely to the same degree: just so whatever serves to acquit the Queen, aggravates her Enemies Guilt in the same Proportion, and whatever serves to load the Queen extenuates their Crimes in a like degree. It is certain then, that Buchanan's Satires were an Apology for his Faction, and the bitterer they were, the more they justified those who had turned out Mary Stuart. To judge of it from common prejudice, one would be apt to suspect, that a Satire of such important and necessary use, is a Fiction invented for the Interest of the Cause. But as there are real Tyrannies and Infamies which make Subjects revolt, it is not always true that the Manifesto of those who do rebel are meer Calumnies; and therefore, without listening to our prejudices, we ought impartially to examine Buchanan's Cause. Note, that in order to make the Comparison of the Scales, in equilibrium, just, we must enter into that Writer's Principles, and suppose, like him, that the King of Scotland, and they who represent the Nation, are two collateral Powers; for the Comparison would not be just in a Monarch properly so called; the Injustice of the Sovereign does not justify Revolts.

[D] He has been defamed as the most profane and impious Drunkard that ever lived.] I have already cited an Author who reproaches him with a ridiculous Voyage in a drunken Fit (11); but here is a much worse Story; he reproaches him with having had the Glass and Death between his Lips at the same instant, and with scoffing at the Ministers who exhorted him to pray to God. I shan't cut off a tittle of the Story. It is useful to let the Readers see, by sensible examples, how far the Boldness of public lying may go, when once the Impudence grows so great as to get all the Stories printed that run about the Streets. See then what Father Garasse says: 'I will tell our new Atheists the wretched end of a Man of their Belief and Humour, as to eating and drinking. It was George Buchanan, a perfect Epicure during his Life, and a perfect Atheist at his Death. This Libertine, having spent his Youth in Debauchery at Paris, and at Bordeaux, more sollicitous after the Ivy of an Alehouse, and the Bush of a Tavern, than after the Laurels of Par-nassus, and being called back to Scotland towards the latter part of his Days, to instruct the young Prince, who is at present the Most Serene King of Great Britain, continuing his gluttonous Courses, fell into a Dropsy by drinking, tho' it was said of him by way of banter, that his Distemper was, vino intercuta, not aqua intercuta. How sick so ever he was, he abstained no more from drinking Bumpers, than when he was in Health, and drank his Wine as pure as he formerly did at Bordeaux. The Physicians, who visited him by Order of the King their Master, seeing their Patient's Excess, told him plainly and angrily, that he did what he could to destroy himself, and that, in his way of living, he could not hold out above fourteen Days or three Weeks at longest. He desired them to call a Consultation to know how long he might live, in case he abstained from Wine; they did so, and the result was, that he might live five or six Years longer, if he could command himself so long; upon which he made an Answer agreeable to his humour. Get you gone, said he, with your Prescriptions, and your Course of Diet, and know, that I would rather live three Weeks and be drunk every Day, than six Years without drinking Wine; and immediately discharging his Physicians, like a desperate Man, he ordered a Hog's head of Gravy Wine to be set at his Bed's-head, resolving to see the bottom of it before he died, and behaved himself so valiantly, that he emptied it to the Lees, literally fulfilling the Contents of that pretty Epigram of Epigonus concerning a Frog, which, being fallen into a Hog's head of Wine cried out,

οὐ τίς τίνος ὕδωρ
Πίνωσι, μὰνιν σάφονα μαινόμενοι.

Alas! some drink Water, being sober mad.

When he had Death and the Glass between his Lips, the Ministers made him a Visit to settle his Mind, and prepare him to die with some Sentiments of Religion: One of them exhorted him to repeat the Lord's-Prayer; and he opening his Eyes, and looking sternly at the Minister, What is that, said he, that you call the Lord's-Prayer? The Standers by answered, That it was the Pater-noster; and that if he could not say that Prayer, they desired him at least to say some other Christian Prayer, that he might go out of the World like a good Man: As for me, said he, in his undisturbed and perfect Senses, I never knew any other Prayer than this:

Cynthia prima suis miserum me cepit ocellis
Contactum nullis ante cupidinibus.

I who to Love a Stranger e'er had been,
By Cynthia's sparkling Eyes was first enslav'd.

And scarce had he repeated ten or twelve Verses of that Elegy of Propertius, when he expired among the Glasses and Pints; so that it may truly be said of him, purpuream vomit ille animam; and such is commonly the End of all Epicures (12). We find the same Story in the Grammaticus profanus of the Jesuit Sanders. (13), who brings (14) no other

(12) Id. ibid. pag. 743.

(13) In the first Tome, pag. 104.

(14) Ibid. pag. 181.

(6) That is, from 1544, to 1545.

(7) And not ten, as Varillas affirms, Hist. de l'Herésie, lib. xxviii, pag. 143.

(8) See the Life of Buchanan.

(9) Varillas, Histoire de l'Herésie, lib. xxviii, pag. 170.

(10) Preface to the fifth Tome of the Histoire de l'Herésie.

(11) Garasse, Doctrine curieuse, pag. 50.

(8) Thuan. lib. lxxvi. pag. 445. Father L'Enfant is out in placing this Death to the 25th of April.

rator, a Slave of Impurity and Satire, and a Falsifier of History [E]. He died at Edinburgh, the eighth of September, 1582 (k). His Dialogue De jure Regni apud Scotos, with which the Protestants have so often been reproached, was the reason why some of them mention him as a Man of no Name or Consequence [F]. There is ground to doubt the Repentance, which the Annalist of Queen Elizabeth attributes to him [G]. Be that how it will, we cannot refuse him the Praise of a fine

(15) In the Remark [8], of the Article SCIOPIUS.

other Authority, than a Work, which appeared in the Year 1615, under the Title of Elixir Calvinisticum, &c. A Piece attributed to Father Garasse, as we shall see hereafter (15).

[E] And as a Traytor, a Conspirator . . . and a Falsifier of History.] These are the Slanders which his Countryman Barclay made use of to paint him out. 'Ac Buchananum quidem non solum depravatis desperatque moribus ex libero Liberi Venerique mancipium factum sunt omnes, quotquot eum probe noverunt; sed & hæreticum insignem, & mendacem historicum sacra juxta ac profana audaci conatu temerantem ostendit illud ejus opus, cui, Rerum Scotticarum historia, titulum dedit. . . . Quod cum ita sit, equi mirum videri possit, in egregium nequitie artificem evasisse eum, qui in primis juventutis annis, sceleris omnium maximo flagitiosæ vitæ rudimentum posuit? Jam vero historiam reliquam ea fide scripsit, quam in meo me pudet populari reperire: probissimos quosque lancinat maledictis, pio sper calumniâ opprimis: quod autem quisque scelerator, & promptior ad malum manu, eo pluribus ille laudibus celebratur. Quid multis? in illa ejus historia, quæ ultra Boethii nobilissimi historiographi epitomen se profert, tot mihi mendacia occurrunt, ut cum vera videam, vix vera esse, nisi cunctanter, credam. Id ipsum & alii mecum queruntur gnari temporum, quæ res gestas postremis ab eo libris mandatas continent. . . . Sed erit spero veri, patriæque amator aliquis, qui venenatum ejus styli mucronem retundet, & fraudem fide solida patefaciens incorruptos eorum temporum annales evulgabit. Hoc igitur homine relicto, qui ut viri adhuc viventes clarissimi norunt, ventri & veneri obediens, multarum in principes conjurationum fautor, quarundum etiam author, hæreseos quæ domi, quæ foris, quæ privatis, quæ publicè pertinax propagator extitit: ad Stephanum Junium Brutum venio (16). — And indeed it is not only notorious to all that knew Buchanan, that, by his depraved and abandoned Life, he was become a mean slave to Wine and Venery; but also his Book, intitled, The History of the Affairs of Scotland, shews him to have been both an egregious Heretic, and a lying Historian, audaciously corrupting sacred things as well as profane. — This being the Case, can it seem strange that he became an extraordinary Artist in Mischief, who by his flagitious Life, in his early Youth, laid a Foundation for the most consummate Wickedness? He has writ all the rest of the History with so little Fidelity, as I am ashamed to find in one of my Countrymen: the best Men he wounds with Slanders, and loads the pious with Calumny: and the more wicked and ready to mischief any one is, the more he commends him. In short, in that History of his, which is continued after the Epitome of the noble Historiographer Boethius, I find so many Lies, that when I meet with any thing that is true I am very slow in believing it to be so. The same Complaint is likewise made by others, who remembered the time when the things mentioned in this latter part of the History were transacted. But I hope there will be found some better Friend to Truth and his Country, who will blunt his poisoned Pen, expose his Frauds with solid Truth, and publish impartial Annals of those times. Leaving therefore this Man, who, as is well known to eminent Men still living, was a Slave to his Belly and Lust, an Abettor of several Conspiracies against Princes, and Author of some, an obstinate Defender of Heresy both at home and abroad, both in public and private: I come to Stephen Junius Brutus.

[F] The Protestants — have sometimes spoke of him as a Man of no Name or Consequence.] See here the Words of Mr Daillon; a French Minister, Refugee in England: 'Let them not do us the Injustice to reckon among our Doctors a Scotch Poet without any Character, who diverted himself with setting forth his Dreams on Politics (17). Another French Minister did not speak of Buchanan with that Disdain; yet he condemned him, and thought it very unjust, that That Author's Republican Maxims should be imputed to those of the Protestant Religion. 'These Maxims of Buchanan,' says he (18), and of Paræus, are not our Maxims; we have renounced them over and over, nor are they to be found in any of our authentic Writings. — They are assuredly false in the extent which these Authors give them (19). For a Man who had set up for a Prophet, he had but a very short Prospect of Futurity, as to his own Fate;

(17) Daillon, Examen de l'oppression des Reformez, pag. 11.

(18) Jorieu, Réponse à l'Histoire du Calvinisme de Maimbourg, Tom. II, pag. 287, Edit in 4to.

(19) Ibid. pag. 288.

Nescia mens hominum fati fortisque futurae,
Et servare modum rebus sublata secundis (20).

(20) Virgil. Æn. lib. X. ver. 501.

Poor mortals, blind to Fate, do never know,
To bear high Fortune, or endure the Low.

Little did he imagine, that five Years should not come about before he himself would write Pastoral Letters, filled with the Maxims of these two Authors. However it be, that Dialogue of Buchanan made a great Noise. One Adam Blackwood, of the same Country with Buchanan, and Counsellor in the Presidial Court of Poitiers, refused his Countryman as well as he could. A German, named Ninianus Vinzelus did the same. Barclay, another Scot, and much an abler Man than they, came to the Charge, and had the Malice to say, that Boucher, a Doctor of Sorbonne, had borrowed his Weapons of Buchanan, and some other Heretics (21). The Protestants of Scotland made a much more decisive Answer; for the Parliament of the Kingdom condemned that Dialogue of Buchanan, his History, and his Detectio, and forbade the Sale of them. See in the Remark [G], the Citations from Camden.

(21) Guil. Barclaius, adversus Monarchomachos, init.

[G] There is room to doubt the Repentance, which Camden attributes to him.] Let us first set down this famous Historian's Words: 'Quid Georgius Buchananus hac de re cum in historia, tum in bello, cui Detectio titulum fecit, prodidit, ex libris impressis nemo non novit. Cum autem ille partium studio & Moravii munificentia abreptus ita scripsit, ut libri isti falsitatis damnati sint ab ordinibus Regni Scotiae, quorum fidei plus tribuendum: & ipse ingemiscens coram Rege, cui fuit Pædagogus, subinde se reprehenderit (ut accepi) quod tam virulentum calum in Reginam bene meritam strinxisset, moriensque optaverit ut tantisper superscisset, donec maculas, quas maledicentia falso aspererat, revocatâ veritate, vel sanguine elueret; nisi (quod ipse dixit) hoc vanum esset, cum præ ætate delirare videretur (22). — It is well known to every Body, from the Books themselves, what George Buchanan said of this Affair, both in his History, and in his Detectio. But as he was led by Zeal for a Party, and the Munificence of the Earl of Murrays, to write in such a manner that his Books were condemned for Falsity by the Parliament of Scotland, who are more to be credited: and he has often blamed himself with Sighs (as I have heard) in the Presence of the King, whose Preceptor he was, that he had drawn so virulent a Pen against so deserving a Queen, and wished when he was dying, that he might have a little time left to wipe off the Stains which his Slanders had thrown upon her, by witnessing the Truth even with his Blood; but that (as he said) it would be to no purpose, because his Age would make People think that he doled. The same Author, under the Year 1584, speaks thus: 'Probrofa in Regem, ejus matrem, & Consiliarios scripta, nominatim vero Georgii Buchanani Historia, & de jure regni apud Scotos Dialogus, interdita ut quæ multa culpanda & delenda contineant (23). —

(22) Cambr. in Annal. Elizabethæ ad Ann. 1567. init.

(23) Idem. in Li. Ann. 1584, pag. 410.

fine Génius, and a fine Writer [H]. He has succeeded wonderfully in all kinds of Latin Verse, and has wrote very well in Prose. I cannot tell whether we ought to believe that he had been a Monk [I]. He himself says nothing of it; others affirm it; and his Silence is not a decisive Proof against them. But one may be

(24) Id. lib. ad Ann. 1582, pag. 374.

• belts on the King, his Mother, and his Counsellors, were prohibited, and particularly George Buchanan's History, and Dialogue de jure Regni apud Scotos, as containing many things which ought to be suppressed. The same Historian elsewhere assures us, that Buchanan had no regard to the Desires of those who would have had him a little before his Death to write for the Rebels Cause, and that he seemed troubled at having formerly devoted his Pen to them. 'Buchananum tamen inducere non poterant ut hoc eorum factum vel scripto libello, vel persuasione per nuntium approbaret, qui se factionum causam contra principes jam antea suscepisse, dolenter ingemuit, & paulo post obiit (24).' Who would not look upon this Testimony of Camden as solid? Yet great abatements must be made, for two Reasons; one is, that it is reported, his Manuscript was corrected to King James's Mind and Fancy, as we shall say in a proper place. The other is taken from a Marginal Note which Mr Varillas had read. Let us hear him speak: 'There are in the King's Library the five Volumes of the President Thuanus's History, in the Margins whereof the youngest of Messieurs du Puy had written with his own Hand the most curious Facts that his Brother and he had judged fit to be retrenched from it when it was printed. I have read in the Additions to the fourth Volume, that when Buchanan was ready to expire, James VI, King of Scotland, whose Preceptor he had been, made him a Visit, and advised him, for the Discharge of his Conscience, to retract what he had wrote to the Disadvantage of his Mother, Queen Mary Stuart, and that Buchanan plainly refused it (25).' Thus Mr Varillas speaks in his Preface. He touches the same Fact in the Body of the Book, but reports it otherwise: 'In the Original, says he (26), of Thuanus's History, in the place where the Death of Buchanan is spoken of, there is written with that illustrious President's own Hand, that James VI, King of Scotland, whose Preceptor Buchanan had been, honoured him with a Visit when he was at the Extremity, and pressed him to retract what he had said against the Queen his Mother. That Buchanan answered, that his Conscience did not reproach him on that Head, and that he had written the Truth.' Between such contradicting Testimonies, as that of Camden, and that in Thuanus's Margins, can any one have a reasonable Certainty of Buchanan's last Dispositions? Not in the least: Each of these Testimonies weakens the other; but we must allow that the first is without Comparison stronger than the last; that is printed; the other is but a Manuscript: The last, according to the Preface of Mr Varillas, is only in a Copy of Thuanus, but, according to the Body of the Book, it is in the Original of Thuanus: according to the Preface, it is of Mr du Puy the Younger's Hand; according to the Body of the Book, it is of Thuanus's own Hand. These Variations, and these Shufflings, maintain the Preference that Camden deserves. Add to this, that if Thuanus approved that Messieurs du Puy should retrench that Part of his History, it is a Sign that he gave no full Credit to it; for his Zeal for the Memory of Mary Stuart did not hinder his letting a hundred Things be printed which he had copied from Buchanan (27). King James reproached Thuanus's Son so sharply for it, that he threw him into a Fit of Sickness of three Months (28). I have heard a Scotch Lord say, that when Buchanan was asked on his Death-bed, Whether he did not repent of what he had written against the Authority of Kings, and in particular against the Honour of Mary Queen of Scots; he answered, I am going to a Place where there are not many Kings.

(25) Varillas's Preface of the 5th Volume of his Histoire de l'Herésie.

(26) Id. liv. xxviii, pag. 171.

(27) See Fother's Orleans's Revolutions d'Angleterre, Tom. II, pag. 490, 491.

(28) Varillas, Réponse à la Critique de Burnet, pag. 77, 78. Edit. Holl. De Hor Burnet, Défense de la Critique, pag. 62, sous le Reproche.

[H] We cannot refuse him the Praise of a fine Génius, and a fine Writer.] The way that Thuanus has taken to praise George Buchanan is admirable; Nothing could better give a great Idea of this Scotchman's Parts. His History of Scotland, says he, does not seem to be the Work of a Man who taught a School, but that of a Person employed all his Life-time in the most important Affairs of State. The Meanness of his Condition and Fortune did not hinder Buchanan from judging well of the greatest matters, and writing of them with much Prudence. He was one of those extraordinary Men, who have the Happiness not to become Pedants among the Drudgeries of the School. The Latin of Thuanus expresses this more nobly and amply; therefore I set it down. In senili otio patriam Historiam scribere aggressus est. Quam tantâ puritate, prudentia, & acumine scripsit (quamvis interdum libertate genti innatâ contra Regium fastidium acerbior) ut ea scriptio non hominem in pulvere literario versatum, sed in media hominum luce & in tractandis Reipublicæ negotiis totâ vitâ exercitatum redoleat. Adeo ingenii felicitas & animi magnitudo omnia obscuræ & humilis fortunæ impedimenta ab eo removerant, ut propterea non minus rectè de maximis rebus judicare & scribere prudenter posset. Et sanè memini P. Ronfardum virum acerrimi judicii (qui licet in dispari fortunâ constitutus, totâ vitâ scholastico otio oblectatus fuerat) cum de Buchanan, Hadr. Turnebo, Ant. Goveano, M. Ant. Mureto (quibuscum artâ amicitia conjunctus fuerat) verba faceret, dicere solitum, illos Homines nihil Pædagogicæ præter togam & pileum habuisse, & tamen de vulgo Pædagogorum sic censere, nunquam incorrigibilis ineptiæ ex Pædagogicâ contractæ characterem vel longissimi ævi curriculum deleri posse (29). — In his retirement in his old age, he undertook to write the History of his Country, which he wrote with such Purity, Judgment, and Spirit, (tho' sometimes, according to the Freedom natural to his Country, a little too sharp against the Prærogative of the King) that that Piece does not shew a Man conversant in the Dust of Schools, but in full view of mankind, and employed all his Life in transacting Affairs of State. The happiness of his Génius, and greatness of his Mind, had so removed all impediments of his low and mean Fortune, that he was not on that Account less capable of judging and writing skillfully of the greatest matters; and indeed I remember Ronfard, a Man of great Penetration, who, though in different Circumstances, had been delighted all his Life in Scholastic Amusements, when he spoke of George Buchanan, Hadrian Turnebus, Antony Govean, M. Ant. Muret, with whom he was intimately acquainted, used to say, that those Men had nothing of the Pedagogue about them besides the Gown and Cap; and yet, as to the Generality of Pedagogues, he was of Opinion, that the marks of incorrigible Pedantry, contracted from that Profession, could never be abolished in the Course of the longest Life.

[I] I cannot tell whether we ought to believe that he had been a Monk.] Mr le Laboureur affirms it in so positive a manner, that, to question it, a Man must be habituated to follow the Cartesian Maxim: Never to subscribe to any thing without an exact Examination. George Buchanan, says he (30), a Scotchman, first a Franciscan in France, afterwards Preceptor of the Count de Brissac, and a zealous Huguenot, as well known for his Vices, as esteemed for his fine Wit, if he had not devoted it to Libertinism, and for his Learning if he had not abused it, was the most cruel Enemy of the Person and Reputation of that Prince, who had screened him in that Kingdom from the Rigour of the Edicts, and snatched him, as it were, out of the Fire, and the Hands of the Executioner. He was upon the point of being condemned as an Heretic and Renegade Fryar, and she saved him. Brantome says indeed, that she saved his Life (31), but not as a Renegade Fryar. I much question Mr le Laboureur's Relation: For the first piece of Poetry, by which Buchanan provoked the Franciscans, is a Dream, where in he supposes that St Francis appeared to him to exhort

(29) Thuan. Histor. lib. lxxvi. pag. 445, 446. See also Burnet's History of the Reformation of England, Part I, lib. iii.

(30) Additions aux Mémoires de Castelnau, Tome I, pag. 546.

(31) They are Impostors who have said or writ it; and among the rest, Buchanan, in which he but ill requited the kindness the Queen had done him in France, and in Scotland, for the Favour of his Life, and discharge from his Sentence. Brantome, Elog. de Marie Stuart.

be very well assured, that he did not die an Atheist, in the manner that Mr Moreri represents [K]. This is not the only Falsity in his Dictionary concerning Buchanan [L]. Mr Varillas was not altogether so exact as is necessary in speaking of this able Man [M].

Tbuanus

(32) Buchanan, in Vita sua. That Poem is in the Collection of Pices, entitled, Frateres Fratrum.

exhort him to take the Habit of his Order (32). Durst he have feigned that he made Answer, I will not, if he had actually been a Franciscan? The Persecutions, which that first Satire drew upon him from the Franciscans, did not blunt his Pen as to them, and chiefly when his Master the King of Scotland ordered him to lash them. How comes it that they did not claim him as a Defector, when they saw him Preceptor to the King's natural Son? How happens it that they accused him only of Lutheranism? How comes it that they could only threaten him, while he taught at Bourdeaux in the Sight, and to the Knowledge of all France? Could a Renegado Fryar, and one suspected of Lutheranism, escape in France in those times from Franciscans stung with Satire. How comes it, if he was a Franciscan in France, that he durst live in Paris, and teach in the College of St Barbara? But lastly, how comes it that Buchanan, in the Hands of Portuguese Inquisitors, who used their utmost Endeavour, for above a Year together, to convict him of Heresy, did not discover that he was charged with having wickedly violated his Vows, and basely deserted the Religion of St Francis? If such a thing had been true, it could not have been kept secret, nor been difficult to prove. How comes it once again, that he came safe and found out of the Hands of these barbarous Inquisitors? When these Demands are satisfied, I may believe he was a Franciscan. Neither can I apprehend how the Queen of Scotland could have preserved him in France from the Rigour of the Edicts. Did he not live with the Marechal de Brisac till the Year 1560? Did he not dissemble his Sentiments on the Head of Religion? Did he not forbear discovering them openly till he came into Scotland? What's most probable is, that That Queen annulled the Sentence that had been passed upon him in the Year 1539, after he had escaped out of Prison. This was certainly the only Favour that Brantome meant.

(33) Histoire de l'Heref, lib. xxviii, pag. 122.

Mr Varillas says (33), that Buchanan was a Franciscan in 1539, when he was imprisoned upon Account of Heresy; that, coming very young into France, he took the Habit of St Francis there; that from thence he went to Portugal, and there discovered the first Signs of his being a Lutheran; that he was eighteen Months in Prison there, and got off by abjuring Lutheranism; that he returned into his own Country; that upon his Relapse he was put into the King's Prison; that he would have been condemned to be burnt, if he had not had the Ingenuity to make his Escape out at a Window, and that he relates the Particulars pleasantly (34). This is a continual Series of Lies. It was almost ten Years, before he escaped out of the Prisons of Scotland, that he went to Portugal. I leave the Care of correcting the other Faults to the Reader.

(34) He says but few Words, upon it, and that without any kind of Merriment.

[K] He did not die an Atheist in the manner that Mr Moreri relates. This is what he says; 'The King sent his Physicians to him, whom he refused to see; and he treated a Minister no better, who found him busy reading Pliny's Natural History. The Minister would have given him the Bible, but Buchanan, rejecting it with great Indignation, Go, said he, shewing him Pliny's History, I find more Truth in this Book than in all your Scriptures. Thus that Atheist ended his Days, and all Scotland has witnessed this Fact.' Some Lies cannot be read without Indignation; but as for this, it is more fit to excite Laughter than Anger. All Scotland has witnessed this Fact. Can any Man cite so much as one grave Author supported by any tolerable Proofs? I should not think I risked very much, if I defied all Mr Moreri's Friends to do this. And indeed, if that fine Story had the least Ground, Spondanus, who is not himself when he speaks of Buchanan, would not have failed to have adopted it. I find something like it in the Calendar of Father P Enfant, a Jacobin Fryar (35), who quotes the Chronological Treasure of Peter of St Romuald; but he does not say, That all Scotland has testified that Fact, but that all Scotland can attest it (36). This last Expression is more tolerable than the former.

[L] It is not the only Falsity in his Dictionary concerning Buchanan. Mr Moreri affirms, I. That Buchanan took the Habit of St Francis: I do not believe any thing of it (37). II. That he was convicted of a Design to eat the Paschal Lamb, after the manner of the Jews, and condemned to be burnt. Spondanus reports the same thing, but in stronger Terms; for he affirms that Buchanan was taken in the Fact, eating the Paschal Lamb, after the manner of the Jews, with some others in the time of Lent: Quod cum aliis quibusdam agnum Pascalem more & ritu Judaico tempore Quadragesimæ comedere repertus fuisset (38). If this had been true, they would not have let him live three Years in Bourdeaux, nor come out of the Prisons of the Inquisition in Portugal. III. That, having escaped the Punishment of Fire by Flight, he came into France, where he taught a considerable time at Paris, in the College of Cardinal le Moine, and elsewhere. It is certain, that, when he had escaped out of the Prisons of Scotland, he durst not stay in Paris, for fear of Cardinal Beton, and that he went to Bourdeaux. Ut Lutetiam venit Cardinale Betonum pessime erga se animatum ibi legatione fungi comperit. Itaque ejus iræ se subtraxit, Burdegalam invitante Andrea Goveano profectus (39). — WHEN he came to Paris he found Cardinal Beton, his inveterate Enemy, on an Embassy there. Therefore he withdrew himself from his Anger, and went to Bourdeaux, at the Invitation of Andrew Goveanus. See the Remark [B]; you will there find, that if he ever taught in the College of Cardinal le Moine, it was not 'till after he had taught three Years at Bourdeaux; and thus Moreri's Narrative is defective.

(35) This I call what the Author entitles, Histoire generale de tous les siecles de la nouvelle loi. This Work is in 6 Tomes in 12mo, printed at Paris, 1683.

(36) Under the 25th of April, pag. 347.

(37) See my Reasons in the Remark [I].

(38) Spondan. Annal. Ecclési. ad Ann. 1539, n. 7. He cites David Cameracensis Scot. lib. iv, cap. ii. Lang. in vit. Calvin. cap. i.

(39) Buchan. in vita sua.

[M] Mr Varillas was not altogether so exact as is necessary in speaking of this able Man (40). If he had been so on such a Subject as this, we should have had great Reason to wonder at it. We had seen Authors before him, says he (41), who wrote Satires against crowned Heads, and caused them to be printed in their Life-time, or gave them to their Friends to publish them after their Death, but we had not 'till then seen any, who, after having declared himself against his Sovereign Lady, so far as to go into England to depose as a Witness against her, in the criminal Process then depending, had continued to persecute her after she was beheaded; yet this is a Crime which they, who are most partial in favour of Buchanan, must own he was guilty of. Mr Varillas finds some Singularities in the most ordinary Conduct. Never was any Prince judicially dethroned or beheaded by a People, who have Authors among them, without their having first published a thousand scurrilous things against him. Reason will have it so; for they, who proceed to such Extremities, ought at least to testify to the World, that they desire it may be thought they had Reason to act so: And how could they do this, if they scrupled to publish that Prince's ill Life? So that Buchanan did no more than go on in the beaten Road. He must not be censured for printing the History of Mary after her Death; for if he was in the right in other Respects, that is, if he advanced nothing but the Truth, he would have been very much to blame in suppressing it. This would have been sacrificing living Innocency to a Crime punished with Death (42); it would have been sparing the Memory of a guilty Queen at the Expence of two Nations. Mr Varillas is deceived, then, both as to the Fact and as to the Right. As to the Fact, since he says, that never any Example of Buchanan's Conduct was seen. As to the Right, seeing he condemns a Conduct which in case of

(40) Preface to the 5th Tome of the Histoire de l'Heref.

(41) Add to this what is said in the Remark [I].

(42) See the Remark [C], at the end.

Thuanus informs us of a Particular, which my Readers will be glad to find in this Place [N].

Fidelity in the Historian, is entirely agreeable to Order and right Reason. But his strangest Mistake of all is, his pretending that Buchanan, who died five Years before the Queen of Scotland was beheaded, continued to persecute her after she was beheaded, and that this is a Crime, his greatest Friends dare not deny. No Man in Scotland, says he (43), was more devoted to Queen Mary Stuart than he, till she ceased to be fortunate. To me it seems that Mr Varillas stretches a little too much, and yet it is true, that Buchanan did at first follow that Queen's Party, and praised her highly at the Head of his Translation of the Psalms. Mr Varillas says (44), That the Earl of Murray offered him one of the best Places in Scotland, which was that of Keeper of the Privy Seal, on Condition he would assist him to destroy Queen Mary Stuart. This I once thought an Hyperbole, as well as the Primacy which others say was promised Buchanan (45); but I now know that he was Keeper of the Privy Seal, a very considerable Place in Scotland. In the Preface of Francis I, Mr Varillas observes, That they had horribly calumniated Mary of Lorraine, Queen of Scotland, and that all Authors, who spoke of her, had let themselves loose against her, on the bare Deposition of an ungrateful Person (46), to whom she had given his Life. He adds, that he has vindicated the Reputation of that Princess. Here are at least two Faults; for it is no where said of that Queen, that she saved the Historian Buchanan's Life; and a Princess is not justified against the Calumnies of an Historian, when it is declared, that nothing shall be said in her Justification which that Historian does not agree to. Now this is what Mr Varillas declares with reference to Buchanan (47).

[N] Thuanus informs us of a Particular, which my Readers will be glad to find in this Place.] Thuanus relates, That Elias Vinetus received Letters every Year from Buchanan by Scotch Merchants, who came to load Wine at Bourdeaux. Vinetus shewed these Letters to Thuanus, who observed a great deal of Courage in the last, tho' it was wrote with a trembling Hand. Buchanan complained there not so much of the Inconveniences of Old-age, as of the Weariness of his long Life: De senectutis incommodis non tam querebatur, quam de vitæ longioris tædio (48). He said, that he had left the Court, and was retired to Sterling, where he endeavoured only one thing, which was to shake off the Company of those who were not like himself, with as little Noise as possible. He meant the Living, and looked upon himself as dead. Interea hoc unum satago, ut quam minimo cum strepitu ex inæqualium meorum hoc est mortuorum & vivorum contubernio demigrem (49). His greatest Enemies cannot deny but that he was in his Life, once, at least, a Philosopher, for such Sentiments as these would not be disowned either by the Stoics or by the Brachmans, unless perhaps in regard of some small Accessories.

(47) Hist. de François I, liv. xi, pag. 118, 119.

(48) Thuan. de Vita sua, lib. ii, pag. 118. ad Ann. 1582.

(49) Id. ibid.

BUDÆUS (WILLIAM), in French BUDÉ, born at Paris, in the Year 1467, and descended from an ancient and illustrious Family [A], was one of the most learned Men of his Time in France. It may be said that he began to study somewhat late; for although he was sent early enough to Schools to learn Latin, and afterwards to the University of Orleans, to study the Law, yet he hardly knew any thing at his return from Orleans, where he had passed three Years. The Barbarousness, which reigned at that time in Colleges, was the cause of his going to Orleans without understanding the Latin Authors, and the want of understanding them hindered his making any Progress in the Civil Law [B]. After he returned to his Father's House he lost much more Time: He spent his Days in hunting, and the Pleasures of Youth, but quitted them after some Years, and had such an Inclination for Learning, that the Ardour, wherewith he applied himself to Study, is not to be expressed. He denied himself all kind of Diversions, and grudged even the necessary Hours for his Meals and Sleep. On the very Day of his Wedding, he withdrew from the Company at least three Hours, to spend them with [A] Budæus born at Paris in the Year 1467, descended from an ancient and illustrious Family.] Lewis le Roi, the only Author whom I have followed, does not set down the Year of his Birth; but as he says, that Budæus died the Twenty third of August, 1540, in his Seventy third Year, he gives me a Right to place his Birth in the Year 1467. Moreri's Dictionary has a very gross Fault. There Budæus's Birth is placed in the Year 1476 (1), and his Death on the 26th of August 1540. Yet he is made to live Seventy three Years.

What we find concerning his Genealogy, in the Work of Mr Guichenon is this: 'John Budé, Esq; Lord of Verace, who signalized himself at the Battle of Pontcharra, where he was Lieutenant of a Company of Gendarmes, belonging to the Lord Briquemaut, in the Year 1501 ---- was Issue of that ancient Family of the Budés, Lords of Ierre, Villiers on the Marne, Marly, Troissy, la Motte, St Loup, and other Places, which takes Place among the best Families of the Isle of France, and of Paris; for he was the Son of another John Budé, Esq; Lord of Verace, and of Mary de Jouan, Daughter of Rogerin de Jouan, Esq; Lord of Jonvilliers in Beauce: The said John Budé was Son of William Budé, Knight, Lord of Marly and Villeneuve, Counsellor and Master of the Requests to the great King Francis, and of Roberta le Lyeur, Daughter of Roger le Lyeur Lord of Bois-benard, and Malemain, and Isabella de Lailly. ---- This William ---- was Son of John Budé, Lord of Ierre, of Villiers on the Marne, and of Marly, and of Catherine le Picart, Daughter of John le Picart, Lord of Platteville, Sirey, and la Boisselière, and of Catherine de Poncher, Daughter of Francis de Poncher, Knight and Chamberlain to the Kings, John, Charles V, and Charles VI, Bailiff of Touraine, and of Margaret de Dormans: And the said John Budé, Lord of Ierre, was Son of Dreux Budé, Lord of the same Places; and the said Dreux Budé, Son of another Dreux Budé, Lord of Villiers on the Marne, and of Ierre, and this Dreux Budé was Son of John Budé, who lived under Charles V (2).

VOL. II.

[B] He went to Orleans without understanding the Latin Authors, and his Ignorance in them hindered him from making any Progress in the Civil Law.] 'Quo in Gymnasio triennium versatus operam pene omnem perdidit. Neque enim ignarus Latine Linguae & ab aliis disciplinis imparatus artem illam reconditam & multiplicem subtilemque cui sese dederat cognitione & scientia poterat comprehendere (3). ---- In which University he spent three Years, and lost most of his time. For as he was ignorant of the Latin Tongue, and unprovided with any other Literature, he could not learn nor comprehend that abstruse, extensive, and subtle Art, to which he had applied himself.'

A a a

[C] He

(2) Guichen. Hist. de Bretagne, Part. III, pag. 251, 252.

(3) Lud. Regius in Vita Budæi initio.

(43) Varillas's Preface to the 5th Tome of the Hist. de l'Herce.

(44) Ibid.

(45) Spe inductus à Moravio si hic regno potiretur, se in Patriarchum assumendum. Strada de bello Belg. Decad. II, lib. viii, ad Ann. 1587, pag. 158. Father Caussin says the same in his Holy Court.

(46) Buchanan.

(1) This Fault is originally a Fault of the Press. The Transposition of a single Figure has changed 1467 into 1476.

with his Books. It was in vain to tell him that he would impair his Health [C], and slip Opportunities of making his Fortune: Nothing was able to abate his Ardour. The vast Learning he acquired by addicting himself so closely to Study, would be less matter of Wonder, had he had good Masters who might at least have served for Guides; or if he had had Companions whose Parts had given him, together with a great Emulation, an instructive Parallel: But he found none whose Disciple he could be [D], nor any one to keep up with him in that Career. So that it may be said, he studied only under himself [E]. One of the things he studied with the greatest Application, was the Greek Tongue, and he begun it when he had a mind to give public Marks of the Progress he had made in Learning: For the first Work he published, is a Translation of some Treatises of Plutarch. He afterwards published his Notes on the Pandects [F], and then his Treatise de Affectu, &c. The Glory of being the first who cleared the nice Matter concerning the Coins and Measures of the Ancients, had been contested with him [G], but he shewed that they should not easily wrest that Crown from him. How great

foever

[C] He applied himself so closely to study - - - that he was told that he would impair his Health. Some very ingenious Persons pretend that the Event shewed the Vanity of those Threats, and that he preserved his Health entire (4). But others say, that he fell into a long and tedious Sickness, and that a Head-ach, which returned every Day, obliged the Physicians to order him a kind of Trepanning (5). The Operation was very painful, but very unsuccessful. 'In gravem & diuturnum morbum est prolapsus, quo annos plus viginti ita afflicatus est, ut omnis prope hilaritas e fronte, alacritas ex animo, festivitas in occurfu, urbanitas & comitas in convictu eximeretur, ingravescent quoque indies literarum amor infringeretur, ne vestigium quidem ejus nec simulachrum, sed quedam effigies spirantis mortui appareret (6). - - - He fell into a grievous and lingering Distemper, with which he was afflicted for above twenty Years; so that he lost all his Cheerfulness of Countenance, Alacrity of Mind, Pleasants in Address, Civility and Mildness in Conversation, and even his growing Love of Learning was quite overcome; so that there remained not the least Sign or Likeness of the Man, but a kind of Effigy of a breathing dead Man.' It is no wonder that such long and stubborn Indispositions should make him chagrin, and produce so many Alterations in his Body and Mind.

[D] He found no Body whose Disciple he could be. Some Limitation must be given to these general Terms; for it is certain that George Hermonymus, a Native of Lacedemon, John Lascaris, and James Faber of Etaples, had taught our William something. As soon as he heard that Hermonymus was arrived at Paris, he secured him to himself by a great Salary: 'Quem Budæus nactus magna mercede conductum ad se accersivit, & antequam dimitteret amplius quingentis nummis aureis donavit (7). - - - Whom when Budæus found, he agreed with him for a large Salary, and took him to his House, and before he discharged him gave him above Five hundred Pieces of Gold.' Hermonymus read Homer, and other principal Authors to him; but as he did not understand them himself, so he was not able to explain them. 'Huic Græco cum aliquot annos operam dedisset, & eo prælegente audivisset Homerum authoremque alios insignes, nihilo doctior est factus. Neque enim præceptor ille plura docere quam sciret poterat (8). - - - When he had studied some Years under this Greek, and had heard him read Homer, and other noted Authors, he was not a whit the better; for the Master could not teach him more than he knew.' John Lascaris came to Paris a little after. He conceived a great Esteem for Budæus, seeing him inclined to the Greek Tongue; but he gave him only twenty Lessons in all (9). James Faber taught him the Mathematics; but the Scholar apprehended with so much Ease all that the Master proposed, that he quickly drained him of all his Knowledge. The latter, though he was largely paid for his Lessons, was sooner weary of teaching, than the other of being taught. 'Mathematicas disciplinas a Jacobo Fabro nobili Philosopho didicit: ad quas tantum ingenii & alacritatis initio attulit, ut evolare non excurrere videretur. Itaque dum Faber multa proponit, Budæus omnia assequitur, eò res venit, ut prius ille docendo defatigaretur, eisi magnam mercedem accipiebat, quam hic discendo. Neminem præterea audivit (10).

[E] It may be said, that he studied only under himself. He represented the two notable Circumstances of his Studies in Greek Words; the one that he begun them late; the other, that he had no Masters; I say he represented them, by the Terms of αὐτομαθὴς τὸ καὶ ἐξήμαθὴς, in a Letter he wrote to Erasmus, which was shewed to Cutbort Tonsal (11). He afterwards wrote a Letter to the latter, wherein he made him a pretty long Description of his manner of studying. He owns, that after his Return from the University of Orleans, he passed some Years in doing nothing, but what young Folks do who know nothing. 'Domum reverfus salutem dixi literis, studiis utique indulgens juventutis illiteratæ, quoad post aliquot annos intra paternos parietes clam studere mecum ipse institui (12). He says in another place, that besides those two Things, there was a third which obliged him to apply himself extraordinarily to study; to wit, that he had not much Penetration. 'Omnia majorem in modum facere atque etiam maximum mihi necesse erat homini nec ingenio felici prædito, & qui in adolescentiæ clausula non dico discipulus, sed tantum tyrunculus hujus studii esse coepissem, & vero gentilis illius Aristippi qui Metrodidactus adpellatus est: denique qui à memet ipso omnia mutuarer, si quidem nullus erat unde rogare possem (13). - - - I was obliged to labour the harder in every thing, even very hard, not being a Man of a happy Genius; and becoming, I will not say a Scholar, but a Beginner in these kind of Studies, not till my Youth was almost spent, and also a-kin to Aristippus, who was called Metrodidactus; and in short took every thing from myself, having no body to enquire of.'

[F] He published Notes on the Pandects. That is to say, on the Twenty four first Books of the Pandects. The Epistle dedicatory to the Chancellor of France, Joannes Deganauius, John de Ganay, is dated at Paris, the fourth of November 1508. Badius published an Edition in 1530, corrected and augmented; he had printed the Sequel of that Work in the Year 1528.

[G] The Glory of being the first who cleared the Coins and Measures of the Ancients was contested with him. An Italian, called Leonardus Portius, pretended to have the only rightful Title to that Glory; as soon as Budæus heard of it, he was down-right angry, and declared, he was indebted to no living Person for what he had published on that matter, and that Portius had pirated him. 'Quod cum est ad Budæum allatum, graviter exarsit, quod nihil tam præter opinionem accidisset, quam ut depelleretur de ejus laudis possessione, quam caducam & vacuum primum bona fide occupasset, & fine cuiusquam injuria quasi usucepisset. Igitur vehementissimè animi, ingenii, virium, contentione jus suum defendit, atque hoc ipsum palam testatus est, à nullo se unquam homine duntaxat qui viveret, his de rebus quas tradidisset, quicquam didicisse vel fando vel legendo: tantumque abesse ne quid à Portio acceperit, ut omnia quæ sub nomine Portii ad eam prodierant, illa uno eodem continuato perpetuoque

(4) See Enfans célèbres par leurs études, Article LXXXVIII, Paragraph 10.

(5) Lud. Regius in Vita Budæi, pag. 50, 51.

(6) Id. ibid.

(7) Ibid. pag. 38.

(8) Ibid.

(9) Ibid. pag. 39. See also Budæus's Letter to Tonsal; it is the 30th of the 2d Book of those of Erasmus, pag. 155.

(10) Lud. Reg. in Vita Budæi, pag. 39.

(11) It is the 11th of the 1st Book, pag. 32.

(12) Epist. xxx. lib. ii. Erasmus, pag. 155.

(13) Budæus de Philologia, lib. i. Operum Tom. I, pag. 35.

soever the Services are that he did the Republic of Letters by his Writings, we may affirm that it is not on that account that it is most obliged to him. He behaved himself in such a manner, that his great Learning did not render him odious to the Inquisitors; so that his Reputation remaining sound and entire, was a powerful Protection to Literature, which many endeavoured to stifle in the Birth, as the Mother and Nurse of Opinions which did not please the Court of Rome [H]. He was perpetuoque furto essent ex suo Assé translata. Ac æmulo illi sempiternam notam ac ignominiam inussisset, nisi intercessissent amici (14). — When Budæus heard this he was extremely angry, for nothing could have happened more contrary to his Expectation, than that this Honour should be taken from him, which he fairly took Possession of when it was decayed, and belonged to no body, and had obtained as it were by Prescription without Injury to any body. And therefore he defended his Right with exceeding Warmth and Vigour, and publicly declared, that he had not learnt from any Man living, either by Discourse or Reading, any thing at all relating to what he had writ, and that he was so far from taking any thing from Portius, that all that had been printed under the Name of Portius, on that Subject, was one entire and absolute Transcript from his Book de Assé. And he would have branded his Rival with a Mark of perpetual Infamy, if Friends had not interposed. John Lascaris, who was a Friend to both, hindered that Quarrel from going any further, and, by dint of Intreaty, obtained that Budæus should not insert in the second Edition the sharp Discourse that he had made against Portius. The Author confessed, when the Heat of his Anger was over, that he had been too passionate; and this made him resolve never to be moved more by the Attacks which might be made on him. He let People say what they pleased, and peaceably suffered Agricola to assume what share he pleased in that Honour (15).

(14) Lud. Regius in vita Budæi, pag. 61.

(15) Ibid. pag. 64.

At the time that he writ his Book of The Institution of a Prince, he had only received some Applause for his Work de Assé. He gloried in it, but without exceeding the Bounds of Modesty. As he expressed himself in a manner that may serve for a Pattern to other great Persons, I shall make no difficulty to recite his own Words, though his Style is somewhat harsh. 'A vostre tresdesiré & tresheureux advenement à la tresnoble Couronne de FRANCE, (he addresses himself to Francis I) qui fut le jour des Calendes de Janvier. — Je parachevay & mis en avant & evidence, le livre des poix & mesures, nombres, monnoyes, & toute la maniere de compter des anciens tant Grecs, que Latins, auquel j'ay monstré & estimé les richesses des grands Royaulmes, Principautés, Dominations, & Empires, dont les Histoires font mention. Et le tout réduit à la monnoye de present. Et en ce faisant, ay esclarcy & interpreté grand nombre de lieux & passages, sans rien obmettre à mon pouvoir & sçavoir tant es histoires, que es autres Auteurs Grecs & Latins. Lesquelz au paravant estoient mal entenduz, combien que plusieurs gens sçavants s'en fussent mis en effect: & pense qu'il me sera permis, d'en dire ce petit mot, sans aucune arrogance, puis que aucuns plus sçavants que moy estrangers, & autres le confessent, ainsi que aucuns de leurs Livres le tesmoignent, qui par cela ont esté depuis publiés par impression. Et en cela seulement je me vouldroye maintenir avoir mieulx sçait, ou par adventure mieulx remonstré en cest endroit, que les autres. Car j'ay esté tout seul opinant de celle matiere contre tous ceulx, qui paravant moy ont escript, & mesmes depuis cent ans, ou au moins tout autrement qu'ilz n'ont fait. Qui a esté la cause & le moyen du grand labeur, & du temps de quinze moye que j'ai occupé à entendre & escrire celle matiere, & la mener jusques à resolution finale, & conclusion du Livre (16). — Nul ne s'est encore depuis apparu, qui en ce m'ayt ouvertement contredit. Mais y en a (comme dict est) qui l'ont expressément approuvé: combien que au reste des choses concernantes le fait des bonnes lettres, je me reputé moindre que les autres, ainsi que la raison le veult, & ma congnoissance le juge: Et mesmement que ceulx mesmes, contre lesquelz j'ay esté d'opinion contraire en ceste matiere. Car (16) Budæus of The Institution of a Prince, chap. 45. pag. 186.

je confesse avoir beaucoup appris d'eulx en autres choses, comme de gens de souveraine science & industrie. Dont la plus part sont allés de vie, à trespas. Mais un homme moyen en intelligence de sçavoir, & moindre que mediocre, comme je suis, peult bien surmonter un grand & excellent homme en une intention, en laquelle il s'est fort addonné, jacoit ce que en autres choses il ne soit egal à luy (17). — At the time of your most desired and happy Accession to the most noble Crown of FRANCE (he addresses himself to Francis I) which was on the first of January. — I finished and published my Book on Weights, Measures, Numbers, Coins, and the several ways of accounting among the Ancients, both Greeks and Latins, in which I have shown, and made an Estimate of, the Riches of the great Kingdoms, Principalities, Dominions, and Empires, mentioned by Historians, and reduced the whole to the Money of the present Time. In the Course of the Work I have cleared up, and interpreted a great many Places and Passages, omitting nothing in my Power, either in the Historians, or the other Greek and Latin Authors; which before were not well understood, though several learned Men had attempted them: and I believe I shall be allowed to say thus much without Arrogance, since both Foreigners and others, more learned than myself, own it, as some of their Books since printed testify. And it is in this only that I would insist that I have done better, or given clearer Explications in this particular, than others. For I was single in my Opinion of this Matter, contrary to, or, at least, widely differing from all who had writ before me, even for a hundred Years. For which reason, it has cost me a great deal of Labour, and fifteen Months time to understand and write these matters, and bring the Work to a Conclusion. — No body has hitherto appeared since, who has openly contradicted me; but there are some (as has been said) who have expressly given their Approbation of it. Notwithstanding, in other things relating to Literature, I think myself inferior to many others, as in reason I ought, and my own Understanding tells me I am, even than some whose Opinions I have contradicted in this Matter. For I confess I have learned a great deal from them in other things, as being Men of superior Learning and Industry. The greatest part of them are dead and gone. But a Man of moderate Understanding and Learning, as I am, and less than ordinary, may easily surmount great and excellent Men in a Design to which he has applied himself very much, though in other respects he be in no wise equal to them.

(17) Id. Ibid. pag. 187.

[H] His Reputation was a powerful Protection to Literature, which many endeavoured to stifle in the Birth, as the Mother and Nurse of Opinions, which did not please the Court of Rome. It is better, for some Reasons, to explain this in Lectus le Roi's Words than my own. Cum in maximis, says he (18), opinionum procellis & turbulentissimis tempestatibus ingens Græcæ linguæ conflata esset invidia, quod harum stirps, & semen malorum omnium videretur, cum odii faces undique ab improbis præferrentur, cum in perturbatione veteris disciplinæ spem haberent inimici ad elegantiam literarum non dignitatem modo extinguendam (19), sed etiam gloriam per principes viros infringendam, cum in his alperitatibus rerum eruditii plerique de religione suspecti haberentur, nec satis essent inter imperitorum greges tuti: hic solus non modo integra mente, verum etiam existimatione permansit. Nihil in ejus vita aut in oratione quicquam potuit invenire, quod jure reprehenderet. Quod labenti rei literarum certissimum præsidium attulit. Nisi enim is contigisset orbe politici doctrinæ quasi legitimus tutor, qui eam apud Principem, in senatu, in concionibus exagitata tueretur, ac tantisper dum invidia confideret,

(18) Lud. Regius in Vita Budæi, pag. 83.

(19) Compare with this Erasmus's Letter, cited above in the Remark [I] of the Article BORE (CATHETERINE DE).

was mightily admired by the Court of France [I], as soon as his Learning was known; but he forbore going to Court as much as possible, till he discovered Francis the First's Inclination for Learning. It was when the Court was at Ardes, at the time of the Interview between that Prince and the King of England, that Francis I ordered our William Budæus first to attend him [K]. From that time forward

'deret, domi septem teneret liberali custodia, atque à sceleratorum hominum impetu prohiberet, haud dubiè nostris finibus coacta esset excedere.

— In the greatest Storms, and turbulent Tempests of Opinions, when the Greek Tongue was extremely ill thought of, as seeming to be the Source and Fountain of all these Evils; when wicked Men every where studied to throw an Odium on it; when the Enemies of ancient Learning had hopes in the Confusion, not only to extinguish the Elegance and Dignity of Literature, but also to destroy its Reputation by help of great Men, and in that uneasy State of Affairs, many learned Men were suspected of Heresy, and were scarce safe among the ignorant Multitude: He alone stood untainted either in Mind or Reputation. No Man could find any thing blame worthy in his Life or Discourse, which proved a powerful Protection to the falling State of Literature. For had not he appeared as a lawful Guardian of abandoned polite Literature, to defend it with the King, in the Senate, and public Assemblies, and generously taken it home and kept it a while there, under cover, from malicious Men till Envy was quieted, it would certainly have been driven out of our Country.

[I] He was much admired by the Court of France.] He was known there before the Death of Charles VIII. That Prince, having heard that Budæus was a very learned Man, was desirous to see him, and ordered him to come to Court; but did not live long enough to advance him. He informs us of this himself. 'A Carolo ego commodum in aulam accersitus fueram, cum ille repentino casu sublatus est: exierat jam rumusculus quidam studiorum meorum qui ad eum permanerat nihil minus me agente (20). — I had been called to Court by King Charles, when he was suddenly taken off: Some Report had been spread of my Learning, which reached his Ears, while I thought nothing at all of it.' Guy of Rochefort, Chancellor of France, procured that Honour for our Budæus, as is observed in the eighty ninth Page of his Life. Lewis XII, Successor of Charles VIII, employed Budæus twice on Embassies into Italy, and afterwards made him one of his Secretaries. 'De maximis rebus legatum in Italiam misit cum aliquot proceribus suis: quibus in legationibus sic fidem suam, diligentiam, ingenium regi probavit, ut magnam gratiam ab eo ipso iniret, ac paulo mox in scribarum regiorum numerum adscriberetur (21). — He sent him, with some of the Nobility, Ambassador into Italy on very important Affairs; in which Embassies he gave the King such proofs of his Fidelity, Diligence, and Ability, that he was taken into great Favour, and was soon after made one of the King's Secretaries.' He would have been made Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris, had he not chose to husband his time for his Studies, rather than engage in an Office that would have occasioned too great a Diversion.

[K] It was when the Court was at Ardes, — that Francis I ordered him to attend him the first time.] I do not think myself in the wrong, in generally following this Rule, That an Author who, writes the Life of a Man, is more to be relied on, than they who only mention him occasionally. Yet this does not hinder me from believing, that, in certain Cases, we ought to prefer what we read in other Books, before that which we find in a written Life: I give an Example of it in this Remark. Lewis le Roi does not only not say, that Francis I sent William Budæus to Rome to negotiate with Pope Leo X, but expressly remarks that Budæus was not sent for to the Court of Francis I, before that Prince was at Ardes to confer with the King of England: 'PRIMUM evocatus Ardeam, quem in locum rex quoque Britannorum Henricus convenerat, cum tanti conventus splendore excitatus, tum admirabili fama incredibilium

virtutum sui principis incensus, sanè quam libenter regis imperio obtemperavit, atque eo magis quod virtutis, & literarum ergo se intelligebat accersiri

(22). — He was first called by the King to (22) Ibid. pag. Ardes, whither Henry, King of Great Britain, 90.

was also come to a Conference; excited by the Splendor of so great an Appearance, and animated with the extraordinary Fame of the incredible Virtue of his Prince, he very gladly obeyed, and the rather because he understood that he was sent for on Account of his Virtue and Learning.' The Interview of Ardes happened in the Year 1520. It would therefore be false, according to Lewis le Roi, that our William negotiated for Francis I, with Leo X, in the Year 1515. Yet I dare not dispute the Embassy which Mr Varillas mentions: under the Year 1515. 'Budæus was not unskilful in Negotiations, although he had lived at Paris without any other Conversation but that of his Books. The Academy of Rome, which had never been so polite since the Age of Augustus, as it was at that time, gave him an extraordinary Reception, and he quickly acquired the Familiarity of the Pope, because he excelled chiefly in the Knowledge of the Greek Antiquities, which the Pope himself pretended to (23). The same Author adds, that the Objections, which the Pope made, supplied Budæus with a Field large enough to shew his profound Learning, and that the Pope who desired nothing more than to prolong the Negotiation, and conclude nothing, took care not to interrupt him, or make him perceive the Digressions in which he engaged himself intently, but on the contrary, his Holiness created from time to time new Occasions for them.' Add to this, what he says in his Preface; 'Budæus's Example serves admirably to shew that a Person is not the more fit to negotiate nice Affairs, because he is one of the most learned of his Age: And I ought to receive Thanks for having remarked this, if it were only for the Rarity of the Matter.' But how could Mr Varillas say, That Budæus had lived in Paris without any other Conversation than that of his Books, if the two Embassies under Lewis XII be true? Does not he make it plainly appear, that he was not only ignorant of what Lewis le Roi said, but also of what Budæus insinuates? Budæus represents to Cuthbert Tinsal, how he had managed himself in his Studies; he owns he had seen divers learned Persons in Italy, and adds that he had no leisure to be acquainted with them, because he was charged with public Affairs. 'Interim bis Romam ad urbemque infignes Italie, doctos ubi homines per transennam vidi potius quam audivi, & literarum meliorum Professores tanquam à limine salutavi, quantum scilicet homini licuit Italiam raptim peragranti nec libera legatione (24). — In the mean time I went twice to Rome, and the most noted Cities of Italy, where I had a slight Glance of the learned Men rather than heard them, paid my Respects to the Professors of Literature at their Doors, as it were, as much as a Man could do, who passed through Italy in a hurry, and confined by an Embassy.' Lastly, I observe, that he was become a Courtier of Francis the First's Court, before that Prince's Interview with Henry VIII. This appears from a Letter of Erasmus, dated in February 1519 (25), wherein he writes to Budæus; 'Quomodo tibi successerit expeditio quemadmodum vocas aulica partem ex tuis ad Ludovicum Vivem literis intellexi. — How your Court Expedition, as you call it, succeeded, I partly learn from your Letter to Ludovicus Vives.' It appears yet more plainly from a Letter of Budæus, wherein he speaks of a Journey he was to take with Stephen Poncher, newly promoted to the Archbishopric of Sens. 'Episcopus Parisiensis jam Senonensis Archiepiscopus factus est liberalitate regia, est nondum res peracta est. Totus jam est aula, nec nobis licet cum eo loqui.

(23) Varillas, Histoire de François I, lib. 3, pag. 32. He cites in the Margin, in the Negotiation of Budæus, Master of Requests, and Library-Keeper to the King, with Leo X, in 1515. Sammarthianus in his Elagies, pag. 6, speaks thus. Vir tanta animi contentione Musis operatus à civilibus interim negociis & Reipubl. cura non abfuit. Nam & à Francisco primo in aulam sepe accersitus & Romanæ de belli societate cum Leone summo Pontifice adversus Cæsarem & Helvetios contrahenda unâ cum aliquot regni proceribus ab eodem principe legatus est. He says nothing of Embassies under Lewis XII.

(24) Epistol. Erasmi xxx, lib. ii, pag. 156.

(25) The note of the 3d Book, pag. 262.

(20) Budæus de Philologia, lib. 1.

(21) Lud. Regius in Vita Budæi, pag. 88.

forward he took pleasure in hearing him discourse; he committed his Library to him, and gave him a Place of Master of Requests. At the same time the Town-House of the City of Paris, elected him Provost of the Merchants. He was one of the chief Promoters of the Design, which Francis I. afterwards executed, of founding Professorships at Paris for the Languages and Sciences. He had a Difference with Anthony du Prat, Chancellor of France, which was the reason why he appeared no oftener at Court than his Place required; but the time came when he was seldom any where else; for his good Friend Poyet was promoted to the Office of Chancellor, and would have Budæus almost constantly with him. The excessive heats of the Year 1540 obliged Francis I. to make a Progress to the Coasts of Normandy, in hopes of finding a cooler Air. Budæus went that Progress, and fell into a Fever, which made him earnestly with himself at home: He had his Wish, but did not recover; he only had the Satisfaction of dying amidst his own Family, which was numerous (a) [L]. The Date of his Death has been falsified by several Writers [M], which is very strange, considering the Glory that distinguished his Reputation. The manner, in which he desired to be buried, produced some Suspicions about his Religion [N], which were much increased by

(a) Taken from his Life, composed by Lewis le Roi.

(26) Epist. Erasmi lix, lib. iii, pag. 245.

* Quodam tamen die, cum in interiori cubiculo Principis esset, dixit mihi se ad te scribere statuisse. Iturus est propediem in legationem Narbonensem versus cum aulicorum dispensatorum decurione: cum quo etiam ire me Rex iussit, ut numerum sim potius quam aliquam operam certam navem in ea provincia: sic enim interpretor (26). --- The Bishop of Paris is now by the King's Bounty made Archbishop of Sens, though the Business is not quite finished. He is now wholly taken up with the Court, and I cannot speak with him. But one Day, in the King's Bed-chamber, he told me he designed to write to you. He will go shortly on an Embassy to Narbonne with one of the Crown Officers: the King has also ordered me to go with him, to fill up the Number, rather than to do any particular Business, for so I understand it. He does not note the Year in the Date of that Letter; but it is plain, he wrote it while the Court was in a Perment on Occasion of the Death of the Emperor Maximilian. That Emperor died the twelfth of January, 1519.

[L] His Family --- was numerous. He left seven Sons and four Daughters; there is nothing more said of them in his History; but I have read in other Books, that, because he had a great Number of Sons and Grandsons, he desired he might be buried by Night, foreseeing, that if they buried him by Day, there would have been too much crying of little Children, and of those of his Family. The Author, who informs me of this, notes that Budæus's Wife was so far from hindering her Husband from studying, that she served him for a Help-mate as well in the Closet as in the Bed, and looked out the Passages and the necessary Books for him. I do not translate literally, as will soon be perceived, but I think I do not deviate from my Author's Thought. Nec Budæum à literis uxor avocavit, sed magis in iis confirmavit, quam sibi in Musarum sacratio semper assidentem, & aliquid librorum in manibus habentem, non tantum vitæ, sed studiorum quoque sociam & commilitonem nominabat: nec eundem magnus liberorum nepotumque numerus in studiis interpellavit, qui quidem dicitur fuisse tantus, ut antequam moreretur, noctu suum funus efferri, tumularique mandaret, ut aliquo modo compesceret sletum ejulatunque puerorum, quem futurum non obscure providebat (27). --- Nor did Budæus's Wife divert him from Literature, but rather confirmed him in it: as she was continually sitting by him in his Study, with some Book or other in her Hand, he called her his Companion, and Fellow-Soldier, not only in Life but in Study: nor did the great Number of his Children and Grand Children interrupt him in his Studies, though they are said to have been so many, that, before he died, he ordered that his Corps should be buried privately in the Night, to prevent, in some Measure, the weeping and crying of Children, which he foresaw there would be. I have read one of Budæus's Letters

(27) Anonymus in dissertatione de literati matrimonio, pag. 367. It is printed with Baudii Amoris.

(28) It is the 30th of the ad Book, among those of Erasmi.

(28), wherein he only says, that the Careless of his Wife were not able to divorce him from his Books: He does not say, that he found in her a Help as to his Studies, He represents himself as married to two Wives; one, who brought him Sons and Daughters, the other Philology, which produced him Books. He had been married twelve Years when he wrote that Letter, and he had had six Sons and one Daughter (29) by that time. Philology was not so fruitful; Budæus had produced fewer Books than Children. He had laboured more with the Body than the Soul, but he hoped that at the long-run he should leave more Books than Children. He said the Fertility of the Soul should have its turn, it will raise itself on the Ruins of that of the Body: The prolific Virtue is not given all at once to the natural Organs, and to the Pen. Sic enim statueram mihi esse faciendum, ut conjugem quidem legitimam haberem liberorum parentem, ex Philologia autem libros, id est, nominis mei æternam memoriam, prolemque immortalem gignerem. Liberos jam plures aliquanto quam libros genui, plus corpori fortasse quam animo indulgens. Post hæc (ut spero) marcescente corpore, animus indies vegetior & vividior fiet, utrumque autem simul ex æquo prolificum esse nequit, sed cum emeritæ facultates corporis esse cœperint, tum demum viribus animi stipendia plene procedent (30). --- For I had come to this Resolution in myself, that I would take a lawful Wife by whom I might have Children, and of Philology beget Books, that is, an eternal Memorial of my Name, and an immortal Offspring. Now I have got more Children than I have brought forth Books, perhaps because I indulge my Body more than my Mind. Hereafter (I hope) as my Body declines, my Mind will grow stronger and more lively; both cannot be alike prolific at once; but when the Faculties of the Body begin to wear out, then the Powers of the Mind come to their full Strength. We shall speak below (31) of the Change of Religion of that Family.

[M] The Date of his Death has been falsified by several Writers. La Croix du Maine makes him die the Twenty fifth of August, 1540; Spondanus the twentieth of August (32); and Peter de St Romanus the third of August the same Year (33); Father Garasse in 1539 (34); Mr de Launoi the first of September 1573 (35). The Truth is, that he died the Twenty third of August, 1540. He who thought to correct Reusnerus by Mr de Launoi is deceived: Launoius --- dicit Budæum obiisse A. 1573. Calend. Septembr. ut falli necesse fit Nicolaum Reusnerum qui in Iconibus ejus obitum refert ad A. 1540 (36). --- Launoi --- says, that Budæus died in the Year 1573, on the first of September; therefore Nicolas Reusnerus must be mistaken, who in his Icones places his Death in the Year 1540.

[N] The Manner, in which he desired to be buried, produced some Suspicions about his Religion. He declared by his Will a Year before he died, that he would be buried without any Ceremonies. These are his Words: 'I desire to be carried to the Grave by Night, and without Invitation, only with one Torch, or two at most, nor will I have it proclaimed in the Church, or in the City, that I am to be buried this or that Day. For I never approved mournful Ceremonies and funeral Pumps.

(29) Moreri is therefore mistaken, when he says Budæus had four Sons, and two Daughters.

(30) Epist. xxx, Erasmi, lib. ii, pag. 150.

(31) In the Remark [O].

(32) Spondan. ad Ann. 1540, n. 30.

(33) Pet. de St Rom. Journal Chronolog. Tom. II, pag. 137.

(34) Garasse Docteur Curieuse, pag. 920.

(35) Laun. Hist. Gymn. Navarre, pag. 882.

(36) John Albertus Faber Decade Decad. fol. v, verso.

by his Widow's making open Profession of the Protestant Religion at Geneva, with some of her Children [O]. It is nevertheless certain, that in his Writings he seems very (37) See Mr de Launoi, Hist. Coll. Navarr. pag. 881.

‘ - - - I forbid any to be made for me, as well for this, as for other things that cannot be done without Scandal: Nor will I have any Funeral Ceremony, or other Representation, about the Place where I shall be buried, for the Year after my Decease, because they seem to me Imitations of the Cenotaphs, which the Gentiles anciently made use of (37).’ A Jesuit, who was in other respects easily provoked, and soon startled at the least Innovations, condemned those who did not put a good Construction upon this Conduct. He will have it, that this learned Man acted thus from a Principle of Humility only, and by an Effect of that studious Humour, which had made him live so much in private. He says (38), ‘That good Soul having lived among the Dead, that he might live for ever among the Living, and having intirely separated himself from all Company, to addict himself to Solitude in his Life-time, retains the same Humour at his Death; for he ordered by his last Will, that his Body should be carried by Night, without Flambeaux, or Funeral Pomp, from Sainte Avoise Street, where he died, to the Celestines (39), which is a pretty long way: and would be buried without Ceremony, without Attendance, and without Invitation, or ringing of Bells. It is true, that this Novelty gave occasion to different Discourses, the Preachers of those Times taking the matter in the worst sense, because of the Times which began to smell of the Faggot, and were already imbued with certain suspicious Opinions; for it was in the Year M.D.XXXIX (40), when Luther had set almost all Germany on Fire; but Budæus’s former Life, the Integrity and Innocency of his Manners, the public Opinion, and his heroic Actions at Venice and Paris, for the Honour of Religion, and the Advancement of Learning, were faithful Witnesses of the contrary; inasmuch, that the wisest remained edified by his Humility, whereas others were offended at the Novelty: and indeed it is true, that Budæus might do what he did from a Sentiment of Humility, as we have seen divers Saints do, who have desired that their Bodies should be denied Christian Burial, or buried without Honour. A little after, he continues thus: ‘Melin, of Saint Gelais, knowing that Budæus’s Intention was good, and agreeable to his Humour, which had been always solitary, and an Enemy to the hurry of Company, wrote an excellent Epigram in Honour of the deceased, whereby he made it appear, that Budæus, in humbling himself, had acquired more Glory than others do by the most pompous Obsequies.’ For he said,

(38) Garasse, Doct. Curieuse, pag. 920.

(39) According to Lewis le Roi, it was at St Nicholas’s in the Fields, that he was buried.

(40) He mistakes; it was in 1540.

Qui est celui que tout le monde suit?
Las! c’est Budé au cercueil estendu.
Pourquoi n’ont fait les cloches plus grand bruit?
Son non sans cloche est assez espandu.
Que n’at-on plus en torches despendu,
Suivant la mode accoustumée & sainte?
Afin qu’il fust par l’obscur entendu,
Que des François la lumière est esteinte.

Who’s this that ev’ry one attends on here?
Alas! it is Budæus on the Bier.
Why toll not then the Bells? His Name around
Is spread, sufficiently, without their Sound.
But why have no more Torches been procur’d?
To shew the Light of France is now obscur’d.

The Prior Ogier was not so indulgent as Garasse; he blames him for having defended the Conduct of Budæus. It may be, he would have blamed his criticizing him, if Garasse had done what one of his own Fraternity did, in speaking of the Chancellor de l’Hospital (41); for they, who turn Critics, commonly espouse the opposite Part. Let us see the Words of the Censurer of the Doctrine Curieuse: ‘Pag. 919, He endeavours to justify William Budæus against the Accusations of the Doctors and Preachers of his Time, who had conceived some (41) Maimbourg, Hist. du Calvinisme, pag. 205, upon which see the Critique Generale, Lettre xvi, pag. 274, of the third Edit.

Suspensions of him after his Death, because of the Novelty of his Funeral. They had certainly some Ground to make a sinister Judgment of him. For, besides the bad Impressions which the Novelty of his Funeral made, at a time when all our Forces ought to have been bent against the growing Heresy, and nothing relaxed of the ordinary Ceremonies of the Church; he was of the Opinion of that good Grammarian, of whom Garasse speaks in the seventh Section of the third Book, who thought that disputing on any material Questions of Divinity, was so much time ill employed. See how he speaks in one of his Epistles to Erasmus. Reddiderat epistolam juvenis, is quem mihi commendasti, Sorbonæ nunc agentem, Mællon dē ēν σερβοντιδὲ λίμνη δια[ρι]βόν[τα], ἔτω γὰρ εἰ- κνὸς ἀποκαλοῦμεν τὴν τῶν σοφιστῶν δια- τελέην. — I had received your Letter from the young Man, that you recommended to me, who now studies in the Sorbonne, or rather, is floundering in the Sorbonnic Mire; for so I may very justly call the Exercises of Sophists. If Garasse had known of this Passage (42), I believe he esteemed the Sorbonne so much, that he would have sent Budæus among the Buffoons of Rome, as merrily as he packs off that good Grammarian to the Country of the Drolls, among the merry Andrews of Athens (43).

[O] His Widow made open Profession of the Protestant Religion at Geneva, with some of her Children. The Passage of Melanchthon’s Letters, which I am going to cite, testifies, that the Example of that Woman was of great weight; because it was believed, that her Husband’s good Discourses had much assisted her to know the Truth. ‘Venit huc quispiam ex Gallia nobilis vir ac doctus, qui narrat honestissimam matronam viduam Budæi, unacum filiabus, Lutetia migrasse ad Calvinī Ecclesiam, ut ibi & vocem Evangelii audiat, & longius absit à sævitia quæ in regno Gallico adversus Evangelii studiosos exercetur. Hoc exemplo matronæ valde moveri multos homines in Gallia idem affirmat; propterea quod mortui mariti sui doctissimi & gravissimi viri judicio existimatur hanc doctrinam amplecti, de qua ipsum multa piè differuisse ante mortem constat (44). — There is arrived here from France a noble and learned Man, who says, that the honourable Lady, the Widow of Budæus, with her Daughters, are come over from Paris to Calvin’s Church, both that she might hear the Word of the Gospel, and be farther removed from the Cruelty exercised in the Kingdom of France, against the Professors of the Evangelic Faith. He also affirms, that a great many Persons in France are moved by this Lady’s Example; because she is supposed to have embraced this Doctrine from the Judgment of her deceased Husband, who, it is certain, reasoned, in many things, very piously before his Death.’ In a Letter from Melanchthon to Camerarius, dated the eleventh of September 1549, at pag. 908, of the London Edition, are these Words: ‘Hæc narratio si vera est, admirationem magnam res pariet. Budæi conjugem anum cum filiabus aiunt migrasse Genavam ad Calvinī Ecclesiam, in qua & alii multi nobiles homines in Gallia exulare dicuntur. — If this Account be true, it will be matter of Admiration. They say, that Budæus’s Widow, and her Daughters, are gone over to Geneva to Calvin’s Church, where they also say many other Noblemen of France are in Exile.’ The Daughters of the great Budæus were not the only Persons of the Family that retired to Geneva: LEWIS BUDÆUS, their Brother, went thither also, where he was Professor of the Hebrew Tongue. He published a Latin Translation of the Psalms with Notes. See the Gallia Orientalis of Colomieu, Pag. fifteen and sixteen. We have spoken before (45) of JOHN BUDÆUS (a), who was one of the three Deputies that were sent into Germany about the Affairs of the Church. MATTHEW BUDÆUS, their Brother, is praised by Henry Stephens as a Man who understood the Hebrew Tongue thoroughly (46). The Posterity of Budæus subsists still in Geneva, and makes a considerable Figure there.

(42) Launoi, pag. 87, shows that this Passage makes nothing against Budæus’s Catholicism.

(43) Ogier Jugement & Censure du livre de la Doct. Curieuse, pag. 190, 191.

(44) Melanchth. Epist. pag. 385, Edit. Basil. 1565, apud Colomieu in Gallia Orient. pag. 16.

(45) In the Remark [G], of the Article BEZ A.

(46) Henr. Stephan. in præf. Dierachi apud Colomieu in Gall. Orient. pag. 257.

[a] The very opposite to the Reformers [P], though he had sometimes spoken very vehemently against the Court of Rome, and against the Corruptions of the Clergy (b). It is said that he never would suffer his Picture to be drawn [Q], and that, going to make a Speech to Charles V, he was at a stand [R]. His Style both in Latin and French was somewhat harsh [S]. His Father, as I have already said, was of a considerable Family; and yet I have read that it was ennobled on account of our Budæus [T]. This Man, being nettled at something that Erasmus had done or said, resented it highly, and never would do him the Favour to quote him, but criticized him sometimes without naming him [U]. Emulation between two Men of their Rank might easily degenerate into Hatred (c). They who have said, that, notwithstanding their Difference, Budæus brought it so about that Erasmus was sent for to Paris (d), know nothing of the Matter; for the Quarrel between them was not begun, when Budæus, acquitting himself of the Commission that was given him to make Offers to Erasmus, in the Name of Francis I, advised him to accept them (e). An Addition of all his Works were printed at Basil, in the Year 1557, in four Volumes in Folio, with an ample Preface by Celius Secundus Curio.

No

* Page 43.

† Book cii.

† Histoire du Connétable de Lesdiguières. Book iv, chap. iv.

(47) See the History of Lutheranism, by Maimbourg, Tom. I, pag. 217, Edit. de Hollande.

(48) Hist. Gymnastii Navarre, pag. 378, & seq.

(49) St Romuald, Journal Chronologique, under the third of August.

(50) Nicol. Abramius in Cicer. Orat. Tom. I, pag. 409.

[(a) The Citizen of Geneva, which calls him Lord of Verace*, observes, that he was Disciple of Duaren; and this Book, printed in 1609, speaks also of a Sister of John Budæus, a Lady of eighty Years of Age, who was alive at that time; besides one William Budæus, likewise Lord of Verace, and Grandson of the great Budæus; for it is in that sense, the Galleim nepos in Tbuanus† is to be understood, and not in that of Nephew, as Videl has taken it †. This William Budæus, I say, Lieutenant of the Gens d'Arms of Briquemaut, commanded the Scouts at the Battle of Pontbarra. REM. CRIT.]

[(P) In his Writings he appears very opposite to the Reformers.] See his Work entitled, De Transitu Hellenismi ad Christianismum, and which he dedicated to Francis I, in the Year 1535, a little after Calvin had dedicated his Christian Institutions to that Monarch. Budæus recommends the ancient Faith to him, and praises him for the famous Profession that was made to expiate the wicked Attempt of the Heretics (47); (this was the Language of those Times.) Mr de Launoi cites this Passage (48), and adds another to it, which discovers our Budæus's Zeal against those who were called Innovators.

[(Q) It is said that he would never suffer his Picture to be drawn.] I can give you no other Proof of this, than these four Verses:

Nec voluit vivus fingi pingive Budæus,
Nec vatum moriens quæsit elogia.
Hunc qui tanta suæ mentis monumenta reliquit
Externa pudaat vivere velle manu.

Budæus, in his Life, would ne'er consent
To have, or Bust, or Picture, of himself,
Nor dying, sought he Poets' Elogies:
By his own Works, he, to himself, has rais'd
A Monument of everlasting Fame,
Ashamed to owe it to another's Hand.

The Author, whom I quote in the Margin, says, that this is Budæus's Epitaph, composed by Stephen Pasquier (49).

[(R) ----- and that going to make a Speech to Charles V, he was at a stand.] I have read this no where but in the first Volume of Father Atram on Cicer's Orations. * Petrus Messius libro iii. variarum lectionum cap. viii. multa magnorum Oratorum exempla corradit, quos initio dicendi perturbatos repente memoria defecit. Ut Demosthenem coram Philippo, Theophrastum coram Areopagitis, Herodem Atticum coram M. Antonino, Heraclidem Lycium coram Severo Augusto, Bartholomæum Socinum coram Alexandro Sexto, Addi potuisset & magnus ille Budæus, qui Carolus V. Cæsarem Parisios venientem oratione excepturus repente obtulit (50). — Petrus Messius, in the Third Book of his various Readings, chap. VIII, collects a great many examples of great Orators, who have been discomposed in the beginning of their Discourse, and on a sudden their Memories have failed them: As Demosthenes before Philip, Theophrastus before the Areopagites, Herodes Atticus before M. Antoninus, Heraclides Lycius before the Emperor Severus, Bartholomew Socinus before Alexander the Sixth. He might also have added the great Budæus, who, when he was going to address the Emperor Charles V, on his arrival at Paris, was suddenly stopped, and could not proceed in his Speech.*

[(S) His — French Style was somewhat harsh.] Some have found Fault with his expression in the Book of The Institution of a Prince, addressed to Francis I, where, in his Dedication to the King, he calls his manner of writing, Un Style de haute lice & resplendissant. — A Style of a high strain and glittering: Besides, he was obscure and unpolished; witness these Words of the same Epistle: Je vous requiers de recevoir mon offre avec grand liesse & alacrité, offre d'exigüe estimation compare à vostre bonteur (51). — I desire you to receive my Offering with great joy and alacrity, an Offering of exiguous Esteem compared with your Highness. See what Genebrard and Daniel Augustinus say of him in du Verdier's Bibliothèque.

Having consulted the Epistle Dedicatory of The Institution of a Prince, I find nothing at all in it of what Saint Romuald asserts here. My Edition is that which Messiere John de Luxembourg, Abbot of Irvy, Rivon, and Salmoisy, had printed in his Abbey of Rivon, in the Year 1546, in Folio. Note, by the way, a Fault of Mr Joli, who says, that That Work was not printed till the Reign of Henry II, in 1547, in Folio and in 8vo (52). It is besides very evident, from the Epistle Dedicatory, and from all the rest of the Book, that the Author knew himself when he owns, That he neither could, nor would praise himself. — for knowing the Purity of the French Diction ----- and that he was very little versed in the French Style (53).

[(T) His Family was ennobled on his Account.] His Heirs were declared Noble, by an Arrêt of the Court of Aids, in the Year 1578, on Account of his Personal Merits (54). I believe the Monk, who relates this, had none of the exactest Memoirs. See above, Remark [A]

[(U) He would never — quote Erasmus; and he criticized him without naming him.] They came to defending and proving, which had no very good effect. See the Letters which they wrote to each other, among those of Erasmus. To me it always seemed that Erasmus was more moderate and civil to Budæus, than he was to Erasmus. Was it not very unfociable, not to grant the favour of one Citation? Id parum amicæ voluntatis argumentum crediderunt, quod à Budæo in tot numero libris mentio nusquam facta sit Erasmi, quanquam ut fieret multis precibus ab Erasmo ambiretur. Præterea putant id quoque ad ista quæ dixi accedere, quod Budæus dissimulanter Erasmus in suis libris nonnunquam perstringere videtur, velut in Commentariis, quando ridet illos, qui de singulorum ingenio, & eloquentia sententiam ferre audent, qui Laurentio inferiores præscribunt loquendi formulas, qui leviora quædam scripta in vulgus edunt, quæ nec solem nec ætatem ferant (55).

(b) See in the 20th Book of The Catalogue of the Witnesses of the Truth, pag. 1934, & seq. several Extracts of the Book de Allé. See also the Remark [D], of the Article JULIUS II.

(c) See the Remark [U], at the end.

(d) Du Verdier, Prologogr. pag. 2404.

(e) Epist. Erasmi xv. lib. i.

(51) St Romuald, Journal Chronol. under August 3.

(52) Joli Codicille d'or, p. 36.

(53) Budæus, ubi supra, in the Epistle Dedicatory.

(54) St Romuald, Journ. Chronol. under August 3. See the Invent. de l'Hist. Journaliere, p. 169.

(55) Lud. Regius in vita Budæi, pag. 77.

(f) Ludov. Vi-
ves in lib. ii.
cap. x. li. Augustini de Civitate Dei.

No Elogy can be finer than that which Ludovicus Vives made on our Budæus (f) ; for in few Words he represents him as a Prodigy of Learning, and ascribes such moral Virtues to him as deserve the Admiration of all the World. I think it may justly enough be said of this great Man, that he made himself more feared than beloved in the Common-Wealth of Learning, and this does not seem to me a Perfection, but rather a shrewd Sign of Haughtiness and Impatience, and of his arming Cap-apee against those who criticize him. The Concern that a Professor of Venice expressed, when some body had taken notice publickly that he did not follow the Opinion of the learned Budæus, would alone be a sufficient Demonstration that he had made himself very formidable [X].

(66) In the Remark [E], of the Article BADI-
US.

(57) Lud. Regi-
us, ibid. pag. 76.

(58) In the Remark [G].

(59) That of Ba-fil, apud Johan-nem Frobenium, 1518, in Folio,
in which there are several other Historians besides Suetonius.

— It was looked upon as a mark of a very unfriendly Disposition, that Budæus, in so many Books, had made no mention of Erasmus, notwithstanding Erasmus had frequently desired him to do it. To all this may also be added, as it is thought, that Budæus sometimes seems to reflect underhand on Erasmus in his Writings, as in his Commentaries, when he derides those who presume to judge of the Genius and Eloquence of particular Persons, who, tho' inferior to Laurentius, prescribe Forms of speaking, who publish some trifling Pieces among the Vulgar, which will neither bear the light nor time. See above (56) the Clamour that was raised against Erasmus because it was pretended, that he compared Budæus to Badius. I shall quote another Passage which shews what are commonly the Consequences of the Emulation of Great Men. 'Et difficillimum inter illos nullam intercedere obte-rationem, inter quos tantæ laudis est æmulatione, quantum fuit incidere necesse inter Erasmus
atque Budæum, cum se uterque in literis esse principem cuperet. Nam quicquid est ejusmodi, in quo excellere præclarum existimant, in eo plerumque fit tanta contentio, ut vix possit benevolentia ferveri (57). — It is very hard to avoid all slander between two Men, where there is an emulation of so great Honour, as must needs be between Erasmus and Budæus, when each of them studied to be thought chief in Literature, for whatever is such, that it is thought extraordinary to excel in it, there is generally so great contention about it, that good Will can hardly be preserved.'

[X] The Concern that a Professor of Venice expressed, when some body had informed the Public, that he followed not the Opinion of Budæus. We have seen (58), that there arose a Dispute between William Budæus and Leonard Portius about the Coins and Measures of the Antients. Now it happened that John Baptista Egnatius followed, in some part of his Commentary on Suetonius, the Calculations of Portius; and that Erasmus, adding a Preface to that same Commentary in a new Edition (59), said expressly, that Egnatius was not of Budæus's Opinion. It happened that Eg-natius was much vexed at that Remark of Erasmus.
He feared the Consequences of it, immediately came upon his Justification, and had recourse to the Intercession of an eminent Man, whom he conjured to pacify Budæus; I say, he conjured him by the most moving Arguments. This will appear more plain from his Latin. 'Cum nudius tertius in Tranquillum Cæsareque meos Basilæ nuper excusos annotationes, & in his nescio quid ab Erasmio nostro de nummis scriptum legissem, ubi dissentire me a Budæo doctus aliqui vir & amicissimus assererat, dum Portium sequor: animadverti aliquanto altius vulnus descendisse, quam ego ab initio suspicatus essem, affectique me vis minime expectata, uti solet, non admiratione solum, verum etiam molestia. Quæ enim mihi cum Budæo studiorum dissensio esse potest, ubi tanta sit animorum conjunctio? aut quæ testifica-tio mea honestior aut amplior esse potuit tum benevolentia erga Budæum meæ, tum judicii, quam ea, quæ à me in eis annotationibus adhibita est?
Uti facile declararim me tantum in hoc studiorum genere Budæo tribuere, quantum mihi ipsi vix oporaret: ut si aliter vel Budæus vel Erasmus sentit, tæ ambo cum summo animi mei mœrore id sen-tiant. Quare ego te Grolierie per eam animi propensionem, quam in doctos præ te fers, oro; per humanitatem & divinam istam tuam beneficentiam obtestor; per eam pietatem, quam tibi reliquæque genti debeo, adjuro, uti hunc Budæo scrupulum per literas etiam tuas eximas, meque illi ita concil-lies, ut intelligat vir doctissimus, esse in terris ho-die neminem, cujus ego doctrinam magis admirer, de cujus ingenio libentius prædicem, quemque ego pluris faciam (60). — The other Day, reading my Notes on Suetonius, lately printed at Basil, and in them something writ by our Erasmus, concerning Coins, wherein this learned and otherwise friendly Man asserts, that I dissent from Budæus, and follow Portius; I observe, that the Wound goes deeper than I thought at first, and this unexpected Attack not only raised my Wonder as usual, but gave me some uneasiness. For what difference can I have with Budæus in studies, where there is so near a Conjunction of Minds? or what more honourable or ample Testimony could I have given, either of my Respect to Budæus, or his Judgment, than I have done in these Commentaries? Wherein I have freely declared, that I attribute so much to Budæus, in this kind of Learning, as I could scarce wish for myself: so that if either Budæus or Erasmus be of another Opinion, I am very sorry for it. Wherefore I beseech you, Grolierius, by that respect which you shew to learned Men; I beg of you, by your Humanity and Divine Beneficence; I con-jure you, by the Duty which I owe to yourself, and the rest of your Nation, to satisfy Budæus in this Matter, by your Letter, and reconcile me to him, by letting that most learned Man know, that there is no Man this Day upon Earth, whose Learning I more admire, whose Genius I am more ready to commend, or that I have a greater Value for.' He says several other things as strong, which shews his Affection, Veneration, and Admiration, for Budæus, and afterwards turns all his Anger against Erasmus: This place is very insulting. 'Quare non possum non vehementer admirari, quid tandem Erasmio in mentem venerit, ut etiam aliud agens de studiorum dissen-sione nostrorum, præsertim falla, publicandum sibi censuerit, cum Budæi vestigia me sequi profitear, cum doctrinam hominis tantopere laudem, & ejus præsertim libros quinque de Assæ. Sed homo alioqui doctus cum numerorum rationem non probe calleat, & scripture multa sese oblectet, & sibi plus æquo placeat, dum modo aliquid edat, quid tandem dicat non satis pensi habuit. Ita fit, ut dum verborum copiam studet, minus res observet. Quod si maturare sibi pateretur diutius ea quæ parturit, pareret ille sæpe eos liberos, qui & vitales essent, nec vitiosi illi & morbofi sæpe in lucem prodirent (61). — Wherefore I cannot but very

(60) Jo. Baptista
Egnatius Epist.
ad Jo. Grolieri-um; it is dated from Venice, the 5th of January,
1518, it is the 35th of the Century, published by Goldast.

(61) Id. ibid. pag.
150, 151.

BULGARUS, one of the most famous Civilians of the XIIth Century, was surnamed Golden-mouth, on account of the gracefulness of his Speech (a). He was one of the four Professors (b) whom Frederic Barbarossa consulted in the Year 1158, to know how far the Emperor's Rights ought to extend in Italy (c), and he shewed himself so able a Lawyer in this Consultation, that the Prince conferred a Judge's Place upon him (d). He behaved himself in it with a great deal of Integrity, inasmuch that his Judgments served for a Rule in all the Tribunals of Italy, in Cases that were doubtful. He persuaded the Inhabitants of Bologna to submit to that Emperor. He had taught, that, when a married Woman dies before her Father, the Husband is obliged to restore her Dowry. The Case happened to himself, and he conformed generously to his own Doctrine. One of his Scholars did not show himself so disinterested [A]; for being summoned to put that Doctrine in Practice, he said he had altered his Opinion. Bulgarus had several Children who all died before him. He was much afflicted at it, and, to repair the Loss as much as possible, he married a second Wife; but instead of marrying a Maid, as he thought, he unhappily made choice of a Wife that passed for a Woman. The Day after his wedding he read a Lecture, and explained that Law which begins, We undertake a Business that is not new. His Auditors applied these Words to the Condition in which they supposed he had found his Wife [B], which set them all a laughing. It is not known in what Year he died, nor where he was buried. There is no reason to say, as some have done, that he translated into Latin the Greek Laws that are in the Pandects, for he was absolutely ignorant of the Greek Tongue. He published some Glosses on the Civil Law, and an excellent Commentary in

(a) Panzirol. de clar. legum interpret. lib. ii, cap. xv, p. 127.

(b) In Civil Law, in the University of Bologna.

(c) Panzir. lib. ii, cap. xiv.

(d) Ob insignem quam offendit doctrinam pro eo (Fredericus Barbarossa) Bononia ad ius dicendum Vicarius creatus fuerit. Id. ibid. cap. xv, pag. 127.

(e) Taken from Panzirolus, ubi supra.

[A] He conformed generously to his own Doctrine --- One of his Scholars did not shew himself so disinterested. His Colleague, Martin Gofia, had maintained the opposite Opinion; and therefore they chose to ask his Advice after the Death of Bulgarus's Wife. Her Father would fain know from that Professor, Whether he might legally demand Restitution of his Daughter's Dowry? He was answered, That his Son-in-law was condemned from his own Mouth, and, if he refused Restitution, might be shamefully convicted of being a bad Interpreter of the Law. Hereupon, the Father-in-law brought his Action, but the Son-in-law did not stand it out long. This shews he had some conflict in his Mind between the Desire of keeping the Dowry, and the Fear of being reproached with denying his own Doctrine. It is plain, he did not make too much haste to put in practice what he had taught; for his Father-in-law was forced to commence a Suit against him. It is very likely, he repented that he maintained a Doctrine so contrary to his Interest, and that if he had foreseen the Prejudice it would do him, he would have dogmatized after another manner. However, let us not refuse him his due Praise. At last, he chose rather to part with his Money, than expose himself to the Shame of contradicting his own Theory, and so stopped his Antagonist, who was preparing to insult him. 'Martinus Gofia æquitatis ratione subnixus eam (dotem) velut matris patrimonium †, posteritate acquiri tenebat, qui ex hoc facto à Bulgari Socero consultus: Si mihi, respondit, qui contra te sentio, hic casus contigerit, jure fuisset absolvendus; sed Gener tuus, qui diversam docuit, sua se jam sententia condemnavit, & nisi ut falsus interpret à me turpiter reprehendi maluerit, petitam dotem reddere cogetur. Ita dimissus cum Generum interpellasset, Bulgarius, ne vel fordide avaritiæ, aut falsæ doctrinæ notari posset, ad confirmandam, quam tenebat, opinionem, restituta pecunia, Martinum Antiphilum prudenter elusit †, magnæque cum laude conservata existimatione, patrimonii quam famæ dispendium pati maluit. Sed Albericus ejus discipulus, etsi cum Præceptore sentiret, cum sibi idem accidisset, sententiam se mutasse dixit, nec præclarum Præceptoris exemplum secutus est (1).

† In leg. 3. §. sed utrum ff. de minor.

1 Odofr. in l. dos a patre C. fol. matr. & in l. jur. ff. de jur. dot.

(1) Panzirol. de claris legum interpret. lib. ii, cap. xv, p. 128.

--- Martin Gofia, insisting on the Equity of the thing, held, that it, (the Dowry) as being the Patrimony of the Mother, became the Husband's Property if there were any Issue; he being consulted on this Affair by Bulgarus's Father-in-law, answered: If this Case had happened to me, who am of a different Opinion, I might fairly have been excused; but your Son-in-law, who has taught otherwise, has already condemned himself by his own Judgment, and unless he has a mind to be shamefully reproached by me as a bad Interpreter of the Law, he will be obliged to return the Dowry. Dismissed with this Answer he sued his Son-in-law; and Bulgarus, for fear he should be accused either of sordid Avarice or false Doctrine, to confirm the Opinion which he had taught, restoring the Money, prudently eluded Martin, the Antipope's, and, by so doing, very honorably preserved his Credit, choosing rather to suffer in his Estate than in his Reputation. But Albericus, his Disciple, though he was of his Master's Mind, when the same Case happened to him, said, he had changed his Opinion, and would not follow the noble Example of his Master. [B] His Auditors applied the first Words of a Law to the Condition wherein they supposed he had found his Wife. They who speak in Public, are exposed to a thousand Inconveniences; for they unwarily say Things that may be applied to their own Adventures, and this sometimes exposes them to Affronts before the whole Audience. They are chiefly to be pitied, when, on the side of Matrimony; their Domestic Affairs give occasion for bad Reports, and unlucky Jest. Be it how it will: Let us shew, that Panzirolus has supplied us with the Fact that we have mentioned (2). 'Deficiente sobole, ad procreandam prolem uxorem ætate matura, & quæ vulgo mulier credebatur, pro virgine duxit, postmodum cum interpretaretur legem, cujus initium est, Rem non novam, neque insolitam aggredimur, dum ea verba recitaret, audientibus risum movet, qui hoc ad conjugem, quam corruptam invenerat, retulerunt. Itaque universi libris, quos tum secum gerebant, plaudentes strepitum excitant; --- Having no Issue left, in an advanced Age, he married a Woman for a Maid, who was commonly thought to be otherwise; the next Day he interpreted the Law, which begins: We undertake a Business which is not new nor strange; and when he spoke these Words, he raised a Laugh in the Audience, who applied this to his Wife, whom he had found debauched. And they all made a loud Clap with the Books they had in their Hands. A very good Answer might have been made in favour of Bulgarus; But what would it have signified against Scoffers? Nothing could have silenced a Company of Scholars, resolved to divert themselves at the Expence of that great Civilian. They would only have laughed louder at any one, who had represented to them, That the Words of the Law, applied to the Marriage of the Professor, might bear a good Sense, though it were supposed, that he found his Wife such as he had wished her to be; for even in that Case, he might say, that the Business he undertook was no new thing, and that he was used to it. It was his second Marriage, and he had had several Children by his first Wife. But some may say, he spoke in the Plural: We undertake a Business that has terpreter of the Law, he will be obliged to return the Dowry. Dismissed with this Answer he sued his Son-in-law; and Bulgarus, for fear he should be accused either of sordid Avarice or false Doctrine, to confirm the Opinion which he had taught, restoring the Money, prudently eluded Martin, the Antipope's, and, by so doing, very honorably preserved his Credit, choosing rather to suffer in his Estate than in his Reputation. But Albericus, his Disciple, though he was of his Master's Mind, when the same Case happened to him, said, he had changed his Opinion, and would not follow the noble Example of his Master.

[B] His Auditors applied the first Words of a Law to the Condition wherein they supposed he had found his Wife. They who speak in Public, are exposed to a thousand Inconveniences; for they unwarily say Things that may be applied to their own Adventures, and this sometimes exposes them to Affronts before the whole Audience. They are chiefly to be pitied, when, on the side of Matrimony; their Domestic Affairs give occasion for bad Reports, and unlucky Jest. Be it how it will: Let us shew, that Panzirolus has supplied us with the Fact that we have mentioned (2). 'Deficiente sobole, ad procreandam prolem uxorem ætate matura, & quæ vulgo mulier credebatur, pro virgine duxit, postmodum cum interpretaretur legem, cujus initium est, Rem non novam, neque insolitam aggredimur, dum ea verba recitaret, audientibus risum movet, qui hoc ad conjugem, quam corruptam invenerat, retulerunt. Itaque universi libris, quos tum secum gerebant, plaudentes strepitum excitant; --- Having no Issue left, in an advanced Age, he married a Woman for a Maid, who was commonly thought to be otherwise; the next Day he interpreted the Law, which begins: We undertake a Business which is not new nor strange; and when he spoke these Words, he raised a Laugh in the Audience, who applied this to his Wife, whom he had found debauched. And they all made a loud Clap with the Books they had in their Hands.

A very good Answer might have been made in favour of Bulgarus; But what would it have signified against Scoffers? Nothing could have silenced a Company of Scholars, resolved to divert themselves at the Expence of that great Civilian. They would only have laughed louder at any one, who had represented to them, That the Words of the Law, applied to the Marriage of the Professor, might bear a good Sense, though it were supposed, that he found his Wife such as he had wished her to be; for even in that Case, he might say, that the Business he undertook was no new thing, and that he was used to it. It was his second Marriage, and he had had several Children by his first Wife. But some may say, he spoke in the Plural: We undertake a Business that has

(2) Panzir. ibid.

† Glo. & Odofr. in l. Rem. non novam. C. de judic.

Ccc

net

VOL. II. No. XXXVII.

(3) Rem. non novam neque insolitam aggredimur.

not the Charms of Novelty; we are accustomed to it (3). I reply, That it is permitted in all Languages to speak of one's self in the plural Number; and that therefore it could not be pretended that Bulgarus spoke jointly of himself and his Wife. So that he might have been justified by solid Remarks: But once more, This would not have served his turn; the Laughters would still have laughed on. The Fault was committed, and it was irreparable: He had read Lectures to his Wife, which had taught her nothing that was new to her. This is an inexhaustible Source of jesting.

Note, That Franciscus Duarenus supposes, that this Professor did not expose himself to Laughter by marrying a Wife, who had lost her Virginity criminally, but for marrying a Wife who had lost it in an honourable way. He supposes, that Bulgarus had married a Widow, and upon this, he exclaims against those who marry Widows. It is in the Chapter where he shews, That they who marry a second time, are excluded from the Priesthood by the Canons; and that he, who marries a Widow, is reputed as one twice married (4). Lege Moisaica præceptum fuit ut pontifex virginem tantum uxorem ducere posset: Levit. xxi. Adde si lubet quod ridicula vulgo res est, & cavillis hominum obnoxia uxorem viduam ducere, quod vel tritum apud juris civilis doctores didicimus Bulgari Jurisconsulti discipulorum in præceptorem satis ostendit. gl. rem non novam C. de judic. (5) ----- It is commanded in the Moisaic Law, that a Priest should not marry any other than a Virgin, Levit. xxi. Add to this, that it is a ridiculous thing in the Eyes of the World, and obnoxious to Cavils, to marry a Widow, as appears from the Scuffs of the Disciples of Bulgari, the Civilian, against their Master, a trite Story among the Doctors of the Civil Law.

(4) See above, Citation (23), in the Article BULLINGER.

(5) Franciscus Duarenus de sacris Ecclesie ministeriis ac beneficiis, lib. iv, cap. viii, pag. 387, Part II, operum, Edit. Genevæ. 1608.

(a) A small Town on the Frontiers of the Canton of Zurich, which is under the eight Swiss Cantons. Simler in vita Bullingeri.

BULLINGER (HENRY), one of the Reformers of the Church in the XVth Century, was born at Bremgarten (a), the eighteenth of July, 1504. At twelve Years of Age he was sent to Emmerick, in the Country of Cleves, to study Classical Learning. It was a good School at that time; Mosellanus was one of those who taught there. Bullinger continued there three Years, and maintained himself by what he got in singing from Door to Door. His Father was rich enough to allow him a Pension; but he only gave him a suit of Cloaths when he sent him to Emmerick, and some small matter to pay his travelling Charges; for any thing farther he left him to the Charity of his Neighbours: He put his Son to those Streights, that he might make him one Day more sensible of the Prayers of the needy. Our young Scholar bore this Mortification so patiently, and submitted so freely to the Discipline of the School, which was severe enough, that he even desired to try another kind of Life much more rigid. He would have been a Carthusian Friar, but his elder Brother dissuaded him from it. At fifteen Years of Age he was sent to Cologne. The barbarous manner, in which Philosophy was then taught, served only to make him apply himself the more earnestly to Classical Learning. He even wrote, in the Year 1520, something against the School Divines [A]. He lived at Cologne till 1522, and the Nature of his Studies there disposed him to forsake the Romish Communion as soon as occasion offered. Having passed some Months at his Father's House, he was invited (b) by the Abbot of Cappel (c) to teach in his Convent. He discharged that Duty with much Reputation till 1527. The Reformation of Zuinglius was received in the Abbey of Cappel in the Year 1526, in which Bullinger was the chief Instrument. He heard Zuinglius's Lectures at Zurich, five Months, in the Year 1527. He took to the Study of the Greek Language again, and began that of the Hebrew, and preached publicly by a Mission from the Synod. He accompanied Zuinglius, in the Year 1528, at the famous Dispute that was held at Bern. The Year following he was made Pastor of the Reformed at Bremgarten, and married Anne Adlischwiler. That Marriage produced six Sons, and five Daughters [B], and continued till the Year 1564. His Wife died of the Plague at that time. He never would marry a second, for which he was blamed [C]. He was scarce settled quietly in his Church with regard to

(b) In the beginning of the Year 1523.

(c) An Abbey of the Cistercian Order, near Zurich.

[A] He wrote ----- something against the School Divines. It consisted of five Dialogues: The two first attack those Divines directly; the two following were an Apology for Reuchlin against Piperi-corne, a converted Jew; the Title of the fifth was Promotorum. They were never printed (1).

(1) Simlerus in vita Bullingeri, fol. 6.

[B] He had six Sons, and five Daughters. The two first were Ministers; the third was put into the Service of the Landgrave of Hesse, and died in France in the Troops of the Prince of Orange, in the Year 1569; the three last died Children. Three of his Daughters were married to Ministers of Zurich; to Hulric Zuinglius (2), to Lewis Lavator, and to Johas Simler; they died all three of the Plague; the second in the Year 1564, the other two in the Year 1565 (3).

(2) Son of the Reformer Zuinglius.

(3) Simlerus, ibid. fol. 12.

[C] He never would marry a second time, and was blamed for it. Care has been taken in the History of his Life to refute those captious Spirits, who censured him for not marrying a second Wife. They tell us first of his Orthodoxy; they declare, that he did not doubt, but God permitted the Ministers of the Gospel to marry a second time; and then add, that he answered those who advised him to marry a second Wife, That the first was still living in his Heart, and in the Children she had brought him; and that he had a Daughter that governed his Family very prudently; and after all, the burthen of sixty Years, which he laboured under, stifled all such Thoughts. The Censurers grounded their Exceptions chiefly on Reasons of Health: They believed, if he had married again, that he would not have been troubled, as he was, with a pain in his Reins. That is confuted by this Reason, That married Men are no less subject to this Inconvenience, than they who lead a single Life. 'And besides, continue they, can it be thought, that a Man of Bullinger's Age and Prudence could not tell what agreed best with his Constitution, or that he should neglect any means of Health?' In short, they had recourse to secret Reasons, which might perhaps be the Cause that he continued a Widower, though perhaps to the Prejudice of his Health. As it is probable several Readers may imagine, that what I have said is mostly a Gloss of my own framing, I shall recite the Latin of Simler. 'Post hujus obitum quamvis annos fere XI. superstes fuerit, nunquam tamen adduci potuit ut aliam uxorem duceret. Non quod secundas nuptias Christiano homini atque etiam ecclesie Ministris non concessas esse crederet, sed primam uxorem in animo suo adhuc vivere dicebat, quæ tot sui charissima pignora reliquisset, & quia filiam haberet quæ familiam optime administraret, to those of the Romish Communion, when he was engaged in Disputes with the Anabaptists; he disputed publicly against them, and wrote Books in which he confuted their erroneous Opinions. The victory, obtained by the Catholic Cantons over the Reformed in the Year 1531, obliged Bullinger to forsake his Country, together with his Father, Brother, and Colleague. He retired to Zurich, and there filled the Place vacant by the Death of Zuinglius (d). He edified that Church by his Preaching and Writings. He was obliged in the first place to refute the Impertinencies and Boasts of John Faber (e): He shewed him that the Goodness of a Religion was not to be judged of by the good or bad Success of a Battle. From that time he was employed in several Ecclesiastical Negotiations, by which Bucer laboured to reconcile the Zuinglians and the Lutherans. Bullinger behaved himself in such a manner, that the Suspicions which had been entertained of him did not last long: he shewed that the Love of Concord should never bring him to promote a Formulary, that was captious and contrary to sound Words. He wrote Books every Year, which I shall not particularly mention, yet will not omit that which he published against Luther in the Year 1545. The Swiss Churches had kept a long Silence, notwithstanding Luther wrote in a very passionate manner against their Doctrine concerning the Sacrament; at last it was thought fit to answer him in his Life-time, least, if it were deferred till after his Death, Occasion might be given to some disadvantageous Surmises. Besides, it was thought that a very vigorous Answer would make Luther more moderate for the future (D), and prevent his abusing the Respect that was shewn him. Bullinger, who advised Silence, was the Man charged with the Business of answering him, and he acquitted himself worthily. Luther dying a little after, there were, doubtless, some rash Spirits (for there are but too many such in all Communions) who said, among other things, that the Vexation of finding himself incapable of answering Bullinger's Apology, had broke his Heart. The Landgrave of Hesse, knowing that People complained of the Church of Zurich, on the account of these Insults, advertised our Bullinger of it, who wrote an Apologetic Letter to him in the Name of his Colleagues: In the Year 1549, He and Calvin, who was come to Zurich for that purpose, drew up a Formulary of the Conformity of Faith between the Church of Zurich, and that of Geneva. Calvin undertook that Journey, because he was suspected of an Opinion which favoured that of Luther on the Eucharist. The same Year Bullinger alledged so many Reasons against the renewing the Alliance, to which King Henry II courted the Swiss, that That Proposition was rejected. One of his Reasons

(d) He had been killed in the Battle which the Protestants lost on the 11th of Oct. ber, 1531.

(e) He had been the principal Antagonist of Zuinglius.

administret, se hac ætate (erat autem sexagenarius) nolle de nuptiis & conjugio sollicitum esse. Equidem non defuit qui hoc ejus factum & consilium damnant, hoc maxime nomine quod cum melius consultum fuisse suæ valetudini existant si alteram uxorem duxisset: homines ridiculi; quasi in conjugio viventes non æque nephriticis & dysuriæ doloribus obnoxii sint atque cœlibes. An vero existimant cum nullam suæ valetudinis rationem habuisse, & tantæ ætatis atque prudentiæ hominem ignorasse quidnam suæ naturæ conveniens sit? Atque ut maxime vera sit eorum ratio, eas tamen ille forte habuit consilii sui rationes vulgo incognitas, ut etiam cum damno valetudinis id sibi persequendum statuerit (4). — He outlived her near XI Years, but never could be persuaded to marry another Wife. Not that he believed second Marriages to be unlawful for a Christian, or even a Minister of the Church, but he said his first Wife still lived in his Mind, who had left so many dear Pledges of herself, and as he had a Daughter who managed his Family very well, he would not, at his Years (and he was sixty), think of Marriage. Indeed there are some who blame this Action and Resolution of his, chiefly on this Account, that he would have taken a better Course to preserve his Health, if he had married another Wife; ridiculous! as if married People were not equally subject to nephritic Pains and the Strangury with single Persons. Or do they imagine that he had no regard to his Health, or that a Man of his Age and Prudence did not know what agreed with his Constitution? And suppose their Reasons were true, perhaps he had some private Reasons for his Conduct, which he refused to follow, even at the Expence of his Health. The best of all this, is, the Seriousness wherewith it is set forth.

(D) He was appointed to answer Luther, it being thought that a very vigorous Answer would make Luther more moderate for the future. I declare beforehand, that I do not apply what I am going to say to any particular Person, especially, that I by no means glance at Luther in it; but it is certain, that one can hardly tell what course to take with certain fiery and impetuous Tempers. Turn which way you please, you find yourself uneasy with them. Answer them, and you raise their Choler an hundred times higher (5). Do not answer them, and they become tenfold more fierce and insolent; they insult you, and attack all others with much greater Boldness. The Experience of Impunity makes them hope that all will give way to them, and that there is nothing better than hectoring and bouncing. So that there are Difficulties on both sides, whether you do, or do not resist them. However, I do believe, that, according to human Prudence, it is better to resist them by answering in their own way and Style, than to keep silence. Those violent Spirits are not all equally untractable, some of them may be kept within bounds, if they are put upon the defensive. What I am going to copy deserves to be weighed; the Ministers of Zurich experienced the Importance of it. Alii vero omnino respondendum censebant & quidem acriter, quod nec privatim nec publice læsus tanta petulantia vivis & defunctis insultaret. Etsi enim Lutherus bene meritis sit de Ecclesia, non tamen tantum illi tribuendum ut unus plus reliquis omnibus possit, & ut ob unius offensionem cavendam veritas turpi silentio prodatur. Ac fore utilem hujusmodi responsum cum quoad ipsum Lutherum, qui dum omnes illi indulgent atque omnia permittunt, magis in illa sua nimia vehementia confirmatur; quod si fortiter se illi viri boni & docti opponant, rem diligentius expensurum, & moderatius acturum; tum ad alios commovendos ne tyrannidem in renascentem ecclesiam inducant. — In hanc sententiam concesserunt Tigurini (6). — Others were of Opinion, that he ought, by all means, to be answered, and that sharply; because, without any manner of Provocation, either public or private, he so petulantly insulted both the Living and the Dead. For notwithstanding Luther deserved well of the Church,

(5) Bacchæ bacchanti si velis adversariere, ex insana insaniores facies. Plaut. in Amphitr. Act. 2, Sc. 2, ver. 79.

(6) Simlerus, ubi supra, fol. 20. verso.

(4) Ibid. fol. 12. verso.

(f) Docens non esse ius aut fas homini ut se mercede conduci patiatur ad fundendum sanguinem miserorum & plerumque innocentium hominum à quibus nulla ipse unquam injuria affectus sit. Simler, ibid. fol. 24.

(g) In 1562.

(h) In the beginning of 1563.

(i) In the beginning of 1564.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Classicum quodammodo canens, & omnes exhortans ut nullum locum nobis in Ecclesia Christi relinquunt. Simlerus, ibid. fol. 43.

(m) Taken from his Life, written by Josiah Simler.

(n) See Hotting. in Bibl. Tigurin. pag. 751. & seq.

sons was, that it was not lawful for a Man to let himself to hire, to kill those who have done him no wrong (f) [E]. He wrote a Book in the Year 1551, to shew that the Council of Trent had no other Design than to oppress the Truth, and that therefore no regard should be had to the Pope's Behaviour to the Cantons, in inviting them to send Deputies to the Council. That Book never appeared but in Italian: It was translated into that Language, with some Additions, by Paul Vergerius. The Dispute between Bullinger and Brentius, about the Doctrine of Ubiquity, began in the Year 1561. Bullinger published a Book, wherein he shewed, that JESUS CHRIST, as to his Human Nature, is no where but in Heaven, at the right Hand of GOD. Brentius, a zealous Ubiquitarian, answered that Book. Bullinger replied to him (g). Brentius published another Work, against which Bullinger did not fail to draw his Pen (h). Brentius returned to the Charge (i), and so did Bullinger (k). He wrote a Book, in 1571, against the last Will and Testament of Brentius, which William Bidenback, a Divine of Wittenberg, had published, by which Testament Brentius forewarned all States not to allow the Zuinglians a Toleration (l). The National Synod of Rochel, having, in 1571, condemned those who rejected the Words Substance and Substantially, in speaking of the Eucharist: the Ministers of Zurich thought, that That Canon condemned them. They wrote to Beza about it, who answered, that the Synod did not point at them: However Bullinger represented to Beza, that the Expressions of the Decree ought to be so altered, that no body might think there was any Difference of Opinion between the Churches [F]. That Letter of Bullinger was effectual; for, in the Year 1572, the Synod of Nismes gave all the Explications that the Church of Zurich could desire. An Answer was to be made, in 1575, to the Apology for the Testament of Brentius, composed by James Andrews. The Ministers of Zurich took upon them what concerned the Fundamentals of Doctrine, and left Bullinger only the Trouble of answering what related to himself. This was his last Work, and it is observable, that he never exceeded the Bounds of Modesty as he did at this time: He treated his Adversary hardly, he railed at him, and ridiculed him to some purpose. He died like a good Christian, the seventeenth of September, 1575 (m). He is Author of a great many Books; for besides those which have been printed, and which amount to ten Volumes, he wrote several others that are preserved in Manuscript (n). John Stuckius made his Funeral Oration [G]. Most of Mr Moreri's

' Church, yet was not so much deference due to him, as that he alone should be of more Weight than all the rest, and the Truth be betrayed by a shameful Silence, for fear of offending one single Person. That such an Answer would be useful both to Luther himself, who, while every body gives him his Way, and bears with all, will grow more confirmed in his Vehemence; but if these good and learned Men withstood him bravely, would weigh things more carefully, and act with more Moderation; and might also prevent others from introducing Tyranny into the newly reviving Church. - - - Those of Zurich came into this Opinion.'

[E] He thought it not lawful for a Man to let himself to hire, to kill those who have done him no wrong.] I do not pretend to set up for a Judge, or a Censurer, of the Swiss Cantons, who sacrifice the Lives of their Subjects in other Peoples Quarrels, and when they can have no doubt but the Quarrel is unjust; for Example: They give at present (7) Troops to France, and likewise to the Enemies of France; and yet one of the two Parties must certainly have an unjust Cause. But be that how it will, I shall not examine whether Bullinger was in the wrong or no, as to the Republic of Switzerland: I shall only say, that I do not see what answer can be made him, as to private Persons, who lift themselves voluntarily to kill the Allies of their Country. A private Person may bear Arms against the Enemies of his Country, whether his Sovereign requires him so to do, or whether he leaves every one to his Liberty to lift or not; but when a Person has that Liberty, and hires himself to kill those who are Friends and Allies to his Sovereign, I cannot see but he hires himself to commit Murder, and imitates the Gladiators, who to divert the People of Rome, hired themselves to the first Comer to kill one another. One of our News Writers has made a Remark lately upon this Conduct of the Cantons: I think it is in the Historical Letters of September 1694. You will see in a Work of Hottinger, that Zuinglius, and the other Reformers of that Country, had the same Scruples as our Bullinger (8).

[F] He desired of Beza that the Expressions of a Decree of the Synod of Rochelle might be altered, that no body might think there was any Difference of Opinion between the Churches.] It will not be useless to place here the Words that Josiah Simler made use of. 'Videri decretum verbis paulo inconsideratius conceptum & pronunciatum esse, Damnamus eos qui non recipiunt substantiæ vocabulum. Quis enim ignorat nos ex eorum numero esse qui hoc non recipimus, neque unquam recipere volumus? Quam obrem consultissimum fore ut cum iterum in Synodum coierint hac de re sermones & decreta sua sic temperent, ut omnibus ubique manifestum sit neque de nobis, neque de nostri similibus ubicunque locorum fuerint canonem locutum esse. - - Atque ita quidem postea contigit (9). - - That the Decree seemed to be conceived and expressed in Terms not well weighed, viz. We damn those who do not receive the word Substance. For who knows not that we are of those who do not receive it, nor ever did? Wherefore, it would be most advisable, that the Synod, when they meet again, temper their Expressions and Decrees, concerning this Matter, so that it may be evident to every body, that the Canon does not concern either us, or any of our Persuasion. - - And so indeed it happened afterwards.' The Answer, which Beza made by order of the Synod to the Church of Zurich, is in the Sixty fifth of his Letters, and the Two hundred seventy ninth Pages of the third Tome of his Works.

[G] John Stuckius made his Funeral Oration. Thuanus is not well translated. They will have him say, that Josiah Simler composed the Funeral Oration of Bullinger (10). Whereas, he says no more than that Simler praised Bullinger. 'Senio gravis decessit 13 Kalend. Octob. à Josiah Simlero - - - laudatus, & variis variorum carminibus epitaphiis celebratus (11). - - He died at a great Age, on the seventeenth of September, and was commended by Josiah Simler, and celebrated in Epitaphs, in different kinds of Verse, by several Hands.' This is very true, though it was Stuckius, and not Simler, that made the Funeral Oration; for Simler wrote Bullinger's Life, wherein he praised him highly.

[H] Mr

(9) Simler. ubi supra, fol. 44.

(10) Telfier Elog. taken from Thuanus, Tom. I, pag. 440.

(11) Thuan. lib. lxi, pag. 139.

(3) Hotting. in Methodo legendi Histor. Helvet. pag. 603. & seq.

rer's Faults are not material [H]. Those of Mr Teiffier are likewise inconsiderable, and not so numerous [I].

(12) In Latin
Urs.

(13) Simler, ubi
supra, fol. 7.

(14) Spondan.
Annal. Eccles.
ad Ann. 1531,
n. 7.

(15) Simler, ubi
supra, fol. 42,
verso.

(16) Affiduum
heretorem habebat
fratrem ipso 8. annis natu
ma-joem Joannem nomine, qui tum
in eadem Schola (Embrica) literis operam dabat, &
privatim ejus stu-
dia informabat.
Id. ibid. fol. 6.

(17) Id. fol. 6.
verso, & fol. 42,
verso.

[H] Mr Moreri's Faults are not material. I. The River, which runs by Bremgarten, is not called Ruffi, but Rufi (12). II. It does not appear from Bullinger's Life, though Simler has described it amply and exactly, that he was a Clergyman in the Communion of Rome. It is expressly noted, that he performed no manner of Roman Catholic Function in the Abbey of la Cappel. 'Religio illi manebat integra, neque quicquam negotii habebat cum votis monasticis, monachatu, cuculla, cantu, choro, ALIISQUE superstitionibus papisticis (13). - - - His Religion was intirely pure, nor had he any share in the Monastic Vows, or Order, Habit, Singing, Choir, or ANY OTHER Popish Superstition.' It is likely, that Mr Moreri was misled by Spondanus, who says, that Henry Bullinger, an Apostate and a married Priest, succeeded Zuinglius. 'Zuinglio porro Tiguri in Cathedra pestilentie successit est Henricus Bullingerus itidem Helvetius ex Presbytero apostata uxoratus (14).' III. It is true, indeed, that John Bullinger, the Brother of Henry, died in the Year 1570 (15); but it is false that he was eighty Years of Age. He was eight Years older than his Brother (16); therefore he was born in the Year 1496; so that he must have been only Seventy four Years of Age when he died. What was Melchior Adam dreaming of, when he made him Eighty fix Years old; when he mentions the eight Years difference between the two Brothers, and places the Death of the Eldest in the Year 1570? This John Bullinger had been some time Curate of a Village in the Canton of Uri: He loved War and Hunting, and sometimes followed the Inhabitants of his Canton, when they went to fight. He was stripped and very much wounded in a Battle which they lost. From that time, he renounced the War and the Priesthood: He turned Protestant, betook himself again to his Study, and, being made a Minister, he faithfully discharged the Duties of his Ministry, till he died (17). This Phrase of Moreri, He brought him over afterwards to the Party of the Protestants, and he died in 1573, being fourscore Years old, is so ill put together, that the most knowing Readers may be deceived by it. The first he refers to Henry Bullinger, and the second to John Bullinger. But, according to the Rules of writing well, they ought both to refer to the same Man, and every Reader will understand them so at the first Reading. They have been taken in that Sense, in the Amsterdam Edition, and therefore the Editor thought that the last Member of the Period contained two Falsities. The Period was therefore rectified in this manner: He brought him over afterwards to the Party of the Protestants, and died in 1575, being Seventy one Years old. It is certain that Moreri does not speak of Henry Bullinger's Death in that Place; he only mentions the Death of John. At the end of the Article he mentions that of Henry, and places it on the Twenty fourth of May, 1575. IV. Moreri should have said, not that Bullinger wrote two Dialogues, when he was but twenty Years of Age, against a Jew - - - in favour of Capnio; but that he wrote them at sixteen Years of Age (18) against a Jew converted to Christianity. The Reason why he should have added this, is, that the Monks, who persecuted Capnio, alledged for a Pretence, that he opposed the destroying of Jewish Books, and favoured Judaism. It is certain, that the Jews are not his Adversaries. V. It is not true that at twenty Years of Age he had a mind to turn Carthusian (19). VI. The two Attempts mentioned by Moreri would not have been omitted in Bullinger's Life, if they were true. Moreri says; That the first time That Minister undertook to preach at Bremgarten, he met with such Opposition, that he was obliged to retire into the Country. He confounds the Father with the Son: It was Bullinger's Father who was expelled from his native Country, when he had declared against the Mass; but the Son went thither only once to perform the Functions of Minister in that Place. VII. It is not true that the Calvinists wrote against him. VIII. His Steadiness, in the Dispute he had with Brentius, was not at all an Effect of a Promise he had made to Zuinglius; for their Dispute ran upon the Doctrine of Ubiquity, which was not started till after Zuinglius's Death. Would any one be so unreasonable as to say, that Bullinger made a general Promise to oppose the Lutherans, whatever Doctrine they should invent for the future? I pass by three other small Mistakes which I have rectified in my first Edition.

[I] Those of Mr Teiffier are - - - not so numerous. He says, I. That when Bullinger had made an End of his Studies, he resolved to turn Carthusian. II. That he established the Reformation at Cappel, a Town in Switzerland. III. That he retired to Zurich, and, after Zuinglius's Death, was chosen - - - to fill his Place. IV. That he exercised the Ministry for the space of Fifty Years (20). Bullinger had a Mind to turn Carthusian, when he was but twelve Years of Age (21); but he had no more such Thoughts at the Age of seventeen (22). Cappel is not a Town, but an Abbey. Bullinger did not go to Zurich till after Zuinglius was killed (23). He was not a Minister for the space of Fifty Years. One may infer from the History of his Life, that he was admitted into the Ministry only in 1527, or 1528. Tibanus is in the right to say, that he exercised his Ministry during Forty three Years; but that Historian should not have said, that he served all that Time the Church of Zurich; he should have taken off three Years.

(18) Simler, and Melchior Adam say these Dialogues were written in the Year
1520.

(19) See the following Remarks

(20) Teiffier,
ubi supra, pag.
476.

(21) Quamvis
puer adhuc con-stituerat se Car-thusianorum instituto addicere.
Simler, ubi supra,
fol. 5, ad Ann.
1516.

(22) Propositum
de Carthusianorum vita amplectenda prorsus
abiecit, Id. fol. 74
ad Ann. 1521.

(23) Tigorum
venit anno 1525,
10 XXI. die 28.
Kalend. Decem-
bris. Id. fol. 13, verso.
Zuinglius was killed the 11th of Octob. 1531.

BUNEL (WILLIAM), Professor of Physic in the University of Toulouse, towards the Beginning of the XVIIth Century. He wrote a Piece not mentioned by Gesner, nor by Vander Linden, nor by their Continuators. Du Verdier Vau-Privas has given us the Title of it, and some Extracts [A].

[A] He wrote a Book — of which Du Verdier has given the Title, and some Extracts. This is that Title: 'Euvre excellente & à chacun desirant de peste se préserver tres utile. Contenant les Médecines préservevatives & curatives des maladies pestilencieuses & conservatives de la Santé. Composée par Maître Guillaume Bunel en la faculté de Médecine Docteur Régent de l'Université de Tholose, lesquelles par luy sont ordonnées tant en Latin qu'en François par rime. Avec plusieurs Epistres à certains excellens personnages en la louange de Justice & de la chose publique (1). — An excellent Work, and very useful to those who are desirous to preserve themselves from the Plague, containing Remedies to preserve one's self from, and to cure pestilential Diseases. Written by William Bunel a Physician, Doctor of the University of Toulouse, who has prescribed those Remedies both in Latin and French Verses. With several Letters to some eminent Persons in Commendation of Justice, and in Praise of the Commonwealth.' That Book was printed at Toulouse in the Year 1513, in 4to. I shall set down the first Verses of the Extracts that are to be found in du Verdier:

En apres il se fault garder
De faire prou ni peu excés.
Dequoy lon se puisse eschauffer,
Car il en vient des maux alés.
Les femmes à part delaissez
Sans toucher aux bas instrumens:
Plusieurs en ont souffert tourmens.
Je ne dis pas qu'en mariage
Afin qu'on puisse avoir du fruit,
Vous ne faciez aucun ouvrage
De tard en tard ainsi que duit:
Mais ce soit apres la minuict

D d d

Parfaict

(1) Du Verdier,
Vau-Privas Bi-
blioth. Françoisie,
pag. 472.

Parfaicte la digestion
 Pous faire generation.
 Aussi grands inconveniens
 Vient pour trop manger & boire:
 On a veu de grands accidens
 Desquels devons avoir memoire.
 Et pource, si me voulez croire,
 Mangez peu, net & bon il soit:
 Fol est qui soi-mesmes deçoit (2).

(2) Id. ibid.

*The least excess of any kind,
 Whether of Body, or of Mind,
 With studious Care be sure avoid,
 Health by excess is oft destroy'd:
 From Am'rous dalliance abstain,*

*For many thence have suffer'd Pain:
 I do not say, but married Men
 May do the Office, now and then,
 As requisite for Procreation,
 But, let them do't with Moderation,
 And in the Morning, when, for use,
 Digestion has prepar'd the Juices:
 Too many by Experience learn,
 (May their Examples others warn!)
 Distempers, more than one can think,
 Flow from excess, in Meat and Drink.
 Be then content with little Food,
 And chuse that little clean and good:
 This, take my Word, 's the safest Rule:
 He that deceives himself 's a Fool.*

BUNEL (PETER), a Native of Toulouse, was one of the politest Latin Writers that lived in the XVIth Century [A]. He studied at Paris, in Coqueret College, where he gloriously distinguished himself by his noble Genius. Being returned to Toulouse, and not knowing how to maintain himself in his Family, he sought his Fortune elsewhere. He went to Padua, and was maintained there by Emilius Perrotus. Afterwards he had a good place procured him in the House of Lazarus de Baif, Embassador of Francis I, at Venice, where he spent three Years with great Satisfaction and Profit; and was even assisted, in his Study of the Greek Tongue, by the Embassador his Master. When he had made a considerable Progress in that Language, he studied the Hebrew Tongue. George de Salve, Bishop of Lavaur, who was made Embassador of Francis I, at Venice, after Lazarus de Baif, took Bunel into his Service. They were so pleased with one another, that when the Bishop repassed the Alpes, and resolved to reside in his Bishopric, according to the Duty of a good Prelate, he found Bunel altogether disposed to retreat to Lavaur. That learned Man found there what suited best with his Humour; a great Tranquillity, a great deal of time to study, and the satisfaction of not having before his Eyes the great Examples of the Corruption of the Age. After the Death of his Prelate (a), he returned to Toulouse, where he would have been in a poor and miserable Condition [B], if Messieurs du Faur, Protectors of Virtue and Learning, had

(a) He died in 1541.

[A] He was one of the politest Latin Writers in the XVIth Century.] He served for a Model to Paulus Manutius, which is a great Encomium. Catel could not well forget it. 'Stephen (1) Bunel, says he (2), who instructed the said Sieur de Py-brac in polite Literature, and whose Latin Epistles are extant, which were printed in Italy, and other Places, was the first who, in his Time, taught the Romans and Italians to speak Latin with Purity, and in the Ciceronian Style; whereas before they were misled by the Stile of Politian, Hermolaus Barbarus, and others, as Paulus Manutius, a very elegant Latinist, and a very competent Judge, acknowledges as to himself in his Epistles.' Henry Stephens had before taken Advantage of Paul Manutius's Acknowledgment. Take a short Account of what he did: Discouraging one Day with Henry III, he told him that an Italian had made bold to say, in a printed Book, That Italy had produced many Ciceronians, and France had produced none. The King was very much surprised at it, and desired to know whether it was true: He was answered that it was false. Whereupon he desired that a Parallel should be drawn between the Italian and French Ciceronians (3). In obedience to him, Henry Stephens published the Letters of our Bunel, and some select ones of Longolius, to which he added, in the same Volume, the select Letters of Paul Manutius and Sadolet, with some of Peter Bembo. He named indeed Peter Bunel to Henry III, but he forgot to tell the King that That Man alone was as good as many: 'Mih cum alios tum Petrum Bunellum suggestit quidem memoria: sed, vel unum hunc esse instar multorum posse, id vero addere, in mentem non venit (4). — My Memory suggested to me Peter Bunel among others: but, I forgot, to add, that he alone was as good as many.' He thinks that those, who do not envy the Glory of France, will judge of Peter Bunel as he does: 'Quod apud te tacui de Bunello publicè ita dico, ut mihi, quicunque Gallicæ laudi non invident, assensuros, persuasum propemodum habeam (5). — What I did not mention to you concerning Bunel, I say

(1) He should have said Peter.(2) Catel's Memoirs for the History of Language, pag. 122.(3) Taken from the Epistle Dedicatory of Henry Stephens, to Henry III, perixed to the Letters of Peter Bunellus, &c. 1581.(4) Henr. Stephanus, in Epist. Dedicat. Epist. Bunelli.(5) Id. ibid.

publickly, in which I am almost persuaded, that every one, who does not envy the Honour of France, will agree with me.' He not only represents him as a Ciceronian, but even as the Master of the Italian Ciceronians (6), for which he alleges Manutius's own Confession. 'Is enim quum summum Ciceronianitatis attigisse gradum existimetur, ad eam tamen se nonnisi ductu & auspiciis hominis Galli pervenisse fatetur. Ita enim hic in quadam ad Vidum Fabrum epistola (quæ est libro ejus epistolarum primo) de nostro Petro Bunello. Ego ab illo maximum habebam beneficium, quod me cum Politianis & Erasmis nescio quibus misere errantem, in hanc recte scribendi viam primus induxerat. Sed in posterioribus Editionibus cum Philelphis & Campanis, pro illis cum Politianis & Erasmis, scriptum est. Utroque tamen scribitur modo, primum Ciceronianè scribendi nostro Bunello laus constat: non parva illa quidem, vel ipsius Manutii judicio. Is enim Politianos & Erasmos (in quorum postea locum Philelphi & Campani substituti fuerunt) quod eam quam ipsi Bunellus ostendit scribendi viam non tenuerint, misere errasse arbitrat (7). — For though he is thought to have attained to the highest Pitch of the Ciceronian Style, yet, he confesses, that he did not attain it, without the Instruction and Assistance of a French Man. For in a Letter to Guy Faber (extant in the first Book of his Letters) concerning our Bunel, he says thus: I received great Benefit from him, for he first brought me into the way of writing well, from whence I had miserably strayed after Politian and Erasmus. But in the latter Editions, instead of Politian and Erasmus, is put Philelphus and Campanus. Which way ever we read it, the Praise of writing in a Ciceronian Style remains fixed to our Bunel: no small Commendation even in Manutius's Opinion. For he thought that Politian and Erasmus (in whose stead Philelphus and Campanus were afterwards substituted) were very much in the wrong, that they did not follow that Method of writing, which Bunel showed him.' [B] He returned to Toulouse, and would have been in a poor and miserable Condition.] Here I must

(6) Id. in Præfati(7) Id. ibid.

had not of their own Accord exerted their Liberality towards him. One of them put his Sons under his Care, to instruct them, and go with them into Italy. Bunel did not make an end of his Journey, for he died of a burning Fever at Turin. He lived but Forty seven Years. He was a Man more commendable still for his regular Life, than for the Beauty of his Stile (b). He was never seen to hunt after Riches and Preferments: being contented with Necessaries, he made it his chief Business to cultivate his Mind [C]: This Conduct is almost as rare in the Commonwealth

(b) Taken from Mr Gravel's the Advocate's, Preface to Bunel's Letters in the Toulouse Edition, 1687.

must observe, that some Persons exasperated the Bishop's Brothers against him. They made them believe he had inspired him with the Desire of leaving the Court, and minding only the Duties of Episcopacy, and even of leading an austere and over contemplative Life. They represented to them, that That Advice had been attended with fatal Consequences; since that Prelate had not only stopped the Course of his Fortune, when in a fair way, but also lost his Life in the Flower of his Age, by being a rigid Follower of a spiritual Life. Bunel being told, that those Gentlemen gave Credit to such Reports, and were angry with him, durst not write to them in his own Justification; but he wrote to Peter Danes and to du Ferrier upon that Subject. He represented to them, that two sorts of Men did him that ill Office. Some had been displeased to see George de Selve confine himself to his Bishopric; others found him too severe against their disorderly Lives: All of them hated Bunel; the former, because they looked on him as the Cause of that Retirement, whereby they had been deprived of the Preferments which they expected; and the latter, because they looked on him as the Instrument of the Penalties which the Prelate had made use of to restrain their ill Lives. Bunel in some measure excuses the Ambition of the former, and despises the Resentment of the latter. He does not think it strange, that Men, insatuated with human Grandeur, who had scarce seen any Example of a noble Contempt of worldly Things, should be displeased with the Bishop's Retreat: But he is so charmed with his Resolution to reside in his Bishopric, that he dares not ascribe to himself the Glory of having advised him to it. Let us see his own Words: 'Duo sunt hominum genera, quos mihi succensere minime miror, & non ita moleste fero: unum est eorum, qui Vaurensem Antistitem Vaurum secedere moleste ferebant: quod perinde est, atque si ducem exercitus in castra venire, in acie versari, cum hoste, si res ferat, conficere nunquam patiare. Verum ii, quoniam rerum humanarum splendore capiti, serpentes humi, neque in coelum suspicere queunt, ferendi sunt, & si incurfabit aliquando in nos eorum dolor, non sunt asperius repellendi. Oppressi sunt opinionibus, magnos sequuntur duces, ut jam quod exemplo multorum faciant, jure quodammodo facere videantur. Sed interim quid mihi vitio vertant, satis intelligere non possum. Georgius Selva Vaurenfis Antistes religionem Christianam suis & suorum commodis, divina humanis, aeterna caducis prætulit. Quid ad me? si hoc mihi tribuunt, rerum pulcherrimarum auctorem me laudant: quod ego neque agnosco, neque sane mihi tribui possum. --- sunt nonnulli --- qui ad secundum distributionis meae genus pertinent, quorum ego rationibus cum una vivebamur optime quidem consultum semper volui: sed quia jussu patroni illorum cupiditatibus adversabar, odisse me pessime nunquam destiterunt: horum ego testimonium, quoniam nullius ponderis est, refellere non constitui, neque scelera & flagitia acerbis infectari. Ergo & illos priores minime miror, & illos facile contemno (8). --- There are two sorts of Men that I do not wonder are angry at me, nor am I so much concerned at it: one sort are they who were grieved that the Bishop of Lavaur retired to his Diocese; which is just as if you should not allow a General to come to the Camp, to continue with the Army, and fight the Enemy if need be. But as they, being taken with the Splendor of human Things, grovel on the Earth, and cannot look up to Heaven; they are to be born with, and if their Displeasure should at any time fall on me, they are not to be repulsed roughly. They are born down by Opinions,

(8) Petrus Bunnellus, Epist. lili, pag. 184, 185.

and follow great Leaders; so that in what they do, after the Example of many, they imagine they are in some measure in the right. But, in the mean time, I cannot see what they can blame me for. George de Selve, Bishop of Lavaur, preferred the Christian Religion to his own and his Family's Interest, divine to human, and eternal to transitory Things. What is that to me? if they attribute this to me, they commend me as Author of a most laudable thing: which I neither acknowledge, nor desire to be ascribed to me. --- there are some --- who belong to my second Division, to whose way of Life I was a thorough Well-wisher, when I lived amongst them; but, because, by order of my Patron, I was an Enemy to their Desires, they have always hated me: the Testimony of these Men being of no weight, I thought not fit to refuse it, nor inveigh too sharply against their Crimes and Wickedness. There's sure the first I do not at all wonder at; the latter I heartily despise. He is so far from owning, that he urged his Master to an over-rigid Life, that, on the contrary, he maintains he often exhorted him to use Moderation, and to consider that a Man, by neglecting his Body, may lose his Health, and even his Life. Simulatque eum ad res divinas accerrime contemplandas evolare, neque solum divitias & honores contemnere, sed parum etiam valetudini parcere animadverti: quid prætermisi, quo eum à nimia illa animi contentione revocarem? Quoties illud usurpavi, curandum esse, ut quæ libenter, ea etiam diutius faceret? Egi interdum liberius, & eam quam nunc video rerum commutationem, & pene genus ipsum mortis prædixi. Cum enim corpus, meo judicio, neque satis ali, neque exerceri, animum autem ad celestium rerum cogitationem continenter convocari animadverterem, non fuit difficile colligere, hoc diuturnum esse non posse (9). --- As soon as I observed that he applied himself so eagerly to the Contemplation of divine things, and not only despised Riches and Honours, but even neglected his Health; what did I omit whereby I might divert him from that over intenseness of Thought? How often did I urge him to take Care that what he did with Pleasure he might do long? I sometimes spoke very freely, and foretold that Change which I now see, and almost the very manner of his Death. For when I saw that his Body was not, in my Judgment, either nourished or exercised sufficiently, and his Mind perpetually taken up with the Contemplation of heavenly Things, it was easy to judge, that That could not last long.

(9) Id. Epist. xlviii, pag. 165, 166. See also Lett. lili, p. 186.

[C] Being contented with Necessaries, he made it his chief Business to cultivate his Mind. He wrote to du Ferrier the following Words (10): 'Quoniam postulare videbatur fortunarum mearum tenuitas, ut longe mihi in posterum prospicerem, tamen ut verum fatear, ego mei dissimilis esse non possum. Post Deum, in studiis Literarum mihi sunt omnia, quæ etiam dabo operam ut ad eum ipsum referantur. Dices hominem egestate oppressum præclari nihil efficere posse: Verum id quidem est: Sed ego, cum parvo contentus sim, nunquam existimavi id mihi deesse posse: quæ spes adhuc me non fessellit (11). --- For tho' the narrowness of my Fortune seemed to require, that I should make Provision for the time to come, yet to tell the Truth, I cannot differ from myself. Next to GOD, my whole Study is in Literature, and that I will endeavour to turn to his Service. You will say, that a Man, oppressed with Poverty, can do nothing considerable: That is true indeed: But I, being content with a little, never thought I could want that, and hitherto my Expectation has not failed.' What he wrote to Reynold Chandon, deserves to be duly considered,

(10) Id. Epist. lili, pag. 187, 188.

(11) It is in the Edition of Toulouse, 1687, me fessellit. It is a Fault of the Press, which spoils the Sense.

Commonwealth of Learning as elsewhere. There are some Latin Letters of this good

(12) Lazarus de Baif.

(13) Bunel, Epist. xxi, pag. 80. See also Letter xxvii, pag. 104.

(14) Id. ibid. pag. 76, 77. Compare this with the Remark [G], of the Article ATTICUS.

(15) Id. p. 77, 78.

considered. Cbandon was a Man, who loved him much, and who had procured him a handsome and very necessary Place in the Houle of the French Embassador (12). 'In Italia cum ex magna rerum omnium difficultate laborarem, tu princeps sponte tua ad me amandum & tuendum omnes conatus tuos & impetus contulisti (13). - - - In Italy, when I laboured under great Difficulty in all my Affairs, you, of your own accord, generously employed your utmost Endeavours and Power to give me Favour and Protection.' Some Years after he endeavoured to serve him, and to put him in the way of making his Fortune. But Bunel made Answer, That he had no Ambition, and should not much care to get considerable Preferments, tho' Things were well regulated; and that he would have none, knowing they are the Reward of vicious Practices, and that he had not the ill Qualities that are requisite for a Man to raise himself in the World. 'Si rempublicam recta ratione geri viderem, & ad summos honores acquirendos mihi facillima essent omnia, ascendere tamen altius non magnopere laborarem. Nunc vero cum insignia ista dignitatum, non virtuti, industriaeque, sed improbitati inertiaeque tribui videam, neque hujusmodi praemia, si mei similis esse volo, optare debeo, neque cum ab iis artibus, quibus haec parantur, pessime instructus sim, sperare possum (14). - - - If I saw public Affairs managed aright, and it were ever so easy for me to attain the greatest Honours, yet I should not greatly labour to rise high. But now, when I see Dignities are not given to Virtue and Industry, but to Vice and Idleness; I ought not, if I will be consistent with myself, wish for such Rewards, nor, being ill provided with those Arts by which they are obtained, can I hope for them.' He adds, that, if his Friends will do something for him that suits with his Inclination, they must know, that he is only for a quiet Life, and that he has chosen a Closet Retirement, as a Harbour wherein he may shelter himself from the Storms of Ambition and Envy; that Men want things only in Proportion to their Desires; that as for him, he has confined his Desires within narrow Bounds, and therefore does not think himself poor for not having what he does not wish for; that those, who despise his Resolution, may run as fast as they please, whither their blind Avarice drives them; that he does not care for it, provided they suffer him to live a quiet Life in the Bosom of his Christian Philosophy. 'Ego animi tranquillitatem mihi proposui, ad quam meas actiones & cogitationes omnes referri volo: quicquid ab hac abducti, aversor & abominor. - - - Ego ne maximas ambitionis & invidiae procellas subire cogere in portum hunc literarum me abdididi: tu me egredi, & turbulentissima tempestate vela facere jubes: magnum est id quidem, quod me consecuturum speras, sed non satis ad id quod volo accommodatum. Perexiguum est, mi Reynolde, quod mihi deest, quoniam in rebus humanis tantum cuique opus est, quantum quicquid cupit: cui cupiditati angustos cancellos circumdedit, eisdem terminis inopiam, quibus desiderium rerum definit. Hanc sententiam si quis non laudat, aut si etiam meum hoc consilium contemnit, nihil me movet, modo ne mihi molestus sit: ruat quo caecae cupiditates eum confectum trahunt, me in hac philosophia Christiana liberum acquiescere patiar (15). - - - What I have in view is Tranquillity of Mind; to this I would have all my Actions and Thoughts to tend: whatsoever leads another way I shun and abominate. - - - I have retired into this Haven of Literature, that I might not be obliged to go through the Storms of Ambition and Envy; you desire me to come out, and sail in a most violent Tempest: it is indeed a great thing that you hope I shall obtain, but not well suited to what I desire. It is very little, my Reynold, that I want; for in things of this World every Man wants just as much as he desires: this Desire I have circumscribed in narrow Bounds, and define Want in the same Terms with the Desire of Things. If any one does not like my Opinion, or even despises this Resolution of mine, that does not affect me, so he be not troublesome to me: let him run where his blind Desires carry him Prisoner, and let me remain free in this Christian Philosophy.' There is no doubt, but he gives a faithful Account of his Heart here; he was a good Man then, and such an one as Diogenes looked for; Thus all Men ought indeed to turn their Mind; especially Christians; and yet this is what they will not do, hardly one in Six hundred thousand. The Reformed have a small Catechism, in which the first Question is, Wherefore has GOD sent us into the World? The Catechumen answers, To know, and to serve Him. This, in general, is the Principle of all Christians; but it is a Principle only in Theory, a meer Speculation: if their Answer were to be suited to their moral Practice, most Christians would answer, That GOD sent them into the World to enrich themselves, and rise to high Offices; for this is actually all they aim at; this is their whole Care. Some indeed think at first on nothing more than obtaining a competent Maintenance; but as soon as they get possessed of this Competency, they immediately aim at aggrandizing themselves, and propose by degrees to mount to the highest Dignities. This Spirit governs a Father, both with regard to himself and to his Children, and he communicates it to them, as soon as their Age will permit. No one is satisfied with the Condition he is born in; but endeavours to make a better Figure than his Father (16). The Son of a mean Artificer uses his utmost Endeavour to become a rich Citizen. If his covetous and insatiable Industry brings him in great Riches, he soon grows prodigal in hopes of attaining to Offices, and getting a share in the Government. No Expences appear too great, provided they are but useful towards procuring him the good Offices of the mediate or immediate Distributors of Magistracy. They, who, by their Character, are most obliged to practise the Precepts of Jesus CHRIST concerning the despising of this World, forget this Obligation but too often; and take Opportunities of getting great Estates, to advance their Families, and to raise their Dependants. This puts me in mind of what a good Man told me one day. He happened to make a Visit to Mr  where there were nine or ten Persons more, who discoursed on divers Things. At last, the Conversation fell on the Qualities of a certain Minister. One of those Gentlemen blamed him freely enough for some Things: Another answered, and, without justifying the Minister altogether on these Points, alledged other Things in his Favour, and insisted chiefly on the Article of Friendship. 'Never, said he, was a better Friend than this Minister, nor a Person of more Zeal to do good to those who espouse his Interests. He procured Pensions for such and such; by his Recommendation, such and such a one obtained a Place of Two thousand Livres a Year, and are in a way to make their Fortune. Others keep their Coaches, by means of the private Hints he had given them to buy Goods, that would become scarce in a little time. Others, desiring passionately to attain to the Magistracy, have, by his good Offices, overcome the Difficulties which lay in their way.' After he had gone through several Articles, Mr  took up the Discourse, and said, 'I am much scandalized at the manner of your praising a Successor of the Apostles. I should not think it strange, if you praised a Pagan, or a Layman of our Religion at this rate; but I cannot bear your palming these things upon us, as very fine Qualities in a Minister of Jesus CHRIST. Is it his business to know whether such or such Merchandizes will rise or fall about such a time (17)? Does it become him to give his Friends notice of it, and to smooth them a way to Riches and Honours? Is not this pouring of Oil into the Fire of Covetousness and Ambition, a Fire which he is obliged to quench in the Soul of all his Flock, as much as possible? Does he not know, that the Riches and Honours of this World are the Nourishment of Vanity,

(16) All would act like Horace: Me libertino natum patre & in tenui re Majores penitus nido extendisse loquor. Horat. Epist. xx. lib. 1, vers. 20.

(17) It is with regard to things of this kind, that one may say of an Ecclesiastic, necesse quaedam magna pars est sapientiae. — To be ignorant of this, is as glorious as to understand an obscure Passage of St Paul.

good Man, which are written with the greatest Purity [D], and contain several curious Facts [E]. Some (c) think that he was the Son of William Bunel, whom I have city, are so many Clogs, and Stumbling-blocks in the way of Salvation; he would be just as much to be praised if he exhorted his Friends to give to the Poor what they expend in endeavouring to advance themselves, as he is to be blamed in favouring their Ambition. If he persuaded a Friend of his to put down his Coach, and walk about on Foot, and sell his Equipage to endow Hospitals, I should look upon this as a true friendly Office in him: And this, Sir, is the Duty of your Hero.

These are doubtless very Christian Thoughts; but in the corrupt State in which we live, they are meer Platonic Ideas. That Contempt of Riches and Dignities, which constituted the Character of our Bunel, is seldom found at present either in the Laity or Clergy; and what shews the height of Corruption, is, that there is hardly any one but despises those who preserve that Indifferency. So true is it, that the Truths of the Gospel, which are daily read and heard among us, make but little Impression on our Hearts! A learned Man is highly praised and admired, who knows how to enrich himself, and to climb from Office to Office, and who, to make his Fortune, divides his whole time into two parts, the one for his Books, and the other to court the Favour of great Persons, and to insinuate himself every where. Such a Person, who is really most depicable, is not despised, Bunel, and such as he, who are, in reality, most worthy of Esteem, are looked upon with Contempt. What an Allotment of Approbation is here! Bunel is according to Rule, and the others not. I say, Bunel, who prefers the quiet of his Studies, before all the Splendor of worldly Honours. Recuperta animi tranquillitate mihi in animo est, in desertissimam solitudinem secedere, ibique cum libris meis, & uno fortasse studiorum socio, annos aliquot soluto & vacuo animo Neptunum procul à terra spectare furentem. Quod meum consilium rei familiaris angustia impedire posse viderentur, nisi Fabri huic malo liberalitate sua mederi se velle confirmarent. Quod si res ex sententia succedent, equidem neque Regibus potentiam & voluptates, neque Ducibus victorias & triumphos, neque faeneratoribus divitias, neque tibi & Montauro nostro Reipub. gerendae laudem invidebo (18). —

When I have recovered my Tranquillity of Mind, I think to retire into some unfrequented Solitude, and there, with my Books, and perhaps, one Companion in Study, for some Years, with a free and easy Mind, from Land to view the Sea rage at a Distance. This Purpose of mine might seem likely to be obstructed, by the Strangeness of my Circumstances, had not the Fabers assured me, that they will remedy this Evil by their Bounty. And if things succeed to my Mind, truly I shall neither envy Kings their Power and Pleasures, nor Generals their Victories and Triumphs, nor Usurers their Wealth, nor you, and Montaur, the Honour of ruling the State. If he had stood fair to attain to the Academical Dignities or Honours, and had not been promoted to them in his Turn, because he was not in the Interests of the prevailing Faction, do you think it would have vexed him, or that, to retrieve this pretended Disgrace, he would have gone over to the more powerful Party? For my part, I do not think he would. He would have been more a Philosopher than a thousand others are: The disappointing these of their Reward troubles them; they sink under the pressure soon or late: I mean, they put themselves into the Road to Favour. Their Inconstancy might be excused, if Exclusion was a sign of want of Merit; but as it only proves, that their party is the weaker, it does no prejudice to a Man's true Honour: it may even contribute to render it more shining, both for the present and the future. What has been said of Martyrs, that it is the Cause, and not the suffering, that makes them (19), is true both in that Sense, and the contrary; for it is not the privation of Dignities that dishonours a Man, but the Cause of that privation; they therefore who do not attain to them, because they stand firm on the side of Justice, tho' inferior in Credit, ought to look upon that, not as a Dishonour, but as a Piece of Honour; thus our Bunel would have done (a).

VOL. II.

[a] Peter Bunel, when young, had taken some liking to the Doctrine of the Reformed; and a Letter from Paulus Manutius to Guy du Faur, pag. 23 of Manutius Letters, Edition of Morget, gives room to think, that some Catholics believed, that Bunel retained some tincture of Protestantism to his Death. Satis scio, says that Letter, fuisse qui illum (Bunellum) depravatae Religionis nomine in Crimen vocaverunt. — I knew very well, that some Persons accused him of being heretically inclined. But however it was not on the Article of Justification. For according to Beza Hist. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 48. ad ann. 1545, Bunel at that time run into the most extravagant Pelagianism. Calvin, who had at first made account of him, in 1550 was very far from regarding him as his Disciple: Paucos — videas (said he in that Year) Sapientiae suae persuasione inflatos, qui non sint oblinati veritatis hostes; Hypocritae verò ulque rabiem infesti. Et quae alia causa Bunello fuit, cur ab Evangelio deficeret; nisi quod homo ad ostentationem natus, & sibi plus nimio placens, in ordinem se cogi aegre sustinebat. — You find few who are puffed up with the Opinion of their own Wisdom, but they are obstinate Enemies to the Truth, and Hypocrites, spiteful even to madness. And what other reason had Bunel to fall away from the Gospel, except that he was a Man naturally inclined to Ostentation, and so over full of himself, that he could hardly bear to be brought into Order. If Paulus Manutius's Letter were dated, we might know very near the time of Bunel's Death. However, as that Letter is addressed to Guy du Faur (Pibrac), yet a Youth, who was born about the Year, 1528, I imagine that in the Year 1551, when Charles Stephens published Bunel's Letters, Bunel was dead but a very little before. REM. CRIT.]

[D] We have some of his Latin Letters, written with the utmost Purity. Charles Stephens collected them into one Body, and published them in the Year 1551 (20). Some of them had appeared before, printed at Toulouse (21): some of them were likewise inserted in the Volume intitled, Epistolae Clarorum Virorum. Charles Stephens's Edition was imitated at Cologne in the Year 1568 (22). Henry Stephens republished Bunel's Letters in the Year 1581: they were reprinted at Toulouse in the Year 1687: this last Edition is preferable to all the rest, on Account of the Notes added to it, by the late Mr Graverol, Advocate of Nimes, but is inferior to that of Henry Stephens, as to the Faults of the Press. Some of these Faults intirely spoil the Sense. I have given one example of it (23), and here follows another. Cum ille in omni genere doctrinae tibi merito tantum tribuat, quantum nemini, nec quem abs te commendari audivit, suis beneficiis dignum judicat (24); thus we read it in the Edition of Toulouse, instead of suis beneficiis indignum judicat, as it is in that of Henry Stephens. Once more: Illud me in eo sine imprimis delectabat, quod instituta eorum vehementer reprehenderet, qui Philosophiae studiis plusquam necesse Christianis esset, dediti, literas aut nunquam, aut sero admodum attingerent (25). Thus the Edition of Toulouse has it: the Word sacras does not follow literas, as it does in that of Henry Stephens; and that Omission makes a very puzzling Difficulty.

[E] — which contained some curious Facts.] I will give an example. We find there, that a Professor of Padua, in his Lectures, censured those who were more attached to the Studies of Philosophy, than is necessary for a Christian, and neglected the Study of the Scriptures all their Lives, or did not begin to examine them till very late (26). This Professor's Reasons were so strong, that they touched some of those who deserved his Censure (27). But a Letter from Sadolet slackened their Resolution: they were beginning to renounce their Concupine,

(c) Graverol, in Pref. Epist. Bunel.
(d) Calvin, pag. 20, of his Treatise De Scandalis, Edit. 1151.

(20) Epitome Biblioth. Gesneri, pag. 668.

(21) Jacobus Graverol, in praefatione Epist. Bunelli.

(22) Epit. Biblioth. Gesneri, pag. 603.

(23) Above, Citation (11).

(24) Bunellus, Epist. lvi, pag. 190.

(25) Id. ibid. pag. 197.

(26) Id. ibid.

(27) Nonnulli horum rerum propter insolentiam suam Oratore permoveere visus est. Bunellus, Epist. lvi, pag. 193.

(18) Bunel, Epist. xlvii, pag. 159.

(19) Causa, non pna, facit martyrem.

(d) Catel, Sammarthanus, Hen- Stephens, &c.

(e) Tholœe Normanus patre natum. Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. i, pag. 41.

have spoken of in the foregoing Article; but it is not probable, since we find not the least mention of it, either in his Letters, or in the Authors that speak of him (d). When Sammarthanus observes that the Father of Peter Bunel was a Norman (e), would he have forgot so honourable a Character as that of Regent Doctor, of a famous University? The Capitouls of Toulouse made a Statue of Marble in honour of Peter Bunel, and placed it in the Town-House [F].

(28) Id. Ibid. pag. 199.

Concubine, that is to say, Philosophy, to apply themselves to Theology, as to a chaste Spouse, when Sadolet's Letter engaged them anew in Concubinage. 'Cujus (Sadoleti) autoritate & eloquentia, quoniam nonnullis ita commoveri audio, ut in eo quod facere staterant, non perseverant: magis autem repudiata Theologia, quam paulo ante, veluti castissimam conjugem sibi desponderant, ad veterem pellicem, quam à se dimittere cogitabant, & ejus blandissimas illecebras revolvantur: placet in præsentia, &c. — As I understand that some are so moved with his (Sadolet's) Authority and Eloquence, that they do not persevere in their Resolution, but have rather put away Theology, which they had just before espoused as a chaste Wife, and are returned to their old Harlot, which they had thought to put away: I have a mind at present, &c. This Letter was thus occasioned; Reginald Pole, writing to Sadolet, desired him to prevail with Lazarus Bonamicus, to apply himself to the Holy Scriptures, or at least to abandon his Rhetoric, and study Philosophy. Pole was in hopes that That Study would not detain Bonamicus long, and would lead him much further. He thought that Bonamicus would perceive, that the light of Philosophy cannot lead a Man any further, than to make him at last own, that he knows only this, that he knows nothing: That this is the Ne plus ultra of Philosophy: from whence it must necessarily be concluded, that the mind of Man has need of some other light to dispel the Darkness of its ignorance. Now where is that Light to be found but in Revelation? 'Petierat Polus, ut, est religionis amplificandæ cupidissimus, à Sadolet per Epistolam, ut Lazarum Bonamicum, suum contubernalem, ad studia literarum sacrarum impelleret: velle id Antistitem non dubitabat: valere plurimum apud Bonamicum auctoritatem ejus sciebat. Quod si id fieri posse desperaret, saltem ab eloquentiæ studiis ad graviora illa Philosophiæ moralis præcepta traduceret: se sperare, ut cum eo pervenisset, non consistendum sibi in ea disciplina putaret, quæ altius evehere hominem certe non potest, quam ut tandem fateatur, se hoc unum scire, quod nihil sciat: Majore quâdam luce opus esse ad tam crassas ignorantie tenebras discutendas (29). Sadolet answered, that he thought it strange, that Philosophy should be thus despised, since, without it, Theology could not subsist: 'Cui respondet Sadoletus se aliquantum ægre ferre quod videre videatur hæc ornamenta ab eo contemni, quæ tanta sunt, ut sine his illa quæ omnibus præfert, constare non possint (30). And thereupon he sets forth at large the Advantages of Philosophy. Bunel clears this, and shews, that Sadolet's true sentiments are not what they might seem to be at first sight in that Letter. But however that be, I think that Pole's Judgment of Philosophy, is the very best that can be formed, and I am very glad, that such an Author furnishes me with something to confirm what I lay down in several Places, that our Reason serves only to confound every thing, and make us doubt of every thing. That it has no sooner built a System, but it shews you the way to ruin it. It is a true Penelope, which undoes in the Night all her Day's Work. Thus the best use that can be made of the Study of Philosophy, is to know, that it is a Path which leads astray, and that we ought to seek another Guide, which is the light of Revelation.

[F] The Capitouls of Toulouse made a Statue of Marble, in Honour of Peter Bunel, and placed it in the Town House. 'Nec silentio prætereundum est Capitolinos Toloanos, nequid gloriæ tam illustri viri desisset, marmoream ejus statuem in Capitolio aliquot abhinc annis collocasse, accurate clarissimo viro D. Germano La Faille, urbis Syndico, amico multis nominibus venerando, de Republicâ literariâ bene merito, cuique suum posteritas decus vicissim rependet (31). — Nor must we pass over in silence, that the Capitouls of Toulouse, left any thing should be wanting to the Glory of so illustrious a Man, placed a Marble Statue of him, in their Capitol, a few Years ago, by the care of the eminent Germanus La Faille, Syndic of the City, my Friend, to whom I am obliged on many Accounts, who deserves well of the Republic of Letters, and to whom Posterity shall repay the like Honour.

(29) Bonellus, Epist. lvi, pag. 199, 200.

(30) Id. Ibid. pag. 200, 201.

(31) Graverole in Præf. Epist. Bunelli.

(a) Plinius, lib. xxxvi, cap. v.

(b) He is called Anthermus in the Edition of Pliny. See the Article ANTHERMUS.

(c) See the Article HIPPONAX, Remarks [C] and [D].

BUPALUS was a famous Sculptor, Native of the Isle of Chio (a), Son, Grandson, and Great Grandson, of a Sculptor. He had a Brother named Athenis (b) [A], of the same Profession with himself; and probably they worked together, since Pliny speaks jointly of them, and their Works. They flourished in the LXth Olympiad, at the same time with Hipponax, who was a Poet of a contemptible Figure, ugly, and of a very weak Constitution. They set their Fancies to work upon him, and represented him in a ridiculous Form; but they met with their Match: he attacked them with so violent a Satire, that, as some Authors say, they hanged themselves for Spite and Vexation (c) [B]. Pliny does not allow this:

DICTIONARIES criticized.

[A] He had a Brother named Athenis.] Mr Moreri has said indeed, that Bupalus lived with Anthermus (it is thus he speaks according to the old Editions of Pliny); but not that they were two Brothers. Now every one sees that this was a Circumstance, which ought not to have been omitted, and without it, it is almost ridiculous to observe, that these two Men lived at the same time. On the other Hand, he forges one Bubalus, different from our Bupalus, which is nothing but a Chimera: it is certain, that he makes two Persons of them; for under the word Bubalus, he refers us to Anthermus, where he says, that Anthermus and Bubalus were Brothers. I say, he refers thither without referring to Bupalus; and in the Article of this last, he does not say, that Bupalus was Brother to Anthermus; this shews, that Bubalus and Bupalus pass with him for two Men. Besides, he varies as to the Profession of those Men; they are two Painters in the Article HIPPONAX (1), and two Sculptors, or Statuaries, every where else. He is not the first who has thus varied and multiplied. Charles Stephens says in one place (2), that they who made the Representation of Hipponax were Painters: in another (3), that Bubalus was a Painter, who made a Grotesque Picture of Hipponax: And in another (4), that Anthermus and Bubalus were two famous Sculptors, who made a ridiculous Figure of Hipponax. Messieurs Lloyd and Hofman have kept one part of these Variations. See the Remark [C] of the Article HIPPONAX. Bupalus is a great Painter in Calépin. Consult the learned Adrian Junius, in the sixteenth Chapter of the first Book of his Observations.

[B] — — — Hipponax wrote so violent a Satire against them — — — that they hanged themselves for meer Grief and Vexation.] I shall say something on this Subject in the Article HIPPONAX; here I only observe, that our Dictionaries sophisticate Pliny's Account. They (5) relate the thing as if several Painters

(2) In Hipponax.

(3) In Bubalus.

(4) In Anthermus, and in Bubalus.

(5) Calépinus, Carol. Stephanus, Lloyd, Hofman, in Hipponax.

(1) He cites in that Article the 26th Book of Pliny, instead of the 36th.

this: he says, on the contrary, that, when Hipponax had taken his Revenge, they made several fine Statues in divers Places. He mentions a Diana of theirs, which was at Jafus, in Caria, that was not so admirable as the other Diana, which they made at Cbio. This last was placed very high, and appeared with a frowning Countenance to those that came in, and a pleasant one to those that went out. There were several Statues at Rome made by them; they wrought only in white Marble of the Isle of Paros. Pausanias indeed mentions Bupalus (d); but he says nothing of Athenis; he observes that Bupalus was both a good Architect, and a good Sculptor. I think it might be gathered from a Passage in Aristophanes, that the Revenge taken on Bupalus, was not altogether in Verse [C], but consisted in some Blows also.

(d) Pausan. lib. iv, pag. 140, & lib. ix, pag. 309.

Painters had had a share in the insult offered to Hipponax, and as if the Vengeance, taken by that Poet, had thrown some of them into Despair; this supposes that some others of them did not die. Now this is not what Pliny says; he speaks only of Bupalus and Athenis. One of these Authors (6) blunders still worse in another place; for having made no mention of any more than these two Statuaries, he nevertheless says, that the Satires of Hipponax had made some of them hang themselves. Aliquos ex iis ad laqueum compulisse.

(6) Carol. Stephanus, in Anthermus.

[C] It might be gathered from a Passage of Aristophanes, that the Revenge --- did not consist wholly in Verses.] Let us recite the Words of Aristophanes,

Εἰ νῦν Διὰ τις τὰς γνάβας τῶν δὲ τριῶν ἔκοψεν Ὅσπερ Βεπάλη, φωνὴν ἐκ ἄν' εἶχον.

By Jove, if any one had given them two or three good Cuffs, as they did to Bupalus, they would have held their Tongues.

(7) Adrian. Junius Animadv. lib. i, cap. xi.

A learned Critic (7) was of Opinion, that this Poet alludes to a Verse, wherein Hipponax desires his Coat may be taken away, that he may pull Bupalus's Eyes out.

Ἀδελφε μὲ φομάτιον, κόψω Βεπάλη τὸν ὀφθαλμόν.

Auferite vestem meam, ut Bupalus excindam oculum.

But perhaps there were some other Verses of Hipponax, which made mention of blows given to Bupalus, by him, or some body else. The Allusion to these would be much more likely. The same Critic has found a Proverb of Bupalus's Hatred, where it is certain there is no Proverb; it is in an Epigram of the Anthology, which advertises those who pass by, that the Athes of Hipponax do still throw out Iambics in hatred of Bupalus.

Οὐτεχ' ἄ τέρρα ἱαμβίαζει Βεπάλειον εἰς τὸ γῶ.

Cujus cinis etiamnum in odium Bupalii Iambos jacit (8).

(8) Anthol. lib. iii, pag. 566.

This therefore only relates to a personal, and, as I may say, individual Hatred of this Poet, and is no general Epithet for great Hatred. We cannot therefore on the Authority of this Passage compare the odium Vatini with the odium Bupalium: yet if you consult the Adages of Junius, you will find, that Bupalii odium is the LIId Adage of the Vth Century, and that because of the Epigram which I have cited (9). You will find another Fault in it; for by Bupalus's Hatred, we understand that, which he bore to Hipponax, whereas the Epigram speaks only of that of Hipponax to Bupalus. The next Adage, Bupalia Pugna, is better founded; being taken from a Letter of Julian the Apostate (10), where, speaking of some Iambics, which he had received from his Brother, he styles them thus: Οὐ μάλ' ἢ ἀνίσταται τὴν Βεπάλην κατὰ τὸν Κυρναίου ποιητὴν, ἀλλ' οἷός ἐστι καλὴ Σαπφῶς ὁμοίαι τοῖς ὑμνοῖς ἀμύδιον. — They do not sing the Quarrel against Bupalus, to use the Expression of Callimachus; they are such as the fair Sappho requires to be proper for Hymns.

(9) Junius ascribes it to Leontidas. My Anthology says, the Author of it is uncertain.

(10) Ad Alypium Caesarem. Vide Junium Animadv. lib. i, cap. xvi.

BURANA (JOHN FRANCIS), born at Verona, flourished in the XVth Century. He was Disciple of Bagdinus, who explained Aristotle's Logic in the University of Bologna, and shewed a great deal of Subtlety in disputing. This was the reason that the Scholars expressed a great Desire that he would read public Lectures on that part of Philosophy: They had that Satisfaction, and, if they understood their new Master well, they were none of the dullest; for he led them through all the Field of the Greek and Arabian Interpreters. He had studied the Hebrew Tongue with great Success; having quitted his Professors, he applied himself to the Practice of Physic. He also undertook a Translation of some Treatises of Aristotle, and Averroës, with Commentaries on them. Death prevented his putting the last hand to it. He desired, nevertheless, that it might be printed, and enjoined his Heirs to take care of the Publication, after his Manuscript had been corrected by some learned Men. Bagolin had the Manuscript of it (a) [A].

[A] He enjoined his Heirs to take care of the Publication of his Writings. Bagolin had the Management of them.] See the Epistle Dedicatory, which he prefixed to the Book, intitled: 'Aristotelis priora resolutoria, Latino sermone donata, & commentariis illustrata à Joanne Francisco Burana, adjecta Averrois Expositione in eisdem libros cum Expositione secundi secti de facultate propositionum, & Averrois in eisdem compendio, eodem Burana interprete, cum annotationibus Hieronymi Bagolini.' This Work was printed at Paris, by Wechel, in the Year 1539, in Folio. It had been printed at Venice before (1).

(a) Taken from the Epistle Dedicatory, which Jerome Bagolin prefixed to the Translation of Aristotle's Analytics, &c. composed by Burana.

(1) See the Bibliotheca of Gesner, fol. 417.

BURGUNDY (House of). There were two Houses of that Name: I shall say but little of the first. It begun under Robert, King of France, Son of Hugh Capet. The third Son of this Robert, and Constance of Provence, was called Robert, and was Duke of Burgundy, and died in the Year 1075. His Descendants were in possession of this Dutchy till Philip I, of that Name, who died without Issue, the Twenty first of November, 1345. After that, John, King of France, gave Burgundy to Philip the Bold, his fourth Son (a). This was the beginning of the second House

(a) Taken from Father Labbe, Tab. Genealogique, pag. 121, & seq.

House of Burgundy, which flourished extremely under four successive Princes, of whom I am going to speak.

BURGUNDY (PHILIP, Duke of), fourth Son of John de Valois, King of France, was born at Pontoise, the fifteenth of January, 1341 (a) [A]. He was wounded and taken Prisoner in the Battle of Poitiers, in the Year 1356, after he had given a thousand Proofs of his Courage, in fighting near his Father (b). Some say that it was this Action which obtained him the Surname of THE BOLD [B]. He received the Investiture of the Duchy of Burgundy, in the Year 1363 (c), and married Margaret of Flanders, only Daughter of the Earl of Flanders and Artois, in the Year 1369 (d). He came to that fine Succession by the Death of his Brother-in-Law, in the Year 1384. The Year following he put an end to a Civil War, which had lasted seven Years in Flanders (e), in which the People of Ghent, chiefly, had shewn their seditious Spirit. He, and the Duke of Bourbon, were charged with the Education of Charles VI, King of France, by Charles V, who died in the Year 1380 (f). The Regency was left to Lewis, Duke of Anjou, Elder Brother of our Philip the Bold. A Difference soon arose between the two Brothers, thro' Jealousy of State. This Quarrel broke out in a more fatal manner, when Charles VI, having attained the Age of twenty Years, declared he would take the Reins of the Government into his own Hands (g). He kept his Brother, the Duke of Orleans, near him. The Duke of Burgundy, his Uncle, retired dissatisfied; and this was the Source of a mortal Enmity between the House of Burgundy, and the House of Orleans. Margaret of Flanders, Wife of Philip the Bold, and Valentina of Milan, Wife of the Duke of Orleans, fomented this Division by their Vanity [C]. The King's Diftemper, which rendered him incapable of acting without a Guardian, gave room for the Disorders occasioned by this fatal Emulation. The States of

(a) Father Anselme, Histoire Genealog. de la Maison Royale, pag. 205.

(b) See Remark [B].

(c) Gollut, Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 538.

(d) Id. pag. 547.

(e) Pontus Heuterus Rerum Burgund. lib. II, pag. 48.

(f) Mezerai Abregé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 105.

(g) Id. ibid. pag. 137.

[A] He was born --- the fifteenth of January 1341. This date seems to me more certain than that of Pontus Heuterus. He places the Birth of Philip the Bold in the Year 1334 (1). It is not a Fault of the Press; for he places his Death on the Twenty sixth of April, 1404, and makes him seventy Years of Age (2). He may be refuted by a very good Reason. King John was born the Twenty sixth of April, 1319 (3), and was married to Bonna of Luxemburg, in the Year 1332 (4). Therefore it is impossible that Philip the Bold, his fourth Son, should be born in the Year 1334; and seeing Charles V, his eldest Son, was born --- the Twenty first of January 1337 (5); judge if Pontus Heuterus was a good Chronologer. His Error was followed by Lewis Gollut (6), and by Mr Fabert (7). This last made a particular Fault, which he copied from Mezerai: he has placed the Death of Philip on the Twenty seventh of April, 1403. This Error is more pardonable than that which he falls into two Pages after, when he says, that the Duchess survived her Husband no more than eleven Months; she dying in the Month of August, 1405. If one did not see such things, one would scarce believe that any body could be so very careless. Observe, that Pontus Heuterus, without being mistaken, has been the Cause of the Error; 'Undecimo post Audacis mortem mensis, says he (8), Margareta apoplexia Atrebatu tacta maritum decimo sexto Cal. Septembris, anno 1405, vita excedens sequitur. --- Eleven Months after the Death of her Husband, she was struck with an Apoplexy, of which she died in the Month of August 1405.' According to Heuterus's Calculation, the Apoplexy must have begun in the Month of March, and so the Lady survived her Husband near sixteen Months.

[B] His Valour --- obtained him the Surname of The Bold. King John, in the Patent of Investiture, gave Testimony of the Valour of his Son; 'Ad memoriam reducentes, says he (9) gra- ta & laude digna servicia quæ Charissimus Philippus filius noster quarto genitus, qui sponte expostus mortis periculo, nobiscum imperterritus & impavidus fletit in Acie prope Pictavos vulneratus, captus & detentus in hostium potestate, ibi & post liberationem nostram hastenus exhibit. --- Calling to mind the grateful and laudable Services of our most dear Philip, our fourth Son, who exposed himself voluntarily to the Danger of his Life, and bravely and undauntedly stood with us in the Battle near Poitiers, and was there wounded, taken and kept Prisoner, per- formed both then and at all times since our Re-

(1) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgundic. lib. II, pag. 18.

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 62.

(3) Anselme, Hist. Genealog. de la Maison Royale, pag. 107.

(4) Id. pag. 108.

(5) Ibid. pag. 112.

(6) Gollut, Memoir. de Bourgogne, pag. 616.

(7) Fabert, Histoire des Ducs de Bourgogne, pag. 27.

(8) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. II, pag. 63.

(9) See Gollut, Memoires de Bourg. pag. 537.

lease.' It is said, that this young Prince, when he was wounded, would not cease 'to defend himself, even after his Father had bid him lay down his Arms. This extraordinary Vigour in a young Prince astonished the English. A certain Person, not willing to pluck so fine a Rose in the Bud, said to him aloud: Hold, yield, Bold Philip. This Expression was applauded by all present, and the young Warrior retained the Name of The Bold (10). Other Reasons are given for that Epithet; for some (11) say, that he gave a Box on the Ear to one of the greatest of the English Lords, who, in serving the Kings of France and England, presented the Service to the latter before the former, adding with the Blow, 'What! darrest thou serve the King of England first, when the King of France is present? which Edward, King of England (who valued generous Actions as much, if not more than any thing in the World), magnified extremely, and said to him cheerfully, and in a pleasant Tone; You are Philip the Bold. Which was the Origin of an extraordinary fine Surname.' Another Reason still has been given for this Title, which is, 'That at the Inauguration of Charles VI he was (as first Peer of France) among the Secular Princes; because of his Duchy of Burgundy. For which Reason, by the Royal Acts, the first and highest Seat belonged to him. But, on the other hand, Lewis, Duke of Anjou, his Brother, insisting on his Seniority, and that he was, as it were, Governor to the King, was minded to prevent him; and, in short, sat himself down next the King. Which Duke Philip perceiving, pushed him back with one hand, and with a jump flung himself in between the King and the Duke of Anjou, taking the highest place, which he insisted was his Right. At this all present were amazed, but did not disesteem him for it, but surnamed him The Bold, for this Action, done in the Presence of the greatest King of France.'

[C] Margaret of Flanders, his Wife --- and Valentina of Milan --- fomented the Division by their Vanity. 'The frequent Puntillo's disputed between their Wives sowed them more than their true Interests; she of Burgundy being the elder, Heiress of great Dominions, and descended of very noble Blood, despised the other, who would really have been inferior to her, had she not been considered as the Wife of the King's only Brother (12). The Partizans of the House of Burgundy reflect very much on Valentina Duchess of Orleans. Here are some Instances: 'In this (13) the Duchess of Burgundy was very active,

(10) Fabert, Hist. des Ducs de Bourgogne, pag. 6. See also Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. pag. 19.

(11) Gollut, Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 616.

(12) Mezerai Abregé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 157, ad Ann. 1401.

(13) That is in preventing a Declaration of War against the Duke of Brabant.

of the Kingdom, which met at Paris, in the Year 1391, put the Regency in the Hands of the Duke of Burgundy, notwithstanding the Duke of Orleans demanded it, and founded his Pretension on his being Brother to the King (b). These two Rivals thrust one another twice out of that advantageous Post (i). The Duke of Orleans had the upper Hand in the Year 1401. But the Duke of Burgundy would not quit; they both assembled their Friends; but consented to a Reconciliation, at least in Appearance. A little while after the Duke of Orleans prevailed with the King, that, during his Majesty's Indisposition, he should have the Conduct of the State. The Duke of Burgundy, returning to Court, proved strong enough in the Council, to get the Government restored to himself. — The King, in his next Interval, ordered that they should both govern jointly; but the Council, the Queen, and the other Princes, and Lords, prayed him to desist (k). Philip died at Hall, the Twenty sixth of April, 1414 (l); he left so many Debts, that his Wife was obliged to leave the Creditors unpaid [D]. She was an imperious and revengeful Woman, and had given her Husband a great deal of Trouble [E]. She brought him three Sons and four Daughters, and died the seventeenth of August, 1405 (m). He

(b) Ibid. pag. 141.

(i) Ibid. pag. 157.

(k) Taken from Mezerai Abreg. Chron. Tom. III. p. 157, 158.

(l) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. pag. 62.

(m) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. See a Fault of the Sieur Fabert, in the Remark [A], towards the end.

* not only in favour of the Duke of Bretagne her Cousin, and Son of the Sister of Lewis de Malain, her Father; but also out of the great hatred she bore to the Milanese (the Duchesse of Orleans) with whom she had perpetually some Quarrel or other: Seeing that Stranger so presumptuous, that she would not suffer great Princesses (of higher Rank than herself) to walk in their Order, nor to keep the Places belonging to them. For that Italian Lady was provoked that the Duchesse of Burgundy had been nominated, by the King and States, first Lady of Honour to Queen Isabella, and that by that means the Burgundian had the first Post, the Hand and Ear of the Queen. This Disdain of the Duchesse of Orleans was well withstood and contemned by the Duchesse of Burgundy, who was a generous Princess, and very touchy; who knew her own Riches and Estate, who knew the Credit, Valour, and Merit of her Spouse; and who moreover perceiving, that That Stranger had Designs against the Children of France, the King, and even against her Husband, could not restrain herself so far as to dissemble with her: tho' she knew, and had been often warned, that this same Valentina was a dangerous Woman, practising against Peoples Lives by Sorcery and Poison, and that she should take care of herself. But the Duchesse of Burgundy, either through Indignation, or her true French Disposition (which cannot easily dissemble, unless Fear be continually in view), took little notice of it; only she laboured to convince Duke Philip, her Husband, of the Truth of it, that he might take strict care of his Affairs, his Safety, and the Person of the King (14). The same Author says, that the Duchesse of Orleans was suspected of having been the Cause of Charles the Sixth's Distemper, and that she attempted to poison the Dauphin. Let us use his Words: 'Others laid the King's Illness to the Duchesse of Orleans, who desired to open a way for her Husband to come to the Crown. Which gained the more Credit, as the Ambition of that Lady, and her Skill in mixing and tempering Poisons, was manifest to all the World. So that her Husband perceiving it likewise, after the Death of his eldest Son (poisoned by an Apple, which she had prepared, hoping that the Dauphin would take it in his Hand, and bite it, and so die. And with that Intent she gave it to her Son, commanding him to carry it to the Dauphin of France, which the Child did, but, without using Ceremony, had bit into it, and got his Death), had caused her to be shut up in the Castle of Neufbâtel on the Loire, forgetting, for a time, the Love he bore her for her Beauty, and the largeness of her Dowry; for she had brought him the Earl-dom of Vertus, and Five hundred thousand Crowns, which enabled him to buy the County of Blois, in the Year 1392, for Twenty thousand Crowns, that of Soissons, and the Lordship of Couffy (15). Pontus Heuterus says much the same (16). If we had the Detail of all the Discourses and Intrigues of these two Ladies, we should have a secret History not much to the Honour of the Sex, who are commonly the primum mobile of all Civil-Wars, and deserve the Epithet of Author of Shipwrecks much better than Boreas (17).

[D] He left so many Debts, that his Widow was obliged to leave the Creditors unpaid.] The Monk of St Denis, who wrote a History of Charles VI, commends Philip the Bold in several Places, on Account of his Fidelity to his Wife, that he had educated the King his Nephew well, that he had an excellent Musical Voice for Divine Service, that he was so sagacious in Politics, 'that nothing happened but what he foresaw long before;' that he was very eloquent; but, adds he (18), 'one thing tarnished the Glory of his Name, which he had raised so high: That is, he took no Care to pay his Debts, and that his Treasurers and Comptrollers did no Justice to his Creditors, not even for the Ordinary expence of his House, the payment of which could not be refused, without a Crime. So that his Goods, which were of inestimable value, were not sufficient to discharge them, and this made his Widow (do what the meanest Women never do without regret, any more than without injustice, that is) take the Privilege of Renunciation, to ease herself of the vast load of his Debts.' She observed the ordinary Ceremonies in this Renunciation; for she pulled off her Girdle with her Keys, and her Purse, over her Husband's Coffin (19). Pontus Heuterus tells us, that this Act cuts off Interest, and takes away all the Creditor's Right to the real Estate, and obliges them to come to Terms. 'Uxor Margareta liberique cadaver expectantes insigni exequiarum pompâ iusta solvunt; cumque rei familiaris statum magno ære alieno gravatum Margareta reperisset, ne a creditoribus vexaretur, matronales feretro claves, cingulum, marsupiumque secundum regionis leges imposuit. Hoc enim facto creditoribus præterquam in Suppellectilem, ac ea quæ bona vocant mobilia, jus non erat, usurarum cursus sistebatur, ac de forte debitisque in hoc tempus usuris certis solutionis ex pacto conventoque datis terminis convenire cogebatur (20). It is properly a Bankruptcy. The Agreement made with the Creditors, was executed partly by her, and partly by her Children (21).

[E] His Wife was imperious and revengeful, and had given her Husband a great deal of trouble.] The Witnesses I am about to cite is not suspected; for it is Pontus Heuterus. 'Patrem, says he (22), non minus corporis lineamentis ac humorum temperamento, quam animi affectibus referebat (Margareta). Erat enim in eâ animus excelsus, ferrox, ambitiosus, vindictæ in eum a quo se læsam existimabat percupidus, ac qui numquam sincerè cum inimico in gratiam redire poterat, nullaque ratione ferens quos dignitatis æmulatione secum certare existimabat: quas animi affectiones Audax in ordinem coactus, non parum summâ adhibitâ prudentiâ simulationeque per omnem vitam laborarat, coactus nonnumquam aliquid de jure suo cedere, quod præter amplissimarum provinciarum dotem, eum patrem septem præstantissimorum liberorum effecisset. — Margaret resembled her Father as well in the Lineaments, and Temperament of her Body, as in the Disposition of her Mind. For she had a haughty, Proud

(17) See Citation (b), of the Article BOREAS.

(18) Hist. de Charles VI, translated by Le Laboureur, lib. xxiv. cap. ii, pag. 484.

(19) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. ii, p. 159. ad Ann. 1404.

(20) Pontus Heuterus, Rer. Burgund. p. 62, 63.

(21) Id. ibid.

(22) Id. ibid.

(14) Gollut, Memoirs de Bourgogne, pag. 600.

VALENTINA of Milan suspected of poisoning.

(15) Id. pag. 601.

(16) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. ii, pag. 60.

He was not addicted either to Wine, or Gaming, or Amours [F]: We do not find that he had either Mistresses or Bastards; but he was very ingenious in squeezing the People, and fomented the Schism of the Anti-Popes.

'proud, ambitious Spirit, was eager to be revenged on any Body she thought had injured her, and never could be sincerely reconciled to an Enemy; she could by no means endure any Body whom she thought to be her Rival in Dignity: Philip found it, all his Life-time, no small Difficulty, with the utmost Prudence and Disimulation, to keep these Dispositions of her Mind in Order, and was obliged sometimes to recede a little from his Right, in consideration, that, besides a Dowry of large Provinces, she had made him Father of seven fine Children.' See here a Prince, who found scarce any thing in the Kingdom not subject to his Law, not even the only Brother of his Sovereign, and yet he is not Master at home: He is obliged to submit to his proud spirited Wife, both for her Fecundity, and for her fine Patrimony. To receive a Benefit is to lose one's Liberty, said the Ancients (23). This is peculiarly true in respect to Dowries (24).

(23) Beneficium accipere libertatem vendere est. Publius Syrus.

(24) See above, Citat. (15), in the Article AVEN-TIN.

[F] He was not addicted either to Wine, or Gaming, or Amours — but — ingenious in squeezing the People.] His Chastity is justly admired by Historians; for he was of a robust Constitution, and the affluence of all things, and convenient Opportunities, have a great effect on the Senses. 'Nec aleator, nec mulierosus, nec etriosus fuit, unde rarissime ejus in Aula comitatuque, contentiones, jurgia, rixæ, pugnae, commensationes, intemperatæ vigiliæ, nec somnus cernebatur: animus vero in eo perturbatus iracundusque perraro. De concubinis, illegitimis liberis, aut ullo incontinentiæ libidinisque genere nil plane reperio, quæ tamen virtus inter principes valenti corpore præditos perrara esse consuevit, quod libertas, rerumque omnium affluentia, facile sensus vehementissimi voluptatis illecebris ac titillatione deceptos inficiant, animum emolliant effeminentque. — Duas ob causas a scriptoribus aliquot proscinditur. Primo quod immensis continuisque pecuniarum exactionibus populum exhaurierit, ac in excogitandis novis tributis ingeniosus fuit, inexorabilisque in exigendo. — Altera proscindendi causa est, quod universo vitæ tempore diffidum in Christianâ Republicâ duorum summorum pontificum creatione ortum omnibus artibus aluerit, fovens partes Antipapæ (25). — He was neither given to Gaming, to Women, nor to Drunkenness; so there was very seldom any quarrelling, noise, brawling, fighting, revelling, unseasonable sitting up, or sleeping, in his Palace, or Retinue: he was very seldom disturbed or angry. I find no mention at all of any Concubines, illegitimate Children, or any kind of Lust, or Incontinence, tho' this is a Virtue very rare among Princes of robust Constitutions: because liberty and affluence easily deceive and draw in the Senses, with the Allurements, and Titillation of that ungovernable Pleasure; and enervate and effeminate the Mind. — He is blamed by some Writers for two Things. First, that he drained the People with immense and continual exactions of Money, and was ingenious in contriving new Impositions, and inexorable in exacting them. — The other thing he is blamed for, is, that all his Life he fomented the Division begun in the Christian World, by the election of two Popes, with all the Art he was Master of, favouring the party of the Anti-Pope.' As to his exactions, Heuterus excuses him on Account of the extraordinary expence he was obliged to be at, in maintaining Troops, and fortifying Towns. But why did not he pay his Debts at least? 'Tis strange that Princes make no Conscience of ruining their Creditors, while they are enriching other Persons. Read this Passage of Mezerai: 'Twas there that Queen Margaret kept her little Court the rest of her Days, very oddly jumbling together, Pleasure and Devotion, the Love of Learning and Vanity, Christian Charity and Injustice; for as she took a pride in being seen often at Church, and in entertaining learned Men, and giving the tenth of her revenues to the Monks; so she gloried also in having always some intrigue, in inventing new Diversions, and in never paying her Debts (26).'

(25) Pontus Heuterus, Rer. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 64.

(26) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. VI, pag. 116, ad Ann. 1425.

BURGUNDY (JOHN, Duke of), Son of the former, was born at Dijon, the Twenty ninth of May, 1371 (a). He was first called Count de Nevers, and gave very early Proofs of his being a warlike Prince, and worthy of the Surname of THE FEARLESS, which was given him. At twelve Years of Age, he followed his Father in the Expedition into Flanders, against the rebellious Subjects of his Grandfather, by the Mother (b). He was married two Years after to Margaret of Bavaria, Daughter of Albert, Count of Holland. He was very earnest to go into Hungary, in the Year 1396, with the Troops sent by the King of France to the Emperor Sigismund, against Bajazet. He was not only Chief of the Volunteers, but also commanded the Body of the Army (d). This Expedition was unsuccessful [A]: All these Troops were cut in Pieces in the Action at Nicopolis. He

was

[A] The Expedition to Hungary was unsuccessful.] Mezerai's Account of it will furnish me with a good Comment. 'They performed at first several Acts of incredible Valour: But their Follies and Debauchery rendered them ridiculous to the Turks themselves. Besides it was the presumption of their Troops, elevated with a little success, that engaged the Hungarians in the Siege of Nicopolis, and afterwards in the Battle of the twenty eighth of September; in which, the Hungarians not taking Care to second them, they were all killed, or taken Prisoners. Bajazet caused above Six hundred of them to be hacked in Pieces, in Presence of the Count de Nevers; and having put him to as many Deaths, with Terror and Grief, he reserved him and fifteen more of the greatest Lords, for whom he obliged himself to pay two Hundred thousand Ducats ransom. This Sum being furnished five Months after, they were all set at Liberty. The Count de Nevers arrived in France about the end of the Month of March following. It is said that Bajazet was so far from taking an Oath of him, that he would never make War against the Turks, that he exhorted him to take his Revenge, and assured him, he should always find him in the Field ready to give him Satisfaction (1). You will find, in Pontus Heuterus, the proud Discourse the Sultan is supposed to have had with this Count (2). He relates also the Discourse of a Physiognomist: 'Sunt qui scripsere Joanni Intrepido vitam concessam, quod Turca quidam, qui se ex hominum vultu, corporisque lineamentis, prosperam adversamque fortunam, ac fatum prædicere posse profiteretur, Bajazetho dixisset: Vivat nobilis ille, ejus enim operâ causâque plus Christiani sanguinis profunderetur, crudelioraque inter se bella gerent, quam credi aut sperari posset (3). — Some have wrote that John the Fearless had his Life given him, because a certain Turk, who pretended to foretel good and ill Fortune, and the Decrees of Fate, from Peoples Countenances, and the Lineaments of their Bodies, said to Bajazet: Let that Nobleman live; for by his means, and on his Account, more Christian Blood will be shed, and more cruel Wars waged among themselves, than could be believed or hoped for.' Bajazet would have done an inestimable Piece of Service to France, if

(1) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 151.

(2) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 72.

(3) Id. ibid.

was taken Prisoner there, and some say he would have been killed, had not a Turkish Physiognomist assured Bajazet, that the Life of this Prisoner would be fatal to Christendom (e). The young Prince, having paid his Ransom, returned into France, in the Year 1397. He took Possession, in Form, of the Duchy and Earldom of Burgundy, Artois, and Flanders, in the Month of April, 1405 (f); and from that time bent his chief Study to the Quarrel between his deceased Father, and the Duke of Orleans. He resolved to carry it to the utmost Extremity, and strengthened himself by the Marriage of his Son with Michelle de Valois, Daughter of King Charles VI., and that of Margaret his Daughter with the Dauphin (g). He gained the Affection of the City of Paris, by opposing a Tax which was designed to be laid on them; and improved the Scandal every where raised by the too close Union of the Queen and the Duke of Orleans (h); and the Complaints of the People oppressed, by repeated and violent Extortions, of which they said the Queen sent part into Germany, and spent the rest in all manner of profuseness, while the King and his Children were in poor Equipage. He retired from Court with the Duke of Bretagne. The King, in a lucid Interval, having learnt the Cause of their Retreat, called a Grand Assembly, and summoned the Duke of Burgundy to it, who came so well escorted with armed Men, that the Queen, and the Duke of Orleans, retired to Melun, having left order to have the Dauphin brought after them. The Duke of Burgundy pursued, and took, this young Prince, and brought him back to Paris, by his own Consent. This Rupture, which put Paris in a continual Alarm, was followed by a seeming Reconciliation; after which it was resolved to attack the Towns belonging to the English. The Duke of Burgundy undertook the Conquest of Calais, but had so ill Success in the Enterprize, that he durst not so much as come near the Place (i). He imputed this Disgrace to the Duke of Orleans, and resolved to have him assassinated. The Business was executed in the Night, between the Twenty third and Twenty fourth of November, 1407. At first he put on a good Face, and even assisted at the Funeral of the deceased, but at last he confessed to the Duke of Bourbon, that he had caused this Murder to be committed, and retired into Flanders with the Assassins. It has been thought that it was not merely Ambition which prompted him to that extreme, but that there was some matrimonial Interest concerned [B]. The Duchess of Orleans, accompanied with her three Sons, demanded Justice of the King: He durst not promise her any thing; he stood too much in awe of the Duke of Burgundy, who promised to come and vindicate himself, provided the Gates of Paris were not guarded (k). He returned to Paris in the Month of February, 1408, and avowed openly that he was Author of the Murder, and got a Franciscan (l) to maintain, that the Action was just. A Pardon was granted him, and he was reconciled, in Appearance, with the Queen (m). He retired into Artois. During his Absence, the Widow renewed her Prosecution: He was declared an Enemy to the State, and Orders given to send for Troops from all Parts to fall upon him (n). But when it was known that he had obtained a signal Victory over the Inhabitants of Liege (o), and was preparing to return to Paris, the Orleans Party did not think themselves safe: The Queen herself fled to Tours with her Husband. He entered Paris with Six thousand Men: They talked of a new Reconciliation, which made the Widow of the Duke of Orleans, a haughty and revengeful Princess, die of Grief and Vexation (p). Her Children were obliged to be reconciled to the Murderer of their Father. This was done with great Solemnity in Chartres, about the end of March, 1409. The King returned to Paris, and the Duke into the Low Countries, from whence he returned into France in July, and got entire Possession of the Government. The Duke of Berry and Bourbon, and several others, joined with the House of Orleans (q) against him, and levied Troops, and posted themselves near Paris. He summoned the Militia: They made War on each other; and afterwards found themselves obliged to come to an Accommodation. He quitted the Capital according to agreement; but the other Party would not be quiet: The Duke of Orleans, with Sword in Hand, if he had not spared the Life of the Count de Nevers. It was for the sins of France, that this barbarous Sultan hearkened to the Counsels of Avarice, rather than those of Cruelty. But if it was true, that a Fortune-teller had determined him to let this Prisoner be ransomed, he acted rather as a cruel, than as a covetous Man. In a Word, the Death of this Count would have been the Life of a prodigious number of Frenchmen: it would have prevented the most horrible Defolation a Kingdom can be reduced to.

[B] It has been thought, that it was not merely Ambition, which prompted him to cause the Duke of Orleans to be assassinated, but that some Matrimonial Interest was concerned. I mean, that he did it to be revenged of the Dishonour that had been done to him, by an Intrigue with his Wife. Let Brantome tell the Story. 'Duke Lewis of Orleans — one time boasted publicly at a Banquet, where his Cousin John, Duke of Burgundy, was present, that he had in his Closet the Pictures of the finest Ladies whom he had enjoyed. By chance, one day, Duke John went into that Closet, and the first Picture he saw, which struck his Eye at first glance, was the noble Lady his Spouse, who was at that time reckoned very handsome: her Name was Margaret, Daughter of Albert of Bavaria, Count of Haynalt, Holland, and Zealand. The good Husband was astonished; and we may imagine, he concluded with himself, that his Business had been done; but taking no further Notice of the Flea that stung him, he dissembled the

(e) See the end of the Remark [A].

(f) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 72.

(g) Lewis, Duke of Guienne, who died before his Father.

(h) Mezerai Abregé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 163.

(i) Id. pag. 165.

(k) Id. pag. 168.

(l) Named John Petit. See his Article.

(m) Mezerai Abregé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 169.

(n) Id. pag. 170.

(o) They had expelled their Bishop, Brother to the Duke of Burgundy's Wife.

(p) The 4th of Decemb. 1408.

(q) The Year 1410.

(r) Mezerai A-brége Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 178, of the Year 1411.

(s) Because the Earl of Armagnac was one of the principal Leaders.

Hand, demanded Justice for the Murder of his Father, and sent a very outrageous Challenge to the Duke of Burgundy, who answered it with the like (r) [C]. Thus was the Kingdom divided into two Factions, one of the Burgundians, and the other of the Orleans Party, commonly called Armagnacs (s). Hence proceeded an infinite Number of Murders, Plundering, and Proscriptions [D]. The Orleans Party blockaded

(4) Brantome is mistaken; this Duke of Burgundy had but one Wife, and he died before her. See Father Anselm, pag. 209. Pontus Heuterus, Rer. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 93, refutes those who say he had two Wives.

(5) Brantome, Dames Galantes, Tom. II, pag. 352.

(6) Id. ibid. pag. 354.

(7) Louis Gollut, Memoirs de Bourgogne, liv. x, chap. iii, pag. 626.

(8) Id. ibid.

the Matter, and in order to be revenged, quarrelled with him about the Regency and Administration of the Kingdom, and making This, not The Affair that of his Wife, his Pretence, he caused him to be assassinated at the Gate Baudet at Paris, his Wife being already dead, as was supposed, of Poison. Being thus rid of one Wife, he took for his second the Daughter of Lewis III, Duke of Bourbon (4); it is doubtful whether he mended his Market; for to such People as are subject to Horns, let them change Beds and Haunts, as oft as they will, Horns will come. The Duke did very wisely in that; he revenged himself on the Adulterer, without scandalizing himself, or his Wife; which was very wise Disimulation on his Part (5). — For these Reasons, Duke John was very wise in dissembling and hiding his Horns, and revenging himself besides on his Cousin who had dishonoured him: He even laughed at him, and let him know it; which Derision and Scandal, without doubt, went as much to his Heart as his Ambition, and made him do this Action like a worldly-wise and able Politician (6). Do not imagine that this is one of those Tales that are only learned by Tradition: it has been inserted in Historians; you will find it in the Memoirs of Lewis Gollut (7). It is true, this Author supposes, that Duke John of Burgundy did not believe that his Wife had been unfaithful, but that the Duke of Orleans had boasted of Favours from her wrongfully. This boasting was nevertheless an Offence, for which he would have Satisfaction. Gollut goes on to tell us, that the Dukes of Burgundy had complained that the Duke of Orleans attempted to debauch her. Let us see his own Words, which will shew that this delicate Affair was debated in the Council of Burgundy, and that it was there resolved to use some other pretence to be revenged on the Duke of Orleans. * Meyerus says truly, from the writings of some good Author (whose words he cites in Latin) that the Dukes had previously complained to the Duke her Husband, that the Duke of Orleans had watched to find her alone, and had solicited her, and attempted force upon her Honour, of which she prayed him to take notice, which the Duke had received in such manner, as matters of that kind usually are taken and interpreted, by Husbands who have any Spirit, or any regard for their Reputation. Nevertheless, he would not immediately proceed to Vengeance; but only resolved on the Execution in time, and to punish the Offence, by the Murder of the Duke of Orleans, whatever came of it. He adds, that the Duke had called his Council, and demanded of the great Men, to whom he communicated this Affair, under an Oath, how he should proceed to be revenged for so great Injury, whether he should chastize or murder him: letting them understand that he asked not whether he should do it, but only how and in what manner he might execute it with Safety. Whereupon the Counsellors, after divers excuses, and three Days Deliberation, answered: That it was necessary to take measures that the Duke of Orleans's Actions might be censured as they deserved: and to gain the Opinion of the Vulgar, and even of the Parisians: and that, for that end, it would be good to set some People at Work every where, to rail against the Conduct of the Duke of Orleans, and stir up the People against him (8). These last Words of Gollut are very remarkable.

[C] The Duke of Orleans sent him a very outrageous Challenge, which he answered with the like.] My Readers will not be displeased to find here the Tenor of these Challenges. That of the Orleans Party was conceived in these Terms: * Charles, Duke of Orleans and Valois, Earl of Blois and Beaumont, Lord of Conchy; Philip, Earl of Vertus; and John, Earl of Angoulême, Brothers: to thee, John, who callest thyself Duke of Burgundy, for the most horrible Murder, by thee treacherously, maliciously, by professed Murderers, committed on the Person of our dear and dread Lord and Father, Louis Duke of Orleans, only Brother of Monseigneur, the King, our Sovereign Lord, and thine, notwithstanding the several Oaths, Alliances, and Engagements, between you subsisting, and for the great Treasons, Acts of Disloyalty, Infamy, and Wickedness by thee, against our said Sovereign Lord the King, and against us, in diverse manners, perpetrated: We give thee to understand that from this Day forward we will annoy thee with all our Power, and by all ways we can; and against thee, of thy Treason, and Disloyalty, we call God, and all good Men in the World to judge, and assist us: in witness of the Truth whereof, we have caused these present Letters to be sealed with the Seal of me, Charles, abovenamed. Given at Jarjeau, the eighteenth Day of July, in the Year of Grace 1411 (9). The following is the Burgundian's Answer. * John Duke of Burgundy, Earl of Artois, Flanders, and Burgundy, Palatin, Lord of Salines and Malines: To thee Charles, who callest thyself Duke of Orleans; and to thee Philip, who callest thyself Earl of Vertus; and to thee John, who callest thyself Earl of Angoulême; who have lately sent us your Letters of Defiance; we give to understand, and be it known to all Men, that in order to defeat the most horrible Treasons, manifold Wickedness, and most malicious Plots, conspired, contrived, and acted feloniously, against the King, our most dread and sovereign Lord, and yours, and against his most noble Generation, by the late Lewis, your Father, a false and disloyal Traytor, to attain to the final detestable Execution of his Purposes, which he had contrived against our said most dread Lord and his, and also against his said Generation, and notoriously, that no good Man ought to suffer him to live: and especially we who are Cousin-German of our said Lord, Dean of the Peers, and twice Peer, and more closely allied to him, and to his said Generation, than any other Person of the said Generation, could not have suffered such a false, disloyal, cruel, and felonious Traytor on the Face of the Earth any longer, without a great Crime on our Part; we have, in order to acquit ourselves loyally, and do our Duty towards our high and sovereign Lord, and his said Generation, killed, as he deserved, the said false and disloyal Traytor, and in so doing have pleased God, and rightly performed loyal Service to our said most dread and sovereign Lord. And forasmuch as thou and thy Brothers follow the false, disloyal, and felonious Steps of your said Father, and do contrive to accomplish those damnable and disloyal Facts attempted by him, we are not at all concerned at your said Defiance; but as to the Contents thereof, thou and thy Brothers have lied, and do maliciously, falsely, and disloyally lie like Traytors, as you are; for which by the Help of our Lord, who knows, and is a Witness of the most entire and perfect Loyalty, Love and good Will, which we always have, and always so long as we live shall have, towards our said, and his said Generation, to the good of his People, and of all his Kingdom, we will bring you to such an End and Punishment, as such false and disloyal Traytors, Rebels, and disobedient Felons, as thou, and thy Brothers are, deserve to come to: In witness whereof we have caused these Letters to be sealed with our Seal: Given in our City of Douay, the fourteenth Day of August, in the Year of Grace, 1411 (10).

[D] — From thence proceeded endless Murders and Proscriptions.] This Division may be compared to that of Marius and Sylla, and to the unhappy Triumvirate of Marc Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus. See how a Historian, a Favourer of the Burgundian Party, expresses himself. * While these things were negotiating

(9) Enguerrand de Monstrelet. Vol. I, cap. lxxii.

(10) Id. cap. lxxiii.

blockaded Paris, and were resolved to sack it. The Duke of Burgundy, with some Succours from the English, obliged them to retire, and was received into the City as the Deliverer of France (t). He made them suffer all the Disgrace that can befall a routed Party: He had them excommunicated, set their Goods to sale, and pursued them every where. This constrained them to make an Alliance with the English, on Conditions very pernicious to France. The King hearing it, vowed their Destruction, and went in Person and besieged Bourges, and attacked them, by his Generals, in other Places: But important Reasons compelled him to make a Peace with them. After a thousand Broils in the City of Paris, the Duke of Burgundy, not finding himself the stronger, retired into the Low Countries, in the Year 1413. His Creatures were deprived of their Offices, and he abhorred as an execrable Murderer (u). He returned with an Army, and appeared before Paris, notwithstanding the King had forbid him to come near it, on pain of High Treason (x). Nothing stirred in his Favour, so he retired in Confusion, after a thundering Declaration against him by Charles VI. That Prince pursued him as an Enemy to the State (y), and would not grant him Peace (z), but on very hard Conditions. The other Party was superior, till, in the Year 1418, the Friends of the Burgundian Faction introduced into Paris, Philip de Villiers l'Isle-Adam (aa). Then it was that Tanneui du Chatel saved the Dauphin, as I have said elsewhere (bb). The Cruelties exercised on the Armagnacs were terrible. The Queen, whom the King had exiled, joined the Duke of Burgundy, and made her Entry into Paris with him. They got the King in their Power, made an ill use of his Name, while the Dauphin was doing all he could against the Duke. Some Persons endeavoured to pacify these Troubles; and the Dauphin and the Duke had a Conference in the open Field, and agreed upon another Rendezvous at Montreuil-faut-yonne, to regulate all the Articles of their Treaty. The Duke went to the Place appointed, the tenth of September, 1419, and was there massacred by the Dauphin's Friends (cc). He had one Son, and six Daughters legitimate, and some Bastards [E]. His Death was revenged after another manner than that of the Duke of Orleans, such is the Inequality and Caprice of Men.

(t) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 180, of the Year 1412.

(u) Id. pag. 186.

(x) Id. pag. 187.

(y) Id. pag. 188.

(z) In September, 1414.

(aa) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 201.

(bb) In the Article DU CHATEL.

(cc) Taken from Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 201, &c.

'negotiating, Mr Peter des Essards entered privately into Paris, and found means to gain the Butchers Flayers, and such like Mob, whom he knew to be Friends to the Duke of Burgundy, and persuaded them to make a search for the Orleans. In consequence of which the poor unfortunate Orleans were beat, turned out of Doors, massacred, prosecuted, and, in short, treated worse than Enemies. This gave the first rise to the dislike, which the King, the Dauphin, the Queen, and all good Men, took to the Duke of Burgundy, considering his strange Ways, more worthy of some Sylla, Marius, Triumvir, or other barbarous Heathens, than of Christian Princes, bred up in the Church of JESUS CHRIST, the Father of Peace and Meekness: and foreseeing that the Orleans (in their Turn) would be obliged to do the like in the City of Paris itself, and other Places, where they might find, or catch, any Subject, Servant, or Partizan, of the Faction of Burgundy; where would follow an unheard of, and unparalleled, Butchery, in all the Towns in France, with the Loss and Death of good and innocent People. This is precisely the Condition to which that Discord and unhappy Civil War reduced the unfortunate People of France, and the Inhabitants of every City in it. Thus, the Follies, the Passions, the Dissentions, and the Revenge, of Princes, break out to the Ruin of the poor innocent People (11).'

[E] He had ---- some Bastards.] We will use the Expressions of the same Author. He was only once married; but was not satisfied, nor could he contain himself when he was married: for he gave himself a Liberty in other Amours, favouring some Mistresses, of whom the last and greatest Favourite, was the Lady de Giac, who had a Share in the Plot contrived against him; yet he had no Children by her; for the two Bastards, John, Bishop of Cambray, and Guy (who was a valiant Captain), were by another (12). I wonder Gallat says nothing of a natural Daughter of the same Duke. She was called Philippa, and was married to Anthony de Rochebaron, Sieur de Breze-le-Chastel (13). A modern Historian of the Dukes of Burgundy is also silent as to this Daughter (14): but he observes, that People spoke ill of Duke John, and the Queen of France, who since her deliverance from Tours, had been strongly attached to him, though before she breathed nothing but the Duke of Orleans (15). He takes notice likewise of the Treachery of a second Dalilah, the Lady de Giac (16), ---- who, seeing all at the taking of Montreuil, the Capitulation excluding the Domestic of the Duke of Burgundy, met with due Punishment for her Lewdness and Unfaithfulness (17). Pontus Heuterus had said the same thing, and particularly what relates to the ill Reports concerning the Queen (18). This Princess was not esteemed for her Chastity: it was believed that she behaved ill with the Duke of Orleans, and afterwards that the Murderer of that Duke behaved ill with her (19). Add to this these Words of Mezerai: 'As they lived with a great deal of Liberty in that Princess's Family, it was easy for the Constable d'Armagnac to raise a Jealousy in the King: so that he caused one Bourdon, who was in that Intrigue, to be seized and drowned; and afterwards put away his Queen, and sent her as Prisoner to Tours. She could never resolve to forgive him this Injury; nor even the Dauphin, her Son, because it was done with his Consent, though he was then but sixteen Years of Age (20). After the Duke of Burgundy, had set her at Liberty, it was no difficult matter to incline her to Proceedings prejudicial to the Armagnacs, by whom she had been injured so many ways, and so basely, because they had been so passionate and outrageous as to charge her to the King, and the Dauphin, her Son, of Unfaithfulness to the Marriage-bed, and using a more familiar Conversation, and Privacy, with a certain Gentleman, than was consistent with the Honour and Faith of a married Lady, and the Grandeur of so illustrious a Princess as the Queen and Wife of the King of France. To which they had added another Injury, which was to strip her of all the Wealth she had scraped together and deposited in some Churches; to serve as a last Resort in such times of Civil-War (21). The English, to whom she was so much obliged, were not silent on the Head of her Lewdness. See what one of our most grave Historians says. The last of September, 1435, died the Queen Mother, Isabella of Bavaria, in the Hostel de St Pol, at Paris, where she lived in poor Condition, after the Death of her Husband, justly hated by the French, and ingratly despised by the English. Some have wrote that to spare the Charges of her Funeral, they carried the Body to St Dennis in a little Boat accompanied only by four Persons. Some attribute her

(15) Id. ibid.

(16) Id. pag. 64.

(17) Id. pag. 68.

(18) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. lib. iii, pag. 92.

THE III Reputation of the Queen, the Mother of Charles VII.

(19) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, page 163.

(20) Id. ibid. pag. 158 a l'Ann. 1417.

(21) Gallat, Memoires de Bourgogne, cap. xlii, pag. 690.

(11) Gallat, Memoires de Bourgogne, lib. x, cap. xxii, pag. 657, 658.

(12) Idem. cap. xlix, pag. 701.

(13) See Father Labbe, Tabl. Geneal. p. 257; and Father Anselme, Hist. Geneal. pag. 210.

(14) Fabert, Hist. des ducs de Bourgogne, pag. 68.

Death to Vexation at the outrageous Railleries she suffered; for they took a Pleasure in telling her to her Face, that King Charles was not the Son of her Husband (22).

BURGUNDY (PHILIP Duke of, surnamed THE GOOD,) only Son of the foregoing, was born at Dijon, the thirtieth of June, 1396, and was brought up there with his Mother, till the Death of his Grandfather, by the Father's side: then he was brought to Ghent, and passed several Years there; for it was not thought proper to let him engage in the Combustions of the Court of France, where his Father, and the House of Orleans, were disputing the Ground with the utmost Fury (a). He married Michele, Daughter of Charles VI, in the Year 1409, and lost her in the Year 1422, without having had any Children by her (b). He had the Government of Artois and Flanders, in the Year 1415, but under the Direction of some Lords, which his Father placed about him. They would not suffer him to go to the Wars, whom vexed him to that degree, that he cried and lost his Appetite; he was appeased, at last, when he heard the ill success of the Battle of Agincourt, and owned that his Father was in the right to hinder him from being there (c). He continued at Ghent, with his Mother and his Wife, waiting the Issue of the Quarrel between his Father, and the House of Orleans, and to see what Party the Dauphin Charles would take; but as soon as he heard of the tragic-Action on the Bridge of Montreuil-saut-yonne, he prepared to obtain Satisfaction, and to use all his Power to procure a signal Vengeance (d). He found all the Assistance he could desire. Vast numbers of the French offered him their Service: the Queen, who governed the weak King, was entirely for him, and he engaged the King of England in his Interest. He accompanied him to the Court of France (e), where a Treaty was made, importing that Charles VI should give his Daughter Catharine in Marriage to the King of England, and acknowledge him as Heir to his Crown (f). When the two Kings had made their Entry into Paris, the Duke of Burgundy laid his Complaint before them and their Councils: The Dauphin was summoned to the Marble Table, with the ordinary Formalities; and afterwards, he was declared unworthy of any Inheritance, and particularly that of the Crown of France, and banished the Kingdom for ever [A]. The Dauphin appealed to God and his Sword (g), and caused himself to be proclaimed King after his Father's Death, in

(a) Ex Ponto Heutero Rer. Burgund. lib. iv, init. pag. 97.

(b) Anselme Hist. Genealogique de la Maison Royale, pag. 211.

(c) Pontus Heutero Rer. Burgund. lib. iv, pag. 97.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 98.

(e) It was then at Troies.

(f) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 209, ad Ann. 1420.

(g) Id. ibid. Tom. III, pag. 210.

[A] He caused the Dauphin to be declared unworthy --- of the Crown of France, and banished the Kingdom for ever.] The King of France, and his Son-in-law, the King of England, made their Entry into Paris, in the beginning of December, 1420. A few days after, they heard the Complaint of the Duke of Burgundy, touching the Murder of his Father. The two Kings sat on the same Bench. The Chancellor of France, the first President of the Parliament of Paris, and a great many other Lords and Privy-Counsellors, were present at the Assembly. The Duke appeared, accompanied with several Persons of Quality: 'And then Mr Nicolas Raulin, appearing on the Behalf of the future Complainants, demanded Audience of the two Kings, which being obtained, he set forth the cruel Murder committed on the Person of the late John, Duke of Burgundy, against Charles, called Dauphin of Picquie, the Viscount of Narbonne, the Lord of Barbasan, Tanneguy du Castel, --- concluding, that they should be taken, put in Carts, and carried through all the public Places of Paris, bare-headed, for three Saturdays, or Holidays: and that every one should hold a lighted Torch in his Hand, saying aloud, that they had wickedly, treacherously, damnably, and out of Envy, killed the Duke of Burgundy, without any reasonable Cause whatever. That afterwards they should be brought to the Place where they committed the said Murder, and there say and repeat the same Words. And further, that, in the Place where they killed him, should be erected a Church, with twelve Canons, --- to be maintained at the Expence of the said Dauphin, and his Accomplices: and that the Cause of building that Church should be cut in large Letters, in a Stone over the Door of the same, and likewise in each of the Towns following, viz. Paris, Rome, Ghent, St James of Compostella, and Jerusalem. This Speech ended, Mr Peter de Marigny, the King's Advocate in Parliament, likewise declared the abovesaid Persons Criminals; and then Mr John l'Archer, Doctor of Divinity, deputed for that purpose by the Rector of the University of Paris, exhorted the two Kings to do Justice, and punish such Criminals, lending a gracious Ear to the Petition of the Complainants, and to their Conclusions (1). Whereupon Answer was made in Behalf of the King of France, by the Mouth of his Chancellor, that by the Grace of God, and the good Help and Advice of the King of England, Regent and Heir of France, he would do so exemplary Justice on the Authors of such a Murder, that they should have Reason to be satisfied. According to this Answer, Charles, Duke of Tou- raine, Dauphin, was called to the Marble Table at Paris: where, after all --- Solemnities had been observed against him and his --- Accomplices, in relation to the Death of the Duke of Burgundy, he was by Sentence removed, banished, and exiled from the Kingdom of France, and declared unworthy to succeed to any Lordships now or hereafter, and especially the Succession and Expectation he had of the Crown of France (2).

I shall say nothing of the Nullity of this Arrêt (3); but only make a Reflexion on the uneven Conduct of Courts and People. John Duke of Burgundy caused the only Brother of the King to be assassinated in the Streets of Paris. The Widow and Children of the deceased demanded Justice, but could obtain none. The Murderer boasted publicly of his Action, and would not, even at the Request of the King, disown it. He compelled the Complainants to consent to a Reconciliation; and was so far from incurring the hatred of the Public, that he became the Idol of the Parisians: he lorded it throughout the Kingdom, and destroyed a vast number of People in Paris, and other Places: he endeavoured to carry off the Dauphin: he joined with the capital Enemies of the Nation. He was at last served in the same manner as he had served the King's only Brother: He was massacred on the Bridge of Montreuil. His Son and Widow complained to the King's Council, and obtained all they desired against the Dauphin: they got him condemned to perpetual Exile: their Cause was supported by the People, and particularly by the University of Paris. Can one conceive an Indignation great enough for such Caprice? If you except the Circumstance of the Promise given, and the

(22) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 253, ad Ann. 1435.

(1) John l'Archer, Lord of St Remy, observes, in chap. cv, of his History of Charles VI, that John l'Archer spoke also very strenuously before the two Kings, exhorting them, by all means, to do Justice, and to punish the guilty for their Crimes; and said a great deal of the Condition and Dignity of Justice, and that they should hear and attend favourably to the Requests and Prayers of the Duke, to the end that the Requests might be granted.

(2) Continuation de la Chronique de Flandres, extracted from several Authors, by Denis Sauvage, chap. xcvi, pag. 304.

(3) See Du Tillot, in his Collection of Treaties between France and England, in the Chapter of King Charles VI.

in the Year 1422, by the Name of Charles VII. The Duke of Bretagne joined with the English and Burgundians; so that there is more reason to wonder that Charles VII did not lose all his Kingdom, than that he lost a good part of it. He was obliged to send away all those who had a hand in the Death of the Duke of Burgundy (b). The Son of this last found some Employment in the Low Countries, in opposing Jaqueline of Bavaria [B]; which gave some respite to the King

(b) Id. pag. 295.
ad Ann. 1425.

of

the Faith of a Treaty going to be concluded, every thing else was more odious and wicked in the Murder of the Duke of Orleans, than in that of the Duke of Burgundy. The Duke of Orleans was superior in Dignity to the Duke of Burgundy; he was the King's Brother. The Dauphin was superior to the Duke of Burgundy, the Sovereign Authority being in some measure devolved to him during the Distraction of Charles VI; he had more right to exercise the Sword than any other, and it is certain that the Murderer of the Duke of Orleans deserved Death, not only for that infamous Assassination, but also for numberless other Acts of Violence, Murders, Plunderings, and Proscriptions. Nevertheless the Widow of the Duke of Orleans, and her three Sons, obtained no Justice: the Assassin was brought under no Penalty, but on the contrary insulted and triumphed for twelve Years: at last he was massacred. The Widow and her Son demand Justice, and obtain the most thundering Arrêt imaginable against the Parties concerned. The same Frenchmen, who had so patiently suffered the Complaints against a Murder committed by John, Duke of Burgundy, to be rejected, offer their Service to avenge the Death of the Murderer. The Sons of the Duke of Orleans, instead of revenging themselves, fell under Oppression, which ended not but by the Interposition of the Son of him who murdered their Father. By right he ought to have been obliged to recur to their Clemency; but they had need of his Compassion. The Fate of the Murderer of this Murderer was very different; he was disinherited of the Crown, and banished for Life. This unequal Sentence wanted but little of being actually executed; he was beat in a hundred Places, and several Provinces taken from him. The Son of the Person, he had caused to be massacred, was the principal Cause of these Misfortunes; and after he had satiated his Revenge, constrained by his own King to make him a Satisfaction so unbecoming Royal Majesty, as shall be seen hereafter, that never Fault was expiated in such a manner. What Violence! What Tyranny is it with all Rigour to exact Vengeance for the Death of a Man, who laughed at the Prosecutions of the Widow and Children of the Person he had killed! But what Disorder to see, that they should succeed so well in requiring such a thing! Here we may well cry out:

----- multi

Committunt eadem diverso crimina fato:

Ille cruce sceleris pretium tulit, hic diadema (4).

(4) Juvenal. Sat. xiii, ver. 103.

----- every Age relates

That equal Crimes have met unequal Fates;
That Sins alike, unlike Rewards have found,
And whilst This Villain's crucifix'd, the Other's crown'd.

DRYDEN.

The weak side of Monarchical Government.

We may make one Reflexion more. The Reign of Charles VI shews the weak side of monarchical Government. Other Forms of Government have every one their weak-side; but are not subject to Infancy or Madneſs, as Kings are. The monarchical Law, in Hereditary Countries, requires that he, who is in order of Succession, possess the Throne, though he be an Infant, or by reason of his old Age, or some Distemper, is become a Child a second time. By this means the most furious and fatal Divisions are introduced, as France experienced under Charles VI. It is in vain to say, that a mixed Monarchy helps these Disorders; for there never were in France so many Assemblies of the Great Men, as in this Reign. And to say the Truth, it has seldom been seen, that General Assemblies of the States ended Troubles: but that on the contrary they have contribu'd to foment and increase them. This appeared in the Reign of the Children of Henry II. Such then is the Condition of Mankind; there is no choice between good and bad, but between bad and worse; and it often happens that we chuse the worst, when we think we chuse the less ill. The Dauphin, for Example, and those who governed him, relolved on the Death of John Duke of Burgundy, as a necessary Remedy, which at least would be a means to avoid the greater Evil; but it appeared that they made matters worse. John's Son caused more Confusion and Mischief than John had caused.

[B] He was employed in the Low-Countries, in opposing Jaqueline of Bavaria. That Lady was only Daughter and Heiress of William of Bavaria, fourth of that Name, Count of Hainault, Holland, and Zeland, and Lord of Friesland, and had been married to John of France, Dauphin of Vienne, the Son of Charles VI (5). This Dauphin dying in the Year 1416, She was remarried to John Duke of Brabant, Cousin German to Philip the Good. But the young Coquette not being pleased with her second Husband, a Man of little Virtue, used means to be divorced, and got herself carried off by some Officers, who took her to England, where she married Humphry Duke of Gloucester, Brother to King Henry. That enterprize tended much to the dishonour of Philip (6). Wherefore he vigorously opposed the Duke of Gloucester: they provoked one another by Letters, and proceeded even to a Challenge to a personal Combat, and to appoint the Day, the Place, and the Weapons. The Duke of Bedford having assembled the most considerable Lords, both French and English, annulled the Challenge, and declared that there was no just Cause of Combat. Yet there continued a hot War in Holland, where the Duke of Burgundy, and the Duke of Gloucester, tried their Strength: But after two Years, the Pope having declared the Marriage of Jaqueline with the Duke of Gloucester to be of no Force, that Prince desisted from his pursuit, and married a Lady whom he kept (7). During the whole Year 1428, the Duke of Burgundy was busy in the Low-Countries, in pursuit of Jaqueline of Bavaria. He hemmed her in so close, that, having besieged her in Ghent, he constrained her to declare him her Heir to all her Lands, so that he joined to Flanders and Artois, HAYNAULT, HOLLAND, ZELAND, and FRIESLAND (8). Historians represent this Jaqueline as a light and amorous Woman, who left her Husband only, because she did not believe him capable of getting her with Child (9). This was Occasion enough for her to satisfy her Inclination and Desires, at the expence of her Honour and Reputation. She would not be content to remain in the Hands of the Duke of Burgundy, waiting the Pope's Decision on the Point of her Marriage: and yet her Mother and her Husband had made that Agreement. The Inhabitants of Mons forced her to agree to it, and delivered her to the Duke, who conducted her to Ghent: But she staid not long there: For, having gained some Domesticks, she disguised herself in Mens Cloaths, and escaped into Holland (10). There she found some Adherents, and, by that means, gave the Duke of Burgundy a great deal of trouble; for she was not discouraged by the ill success of her Arms: 'The Spirit of a Woman, who gives her self a loose in Love, is not to be conquered, but with the utmost constraint; for Reason and Argument avail nothing with passionate Heads (11).' She would not yield, neither when she heard that her Marriage with the Duke of Gloucester had been declared null by the Pope, and that the Duke had married his Concubine (12), nor when she heard of the Death of the Duke of Brabant, her true Husband. Most of her Friends forsook her, when they saw the

(5) Anselme, Hist. General. pag. 117.

(6) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 212, ad Ann. 1422.

(7) Id. ibid. pag. 237.

(8) Id. pag. 239.

(9) See Gossus, Mémoires de Bourgogne, pag. 714.

(10) Id. pag. 718.

(11) Id. pag. 720.

(12) Who was not thought so constant, but that she had granted several Favours to others besides the Duke. Gossus, Mémoires, Bourgogne, p. 721.

of France's Party. He had the honour to be intreated earnestly by the Pope, and the Council of Basil, to moderate his just Resentment, and to pity the Misfortunes of his Country. Besides, he had the Glory to see Charles VII submit to Terms of Accommodation so rigorous, that he may, without Hyperbole, be said to have made him Amende Honorable [C]. By means of these Submissions, shameful indeed,

(13) Id. ibid.

(14) Otherwise Gouda. Gollut falsely calls that Town Gonde, or Gond. Mezerau, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 239, calls it Gande. See above, Citat. (8).

(15) Gollut, Mémoires de Bourgogne, pag. 725. See also Pontus Heuterus Rec. Burg. lib. iii, pag. 110.

(16) In the Remark [C], of the Article LEWIS XI.

(17) Honorat. Meynier demande curieuse & Reponses libres, pag. 590, 591.

(18) Olivier de la Marche Mémoires, liv. i, cap. iii, pag. 84, 85.

the Superiority of the Burgundians, and that they beheaded all the Chiefs of the other Party, who fell into their Hands (13). Yet she would not treat with the Duke of Burgundy, till he had besieged her in Tergou (14). After the Treaty he gave the Government of Holland to Francis de Borjelle, who took it in his Head to make Love to Jaqueline, and married her without the Duke's knowledge in the Year 1432. She was made Prisoner, but as she made a new Cession of all her Rights, she was permitted to satiate herself in the enjoyment of her new Amour. She died at the Hague without Children the fourth of October 1436 (15).

All this shews that our Philip the Good was an able Prince, and that he made no scruple to aggradize himself at the expence of the involuntary Chastity of a Woman: For he opposed the Amours of Jaqueline, for no other reason, but to hinder her from having Children; and as soon as he knew that those she had would not inherit, he permitted her to satisfy Nature.

[C] It may be said without Hyperbole; that he made Charles VII, make him Amende honorable.]

I have cited in another Place (16), a long Passage, in which I have left Chafin, which contains this: 'Before Lewis XI, King Charles VII, his Father, did a thing yet more strange: For in order to make Peace with Philip Duke of Burgundy, his Vassal, nay, even his natural Subject, he sent the Constable of France, the Chancellor, a Marechal of France, and several other great Lords, to treat of Peace, who, in full Assembly, in the Name of the King their Master, asked Pardon for the Death of John Duke of Burgundy, confessing, aloud and distinctly, that the King has done amiss, being young, of little Judgment, and ill advised, praying the Duke to lay aside his just resentment for that fact, which could not now be helped: Whereupon the Duke declared, that he forgave the King for the Honour of God, and out of Compassion to the People of France, and in Obedience to the Council, the Pope, and other Christian Princes, who had desired him to do it. A Slave could not have paid more Honorable Amende to his Lord, than the King did then to his Subject, in order to restore the Kingdom to its former Splendor, and to drive out the English, as he did soon after, and in process of time reduced to Obedience, the Man to whom the Necessity of his Affairs had obliged him thus to submit. The Romans would sooner have lost all their State than thought of doing so (17).' As in the Case of Satisfaction for Injuries, the least alteration of Terms, is oftentimes of Consequence, my Readers might not be fully satisfied, if I left them to the Authority of This Author. Therefore it is necessary to recite the Words of the Treaty Arras itself, which relate to the humble Submission of Charles VII. The first Article runs thus, 'That the King shall say, or, by notable Persons sufficiently authorized, shall cause to be said, to Monsieur of Burgundy, that the Death of the late Monsieur the Duke John of Burgundy, his Father, (whom God absolve) was unjustly and wickedly caused by them, who perpetrated the said Action, and by ill Counsel, and has always displeased him, and does now displease him from his Heart; and that if he had known the said Case, and been of such Age and Understanding as he is of at present, he would have prevented it to the utmost of his Power: but he was very young, and had at that time but little Knowledge, and was not so well advised as to prevent it. And shall pray my said Lord of Burgundy, that all Malice or Hatred which he may have against him on that Account, he will lay aside from his Heart, and that good Peace and Love shall be between them; and express mention shall be made of this in the Instrument of the Agreement, and Treaty made between them (18).' Let us see also the three following Articles. 'Item, That all those who perpetrated this wicked Fact, or were consenting thereto, the King shall abandon, and shall do all possible Diligence to cause them to be taken and apprehended, (wherever they shall be found) to be punished in Body and Goods: and if they cannot be taken, shall banish, and cause them to be banished for ever, without Grace or Revocation, out of the Kingdom, and the Dauphiné, with Confiscation of all their Goods, and they shall be out of all Treaties. Item, The King shall not suffer them to be received, or favoured, in any place under his Obedience and Power: and shall cause it to be proclaimed and published in all Places of the said Kingdom and Dauphiné, where Proclamations and Publications are wont to be made, that no Person do receive or favour them on Pain of Confiscation of Body and Goods. Item, That Monsieur of Burgundy, so soon as he can conveniently, after the said Agreement passed, shall nominate those Persons, of whom he is, or shall then be, informed, that they perpetrated the said wicked Fact, or were consenting thereto, to the end that they may be immediately and diligently proceeded against on the part of the King as aforesaid. And further, because the said Lord of Burgundy may not yet have true Knowledge, nor true Information, of all who perpetrated the said wicked Fact, or were consenting thereto, whensoever he shall be duly informed of any others, he may name them, and by his Letters Patent, or otherwise sufficiently signify them, to the King, who shall in that Case be bound immediately and diligently to cause them to be proceeded against in manner aforesaid.'

Charles VII was not quit for this Amende honorable: he was moreover condemned in Charges, Damages, and Interest. Take the Pains to read, in Olivier de la Marche, the rest of the Treaty of Arras: you will there see in every Article (19), that it cost France a considerable Sum to the Benefit of the Duke of Burgundy. Further, the mortifying Conditions he imposed on Charles VII were not expressed in secret Articles: they were both settled and published by the Mediation of two Cardinals; one on the part of the Council, the other on the part of the Pope; and there never appeared such a Guard as that of the Embassadors, who managed this Treaty. They had in their Trains above ten thousand Horse (20).

The Historians of the House of Burgundy could not find sufficient Cause of Vanity in the Pacification of Arras: therefore they sought for more magnificent ones in the Preliminaries. They say, that the Embassadors of Charles VII cast themselves on their Knees before the Duke of Burgundy, and, melting in tears, besought him to pardon their Master: but he rejected their Tears and Supplications, and did not yield till a Miracle put him in fear of the Excommunication which the Cardinal Legate threatened him with. Let us recite this fine Story, as Lewis Gollut gives it. 'The Belgic and Holland Annals — say — that the Embassadors of France (understanding that the Duke of Burgundy heard Mass at St Wast) came to him, and (casting themselves on both Knees, accompanied by the Dukes herself, who on her Knees, with the rest, joined in the Petition) begged of him Peace, and that he would be content with the Revenge he had taken for several Years, for the Death of his Father, and pardon the King his Offence, committed by the ill Advice of those about him, while he was yet young, and not above sixteen Years of Age. Adding, that the King, since he came to Years of Discretion, had a thousand times repented of this Murder, and with sighs (which he could not forbear whenever he remembered it) he had complained no less affectionately than the Duke of Burgundy himself; and that he was ready by all honourable Means (agreeable to the Royal Dignity of a King of France) to make satisfaction and amends

† The Copy has these Words in the Margin. Note, that the Duke has named Tanneguy de Chastel, Jehan Louvet, President de Provence, Chevaliers; Pierre Froitier, Ecuier, Maître Jehan Cadart, Phisicien.

(19) The Treaty contains Forty one Articles.

(20) Gollut, Mémoires de Bourgogne, pag. 722.

indeed, but excusable from the Necessity of the Time [D]. Charles VII detached him from his Alliance with the English. The English, from that time, became great Enemies to the Duke, and committed all manner of Hostilities in his Territories (i). He attempted to revenge himself on them, by taking Calais ——— and besieged it with a numerous Army (k). The Flemings forsook him, and made him miscarry in that Enterprize. He did a very generous Action in the Year 1440; for he procured the Release of the Duke of Orleans, who had been Prisoner in Eng-

(i) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 245.

(k) Id. p. 255, & Ann. 1436.

to the Duke. Which they spoke with so much Affection, that they shed Tears in abundance. This caused the Duke (thus taken and attacked un-awares) to weep likewise: being moved to see the Countenances of these great Lords, and his dear Consort among them, and compassionating the Miseries of his Country: and also because he foresaw that by this Agreement his Vengeance for the Death of his Father would be prevented, and the Murderers suffered to go unpunished. He then, touched with Affection (and more inclined to the Preservation of his House, than to the Aggrandizement of the English), humanly raised all these Lords and Ladies, and answered them, that for his Part he would not refuse Peace, if he could accept of it: but that by his Oath, given to the English, he could not treat without their Consent. The same Annals say, that the Duke appeared resolute, and positively refused to come to any Agreement with the French, and that the Cardinal de Sainte Croix, being vexed at it, threatened to exercise the Power of the Church, against both him and the English. And, continue the same Annals, the Cardinal, in order to shew the Duke the Power of the Church, called for some white Bread, which (with great Assurance) he cursed in the Presence of them all: and instantly the Bread became black; and then the Cardinal, leaving his Imprecations, gave it the Benediction, by which means the Bread recovered its former whiteness. At which the Duke was exceedingly terrified, and promised to be reconciled to the King, contenting himself with the Revenge he had taken for the Death of his Father (21).

[D] — Shameful Submissions — which the Necessity of the time renders excusable.] It is to no purpose to say, that the Romans would rather have lost their States than have thought of that (22). They were a People, of Courage too singular to be drawn into an Example. Neither is it to the purpose to say, that private Gentlemen would rather die, than, in a Quarrel of Honour, offer their Enemy any thing that came near to the Submissions of Charles VII. Sovereigns cannot govern themselves by the strict Laws of Chivalry (23). They are obliged, in favour of their Subjects, and to draw themselves out of an embarrassing War, to do a hundred things which would be base and ignominious, if done by a Gentleman in a private Quarrel. It is not their Business to stand nicely on the Point of Honour. The Interest of the Public requires, that, without Prejudice to their Glory, they may offer Peace to their Enemy, and ask it pressing several Years running, and not be discouraged by his Haughtiness and Disdain. To shun the greater Evil, they ought to sacrifice their Reputation, and their Frontiers, to the good of Peace. Let a private Person, who goes to Law for an Estate, be as obstinate as he will not to be baffled in his Cause, let him spend every Rag rather than voluntarily quit Possession; that is of no Consequence to the Public: but if a Prince were to stand on such Bravadoes, he would expose his State, and sin against the Maxim, Salus populi suprema lex esto. And since the Obligation even of an Oath, the most sacred and most inviolable thing in the World, is subject to that Law, ought not the worldly Glory of a Prince be likewise subject to it? A Roman General affirms, that, for the Preservation of the State, we may suffer even what is ignominious: Ac sceda atque ignominiosa deditio est; sed ea Chæritas patriæ est ut tam ignominia eam quam morte nostra si opus sit servemus. Subeat ergo illa quantacunque est indignitas, & pareatur necessitati quam ne Diu quidem superant. (24). — That Surrender is base and ignominious: but the Love of our Country is such, that we would save it as well by our Ignominy as by our Death, if need be. Let therefore this Indignity, how great soever, be undergone, and let us submit to Necessity, which even the Gods cannot overcome. Olivier de la Marche imagines, that the Peace of Arras was a Work rather Divine than Natural; for the Affairs of Charles VII were in a good Posture, and those of the Duke of Burgundy still better: and yet, notwithstanding, they were both Great, and upon their Mettle, Nature (which cannot lye in her Judgment) felt herself grieved and wounded by both Parties. Wherefore the two noble Princes condescended to the Peace above-mentioned: and after a close Enquiry, and Calculation of the Reasons which moved each Party to seek Peace, I find that, on the Part of the King of France, he made Conscience of the Case of the Death of Duke John. Secondly, He saw no possibility of withstanding both the English and Burgundians at once, without great Hazard and Damage to his State. Thirdly, By reason of the War he found himself ruled, and under the Hands of so many kinds of Gens d'Armes, Foreigners and Natives, that there was not so much as a petty Captain in France, to whom they durst deny Admittance to the King at any time, whatever Business he had. Fourthly, He was so wise and reasonable a King, that he chose rather the Good and Benefit of his Kingdom, than obstinately to persevere in a wrong Notion, without Safety or Repose. As for the good Duke Philip, what made him so readily condescend seems to have been a Regard to the Preservation of the Kingdom of France, to the noble Blood from whence he was descended (working in his Breast, and nearest to his Heart) and to the great Benefits he had received, in the Persons of his Predecessors, from the Royal Family, as well of natural Right as Benevolence. These three things, working together, made him forget the Offence, ill Adventure, Mischief, and Misfortune. Secondly, The small Affinity and Love he had to the English; and, thirdly, His own Honour and Virtue, who, always during his whole Life, (however offended and provoked he may have been at several times, one while by Words, another while by Deeds) lent his Hand with all his Might and Power, to support, maintain, and guard, the Royal Majesty of France (25). Here you see plainly the Language of a Domestic of the Dukes of Burgundy, entirely partial to his Masters; Amplification on one Side, and Diminution on the other. He does but just hint the small Affection of Duke Philip to the English, and conceals the deadly Affronts which had caused a total Rupture, if Charles VII had been wise enough to improve the Opportunity. Besides, he talks with Emphasis of his Master's Affection for the Kingdom of France. Meer Chimera! A Turk would not have been more cruel to Charles VII than Philip was, nor have exacted more disgraceful Satisfaction. If the Duke of Burgundy had felt in his Veins the least Drop of the Royal Blood from which he descended, he never would have made the King of France submit to a Penalty so unworthy of a Monarch. I say again, Charles VII was excusable: He was neither Warrior nor Politician enough to extricate himself out of trouble; if he had had as great Resource of Courage and Genius as some others have had, he would never have prostituted his Honour, as he did by the Peace of Arras: and perhaps if he had let things go on a few Years, he might have seen himself in a Condition to maintain, that he did, no more than his Duty in killing Duke John; that, as he could not put him to Death by way of Law, he was necessitated to have recourse to that means, and thereby to remove the greatest Shame of the Reign of Charles VI; for nothing shews so evidently,

(25) Olivier de la Marche, Mémoires, pag. 99.

(31) Gollot. Mémoires de Bourgogne, liv. x, cap. lxvii, pag. 785.

(22) Meynier, Demandes curieuses & responses libres, pag. 591.

(23) See the Article GON-TAUT (CHARLES), Remark [D]; and the Article POLITIERS, Rem. [I].

(24) T. Livius, lib. ix, pag. 241.

(25) Olivier de la Marche, Mémoires, pag. 99.

(26) T. Livius, lib. ix, pag. 241.

(27) T. Livius, lib. ix, pag. 241.

(28) T. Livius, lib. ix, pag. 241.

(1) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 359; ad Ann. 1446.

(m) Id. ibid. Father Anselme, pag. 211, says June 15. Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. pag. 149, says the 16th of July.

(26) Compare what Gollut says Mémoires Burgund. pag. 716.

(27) Id. ibid. pag. 723.

(28) Brother of Henry V, King of England, and Regent of France.

land for Twenty five Years; and thus these two Princes, by a sincere and cordial Reconciliation, extinguished the mortal Enmity raised by their Fathers (1). The Duke of Burgundy concerned himself but little with the Affairs of the English, after the raising of the Siege of Calais. He had Work enough at Home: His Subjects in the Low Countries, and chiefly the Gantois, found him Employ; but he reduced them to Reason [E]. He gave a retreat to the Dauphin for several Years successively, and accompanied him into France with Four thousand Horse, on News of the Death of Charles VII, in the Year 1461. He lived till the fifteenth of July, 1467 (m). He was a Prince of great Merit, and very much enlarged his Dominions [F]; he gained the Love of his Subjects, and the Esteem of all the Princes in Christendom. He married thrice, and was excessively incontinent [G]: It was he, dently the Misery and Disorder of France under That Prince, as to see the Assassin of the King's only Brother, not only refuse to conceal himself, but continue, for ten Years successively, to disturb the State, and turn every thing topsy-turvy, according to his Fancy. A little Patience might, perhaps, have shewn Charles VII the Rupture between the English, and Duke of Burgundy. This last had more reason to fear the Success of the English than that of France: for if the English had overthrown Charles VII, it would have been easier for them to conquer all the Dominions of the Duke of Burgundy, than it would for France to do it after the Expulsion of the English (26). From this Principle, and out of Repentment for some Affronts, the Duke of Burgundy found it his Interest to forsake them, and he would have done it sooner or later. 'The old Men of our Country say, these are the Words of Lewis Gollut of Franche Comté (27), that the Duke of Bedford (28) once came to so high Words with Duke Philip, that he reproached him with the Treaty of Peace above-mentioned, and upbraided him with his Levity, for his bearkening to the Promises and Oaths of the French. --- The same old Men say further, that the Duke of Bedford added, in a Passion, that it was in his Power easily to prevent it; and that the Duke of Burgundy would be much surprized if he were sent to drink Beer and Ale in England, more perhaps than for his fill. Whereupon the Duke, as they say, (being then but ill attended) made answer: Good Cousin, I have done nothing amiss, do not put yourself in pain about it. A few Days after, having taken care to have his People about him, he gave charge to the Marshal de Vergy to do what I am about to mention. That the Sieur de Vergy should observe when the Duke went in to the Duke of Bedford, and that then he should draw out three or four hundred Gentlemen of the boldest, who (being well armed privately with their Battle-Axes in readines) should enter suddenly, and with furious Mien and Aspect, into the Room where the Dukes were: which they did: then addressing themselves to their Prince, and having saluted him on the Knee (without so much as looking at the Duke of Bedford) the Sieur de Vergy said to him, Sir, Here and elsewhere it goes well, but elsewhere much better than here; for there you will be served, honoured, and obeyed. And therefore we beseech you to depart, and leave these haughty People here to reap the Fruit of their Bravadoes and Presumptions. Whereupon the Duke asked: Is that your Resolution? and they all answered, Yes, yes, let us go, let us go, we have no Occasion for these People who stand in need of us. With that the Duke, addressing himself to the Duke of Bedford, said, Good Cousin; You see what my Gentlemen advise me to, I am resolved to believe them. Fare you well; and forthwith departed, no body daring to stir, for Orders had been given every where to fight stoutly if it had been necessary.

[E] His Subjects, and chiefly the Gantois, found him Employ, but he reduced them to Reason. The Inhabitants of Bruges, rising in the Year 1437, let him enter their Town, as it were to give him Satisfaction, and fell upon his People, and killed above a hundred of them, and among the rest, the Lord de l'Isle-Adam. He himself was in great Danger, and escaped very narrowly, by breaking open the Gate of the City with Hammers. --- Their Fury abated when they learnt, — that the Duke was coming to besiege them with a great Army. They petitioned for a Pardon, which they obtained, but on very hard Terms. It cost them two Hundred thousand Crowns of Gold, the loss of a great many of their Privileges, and the Lives of a dozen, or fifteen, of the most factious. The Gantois gave him a great deal more trouble by their frequent Commotions: the most dangerous was that in the Year 1452, occasioned by the Gabel. He had a mind to establish it in Flanders, and render it certain, imposing Twenty four Gros current on every Sack of Salt. They resolved upon all manner of Extremities, rather than suffer an Imposition on Water and the Sun, which are the universal and free Gifts of Nature. They confided in the King's Protection: And indeed he wrote strongly in their Favour to the Duke of Burgundy: But having received a stronger Answer, he did not think proper to engage in a Civil-War, not being yet clear of the Foreign one against the English. The loss which the Gantois suffered in five, or six, great Battles, heated their fierce Courage the more: But the Battle of Riplemonde, and afterwards that of Gavres, wherein they lost Twenty thousand Men, brought them so low, that they were obliged to come to a Composition. Two thousand Men, bare headed, and bare-foot, and all the Counsellors, Sheriffs, and Officers, in their Shirts, went a League to meet the Duke and his Son, to beg for mercy. The Gate, at which they went out to fight him at Riplemonde, was stooped up for ever. They were condemned to pay Four hundred thousand Rix-Dollars, to deliver him their Banners, to do with them as he should think fit, and suffer a Change of their Customs and Privileges (29).

All this shews the Happiness, the Valour, and the Ability, of our Philip.

[F] He very much enlarged his Dominions. Let us observe here, in what manner the House of Burgundy united so many Provinces under it's Dominion. Philip the Bold added to the Provinces, given him by his Father, the Earldoms of Flanders and Artois, by his Marriage with Margaret, Daughter of the Count of Flanders. He left all these States to his eldest Son, and obtained for his second Brabant, and Limbourg, by Will of his Aunt (30). This Duke of Brabant was Father of him who married Jaqueline of Bavaria: We have seen above (31), how this Jaqueline yielded Hainault, Holland, Zealand, and Friesland, to Duke Philip the Good, in 1428. This Duke, the same Year, took Possession of the Counties of Namur and Zutphen, which he had bought of Earl Theodorice (32). He inherited, in 1430, the Duchies of Lothier, Brabant, and Limbourg, the Marquisate of the Holy Empire, and the Lordship of Antwerp, by the Death of Philip of Burgundy his Cousin (33), who succeeded his Brother, the Husband of Jaqueline. He made himself Master of the Country of Luxemburg in the Year 1443 (34).

[G] He married thrice, and was excessively incontinent. Michelle of France, Daughter of Charles VI, whom he married in the Year 1409, and Bona of Artois, whom he married in the Year 1424, and who died the Year following, were his two first Wives. He had no Children by them. He married afterwards Isabella of Portugal, Daughter of John I, King of Portugal, the tenth of January, 1430. He had three Sons by her, of which the two eldest lived not long. As to his natural Children, they were fifteen in Number (35). The following

(29) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 277.

(30) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. lib. ii. pag. 62.

(31) In the Remark [B].

(32) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 239.

(33) Id. ibid. pag. 240.

(34) See Gollut. Mémoires de Bourgogne, pag. 794, 795.

(35) See Father Labbe, Tabl. Général, pag. 257, &c. and Father Anselme, Hist. Général, p. 211, &c.

he, likewise, who instituted the Order of the Golden Fleece [H], the University and the Parliament of Dole (n). It is a very strong Proof of his Merit, that he could keep in Obedience his only Son, who was a little discontented, and the most proud and rash Man living [I] (n) About the Year 1423. See Gollut. Memoirs de Bourgogne, pag. 155.

following Passage is worth reading. I take it from the Memoirs of Olivier de la Marche, in the Chapter where he gives an Account of the Journey, which the Dukes of Burgundy took into France, in the Year 1444. 'The King of France, I say (36) received the said Dukes very honourably, and the Queen did her much Honour, and was often in private with her. For both these Princesses were grown old, and now but little talked of: And I believe they both had the same Pain and Distemper, called Jealousy: and that at those times they discovered their Passions secretly to each other, which was the Cause of their privacy: and indeed there was some Appearance of Reason for their Suspicions. For the King had newly raised a poor Gentlewoman, one Agnes du Soret, and placed her in such Splendor and Power, that her State was equal to that of the greatest Princesses of the Kingdom. — On the other Hand, the Duke of Burgundy was the most sparkish and frolicsome Prince of his time, and had Bastards both Sons and Daughters, a very fine Company. Thus the Queen and the Dukes often met together, to console one another on their Sorrows.'

(36) Olivier de la Marche, liv. i, cap. xiii. p. 159.

I mention, elsewhere (37), Anthony one of his natural Sons. James of Burgundy, Lord of Fal-lainx, Grandson, I think, of Baldwin, another natural Son of Duke Philip, became a Protestant; but taking Offence at the Disputes raised at Geneva, between Bolsec and Calvin, in the Year 1551, he fell off, and his Wife also, from the Doctrine of the Reformed. He had carried a good Face in their Church several Years (38). Calvin had dedicated to him his Commentary on the first Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians; but he afterwards took out that Epistle Dedictory, and inserted another to the Marquis de Vie (39).

(37) In the Remark [A], of the Article BERSALA.

(38) Beze, Pref. du Comment. de Calvin. sur Jo-han, p. 20.

(39) Id. pag. 25.

[H] He instituted the Order of the Golden Fleece. He instituted it in Bruges, the tenth of January 1430, which was the Day of his Marriage with Isabella of Portugal. He designed it to consist of Thirty one Knights. The following Fact, more curious than modest, is found in the Collections of Mr Colomies. 'I have heard Mr Vossius say, that he remembered he had read in the Flemish Chronicle, that Philip, Duke of Burgundy, surnamed the Good, had instituted the Order of the Golden Fleece, on Occasion of his finding a Hair of his Mistress, which was of a yellow Colour. This I have found confirmed by Andrew Favon, in the beginning of the second Volume of his Theater of Honour. Others, says he, say, that Philip Duke of Burgundy, conversing, with a great deal of intimacy, with a Lady of Bruges of exquisite Beauty, and entering one Morning into her Chamber, found, on her Toilette, some of the Fleece of her lower REGION. By which this careless Lady occasioned Laughter to the Gentlemen who followed the Duke, who, to cover the Mystery, made an Oath, that the Man, who had made a jest of that Fleece, should never have the Honour to wear a Collar of the Order of the Fleece, which he designed to erect for Love of his Lady (40).

[I] He kept in Obedience his only Son, who was a little discontented, and the proudest, and rashest Man living.] That a Son, so ambitious and bold as he was, at a distance from Court, arrived at an Age for commanding, beloved by a People, prone to Insurrections, spared his Father's old Age, is a Token, that the Father was a great Man. The Son I speak of undertook nothing, 'till he was about Twenty two Years of Age, — then he began to quarrel with his Father's Governours; the Father took their Part: Wherefore he withdrew from his Presence, and went and lived in Holland, where he was well received, and held intelligence with the People of Ghent, and sometimes went thither. He had nothing from his Father: But the Country of Holland was very rich, and made him large Presents, as did several great Towns in other Provinces, in hopes to win his Favour for the time to come, according to general Custom, that we always study more to please those People, whose Power and Authority is expected to increase hereafter, than him who is already in such a Station, as that he can mount no higher: And they are more beloved, especially by the Populace. Wherefore when Duke Philip was told, how much the Gantois loved his Son, and that he could manage them so well, made Answer, that they always loved well their Lord to come: But as soon as he was their Lord, they hated him (41).

(40) Colomies. Recueil de Particularitez, p. 126, 127.

(41) Comines liv. vi, cap. xlii, p. 409.

BURGUNDY (CHARLES Duke of), Son of the former, was born at Dijon, the tenth of November, 1433. He was one of the most Warlike Princes in the World. He was known by the Name of Count of Charolois, during the Life of his Father. There was a prodigious Antipathy between him and Lewis XI, which begun during that Monarch's Residence, while he was but Dauphin, at the Court of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy (a). This reciprocal Hatred was a perpetual Source of Enterprizes, which occasioned great Mischief: These Princes studied nothing but to thwart each other. They went to War several times; and when they made Peace, it was with no other View than to ensnare one another [A], and each of them continually kept Intelligence with the Enemies of the other. If the Court of Vienna had been as active, as it has been since, to take Advantage of favourable Opportunities, it had been a great Happiness for Lewis XI; but he found them insensible [B], and could not persuade them to do any great matter

(a) See Matthieu, Histoire de Louis XI, liv. i, pag. 56, & seq.

[A] He, and Lewis XI, had no other View than to ensnare one another.] Philip Camerarius shall be my Commentator. 'How often, as Historians relate, did King Lewis X, and Charles, Duke of Burgundy, confirm their Treaties by solemn Oaths? And how often did they depart from them, when either of them thought that the Advantage of his Affairs required it? so that one may say, they gave their Faith, and swore to each other, on purpose that they might break more easily what they had reciprocally promised to observe. Accordingly Philip de Comines said, that all their Counsels tended only to deceive one another, and that the Inclinations of these two Princes were opposite, and directly contrary, all their Lives, except once, when they conspired to take off the Countable (1).

[B] Lewis XI found the Court of Vienna insensible.] While the Duke of Burgundy was making War in the County of Cologne, Lewis XI dispatched John Tiercelin to the Emperor, to advise him not to come to any Agreement with the Duke. — And besides, to make him a new Proposal: which was, that they should give assurance each to the other, that neither should make Peace or Truce without consent of the other; and that the Emperor should take all the Dominions which the said Duke held of the Empire, and which, of right, ought to be held of it, and declare them confiscated to himself, and that the King should take

(1) Camerarius Mediat. Historiques Vol. II, liv. iv, cap. xviii, pag. 330, 331.

(b) See the Roma & [B].

(c) Taken from Mezerai, Abrégé
Chronol. Tom.
III. pag. 294,
& seq.

(d) Id. ibid.
pag. 302.

(e) He died in July, 1467.

(f) Mezerai,
ibid. pag. 306.

(g) Id. ibid.
pag. 309, &c.

(a) Philip de Comines, liv. iv,
cap. iii, p. 205,
206.

(2) Id. ibid. p.
207.

(3) Id. ibid. p.
195.

(4) See Lewis
Gollut, Mémoires
de Bourgogne,
cap. xciii, p. 839.

(6) Id. ibid. cap.
cl, p. 870, 871.

(7) Id. ibid.

(8) Comines,
liv. iv, cap. xi,
p. 203, 204, ad
Ann. 1474.

(9) Id. ibid. p.
203.

(10) See Gollut,
Mémoires de
Bourgogne, p. 203.

matter against Duke Charles, who was formidable to several States of the Empire. He found more Vivacity in the Court of the Archduke Sigismund, and among the Swiss, in the Affair of Ferrette (b). He found himself greatly embarrassed, the first time he had to do with this terrible Enemy. It was in the Year 1465. The Count of Charolois entered France with a fine Army, to support the Grandes of the Kingdom, in a League they had made against the King, which they called the League of the public good. The Battle of Montleber, between the King's Troops, and the Burgundians, decided nothing; both Parties pretended to have the Advantage. The Earl gave signal Proofs of his Bravery, and was wounded there. The Heads of the League joined him some time after, and they wanted but little of making themselves Masters of Paris. They would, in all appearance, have dismembered the Monarchy, if they had had as much Prudence as Strength; but, as none of them were capable of conducting the Business well, and every one might obtain great Advantages by a Treaty, they consented to a Peace, which was concluded the Twenty ninth of October, 1465 (c). The Count returned very well satisfied, and found Employment at home, in the War against the People of Liege. He commanded the Duke his Father's Army, before Dinant, in 1466. The Town was taken, and treated with the utmost Rigour, as they had on their part acted with excessive Insolence (d) [C]. He continued that War after the Death of his Father (e), and gained a Battle against the People of Liege, near St Tron, in the Month of November, 1467 (f). He was Master of Peronne, when he received a Visit there from Lewis XI, in the Year 1468. That Interview had an Issue quite different from the King's Expectation; for he found himself the Duke of Burgundy's Prisoner, and was constrained to follow him to the Siege of Liege, to be Witness of the Chastisement to be inflicted on a Town which he had stirred up to take Arms a second time (g). It was taken by Assault, the thirtieth of October 1468, and treated cruelly [D]. The King was suffered to retire four Days

'take all that were held of France: as Flanders, Artois, Burgundy, and several others. Though that Emperor had been all his Life a Man of very little Courage, yet he was a Man of good Understanding, and, having lived to a great Age, had a great deal of Experience (2). He recited an Apologue — and with that Fable put the King off, without returning any other Answer (3). Philip de Comines had said before, that the Emperor had a very narrow mean Spirit, and would put up any thing to save Expenses (4). To give a better Light into what I have hinted of the Business of Ferrette, it must be observed, that Duke Charles, having lent large Sums to Sigismund of Austria, Count of Tirol, received from him Possession of the County of Ferrette, the Landgraviate of Alsace, and four Frontier Towns, in the Year 1469 (5). Five Years after, the King of France, having routed Duke Sigismund, by giving him 80000 Crowns, for which Sum his Countries of Alsace, Sanguen, and Ferrette, were engaged, this being paid him at Basle, the Duke summoned Duke Charles to take it, and to surrender the Possession of the Countries engaged to him. The Duke returned answer, that he was content to receive it, provided the Money were paid him at Bezançon in Franche Comté, otherwise he said he would not quit (6). Whereupon there was a general Insurrection: the Troops of the Duke of Burgundy were driven out: Hagembac, who had been Governor of the County of Ferrette for him, and had been guilty of a great many Oppressions, was beheaded, and the whole Country of Ferrette was put in the Hands of the said Duke Sigismund of Austria; and the Swiss begun the War in Burgundy, and took Blasmond, which belonged to the Marechal of Burgundy, who was of the House of Neufbastele: and besieged the Castle of Herycourt, which belonged to the same House, whither the Burgundians came to it's Relief, but were defeated before it, though numerous. The Swiss did abundance of Mischief to the Country (7). All this was contrived by Lewis XI, as Philip de Comines owns (8). The Troops, sent by the Duke of Burgundy into that Country, had sometimes the Advantage (9).

[C] He treated the Town of Dinant with the utmost Rigour: as they on their Part had acted with excessive Insolence. The People of Liege and Dinant declared War against the Count of Charolois, when he was on his March, to come to Paris (10). The Duke his Father, compelled them in a few Days to buy a Peace. But quickly after, on a Report which was spread that Charolois was killed at Montleber, they took Arms again with greater Fury. — The Inhabitants of Dinant, a rich Town, and famous for it's Manufacture of Copper, run out into all manner of Outrages against Charolois, such as to call him Bastard, and hang him in Effigy. The Chastisement followed speedily after their outrageous Insolence: the Duke laid siege to Dinant, and his Son commanded the Army. The Town was taken by assault and burnt; Eight hundred of the Inhabitants were drowned in the Meuse, and the rest drove to extremity (11). Lewis Gollut says, that the Town was demolished, and entirely razed, so that no signs of it appeared. Thus fare they ordinarily, who dare affront or vilify Princes (12). These last Words are but too often true, and yet I do not think it possible to cure the Insolence, with which the People, in free States, are apt to attack the Honour of a Prince, who is their Enemy, by Libels, Prints, and other such ways. The wise Heads would never be able to restrain the Fury of the Populace, if they should attempt it; and perhaps they may not think it proper to use their Authority in the Case: they are in hopes that this kind of railing will nourish Hatred, and raise their Courage, and make them open their Purse: all things very proper to facilitate the means of resisting. But when they miscarry, what would they not give that they had followed other Conduct? Observe, that a Piece of false News, believed for three Days, is as capable of destroying a State as of saving it. The People of Dinant perished only by believing too hastily the false News of the Death of the Count of Charolois.

[D] The Town of Liege was taken by assault — and treated cruelly. Great Part of the People fled over the Meuse into the Ardennes, where above half of them perished with hunger and cold: the rest took refuge in Churches, or hid themselves in Houses (13). The Duke caused a Thousand, or Twelve hundred of the poor Wretches, who were taken in the Houses of Liege, to be drowned, and the whole City to be burnt, except the Churches, and Three hundred Houses about them, which were reserved to lodge the Ecclesiastics (14). The Cosmographer Munster affirms, that the Duke caused all the Inhabitants of Liege, that could be found, to be put to Death, without regard to Age or Sex: that the Priests had their Throats cut in the Churches, and even during the Celebration of the Mass: that Twelve thousand

(11) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, p. 202, ad Ann. 1465.

(12) Gollut, Mémoires de Bourgogne, cap. lxxxviii, p. 832.

(13) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, p. 311, ad Ann. 1468.

(14) Id. ibid.

Days after (b). He soon broke the Treaty he had made at Perronne, and, in 1470, seized some Towns in Picardy, belonging to the Duke (i). This War, interrupted by a Truce, became very bloody, after the Death of the Duke of Guichne, Brother to the King (k). The Duke of Burgundy put all to Fire and Sword in Picardy, and the Territories of Caux (l) [E]. He undertook two Sieges, which he was obliged to raise, that of Beauvais, and that of Rouen. It is reported that the Women of Beauvais signalized themselves in the Defence of their Town, for which they were recompensed, by a Privilege very agreeable to the Sex [F]; for they had leave to adorn themselves as they thought fit. Some time after, a Truce was made, during which the Duke went to conquer the Province of Guelders. This Addition inspired him with the Thought of having his States erected into a Kingdom by the Emperor [G]; but he could not compass his Design. It was infinitely more easy for him to engage the King of England in a League against France: I have said in another place (m), that Lewis XI laid that Storm with great Sums of Money. He made a separate Peace with the English, in the Year 1475; the

(b) Id. ibid. pag. 311.

(i) Philip de Comines, liv. ii, cap. i, & seq.

(k) In the Month of May, 1472. Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 319.

(l) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 320, ad Ann. 1472.

(m) In the Article of E.D. WARD IV.

thousand Women were thrown into the River, and Forty thousand Men killed in the Town. 'Dux obtenta civitate fecit proditores omnes decollari una cum aliis promiscuis ex hominibus quos omnes interfecit, nullo habito delectu inter feminas & viros, pueros & senes. Confodiebantur etiam sacerdotibus & monachi in templis & in Missarum solemnibus. Colligebant mulieres a tergo & projiciebant in subiectum Mosæ fluvium. Ultimo exuerant civitatem & diruebant murum. Numerantur quadraginta millia hominum in civitate trucidati, & duodecim millia mulierum quæ in aquas projectæ fuerant atque submersæ (15).' A certain Historian observes, that the Soldiers ravished the young Women, before they killed them: 'Neque etiam a virginum sacerdotum cæde satis temperatum est, quas bene stupratas prius, effusus miles jugulare, &c (16).'

(15) Munster, Cosmograph. lib. ii, p. 134.

(16) Renerus Snotius Rerum Batavicar. lib. 25, p. 159.

(17) That is to say, the Duke of Guichne, Brother of Lewis XI.

(18) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. p. 320, ad Ann. 1472.

(19) Jean de Serres Invent. de l'Hist. de France. Vie de Louis XI, pag. 327. See that more at large in Pierre Mathieu Hist. de Louis XI, p. 280.

(20) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. pag. 321, ad Ann. 1472.

for their Women in the Observation of their foolish Traditions. For they forbade a great many little innocent Works, even in the most pressing Necessity, on solemn Days: but they excepted the Habits and Jewels of their Wives, which they thought they might buy on those Days †: It was likewise a privilege granted by Letters Patent of King Lewis XI, in the Year 1473, to the Women and Maids of the Town of Beauvais, that they might dress themselves on their Wedding Days, and when they thought fit, in such Vestments, Attire, Ornaments, and Jewels, as they pleased, in consideration of the Courage they had shewn in defending the City against the Duke of Burgundy. ‡ This Privilege is joined to another, which is very particular, that is, they may walk in Procession, and to the Offering, before the Men, on the Day of the Feast of St Agadréma, Patroness of the Town of Beauvais (21). Andrew du Chesne mentions these Privileges granted to the Women of Beauvais by King Lewis XI (22).

† V. Seb. Munsærum in notia ad Evangelium Hebraic. Matthæi, cap. xiv, pag. 97.

‡ Vid. Histoire de Beauvais par Ant. Loisel, p. 234, 351.

(21) Joli Avis Chrétiens & Moraux pour l'Institution des Enfants, liv. ii, cap. iv, pag. 260.

(22) Du Chesne Antiquité des Villes de France, p. 411.

(23) Plutarch. in vita Coriolani, pag. 231.

(24) Id. ibid.

(25) Valerius Maximus, lib. v, cap. ii, n. 1, p. 436.

(26) See the Article PERIANDER, Remark [B]; the Article PRETEXTAT, Remark [B]; and the Article BOS-SUS, Remark [D].

(27) Gollut, Mémoire de Bourgogne, pag. 242.

(28) Id. ib. pag. 243.

(29) Utrecht, Liege, Cambrai, the Low Countries (29), and that he demanded & Tournai.

[E] He put all to the Sword in Picardy, and the Territories of Caux.] His Inclination to cruelty is apparent from the foregoing Remarks, to which I add this: 'He entered Picardy with a Torch in one Hand, and a Sword in the other. Till then burning of Towns had not been practised between the two Parties: but nevertheless he made a Bonfire of all the plain Country, and sacrificed to the Manes of his Friend (17) all that fell in his Power. Nesle, taken by assault, suffered all manner of Cruelties, because the Inhabitants had killed a Herald, who went to summon them, and two Men more, during the Cessation granted them to treat. Respect to the Altars did not save the innocent People, who took refuge in the Church; and they who escaped the Sword were all hanged, or had their Hands cut off (18).' These are the words of another Historian: The Duke 'marches to Nesle in Vermandois — besieges, beats, and takes it. Of five hundred Archers, commanded by one, called the Little Picard, he killed the greatest part: hanged federal, among the rest the Captain: cut off the Hands of the rest. Several, both Soldiers and Inhabitants, who had taken refuge in the Churches, were inhumanely massacred on the very Altars, and embracing the Images. The Duke himself went into the Church on Horseback, and seeing the dead Bodies. This, says he, looks well, I have good Butchers. Then he burnt and razed the Place (19).'

[F] The Women of Beauvais signalized themselves, and were recompensed with a Privilege very agreeable to the Sex. It is a memorable thing, that in a general Assault made on Thursday the ninth of July, the Men being on the Point of being routed, the Women, conducted by one Jane Hachete, did wonders in repulsing the Enemy with Stones, wild Fire, and Lead melted in boiling Rossin. There is still an Effigy of that Woman in the Town-House with a Sword in her Hand; and a Procession is made on the tenth of July (the Day the Siege was raised) in which the Women walk first, and the Men after (20). Mezerai forgets the chief Circumstance: therefore I shall cite another Author, who, in a Chapter, where he lays it down, that the Women think Finery a Privilege of Right belonging to them, brings two Proofs, one drawn from the Practice of the Jews, and the other from a Decree of Lewis XI. These are his Words: 'The Jews had this Consideration

VOL II.

I i i

the

the Duke of Burgundy was very angry, and remonstrated to the King of England very haughtily on that Subject [H]. The ill Success of the Siege he had laid to Nuitz, in the Country of Cologne, contributed not a little to the Breach of the League he had made with that Prince, and with the Duke of Bretagne. After some Bravadoes, he also agreed with Lewis XI on a Truce for nine Years, not without great Spite, which he discharged on Lorraine. He subdued it entirely: in consequence of that he built Project upon Project, even so far as to think of the Conquest of Italy; but he had a mind first to oblige the Swiss to submit to his Laws: He miscarried in this Design. They beat him at Granson, June 5, 1476, and at Morat the 20th of June the same Year. At last, he was killed before Nancy, January 5, 1477 [I]. He was a Prince who might have made great Conquests, if he had had as much Prudence as Courage, and if he had not had, in Lewis XI, an Adversary, who, by his Intrigues and his Money, raised him abundance of Enemies. His Military Ordinances are admirable (n). He was the first who revived the Method of the Romans, of enclosing his Troops in an intrenched Camp (o). The first Cause of his Wars against the Swiss was a meer trifle [K]: The Booty, which

(n) See them in Lewis Gollut, Memoires de Bourg. liv. x, cap. xcvi, xcvi, xcvi.

(o) Mezerai, Abregé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 308.

(30) See Philip de Comines, liv. ii, cap. viii, p. 105.

(31) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. lib. iv, pag. 172, 173.

(32) Matthieu Hist. de Louis XI, liv. vii, cap. xxx, p. 321. See also Comines, lib. iv, cap. viii, p. 227.

(33) Comines, liv. v, cap. viii, p. 288.

(34) Gollut, Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 82.

(35) Matthieu, Hist. de Louis XI, liv. vii, cap. xxiii, p. 390.

(36) Id. ibid. p. 391.

the Vicarship of the Empire, with a tacit desire to succeed the Emperor Frederic; that the Pomp with which he shewed his Riches, and the Finery of his Furniture, which foiled that of the Emperor (30), strengthened the Suspicions raised by the King of France; and that thus all the Preparations for the Coronation were over-set, in such a manner, that Frederic retired to Cologne, without taking leave of the Duke (31).

[H] Lewis XI having made Peace with the English — he complained haughtily of it to the King of England.] He departed from Luxemburg with sixteen Horses to go to speak to him; Edward — seeming to be astonished at so speedy and sudden an Arrival, asked him what brought him there. I come, says the Duke, to speak with you. Would you do it, said Edward, in private or in public? With that, the Duke, who could no longer keep in his Anger, and who came to say what he had a mind, without considering that he might also hear what he would not like, asks the King of England if he had made Peace? No, says Edward, but a Truce for nine Years, in which you are included, and also the Duke of Bretagne, and I desire you to agree to it. The Duke replied in the English Language, which he understood and spoke, that the Army needed not to have passed the Sea for that; that this Treaty ruined the Reputation of the Kings of England, and that it wanted that Lion's Heart again which was buried at Roan. Then he added: I had procured you an Opportunity of doing your Business, and recovering what belongs to you, which you will never have again. It was not for my Interest, for I could have done without you; and to shew you that I will have nothing to do with your Truce, by St George I will not treat with the King till you are returned into England, and have been there above three Months. Edward not liking these Brunts made no Reply (32).

[I] He was killed before Nancy, the fifth of January, 1477.] He laid Siege to that Place with a few Troops; he was basely betrayed by Campobasso, one of his Generals; he was attacked by a very numerous Army. It is therefore no wonder, that he perished in the Enterprize, but he was very much to blame not to follow the wise Counsel which was given him (33). He fought like a Lion (34). (a) After the Battle was over they were in pain to know what was become of him. He was fought among the living, and afterwards among the dead. — He was found in a Ditch, with his Face all bedawbed with Dirt and Blood, and the hard Winter having frozen it, he could not be known (35). His Domestic knew the Body by several Marks, by the want of Teeth in his upper Jaw, which he lost in his Youth, by a Fall; by the Scar of the Wound he received in the Throat in the Battle of Montleberi; by the shrivelling of the Skin in his Shoulder occasioned by a Carbuncle; by a Fistula he had under his Navel; and by his Nails, which he wore longer than any Person in his Court (36). There were three Wounds in the Body; one with a Halbert, which cleft his Head, from above the Ear to the Teeth; a Wound with a Pike in the Thigh, and another in the Fundament (37). He was carried to Nancy, and after they had washed the Body, and dressed it in a plain linnen Cloth, they laid it on a Table, with a Canopy of black Velvet over it, in a Room hung with the same

(38) The Duke of Lorraine went in a mourning Habit, and with a golden Beard, after the manner of Champions, to give him holy Water (39); and, and taking him by the Hand, said to him, GOD receive your Soul, you have done me much harm, and given me a deal of Trouble.

He caused him to be interred with all manner of funeral Honours (40). He erected a very handsome Monument for him in the Church of St George at Nancy, with the Effigy as big as the Life (41). Charles V caused the Body to be removed to Luxembourg, from whence it was again removed to Bruges, where, by command of Queen Eleanor, it was interred in the Choir of the Church of our Lady, before the Steps of the great Altar, in the same Vault with Lady Mary his Daughter (42). Observe, that the People imagined he had escaped, and went and hid himself in a Hermitage, from whence he was to return after seven Years. This Report prevailed so, that several People lent Money to be paid at his return. His cholerick Humour, and some Person or other who had been seen in Suabia, that resembled him very much in Size, Hair, Voice, and Countenance, occasioned this Opinion (43).

[§ (a) Mezerai, Tom. II. pag. 171, of his Great History Ed. 1646, observes, that this Prince was surnamed the Lion; 'tis to this Surname that That Expression of Gollut alludes; the same Surname likewise appears in the following Verses, which are taken out of a Ballad on the tragical Death of this Prince, and extant in the Verger d'Honneur, &c. fol. 137.

(42) Id. ibid.

(43) Fabert Hist. des Ducs de Bourgogne, p. 312. See also Renerus Snotus, Rerum Batavicar. lib. xi. p. 168.

Or est le parc orgueilleux deffendu
Le fier Lyon ne l'a pas bien gardé,
Il a tres-mal son Latin entendu,
Et a son cas simplement regardé,
Il a trouvé avoir ung peu tardé
An desloger du pays de Lorraine;
Car a la fin il y est demouré
Et les moutons, la toison & la layne.

The stately Park is now protected.
The Lion has it's Guard neglected.
His Business ill be understood,
And ill consulted his own Good:
He found too long a time he bad
Retreating from Lorraine delay'd;
For there he lost, as it fell out,
His Life, Sheep, Skins, and Wool to boot.

REM. CRIT.]

[K] The

which they took at the Battle of Granson was inestimable, and some singular Adventures are related concerning it [L]. His Grief at this Defeat had almost cost him his Life, and did weaken his Understanding [M]. I must not forget that, in the [K] The first Source of his Wars against the Swiss was a very small matter. I speak so in compliance with the common Opinion; for I am persuaded that the great Mischief they had done him, both in Alsace and Burgundy, were a powerful Motive for attacking them. These Words of Philip de Comines: 'And for what Quarrel was this War begun? it was for a Cart-load of Sheep Skins, which the Count de Romont took from a Swiss that was passing thro' his Lands. If God had not forsaken the Duke, it is not likely he would have thrown himself into Danger for such a Trifle (44).' This Passage, I say, has made an hundred Authors say, that a Cart-load of Skins was the Cause of a bloody War between the Duke of Burgundy and the Swiss. That Example is scarce ever forgot, in treating the Common-Place that very small matters are the Cause of great Events (45). But if it had been carefully observed, that Philip de Comines contradicts himself, so much regard would not have been paid to his Observation. He had said very clearly, that Charles was resolved to 'make War on the Swiss, as well for what they had done to him, when he was before Naz, because they assisted in the taking the Earl-dom of Ferrette from him - - - - and because they had taken from the said Count de Romont part of his Territories (46). However, they were afraid of him, and made him all manner of Submissions. Comines is my Author. 'The Swiss, says he (47), perceiving him so near them, sent an Embassy to him; and offered to restore what they had taken from the said Lord of Romont.

----- The Duke entered Burgundy, where the Embassadors of the Old Leagues of Germany, called Swiss, returned to him, making larger Offers than before; and, besides Restitution, they offered to quit all Alliances which were contrary to his liking (and especially that with the King) and to become his Allies, and serve him with Six thousand Men at Arms for small Pay against the King, when he should require them.' The Duke would hearken to nothing. They remonstrated to him likewise; 'in order to dissuade him from that War, that he could get nothing from them; for their Country was barren and poor, and they had no good Prisoners for him; and that they did not believe but that the Spurs and the Bits of the Horses Briddles in his Army were worth more Money than they could pay him Taxes, were they taken (48).' This Reason was of no weight with a Prince like him, who had the Ambition of the Romans. 'Raptore (Romani) orbis, postquam cuncta vastantibus defuere terræ, & mare scrutantur: si locuples hostis est avari, si pauper ambitiosi. - - - Soli omnium opes atque inopiam pari affectu concupiscunt (49). - - - These Ravagers of the World (the Romans), when Land failed these universal Destroyers, search the Sea too; if the Enemy be rich they are covetous, if poor ambitious. - - - They alone do equally covet the Wealth and Poverty of all the World.' If he had had their Prudence and Fortune, he might have carried his Conquests far; but he was too prone to follow his own Opinion, and by that means ruined the greatest Power then in Europe (50). Never did Man better than he verify the Maxim 'Vis Confilii expers mole ruit sua (51). - - - Strength without Counsel destroys itself.'

[L] The Booty they took - - - was inestimable, and some singular Adventures are related concerning it. The Duke of Burgundy was in great Pomp - - - and had all his best Jewels, and Plate, and a great many other Ornaments (52). He disposed every thing for the Battle, with the greatest imprudence; and the Army was so suddenly put in Confusion, that 'they all fled; and the Swiss got his Camp, and his Artillery, and all the Tents and Pavillions belonging to him, and his People (of which there were a great Number), and other things without end: for nothing was saved but their Persons: All the Duke's great Jewels were lost; but as to Men, he lost only seven Men at Arms, at this time; all the rest fled and himself too. It may be better said of him, that he lost both his Honour, and his Riches that Day, than it was said of John of France, who was taken fighting valiantly at the Battle of Poitiers (53). - - - The Spoils of his Army enriched these poor Swiss: Who, at first, knew not the value of the Goods, they had in their Hands, especially the most ignorant of them. One of the finest and richest Pavillions in the World was parted into several pieces: Some of them sold a great Quantity of Silver Dishes and Porringers, for two great Blancs a-piece, thinking they were Pewter. His great Diamond, (which was one of the largest in Christendom) to which hung a great Pearl, was taken up by a Swiss, and afterwards put in the Cafe again, and thrown under a Cart; he came back afterwards to seek it, and offered it to a Priest for a Florin. The Priest sent it to their Lords, who gave him three Francs for it. They got three great Rubies, called the three Brothers, one other called La Hotte, another called La balle de Flandres, (which were the largest and best Stones that could be found) and other things without Number, which taught them to know the value of Money ever since (54). I have read somewhere, that a Bernois, named Bartholomew Mey, bought the Duke of Burgundy's Diamond for 5000 Florins; some Merchants of Genoa afterwards bought it for seven Thousand Florins of the Rhine. The Duke of Milan gave eleven Thousand Crowns for it. At last Pope Julius II gave Twenty thousand, and placed it for an Ornament in his Crown (55). Observe, that the Duke had treated the Garrison of Granson cruelly, which consisted of seven or eight Hundred choice Men, at the beginning of the Siege. They surrendered at Discretion, and he put them all to death (56).

[M] His Grief - - - had almost cost him his Life, and did impair his Understanding. I shall use still the Words of Comines: 'He was thrown into a great illness, by Grief and Vexation, at the disgrace he had received. And to say the truth, I think his Understanding was never so good afterwards, as it had been before this Battle (57).' The Author resumes the same Discourse in another Place, and says thus, 'His Grief at the Loss of the first Battle of Granson was so great, and disturbed his Spirits so much, that he fell into a great Sickness, of such a Nature, that, tho' his Choler and the Heat of his Body naturally was so great, that he could drink no Wine, but commonly in the Morning drank Barley Water, and eat Conserve of Roses, to cool himself, this Vexation caused such a Change in his Constitution, that he was obliged to drink strong Wines without Water, and to have Cupping-Glasses applied to the Region of the Heart, in order to draw the Blood from thence. But of this you, Monseigneur de Vienne, know more than I, as you attended him in that Illness, and caused him to have his Beard shaved, which he let grow: And in my Opinion, he was never after this Illness so wise as he had been before, but his Understanding was very much weakened (58). I cannot nish this Remark, without enriching it with a fine Reflexion of this wise Historian, it will confirm what I have so often said of the unhappiness of great Men, and this true Maxim, That there is no Body less happy, than those who seem to be most so. After the War of the public Good, 'What Quiet had he? He had perpetual Toil, both of Body and Mind, without any Pleasure: For Ambition fired his Heart, and stirred him up to conquer whatever he thought convenient. All Summer long he was ever in the Field, in great hazard of his Person, and took upon himself the Care and Inspection of his Army; and yet never had all things done according to his Mind. He rose first, and went to Bed last, as if he had been the poorest Man in the Army. When he rested in Winter, he was using all diligence to get Money. He applied

(44) Comines, liv. v. cap. i. p. 260.

(45) See the Coups d'etat de Gabriel Nauclé.

(46) Comines, liv. v. cap. i. p. 257.

(47) Id. ibid.

(48) Id. ibid.

(49) Tacit. in vita Agric. cap. xxx.

(50) Comines, liv. v. cap. viii. p. 288.

(51) Horat. Od. iv. lib. iii.

(52) Comines, liv. v. cap. i. p. 259.

(53) Id. ibid. p. 260.

(54) Id. ibid. cap. ii. pag. 266.

(55) Mich. Stetlerus Hist. Helvet. lib. iv. ad Ann. 1476. apud Hotting. in Meth. legendi Hist. Helveticæ, p. 432.

(56) Comines, liv. v. cap. i. p. 259.

(57) Comines, cap. iii, pag. 267.

(58) Id. cap. v. p. 274, 275.

(p) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. liv. iv. pag. 165.

(g) Comines, liv. v. cap. vi. pag. 283.

(r) Id. cap. ix. pag. 291.

(t) Gollut, Mémoires de Bourgogne. pag. 885.

the Year 1469, he employed himself in Acts of Justice (p). He visited several Provinces in the Low Countries, and chastised the Malefactors severely. What he did to a Lord who had seduced a very modest Woman, is too remarkable not to be mentioned [N]. He suspected Lewis XI so much that he slighted the sincere Advice which he gave him of Campobasso's Treachery; if that were true, says he, the King would not have given me notice of it (q). One of his greatest Faults was, that he thought that all the Favours and Honours he had received in the World, were owing to his own good Sense and Virtue, without attributing them to God, as he ought to have done (r). He was much more regular in his bodily Pleasures, than any of his three Predecessors (s). So we do not find his House filled with Bastards, nor that he was too fond of his Wives. He married thrice, and left only one Daughter [O].

applied himself every Day from six o'Clock in the Morning, and took a great deal of Pains, in receiving and hearing a great number of Embassadors: and in this Labour and Misery ended his Days: He was killed by the Swiss before Nancy, as has been seen before; and may it not be said, that he never had one good day, from the time he began to endeavour to aggrandize himself, to the day of his Death. What advantage did he gain by this Labour? What need had he of it? He who was so rich, and had so many fine Cities and Principalities under his command, where he might have been easy if he would (59). I make no excuse for copying this Passage: My Readers, who are Judges of what's fine, will admire it, and it were to be wished, that every Prince had it by heart, and would make good use of it. They would act better than they do, both for their own Happiness, and that of their Neighbours. But what, this which we look upon as unhappiness, is only a less evil. They would be yet more miserable, if they were constrained not to torment themselves, Body and Soul, to embroil themselves in Intrigues and Projects of Revolution. They are desirous to act great parts on the Stage of this World, and to draw the Eyes of all mankind; and for that end, rise earlier than an Artisan, write more than an Attorney, and tire more Clerks than a Register in Chief. To debar them from this trouble, would make them more miserable.

[N] What he did to a Lord, who had seduced a very modest Woman, is worth the mentioning.] This Story is related in an ample manner, not without some flourishes of Rhetoric, by Pontus Heuterus. The Substance of it is this: A very brave Captain of Duke Philip the Good had obtained, for a Remuneration of his Services, the Government of a Place. There he fell in Love with his Landlady, a Woman of singular Beauty and Modesty. He talked to her of Love, and swore to be secret and constant to her. She answered, that her Conscience would not suffer her to violate her conjugal Faith, and that he ought to remember the sacred Laws of Hospitality, and place his Inclinations on some other, where he might do it lawfully. 'Esse variis locis virgines opulentas complures formæ se multo præstantiores, eligat unam quæ genio respondeat è qua liberos sancto matrimonio procreatos suscipere possit (60). — There were a great many rich Maids to be found, much preferable to herself for Beauty; he might abuse one suitable to his Temper, and marry her, and get Children in a legitimate way.' This Answer serving only to augment his Passion; he attacks her on another side: He offers her a large Sum of Money, and promises to make her go finer than any of her Neighbours and Relations, and to procure her Husband a beneficial and honourable Post. 'Auri acervum offert, ac in quem velit usum auferre jubet, promittit mundum muliebrem, qui cum vicinarum ac cognatarum ornamentis comparari non possit, addens se marito apud Principem impetraturum, in patriâ ejus dignitatem, non minus honori quam compendio servituti (61).' His promises making no impression, he raises another Battery: He imprisons the Husband on pretence of Rebellion; and when the Wife applied to him, as to the only means of saving the Prisoner's Life, he answered that the Crime was manifest, and that he could not avoid putting him to death, unless the Mercy of the Sovereign interposed: I promise to obtain it, continues he, provided you will immediately grant me the Favour I have asked of you so often. Promitto me apud Principem gratiam marito tuo obtenturum, si voluntati meæ obsequi nunc cum soli sumus volueris (62). This Proposal made her blush, weep, sigh, raised a combat between conjugal Love and Virtue, and struck her dumb. He takes Advantage of her Irresolution and satisfies his Lust. Obticentem lacrymantem & alta suspiria ducentem, nec tamen reluctantem, in iborum collocat (63). She from time to time presses him to perform his Promise: He puts her off with a thousand lies; and at last, caused the Prisoner's Head to be cut off privately, and made the Wife believe, she would have him delivered out of Prison, on presenting to the Goaler a Paper which he gave her. She runs to the prison, and there finds that her Husband had lost his Life, by the Hands of the Executioner. The sight of such an Object struck her speechless, but soon after she returned to the Governour, and loaded him with all the reproaches, that a just indignation could suggest. He makes a hundred excuses, and offers to marry her, and promises her a magnificent Fortune. She rejects these offers, and relates the whole Adventure to some Relations, who advise her to wait the Arrival of Duke Charles, and to demand Justice of him. That Prince, having had proof of the Governour's Crimes, ordered him to marry the Widow; she had an Aversion to it, which could not be surmounted, without a great deal of Solicitation. Vita multorum ac magnorum virorum matronarumque auctoritate mulier in Nuptias fere coacta consentit (64). The Marriage Contract was drawn, and the Wife was to inherit all the Estate of her Husband, if he died before her without Children: the Ceremony of the Marriage was performed in due form; and then the Duke asked the Woman if she was content? Yes, says she. But I, replies he, am not so. He sends the Governour to Prison: two Hours after, he causes him to be beheaded in the same Room, where the first Husband had lost his Head. A Copy of the Sentence of Death was delivered to the Woman, and she was sent to the Prison to see, that the double Crime of the Seducer did not go unpunished. She fell into a Melancholy, which ended her days a little while after. Non diu post, animi mœore confecta supervixit, ingentibus præfati bonis liberis e priore marito susceptis ditans (65). Lippius, who relates the same Story with all its Circumstances, observes, that the Scene was in a Town in Zealand (66). See also Peter Mattheieu in his History of Lewis XI (67). Mr Varillas has just mentioned it, and has made a blunder; for he pretends, that the Governour was forced to marry that Woman (68). He wanted not to be forced to it, he desired nothing better. Observe, that Snouus tells this Story quite differently: He says, that a Burgomaster of Zealand ravished a poor Girl in a Garden; that the Duke ordered him, either to marry her, or give her half his Estate; and that he refusing to do it, the Duke caused his Head to be cut off, tho' in that Extremity the Burgomaster offered to marry the young Woman (69). [O] He married three Wives, and left only one Daughter.] I. Catharine of France, Daughter of Charles VII, in the Year 1439. She died in the Year 1446 without Issue. II. Isabella of Bourbon, Daughter of Charles Duke of Bourbon in the Year 1454. She died the thirteenth of September 1465, leaving a Daughter whom I speak of in the following Article. III. Margaret, Sister of Edward IV, King of England, in the Year 1468: She had no Children, and died in the Year 1503 (70).

(62) Id. ibid.

(63) Id. ibid.

(59) Id. liv. vi. cap. xiii. p. 409.

(64) Id. ibid. pag. 366.

(60) Pontus Heuterus, Rer. Burgundicar. lib. v. pag. 165.

(65) Id. ibid. pag. 167.

(66) Lippius Mon. & Exempts. Polit. lib. xi, cap. ix, n. 6.

(67) In liv. vii, cap. xxiii, p. 395.

(68) Varillas Hist. de Louis XI, liv. i, p. 34.

(69) Snouus Rer. Batav. lib. xi, p. 159.

(61) Id. ibid.

(70) Taken from Father Anselm, Hist. General de la Maison Royale pag. 214.

BURGUNDY

BURGUNDY (MARY of), only Daughter and Heiress of the former, was born at Brussels (a), the thirteenth of February, 1457. As she was the greatest Match then in Europe, several Princes sought her in Marriage: but her Father had the Art to promise her sometimes to one, and sometimes to another, and give her to none [A]. It is very probable she never would have been married while he was alive. As soon as he was killed, they begun to talk of marrying her in earnest; and there were a great many Intrigues about it, which you may see in Varillas (b). I have spoken elsewhere (c) of the irreparable Fault committed by Lewis XI. It consisted in this one thing, that he would not marry his Son to the Heiress of Burgundy; for he was not to blame, as some pretend, in that he would not allow any other Prince of his Blood to marry her [B]. He sent his Barber

(a) Anselme Hist. Genealogique de la Maison Royale, pag. 214; others, as Lewis Gollut, says in his Memoirs of Burgundy, pag. 892, at Valenciennes.

(b) Varillas Hist. de Louis XI, liv. viii.

(c) In the Article of LEWIS XI, Remark [R].

[A] Her Father had the Art to promise her, sometimes to one, and sometimes to another, and not to give her to any one. A great Prince, who has but one Daughter, and engages himself in great Enterprises at a Distance from his Country, has no great need of a Son-in-law: such an Ally it is to be feared might grow weary of a private Life, and be in too much haste to command. The Affairs which employ the Father-in-law abroad will not give him leave to prevent domestic Cabals. In a word, the presumptive Heiress of a State is less to be feared when she is to marry, than when she has a Husband. Besides, while she is single, she may serve for a Bait to several Pretenders; which furnishes the Father with opportunities of forming and unravelling several Intrigues. However, the Duke of Burgundy treated concerning the Marriage of his Daughter with every Man that asked her: and I believe, says Philip de Comines (1), 'that he never desired to have a Son, nor would have married his Daughter as long as he had lived: but would always have kept her to engage People to serve and assist him.' He says this on occasion of a Negotiation, which was set on foot in the Year 1470, for a Marriage of that Princess to the Duke of Guienne, Brother of Lewis XI. This Marriage was so far advanced, that some verbal Promises of it were made, and also some mention of it in Letters: but I have seen the like done to Nicolas, Duke of Calabria and Lorraine, Son of John Duke of Calabria, whom I mentioned before. The like was also done to Philibert, the late Duke of Savoy, and afterwards to Duke Maximilian of Austria, now King of the Romans, only Son of the Emperor Frederic. This last received Letters, writ with the young Lady's own Hand, by command of her Father, and a Diamond. All these Promises were made in the compass of three Years, and yet I am well assured that no body would have accomplished it as long as he had lived, at least with his Consent (2).

[B] Lewis XI was not to blame — in that he would not allow any other Prince of his Blood to marry her. If he had permitted his Brother to marry her, he would have brought himself in danger of an entire Revolution; and there is no probability that the Crown would have descended to his Son. He ought not therefore to be blamed for the Care he took to prevent that Marriage. Mr Varillas sets forth Lewis XI's Motives very well. 'The King who, in another Conjunction, should have desired the Marriage of his Brother with the Heiress of Burgundy, abhorred it in this; for allowing, on one hand, to this proposed Alliance all the Consideration it deserved, and making, on the other hand, all the Reflexions with which subtle Minds are wont to perplex themselves in regard to futurity; he looked upon himself to be too far advanced in Years to out-live the Minority of the Son, which the Midwives gave out that the Queen was big with: and that consequently it would be in his Brother's Power to deprive him, if he added, to the Riches of the House of Burgundy, the valiant Soldiers which he might raise in Guienne. Whereas, if the Princess of Burgundy had any other Husband than the Duke of Berry (3), the Minor, which his Majesty was like to leave, would be the better fixed on the Throne: since if he married a foreign Prince, he would not have it in his Power so easily to re-kindle the Civil-War in France; and if one were chosen for her in France, he would want at least the Authority and Dignities which render the Sons of France so dangerous, when they are weak enough to suffer themselves to be drawn into a Revolt (4). Besides, England was very much alarmed at the Proposals of the Marriage of Mary of Burgundy with the Brother of Lewis XI. Comines will shew it us. Edward, King of England, who really thought that this Marriage was likely to be concluded on, and was deceived in that, as well as the King, laboured hard with the said Duke of Burgundy to break it; alledging, that the King had no Son, and that, if he died, the said Duke of Guienne was in Expectation of the Crown; and consequently, if the Marriage were made, all England would be in great danger of being overrun, when so many large Dominions were added to the Kingdom; and he took this matter wonderfully to heart, though there was no need for it, and so did all the Council of England: nor would the English believe any excuse the Duke could make (5). The following Passage will require some Reflexion. 'All would have come in a little time under the Power of the Crown, if he would have taken the Method proposed to him to marry that Princess to his Son, or some other Prince of the Blood. And certainly, if he had given that rich Heiress to Charles of Orleans, Earl of Angoulême, whom she passionately desired, all the Low-Countries would at this Day have been united to France. For that Prince had a Son who came to the Crown, that is Francis I. But he hated the House of Burgundy to that Degree, that he endeavoured entirely to destroy it, intending to take all his Lands which he held of the Crown, and to put the rest into the Hands of some German Prince his Ally (6). We see plainly, that Mezerai censures Lewis XI for two things: I. That he rejected the Marriage of the Dauphin with the Heiress of Burgundy. II. That he would not suffer the Earl of Angoulême to marry her. The Historian is in the right as to the first Point, but not as to the second; for it was not at all probable that the Earl would become Father of a King of France, and there were several reasons to fear that his Marriage with so rich an Heiress might have been fatal to the Crown. So, after the first false Step, the King acted by the Rules of Prudence, in not permitting a Prince of his Blood to obtain the Succession of Duke Charles. The Answer, which he gave to the Ministers of the Princess, on the Proposition of a Marriage with the Earl of Angoulême, was plain, but at the same time shewed the able Politician. He told them, 'That nine Years experience had taught him but too well, what a Misfortune it was for him to have, for a Neighbour, a Prince of his Blood, Master of the Low-Countries: that as God had delivered him from him, he did not care to expose his old Age again to such fatigues of Body and Mind as had once been on the Point of overcoming him, in a more vigorous Age: and, in short, that it would be less prejudicial to him, if Mary of Burgundy married a Prince of any other Sovereign House, which she might chuse among the Christians, than that of France, unless she and her Subjects chose to wait till the Dauphin was fit to marry (7). Lewis XI had but two good ways to take, one was, to marry the Heiress of Burgundy to the Dauphin; the other, to deprive her of all her Dominions by right of Arms. He rejected the first, and would have chose the latter; but he wanted either the Skill or Power to execute it; whether it was the fear of opposition from England, or the ill State of his Health, that restrained him; or that he wanted the Qualifications of a Conqueror. He was very ill fitted for one; he

(4) Varillas Hist. de Louis XI, liv. v, p. 348.

(5) Comines, liv. iii. cap. viii. pag. 171, 172. ad Ann. 1471.

(6) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 332, ad Ann. 1477.

(7) Varillas Hist. de Louis XI, liv. viii. pag. 169.

(1) Comines, liv. iii. Chap. iii. pag. 145.

(2) Id. ibid. cap. viii. pag. 163, 170. Matthieu Hist. Louis XI, liv. v. pag. 246, 252.

(3) That was the King's Brother, and the same with the Duke of Guienne.

Barber to her, with Orders to speak with her in private, but this was not permitted [C]. She married a Prince, as to Age, such as her Governess could with [D]. It was Maximilian of Austria, Son of the Emperor Frederic III. The Nuptials were celebrated the twentieth of August, 1477. She died of a Fall from a Horse, in the Month of March, 1483 [E], and left two Children, to wit, Philip of Austria, who was Father of Charles V, and Margaret of Austria, who was contracted to the Dauphin the same Year. This Marriage was never consummated.

(8) The Duke of Burgundy had Courage enough to undertake any thing. His Constitution was able to bear the fatigue that was necessary for his Purpose. He was strong enough in Men and Money, but had not Understanding and Malice enough to conduct his Enterprises. Could he but have taken some of the Qualities of the King our Master, and kept some of his own, he had made a perfect Prince. Comines lib. iii, cap. iii, pag. 145.

was much more capable of embroiling the Affairs of his Neighbours, and preserving his Interest by Intrigues, than of making Conquests. He wanted as much of the Duke of Burgundy's Courage, as the Duke did of his Policy (8). Most certainly the Marriage of Maximilian of Austria with the Heiress of Burgundy, was, with respect to France, a less Evil, than the Marriage of a French Prince with the same Heiress; for Maximilian could not cabal with the Male-Contents, as a Prince of the Blood in his Station might have done; and in all Appearance the Flemings, had they been governed by the Earl of Angoulême, would have disturbed France a hundred times more under Charles VIII, and Lewis XII, than they did when governed by the Austrians. I own, that, under Charles V, the Patrimony of the Dukes of Burgundy was fatal to France; but could Lewis XI foresee that? Could the most acute of Angels have conjectured, that the only Son of Maximilian would inherit Spain, and that the Germans would be weak enough to chafe themselves an Emperor so powerful as was the Grandson of Mary of Burgundy?

To conclude, the Ill, which this Branch of the Royal House did to France, will probably serve for a Lesson for several Ages, not to suffer the great Provinces of the Kingdom to fall to the Discretion of Princes of the Blood. It was an ill Custom, That of giving them such Fiefs: by that the Kingdom of France became not so much a Monarchy, as a State like the Empire of Germany, Burgundy, Normandy, Bretagne, Guienne, Languedoc, Champagne, Provence, Dauphiné, &c. had once their several Lords, over whom the King had little more Authority, than the Emperor has over the Princes of Germany; and as to some of them, he had much less. It is no wonder therefore that he was worsted sometimes in foreign Wars, and that the Civil Wars found him so hard Work. The Reservation of Homage, Right of Investiture, Reversion, and Dependence upon the Crown, signify little: they will not prevent the Multitude of Masters in a Kingdom, the Erection of a State within a State, imperium in imperio, nor that Confusion, which made the Prince of Poets say,

Οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίην· εἴς κοίρανος ἕως,
εἰς βασιλεύς (9).

(9) Homer. Iliad. lib. ii, ver. 205.

The Dominion of many is not good, let there be one Prince, one King

[C] He sent his Barber to her, to speak with her alone; but he was not permitted.] Mr Olivier, being admitted to an Audience of the Princess Mary, was ordered to declare his Business. 'He answered that he had nothing in charge but to speak to her a-part. He was told it was not customary, and especially to that young Lady, who was unmarried: he insisted still that he would say nothing but to herself: then he was told he should be made to speak, and he was afraid - - - and withdrew for that time (10).

[D] She married a Prince, such an one for Age as her Governess desired.] You will understand this if you read this curious Passage of Philip de Comines: 'First a Council was held on that Affair, where came Madam de Halluin, first Lady to the said Princess: who, as I have been told, said, that they wanted a Man and not a Child, adding that her Mistress was Woman enough to bear a Child, and that the Country had need of it. This Opinion prevailed. Some blamed the said Lady for having spoke so freely: others commended her, and said that she spoke only of Marriage, and of what was very necessary for the Country. So there was no more talk but of finding the Man (11).' See the Nouvelles de la Republique de Lettres (12).

[E] She died of a Fall from a Horse - - - in 1483.] As she loved hunting very much, she took a Fancy one day to see a Heron hunted. She went out of Bruges mounted on a sprightly Horse, - - - and leaning herself on champion Ground, she put the Horse forward - - - the Girts of her Saddle breaking, the Duchess was violently thrown to the Ground - - -; but her natural Modesty, and the fear of grieving her Husband, - - - made her conceal her Hurt too long (13). Her Ribs were very much hurt, and a continual Fever followed - - - she was obliged to take to her Bed, where she did not continue long (14). It is not easy to understand how natural Modesty could oblige her not to tell that she had hurt her Ribs. Leaving therefore this Author, who joins two things that have not much to do with each other, let us consult Mr Varillas, who has expressed himself more clearly. 'Mary, says he (15), was a hunting on the most gentle Nag, that could be found, and yet the Creature, growing unruly of a sudden, flung her on the Root of a Tree, which run into a place, which Modesty requires should be nameless. The Wound would not have been incurable if she would have suffered a Surgeon to take it in hand, but shame restrained her so long, that a Gangrene followed, and put an end to her Life, in 1481 (16).' Say as oft as you will, that this is carrying Modesty to excess (17), that Fault is of such a Nature, that they who commit it deserve our Admiration more than they who do not. It is a kind of Heroism: it is dying a Martyr to Modesty.

(10) Comines, liv. v. cap. xiv. pag. 307.

(11) The fourth Book, chap. iii, pag. 537.

(12) Month of July, 1687, Art. II, pag. 799.

(13) For three Weeks. Fabert, Hist. des Ducs de Bourgogne, pag. 348.

(14) Id. ibid. pag. 347, 348.

(15) Varillas, Hist. de Louis XI, liv. ix, pag. 249.

(16) He ought to have said 1483, beginning the Year at the Month of January.

(17) Stultorum incurata Pectora malus ulcera celat. Horat. Epist. xvi, lib. i. 'Tis foolish Shame to hide a festering Sore.

BURGUNDY, one of the Circles of the Empire, was first raised to that Rank in 1548. It comprehended Franche Comté, and the seventeen Provinces of the Low-Countries. Charles V, who was Master of them, caused them to be received as Members of the Empire, that Year, at the Diet of Aulburg, independent indeed on the Imperial Chamber of Spire, as to their Laws, but subject to the Charges, and to pay Monthly as much as two Electors: viz. 3656 Florins for the common Necessities, and as much as three Electors in case of War against the Turk (a). Some Authors observe, that the Transaction, which he passed, left the Seventeen Provinces only a Shadow of Dependence on the Emperor, and the Empire [A], and that he had a Design even to

(a) Heiss, Hist. de l'Empire, Tom. II, pag. 125, Edit. of the Hague, 1685.

[A] It is pretended, that Charles V left the seventeen Provinces only a Shadow of Dependence on the Emperor and the Empire.] A Proof of this is, that, during the Troubles, which harassed them under the Reign of Philip II, and made part of these Provinces shake off the Spanish Yoke, the Emperor and the Empire never interposed their Sovereign Authority, either to oblige the King of Spain to lay down his Arms, or to oblige the States, which formed themselves into a Republic, to remain subjects or Vassals to Germany. If such a Civil-War had risen in any of the other Circles, the to erect them into a Kingdom, and give it the Name of Regnum Leoninum, because of the Lions which are in almost all the Arms of these Provinces (b). They add, that he re-united the Low-Countries to the Empire, only on account of the other States of Germany, being apprehensive of the Wars which might happen there, and to prevent its being objected to his Son Philip II, (who aspired to the Imperial Crown), that he possessed nothing which belonged to the Empire, without which he could not easily obtain it (c). It is pretended, that, by the Treaty of Munster, the Empire was discharged from taking part in what concerns the Defence of the Circle of Burgundy [B]. Baron Lifola was not of this Opinion [C].

There

the Emperor and the Empire would have acted quite otherwise, and would have put a stop to it by force of Arms. It is remarkable, that there was a Congress at Cologne, in the Year 1579, to make Peace in the Low-Countries, and that the Emperor acted only as Mediator, between the King of Spain, and the revolted Provinces. There passed a thing on that Occasion, which deserves a place here. A Courier of the Emperor, passing thro' the Territories of Limbourg, without a Pass-port, was stopped: the Emperor complained of it, and alledged that, 'there was no need for a Pass-port for a Courier, who carried the Arms of the Empire, and passed thro' the Provinces where the Emperor had any Right (1).' The Prince of Parma reading this in a Memorial, which had been delivered to the Deputy of Philip the second, at the Imperial Court, 'immediately returned the Memorial, and said, that he could not accept a thing contrary to the Authority of his King, who owned no other Lord than himself, especially in Limbourg, where the Courier had been detained.' That this Right consisted in Fiefs, which the King might hold of the Empire, and principally the Circle of Burgundy, added by the Emperor Charles V to the nine other Circles of Germany, by which the Flemish Provinces are excepted from the Jurisdiction of the Emperor, in precise Terms several times repeated (2). These are the Words of the Original. 'Scriptum illico resituit, negans posse ab se id accipi, quod adversetur auctoritate Regis sui, Dominum non agnoscens in ea praesentim Limburgensi provincia, in qua tabellarius detentus est: idque constare ex dominiis, quae ab Imperio beneficiaria Rex haberet; atque imprimis ex Burgundico circulo, postremum a Carolo Quinto ad alios novem Germaniae orbis adjecto, in quo disertè, iteratisque verbis, ab imperii jurisdictione Belgarum provinciae excipiuntur (3).'

(1) Strada de la Guerre de Flandres ad Ann. 1579. I use the Translation of Da Ryer.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Strada de Bello Belgico, Decad ii, lib. ii, ad Ann. 1572, pag. 111, Antwerp Edit. 1643, in 8vo.

(4) The Manifesto of the Elector of Bavaria, in the Addition, pag. 79.

(5) Id. ibid. pag. 80.

[C] Baron Lifola was not of this Opinion. I prove this by his famous Work, entitled the Buckler of State and Justice. The last Chapter, treats of the Interest of the Princes of Christendom, in the War of 1667, and of the absolute Obligation the States of the Empire were under, to defend the Circle of Burgundy. He says, he will lightly pass over this last matter, because it is already decided, by a solemn Act of the Chancery of the Empire, and that he, who wrote on that Point at Ratisbon, has in a few Words gone thoroughly to the Bottom of this Affair, and quite exhausted the Subject, so that there is no room left to add any thing to it more, than to reply to it (6). In effect, adds he (7), I never read any thing more cold and weak, than the Answer, lately published on the part of France, against this solid Piece: It is stuffed with a heap of Words to no purpose, it shuns every where the Combat, it rambles from the Question, omits the principal Objections, and takes for granted the very Point in Question. Having afterwards alledged some Reasons, he affirms, that the French have nothing to offer against it, but an Article of the Treaty of Munster, ill understood and worse interpreted, De mutuis hostibus non juvandis, by which the Empire and France oblige themselves, reciprocally, not to give Assistance to the Enemies of each other (8). He answers several things, and ends with saying, that 'this shews clearly, that the Obligation not to assist the Enemies of France cannot derogate from that, which all the Circles of the Empire are under mutually to assist one another. All that the French Writer alledges against this in his Answer is nothing but whipt Cream; and is so effectually refuted in the Reply which appeared soon after, that it would be lost Labour to attempt to add any further Light to the Affair (9).'

As I have not read the Pieces mentioned by Monsieur de Lifola, I shall by no means say, that the Contempt, which he expresses for the French Author's Reasons, which he calls whipt Cream, is only a Rhetorical Artifice, and that he has followed the Custom of the Generality of Controversitists, who, after they have used all their Strength against some weak Part of the opposite Cause, leave the strongest unanswered, under pretence that it is not worth notice. They are never more haughty than in these Cases, and imagine that a disdainful Arrogance will be the best Defence of their Cause. However, I dare venture to say, that, if Germany pretended that the Article of the Peace of Munster, de mutuis hostibus non juvandis, left them in full Liberty to assist the King of Spain in the Low-Countries, they played upon the French, and had no intention to finish the War; for it is evident, that, if they had made the War of the Low-Countries their own Affair, and had assisted the Circle of Burgundy as one of their Members, France would still have been at War against the Empire, and might very justly have attacked any other Circle she thought fit, since they must all have sent Succours to that of Burgundy. So that one of the two must be true, either that Germany had no design to make Peace for themselves by the Treaty of Westphalia, or else that they did not intend to have any share in the War of the Low-Countries. Now it is ridiculous to suppose, that they had no design to make Peace at that time but to dupe France, and deceive them safely. We have no way therefore but to conclude, that they designed the French and Spaniards should decide their Wars among themselves, and not to concern themselves with them

(b) See the Manifesto of the Elector of Bavaria, in the Addition, pag. 115, Edit. 1704.

(c) Id. ibid. pag. 153, 154.

(6) Lifola Bouclier, d'Etat de de Justice, Art. vi, p. 348, 349.

(7) Id. ibid. pag. 349.

(8) Id. ibid. pag. 352.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 353, 454.

There was a great Clamour against the Elector of Cologne, in 1701, for introducing some French Troops into his Garrisons, under the Name of Troops of the Circle of Burgundy [D].

them any more. Their Conduct shewed that this was their Intention; for we do not find, that the Diets of the Empire ever took any measures for the Assistance of the Circle of Burgundy, from the time of the Peace of Munster, to the Peace of the Pyrenies: and consequently Germany would have deceived the Spaniards if she had pretended to be engaged to assist the Spaniards in the Low-Countries, notwithstanding the Article de mutuis hostibus non juvandi.

[D] The Elector of Cologne introduced Troops into his Garrisons, under the Name of Troops of the Circle of Burgundy.] This was one of the Heads of the Accusation, for which his Imperial Majesty laid him under the Ban of the Empire. He endeavoured to justify himself, by alledging that foreign Troops environed his Electorate on every side; and that therefore he thought he could not give his Subjects a more sensible Mark of his paternal Vigilance for their Repose and Safety, than to call to assistance some Troops of the Circle of Burgundy; with this Precaution, nevertheless, that he had made them take an Oath, before he introduced them into his Dominions, that they should commit no Act of Hostility, either against the Emperor, or against the Empire; that they would follow no other orders but his; and that, whenever his Electoral Highness should desire it, they would go out of his Towns and his Country, without opposition or delay (10). He added, that the Empire was not at that time at War either with France, or with the King of Spain, Sovereign of the Circle of Burgundy (11); and that in the last Century Ferdinand the Second called to his Assistance the Italians and Spaniards, under the Name of this same Circle of Burgundy, and that the Chapter of Cologne, at the time of the Apostacy of Gebhard Truchses, likewise made use of Spaniards, under the same Name (12). This last Argument is ad hominem, and has doubtless a great deal of Force. The Elector of Bavaria repeated it in his Manifesto, in the Year 1704. The House of Austria, says he (13), has given several Examples of the same Conduct, which my Brother the Elector of Cologne has kept to. They caused the Troops of the Spanish Netherlands, or of the Circle of Burgundy, under the Command of the Prince of Parma, to enter the Territories of the Electorate of Cologne, to dispossess Gebhard Truchses: and during the Wars of the Palatinate, the Emperor Ferdinand II brought some of the same Troops into the Empire. If there were some French, who are not Subjects of the Empire, among the Troops which my Brother received into his Garrisons, were there not Spaniards and Italians, who are likewise strangers to the Empire, among the Troops which Gonsalvo of Corduba brought into the Palatinate in 1622? Was not the Prince of Parma's Army composed of Bodies of these Nations? These two Armies entered the Empire in an hostile Manner, and the Troops called by my Brother came only to garrison a few places.

It will not be improper to touch here upon the Answer, which was made by the Count d'Arenberg, Commandant of the Troops, which the King of Spain sent into the Country of Cologne, at the Request of the Chapter, in the time of the War with Gebhard Truchses. That Archbishop scattered murmurs every where, that his Chapter had violated the Constitutions of the Empire by calling in strangers. The Princes of his Party strenuously represented to the Emperor, that he ought to send order to these foreign Troops to depart immediately out of the Confines of Germany: the Emperor dispatched a Messenger to the Duke of Parma, to warn him to take care that the Succours, sent to the Chapter of Cologne, committed no Hostilities in the Empire; for that would be attended with very ill consequences. Prince Casimir, Administrator of the Palatinate, and one of the principal Favourers of Gebhard Truchses, sent an Express to the Count d'Arenberg, to signify to him that he must withdraw his Troops out of the Territories of the Empire; but the Count answered, that his Catholic Majesty's Troops were not included in the Statutes which prohibit the Entrance of foreign Troops into Germany: that the King of Spain was not a foreign Prince; but one of the principal Members of the Empire: that it was lawful for the Chapter of Cologne to desire Assistance of the House of Burgundy, as their Neighbours, and Allies for a long time: that the Archbishop was rather to blame, who had introduced into the Empire French, English, Scotch, and other Strangers (14).

This is undeniably a grievous Alternative for a great many Persons; for if the present Elector of Cologne is an Offender against the Laws of the Empire, it must be owned, that King Philip II, and the Emperor Rodolphus II, were guilty of the same Fault: the one in sending Troops into the Electorate of Cologne, and the other in not condemning the Chapter that had asked and introduced them: but if these two Princes did nothing contrary to their Duty, as the Court of Vienna must allow they did not, for fear of blemishing their Memory, how can they condemn in an Elector of Cologne what they approve in the Canons? And if the same neighbouring States, who condemned the Chapter of Cologne at that time, do now approve that the Elector be put under the Ban of the Empire, for having followed the Example of Gebhard Truchses, do they not expose themselves to the Reproach of judging Actions only by their own Interest, and making their Advantage the Rule of Justice and Praise? This Disorder is unavoidable in Politics; it is in vain to seek any Remedy.

(10) Manifest. de Baviere, in the Addit. p. 60.

(11) Id. ibid. pag. 64.

(12) Id. ibid. pag. 67, 68.

(13) Id. ibid. pag. 28.

(a) Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 471.

(b) Dullardus in prefat. ad Logica Buridani apud Valer. Andream, ibid.

BURIDAN (JOHN), born at Bethune in Artois (a), was one of the most renowned Philosophers of the XIVth Century. He discharged a Professor's Place in the University of Paris with great Reputation, and wrote Commentaries on Aristotle's Logic, Ethics, and Metaphysics, which were much esteemed. Some say that he was Rector of the University of Paris, in 1320 (b). They add, that he was deputed to the Court of Rome. Robert Gaguin makes him flourish under the Reign of Philip de Valois, in the Year 1348, and by that refutes a Story very injurious to the Founders of the College of Navarre [A]. It is a Story very like that

[A] Gaguin makes him flourish in 1348, and by that refutes a Story very injurious to the Founders of the College of Navarre.] That Founders was Jane, Queen of Navarre, Wife of Philip the Fair King of France. The Act of the Foundation is of the Year 1304. Very impertinent Reports have been spread against the Honour of this Queen; to wit, That she caused young Scholars to be brought to her, to lie with them, and after she had got as much out of them as she desired, had them thrown out of her Chamber Window into the River Seine, to hide the Disorders of her Life; that only Buridan was spared, and that, in acknowledgment of that Favour, he invented a certain Sophism (1). Mr de Launoi confutes this Story by a Passage of Robert Gaguin, which contains these two Reasons; first, That Buridan lived after that Queen; and next, That this illustrious Prince had shewn too much Charity towards the Poor, by founding the College of Navarre, to deserve a Charge of this Nature. Gaguin proves his first Reason only by saying, that That Philosopher flourished in the Reign of Philip de Valois, when Fouls was Bishop of Paris, in the Year 1367 (2). The Thing was worth the trouble of being much better cleared; for if Robert (14) Taken from Michaelis ab Iffelt Histor. sui Temporis, ad Ann. 1583, pag. 788.

(1) Authors speak but of one Sophism invented by Buridan, to wit, that of the Ass. Now what Relation can there be between this Sophism, and the Favours of a Queen? See below, Citation (5). (2) This Place of Gaguin is not exact, for Philip of Valois was not living in 1357. He died in the Year 1350. But note, that my Edition has 1348. See below, Citat. (6).

that which went current of a certain Queen Dowager, whose Palace was not in being

Gaguin were answered, That it is true Buridan did read Lectures, and wrote Books in the Year 1357, but that he was then very old, there would scarce remain any Strength in the Apology. They, who framed the Story, did not suppose the Queen in the Flower of her Youth, or that she made choice of Scholars advanced in Years. It is likely they supposed, that she was in her declining Years, and that she required very young Scholars. Suppose her to die then (if you please) in the Year 1304, Buridan might have sired her, though he was still living in the Year 1357. It is only supposing that he was then Seventy five Years of Age: Robert Gaguin says nothing that confutes such a Supposition; therefore he has not defended that Princess's Honour well; the Matter would be much worse, if Credit were to be given to those who say, that Buridan was Rector of the University of Paris, in the Year 1320 (3). Gaguin ought to have proved solidly, that That Professor was but of such or of such an Age, in the Year 1357. His second Reason is of no weight, because it is no rare thing for lascivious Princesses to have otherwise a thousand good Qualities, and make very useful Foundations for the Church, and for the Public. The best way to justify the Queen of Navarre, is by saying, first, That the Story is not supported by any good Proofs, and that therefore it ought to be reckoned a Calumny: since, to avoid the Name of a Calumniator, it is not sufficient that what a Man reports against his Neighbour's Honour be true, but it must moreover be thought so on convincing Reasons. In the second place, That it is against all common Sense, that a Queen of France, desiring to divert herself with the Sports of Venus, should be obliged to send for very young Scholars, or such-like indiscreet Persons, who must be put to death if she would hide her Crime. Are there not Men enough nearer at hand in the Louvre, and more easy to come at than Students can be? However, let us see Robert Gaguin's Words, as quoted by Mr de Launoi (4). "Fuerunt quoque insignibus foeminis sua fata, nam uxores filiorum Philippi tres adulterii insimulatae sunt. --- Ob hanc impudicentiam infignium mulierum natam fabulam reor, quae de Joanna Philippi Pulchri uxore à rerum imperitis memorari solet, eam videlicet aliquot Scholasticorum concubitu usam, eoque, ne pateret scelus, protinus extinxisse, & in Sequanam amnem de cubiculi sui fenestra abjecisse: sed unum tantum Joannem Buridanum eo periculo forte liberatum, & propterea sophismam (5) ab eo editum esse: Regnam interficere nolite timere bonum est. Fuit quidem Buridanus Joanna posterior, quippe qui Philippo Valensio regnum moderante, cum liberalium Artium nominatissimus Professor esset, multa & in rationali & morali Philosophia scriptis, dum Parisinae Ecclesiae Fulco praesidebat anno Christianae resurrectionis MCCCXVII. (6). Nec commuerit praecleara mulier huiusmodi vitio taxari cujus liberalitate & misericordia erga pauperes, &c. --- Great Women have also had their Fate; for the three Wives of the Sons of Philip were accused of Adultery. --- From the Immodesty of those Great Women, as I suppose, arose the Story, which is commonly related, by People unacquainted with those things, of Joan, Wife of Philip the Fair; to wit, that she used to lie with some Scholars, and, least her Crime should be discovered, immediately murdered them, and threw them out at her Chamber-window into the Seine, but that John Buridan alone by chance escaped from that Danger; and therefore be formed this Maxim; Regnam interficere nolite timere bonum est. --- Do not kill the Queen, to fear I hold it good: for Buridan, who lived after Joan, under the Reign of Philip de Valois, was a Professor of Liberal Arts, of very great Note, and published a great many things, both in Metaphysics and Ethics, while Fouques was Bishop of Paris, in the Year of our Lord 1357. Nor did that eminent Lady deserve to be taxed with such a Vice, by whose Bounty and Compassion to the Poor, &c."

three Princesses, who married the three Sons of Philip the Fair, gave Occasion to the Story we speak of. There are Historians, who attribute to of these three Princes the Infamy, from which Gaguin has endeavoured to justify the Wife of this Monarch. Margaret Queen of Navarre, Joan Countess of Poitiers, and Blanche Countess of Marche, who married the three Sons of France, --- were accused of Adultery, and committed Prisoners to the Castle of Gaillard. --- The first died, it is not known in what manner (7). --- It is this Queen of Navarre, who was of such an unbridled Temper, that, when she saw a Man of a good Mien and Air, she had him brought to her Apartment, from whence he never retired till he was thrown headlong into the Seine, that he might not publish her disorderly Life. A Scholar, whom they had not bound fast, saved himself, by swimming, and discovered the whole Matter (8). Some Authors ascribe this loose Life to Joan the Mother of Lewis Hutin (9). This last was the Foundress of the College of Navarre. The Passage, which we have just now cited, is (in a Gaulish Style) in the History of Spain, wrote by Mayerne (10). He expresses himself very wrong, when he calls the Wife of Lewis Hutin, Margaret Queen of Navarre. This signifies, that she was of the House of Navarre; now it is not true that she was so; for she was Daughter of Robert II Duke of Burgundy (11). There is no Error in calling her Queen of Navarre, since her Husband (Lewis Hutin) was King of it.

[§ (2) It is a general Tradition, that, in John Buridan's Youth, he, who afterwards acquired so great a Reputation, was in the Case of a great many Scholars of the University of Paris, whom a certain Queen of France, after she had them brought to her Bed, caused to be thrown out of her Chamber into the Seine, to hide the Disorders of her Life. The Business is only to know, I. What Queen that was; II. Whether it be true, as so many believe, that young Buridan, more happy than his Companions, escaped the Fate of the other Minions of that Woman, in memory of which, as it is pretended, he invented the Sophism, called in the Schools Buridan's Ass; and, lastly, what that Sophism can be.

As to the first; according to Gaguin, they who take that lascivious Queen for Joan, Queen of Navarre, who founded the College of Navarre, in the Year 1304, seem to contradict the Epoch, in which Buridan shined, fixed by him to the Year 1348. They agree much less with Marfilus ab Inghen (of Ingenheim) who, though he died not till the Year 1396, nevertheless spoke of Buridan as of one who had been his Cotemporary. There is, in my Opinion, a great deal more probability, that, as the Wives of the three Sons of Philip the Fair, Husband of the illustrious Joan of Navarre, were equally noted for their lasciviousness, that it is Mary of Burgundy, Wife of Lewis Hutin, the eldest of the three Brothers that the Accusation relates to, which some would unjustly throw upon her Mother-in-law.

As to the second point, it is so far from being true, that Buridan, while a Scholar was preserved from the Fate of the other Scholars, who were received into the Bed of the Queen in Question, whoever she be, that That terrible Woman commanded him to be thrown into the River: this we learn from the Poet Villon of Paris, in these Verses of his Ballad of the Ladies of old time, wrote in 1461.

Semblablement où est la Roync,
Qui commanda que Buridan
Fut jeté en ung sac en Seine?

Likewise where is the Queen,
Who ordered that Buridan,
Should be thrown, in a Sack, into the Seine.

Now such a command is so far from inclining one to believe that Buridan had lain with the Queen, who gave it, that, on the contrary, the Wife enna.

(7) Hist. Chronolog. d'Espagne, by Madam . Tom. II, pag. 177, 178, ad Ann. 1312.

(8) Ibid.

(9) He was the eldest Son of Philip the Fair; and note, that Mayerne is mistaken when he says that Philip the Tall was the eldest Son of Philip the Fair. Abr. Chronolog. Tom. II, pag. 176, ad Ann. 1201.

(10) Mayerne's History of Spain, Tom. I, pag. 559, 560, ad Ann. 1312. Mayerne places this in the Year 1313.

(11) Anselm. Hist. General. p. 95.

+ Bucholz. Index Chron. under the Year 1387.

+ Nolite arbitrari Guilhelum Occam, Buridanum contemporaneum nostrum (quo vix accuratius quilibet in Ethicis scriptis) Gregorium de Arimino: Adam: (Dorp) Henricum Oyta: Henricum de Haffia: Matheum de Cracovia: Nicolaum Oram: Robertum HOLCOT. Albertum Saxonem: Petrum de Elia: ca: (Alia) Joannem Gerlon: Nicolaum de Cusa: Stephanum Prolixerium: Gabrielem Bihel Spirensem: & ceteros innumeros (qui in Vienneensi * Erfordensi: Leuonensi) ceterisque Germaniae Gymnasiis ab eorum in hunc usque diem exordis (exortis) floruerunt omnium bonarum artium ignaros vacuosque fuisse, propterea quod Nominalium viam & modernorum doctrinam (veluti vos appellatis) enixe ac peculiariter affectu sunt. Marfil. de Inghen Oratio dictiones, clausulas & elegantias

* Aventin, cited by Mr Bayle, makes Buridan the Founder of the University of Vienna.

(3) Dullardus apud Valer. Andream Biblioth. Belg. pag. 471.

(4) Launoius Hist. Navar. Gymnasii, Parte I, lib. I, cap. II, pag. 15, he cites the French Book of Gaguin's History of France.

(5) This Word does not signify here, as it usually does, a capacious or fallacious Reasoning; but rather an Axiom or Maxim, which, perhaps, he couched in an Enigma, that he proposed to be solved.

(6) My Edition of Gaguin, which is of Paris, Apud Petrum Vidovatum 1528, in 8vo, fol. 129, verso, says, anno Christianae Resurrectionis MCCCXVII. This weakens the Apology.

(f) Lib. vii, fol. 637, apud Jacobum Thomasi-um, Orat. xii, pag. 274.

being in the Days of Francis I [B]. Aventinus relates, that Buridan was a Disciple of Occam, and that, being expelled Paris, by the Power of the Faction of the Realists, which was superior to that of the Nominalists, of which he was, he went into Germany, where he founded the University of Vienna (c). Buridan's Ass has been gantias oratorias distinctis caracte- rum notis signa- tas complectens. Heidelsb. in 4to, 1499. — Do not you think that W. Occam, Buridan our Contem- porary (than whom scarce any one but wrote more accurately in Ethics) Gregory of Rimini, &c. and nume- rable others who flourished in the Schools of Vien- na, Erford, and other Places in Germany, from their first Founda- tion, to this time, were igno- rant of all good Arts, because they laboriously and closely followed the way of the No- minalists, and the Doctrines of the Moderns, as you call it. At the end of that Piece we find that Marfilus ab In- ghen died on St Bernard's Day, in 1396.

Wife Buridan, at that time Professor of Philosophy at Paris, had laboured, with success, to prevent his Scholars from accepting the invitations of that Siren. That fact was publicly known, at least in Foreign Countries, since in Saxony, where Buridan, when he was banished his Country, on Ac- count of his Opinions, probably made a little stop on his way from France to Vienna in Austria, a Master of Arts, in the University of Leipsic, wrote a little Book in 1471, with the Title of Commentariolus Historicus de Adolescentulis Parisiensibus per Buridanum natione Picardum ab illicitis cujusdam Reginae Francicae amoribus retrahitis. — A small historical Commentary of the Youths of Paris, drawn off from the unlawful Love of a certain Queen of France, by Buridan a Picard. Mr Krause, who, pag. 186, in his German Literary Journal, printed in 8vo at Leipsic, in 1715, speaks of that Piece, as a Manuscript, in the Library of the Monastery of Seitenstadt, in upper Austria, ought by the way to get it printed.

As to the Sophism, called Buridan's Ass, That may very well be nothing else, but the Pons Asinorum of the Logicians, mentioned by Rabelais, Book the second, Chap. XXVIII, where, being in doubt whether he ought to describe the Battle between Pantagruel and the Giants, or omit the recital of it, he invokes Tbalia and Calliope, and beseeches them to draw him out of this difficulty. In the third Chapter of the same Book, Garagantua, being now old, is represented in the like embarrass- ment, not knowing whether he should cry for the loss of his Wife Badebec, who died in Child-bed, or laugh for joy of his new born Son; the good Man, says Rabelais, had Sophistical Arguments on one side and the other, which choaked him, but he could not solve them, and so he remained entangled like a Mouse in a Trap, or a Kite in a snare.

Some will have it, that Buridan's Ass is properly the Condition of an Ass, situated between two Measures of Oats, in such manner, that nothing shall determine him to fall upon one rather than the other; but perhaps they have not observed the equivocation of Assie with the adverb an, synoni- mous with the famous utrum of the Philosophers, represented, after the Symbol of the Logician, Mar- c Anthony de Passeribus, a Genoese †, by Merlin Coccaius in these Verses of his twenty fifth Macarenea:

† Elogia Toma- sini, Part. I, pag. 104.

* The Logicians which the Au- thor had just being speaking of.

Inter cos * sibat vir quidam corpore duplex,
Qui sustentatur binis tantummodo gambis.
Dicitur hic UTRUM, dubiosis sensibus implens, Hæreticosque facit, negat hanc, probat hunc, tenet
illam,
Et sibimet duris semper dat verbera pugnis.

Among them stood a double bodied Man,
Who was supported only by two Legs.
Call'd UTRUM, who with doubtful Senses fills:
Makes Heretics, proves this, and that denies,
Holds this, and on himself lays cruel Blows.

Pons Asinorum signifies also sometimes a Sea of these An's or Utrum's, out of which one cannot extricate one's self; or sometimes a store of these An's or Utrum's, with Solutions, or ways to get over them, trembling like an Ass upon a Bridge, where the Boards are not well joined, but let the Water be seen underneath them (::), and it is to this last signification of the Word, that Nicolas Clemenard alludes in these Words of one of his Letters, dated from Ebora the twenty fifth of April 1534. — 'Sum totus in Dialectica (the Topics, qui docent invenire argumenta:) faxis Deus, ut hic feliciter inveniamus medium, non in ponte asinorum sed in the-auris Lusitanicis (sunt enim loci Dialectici, tanquam thesauri, in quibus latent argumenta) quo possimus iustic apud vos tandem bonos facere Syllogismos. — I am altogether taken up with (::) Pliny, lib. viii, chap. 43.

'Logic (the Topics, which teach how to find Argu-ments); GOD grant that here I may happily find a Medium, not on the Asses Bridge, but in the Treasures of Portugal (for the Logical common Places are like Treasures, in which Arguments are hid) that I may hereafter make good Syllogisms among you.' REM. CRIT.]
[B] — This Story is like that of a Queen, whose Palace was not in Being in the time of Francis the First.] Read this Epigram of Johannes Secundus a Dutch Poet, who died in the Year 1536.

In Arcem reginae Albæ, Parisiis.

Cernite, flaventeis ubi volvit Sequana lymphas,
Semirutam, fertur quam coluisse prius
Efferat funestæ regina libidinis, arcem,
Nunc ultore mali ut tempore sola jacet!
Et, quassata undis, ventis habitatur & imbrî,
Multa ubi fœrales nocte querantur aves:
Cypris ubi mitis, flammæ exosa cruentas,
Chaonias sedem ponere nolit aveis:
Quâ strix, quâ Furia volitent, quâ plurima fatum
Exululet raucis questibus umbra suum.
Sic domus æternum numerosæ conscia cœdis
Impia lascivæ facta luit Dominæ.
Labuntur, lentis & condemnata ruinis
Implorant hominum pendula faxa manus.
Implorant frustra: stant hæc rata lege severâ,
Inflauratricem ne ferat ullus opem,
Aut subeat gladios, pretium pietatis iniquæ:
Et quis adhuc ausit facta nefanda sequi?
En, etiam saxis mortem censura minatur;
Longaque post cineres stant monumenta mali (12).

See, where the Seine his troubled Waters rolls,
A ruin'd Castle, once, as Fame reports,
Seat of a cruel Queen, of Lust enormous,
But now by vengeful time laid desolate!
Beat by the Waves, Receptacle of Rains,
And Winds, and baleful dire night-screaming Birds,
Where gentle Venus, such unnatural Flame
Detesting, suffers not a Dove to dwell;
Where Elves and Furies haunt, and many a Ghost
In Cries and Murmurs hoarse laments his Fate.
The House, of numerous Murders conscious,
Thus falls for it's lascivious Lady's Crime;
The falling Stones, condemn'd to ling'ring ruin,
Toter aloft, and call for human Aid,
But call in vain: The Law is fix'd as Fate,
That whoever shall lend resporing Hand,
Shall suffer Death, the just and due reward
Of Piety iniquous: who then will dare,
Henceforth, the Fate nefarious to attempt?
See Justice threatens e'en the Stones with Death,
And Monuments of Crimes out live their Authors long.

[C] Buridan's Ass is a kind of Proverb. — I cannot tell whether I have guessed right what it is.] I thought a long time, that it was only an Example, that Buridan had given, of the Dependency where- in Beasts live, as to the Objects of the Senses. They who hold Free-will, properly so called, admit a Power in Man of determining himself, either to the right or to the left, at the same time when the Motives are exactly equal from the two opposite Objects; for they pretend that our Soul can say, without having any other Reason than to make use of it's Liberty, I chuse this rather than that, tho' I see nothing more worthy of my Choice in this than in that. But they do not give that Power to Beasts: they suppose then, that they could not determine themselves, if two Objects were present, which drew them with equal Force, one one Way, and been a kind of Proverb, or Example, which subsisted a very long time in the Schools. I cannot tell whether I guess right what it was [C]; for I could never yet meet with any one who could explain it to me, or with any Book particular enough on that matter. Gabriel Naudé, who was acquainted with so many Books and Authors, did not well know the Time that our John Buridan lived in [D]. There was an Author in the XVIIth Century, whose Name was John Baptiste de Buridan, who wrote some Commentaries on the Customs of the Vermandois of Ribemont, St Quintin, Noion, Couci, and Reims. It is mentioned in the Journal des Savans, of the eighth of February, 1666.

(12) Jo. Secun- dus Epigramma- tum, pag. 140. Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1619.

It

and the other another: That, for Example, an hungry Ass would starve between two Bushels of Oats, which acted equally on his Faculties; for, having no Reason to prefer the one before the other, he would remain unmoveable, like a piece of Iron between two Loadstones of the same Force. The same thing would happen if he were equally pressed with Hunger and Thirst, and had a Bushel of Oats, and a pail of Water before him, which acted with equal Force on his Organs. He would not know where to begin; and if he eat before he drank, his Hunger must be greater than his Thirst, or the Action of the Water weaker than that of the Oats, which is against the Supposition. Buridan made use of this Example to shew, that, if an external Motive does not determine Beasts, their Soul has not the Power to chuse between two equal Objects. There was Reason enough to laugh and break Jest upon the Supposition of such an Ass, and a Field for subtilizing the Cavils of Logic according to the Mode of those Times. It is no wonder then that Buridan's Ass became famous in the Schools. I find that the Sieur Naudé places this Ass among the Fictions of the Human Mind (13); and I shall occasionally say, that the Schoolmen plagued themselves in such a manner to assign a Cause for every effect; that they demanded a Reason why one individual of Heat, for example, is, sooner produced than another. Heat is, according to them, a kind of Quality that comprehends, under its Genus, a vast number of possible Individuals. The Fire produces one of these Individuals every time it heats the Water: But why one rather than the other? Turn yourself which way you please, you will find no manner of Reason for this any where but in the pure Will of God; here we must transgress the Law of the Schools, non est Philosophi recurrere ad Deum, and teach, That as the second Cause determines the first, as to the Species, the first Cause determines the second as to the Individual. If you go higher; if you ask why God made choice of one Individual of Heat rather than another? You are answered, That his Supreme Independency gives him the Right of chusing, without being determined by the Pre-eminence of the Object.

This is not without its Difficulty: there is more Depth in it than People imagine. Here follows the Passage of Naudé, hinted at before. 'The hasty Opinion of these illuminated Brethren the Rosicrucians - - - is entirely vain, false, and impossible, having no other existence than that of the Abbey of Theleme in Rabelais, the Lesine among the Italians, the Voices of Rucelin, the Universals of Occham, the Ass of Buridan, the Angels of the Saducees, the Utopia of More, second Intentions, Vacuum, Infinity, Equinity, Golden Mountain, Chimera, and Ens rationis of the Philosophers (14).' This agrees with my supposition: For an Ass, extremely hungry, and drawn equally by two Measures of Oats, and kept immovable by that equal Attraction, seems to be a Case physically impossible.

Another Thought came lately into my Head; which is, That Buridan's Ass might be a Sophism, which that Philosopher proposed as a kind of Dilemma, that, whatever answer were given him, he might draw some puzzling Conclusions from it. He supposed either an Ass much famished between two Measures of Oats of an equal Force, or an Ass equally pressed with Thirst and Hunger between a Measure of Oats and a Pail of Water, which acted equally on his Organs. Having made this Supposition, he asked, What will this Ass do (15)? If any body answered, He must remain immovable;

then, concluded he, He must die of Hunger between two Measures of Oats, he must die of Thirst and Hunger within reach of Meat and Drink. This seemed absurd, and he must have the Laughers on his side, against whoever should make him that Answer. If he were answered, That the Ass has more Sense than to die of Hunger and Thirst in such a Situation; then, concludes he, He must turn on the one side rather than on the other, though nothing moves him more strongly towards that Place than towards this: then he is endowed with a Free-will; or, which is all one, it may happen, that, of two Weights poised in equilibrio, one may move and raise the other. These two Consequences are absurd: there remained then only one Answer, That the Ass must ever find himself more strongly moved by one of the Objects than by the other: but this was overthrowing the Supposition; and thus Buridan gained his Cause, in what manner soever his Question was answered. This Sophism puts me in mind of the Crocodile of the Stoics (16), of the Electra of Eubulides (17), and of such-like captious Questions of the ancient Logicians, to which they gave the Name of the Thing which they took for an Example. Spinoza does not speak of Buridan's Ass, but of his She-Ass (18); and he confesses plainly, that if a Man should be in that She-Ass's Condition, he would die of Hunger and Thirst (19). The Ass-Buridan is a Proverb in Burgundy, whereof Paradin has given a false Etymology (20); for it is plain, that Buridan is only a Corruption of Buridan. By the way, Spinoza's Concession is very ill grounded; for there are at least two ways whereby a Man may disengage himself from the Snare of the Equilibrium. One is That which I have already mentioned, viz. That to flatter himself with the pleasing Imagination that he is Master at Home, and that he does not depend on outward Objects, he might resolve thus: I will prefer this before that, because I will have it so; and in this Case, that which determines results not from the Object; the Motive is only taken from the Ideas that Men have of their own Perfections, or of their natural Faculties. The other Way is that of the Lot or Chance. A Man is to decide the Precedency between two Ladies; he finds nothing in them that determines him: but if he were of necessity obliged to prefer one to the other, he would not be at a stand but make them draw Lots. He would do the like in regard of two Courtizans with whom he had a mind to divert himself, but without shewing the least shadow of Preference: Chance would decide with whom he should begin; the Equilibrium would not keep him in a State of Inaction, as Spinoza pretends; a Remedy would be found.

[D] Gabriel Naudé - - - did not well know the Time of our Buridan.] He believed that Nicolas Oresme (21), Preceptor of Charles V, King of France, preceded Buridan; for, after having observed that That Preceptor of Charles V published Aristotle's Politics and Morals in French, he adds, that Buridan published some Questions on Aristotle's Politics a little after. 'Paulo post etiam Johannes quidam Buridanus celeberrimi nominis Sophista suas in libros politicorum quaestiones evulgavit, sed nugaces ac ineptas, ut ejusmodi Scholasticorum sermo omnia (22). - - - A little after, one John Buridan, a Sophist of very great Note, published his Questions on the Books of Politics, but silly and trifling, as every thing of such like scholastic Persons commonly is.' We must know that this Work of Nicolas Oresme was written between the Years 1370, and 1377 (23). Now according to Gaguin, Buridan's Works on Logic and Ethics be-

(16) See Lucian in Hermotimo, & in Auctione vitarum, apud Gassendum in Logica, cap. vi. pag. 51.

(17) Laërtius, lib. ii. apud Gassendum, ibid. cap. iii. pag. 40.

(18) Spinoza, Ethics parte II, pag. 89.

(19) Id. ibid. pag. 91.

(20) Annales de Bourgogne, lib. ii, pag. 174.

(21) He makes him Archbishop of Bayeux: he should have said Bp of Lisieux; and at most Bishopric.

(22) Naudéus, Bibliogr. politica, pag. 26.

(23) See Mr de Launoi, Histor. Colleg. Navar. pag. 457.

(13) See his Words at the end of this Paragraph.

(14) Naudé, Instruction for les Freres de la Rois-Croix, pag. 10. See also Dialogue De Mafcurat. pag. 25.

(15) I do not affirm this; I only suppose it. I say the same as to the foregoing Explanation.

It is to be observed, that John Buridan was placed, by Illyricus, in the Catalogue of the Witnesses of Truth [E].

(24) See above, Citat. (6).

long to the Year 1348 (24). Without doubt he comprehends the Writings on Politics under those of Ethics.

[E] Buridan was placed — in the Catalogue of the Witnesses of Truth. He is there said to have been an orthodox Author in Point of Free-Will. Andreas de Calro & Joannes Buridanus disputant de libero arbitrio contra alios sententiariorum, & veram tuentur sententiam. Vide Andr. in 1 sent. dist. 45. & Buridanum in 3 Ethic. (25). — Andrew de Calro and John Buridan dispute on Free-Will, against others of different Opinions, and defend the true Opinion. A Dutch Minister has paraphrased those Words thus. Joannes Buridanus Rector Scholæ Parisiensis ejusque nomine Romam Legatus, professione quoque Philosophus, scriptis clarus, stylo quidem Barbarus, verum sententiâ orthodoxus, adeoque ut inter Theologos referendus, pro studiorum communione, ita & inter telles veritatis. Nullo enim modo placuit ipsi quod Romæ ex Pelagii sententiâ de Peccatoris coram Deo iustificatione tum temporis audiverat, & passim receptum erat. Atque adeo renascenti de gratuita perfidiam in Christo, juxta Scripturæ doctrinam, justificatione, renascenti inquam sententiæ adimpleretur Buridanus noster — sententiam suam orthodoxam — in 3 Ethicorum Aristotelis proposuit (26). — John Buridan, Rector of the University of Paris, and deputed by the same to Rome, by Profession a Philosopher, famous for his Writings, somewhat barbarous in his Style, but orthodox in his Opinions; and as he deserves a place among the Divines, so is he to be numbered among the witnesses of Truth. For he was by no means pleased with the Pelagian Doctrines, then taught at Rome, and received every where, concerning the Justification of Sinners. So that our Buridan was a Defender of the newly revived Opinion, concerning free Justification, by Faith in Christ, agreeable to the Doctrine of Scripture — he lays down his orthodox Opinion in his Commentary on the third Book of Aristotle's Ethics.

(26) Jacobus Bafchius in vulgato Belgico, five Historia Religionis illustrata, corrupte, & reformatæ in Belgio & a Belgis, pag. 146.

BURNETTUS, or BRUNETTUS (LATINUS), was a Florentine. He wrote a Book entituled, A Treasure of the Origin and Nature of all Things. He composed it first in French, and then he translated it into Italian (a). His Answer to those who asked him why he had writ his Book in French, and not in Italian, which was his Mother Tongue, shews that our Tongue has been a long time in Vogue in foreign Countries [A]. He composed several other Books, and died at Florence, in the Year 1295 (b). See the Article DANTE.

(a) Mabillon, Musæ Ital. Tom. I, pag. 169.

(b) Michael Poccianus de Scriptore. Florent. pag. 34.

[A] His Answer — shews that our Tongue has been a long time in vogue amongst Foreigners. He gave two Reasons for his Conduct; I. That he lived in France, when he writ that Treatise; II. That the French Tongue was more pleasant and more common than others: Percio che la parlatura Franceseba e piu dilettevole & piu commune che tutti li altri linguaggi (1). This we find in the first Chapter of his Book, which was published only in Italian.

(1) Mabill. Musæ Ital. Tom. I, pag. 169.

BURRUS (AFRANIUS), was a Man of great Merit, and worthy of a better Age than that of Nero. Agrippina, that Prince's Mother, designing to engage Burrus in her Interest, who had got a great Reputation in the Armies, persuaded the Emperor Claudius, her Husband, to remove the two Commanders of the Pretorian Cohorts (a), and to bestow that Post upon Burrus alone (b). He was made afterwards Governor of young Nero, and had Seneca for his Assistant. The good Understanding between those two Governors (c) shews they were Men of great Probity, and that they aimed chiefly at the public Good in their Instruction of that young Prince, who would have proved an accomplished Emperor under such Masters, had not his natural Wickedness prevailed, and made all their Care useless. Nero, being resolved to get rid of his Mother, was about to take from Burrus his Employ of Colonel of the Guards (d), remembering that he got it by Agrippina's Favour, and fearing that such a Benefit would engage him more in his Mother's Interest than in his; but whether it be that Seneca diverted the Thing, or for some other Reason, Burrus kept his Place, and approved of Agrippina's Death, provided she was convicted of what was charged upon her. He represented to Nero, that the least thing he could do for his Mother, was, to permit her to answer for herself (e). That Expedient diverted the Storm for the Time. Burrus himself was accused some time after, and justified himself (f). At last Nero resolved to put off no longer the Death of Agrippina, and Burrus, being not able to prevent it, refused however to give his Order about it to any of the Pretorian Soldiers (g). He was more than once obliged, to his great Grief, to seem to approve Nero's infamous Actions, for which he could find no Remedy (h). He died in the Sixty second Year of the Ist Century, three Years after Agrippina, not without some Suspicion of having been poisoned (i).

(a) That is, of the Regiment of Guards.

(b) Tacit. Annal. lib. xii, cap. xlii. ad Ann. 804.

(c) Id. lib. xiii, cap. ii.

(d) Id. ibid. cap. xx, ad Ann. 808.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Id. cap. xxiii.

(g) Id. lib. xiv, cap. vii, ad Ann. 812.

(h) Ibid. cap. xv.

(i) Ibid. cap. li, ad Ann. 815.

BUSBEQUIUS (AUGERIUS GISLENIUS Lord of), an illustrious Man, on account of his Embassies, was born at Comines (a), in the Year 1522, of a Mother of a mean Extraction, but of a Father who was of a good Family, and Lord of Busbec, upon the River Lis, and who did not marry below himself, to beget this Child. The Reader may easily perceive, without a Commentary on these last Words, that Augerius Busbequius was a Bastard. He confirmed the common Opinion, which the World entertains of the Wit of those, who, like himself, are unlawfully begotten. He made very early a wonderful Progress, which moved his Father, who had him brought up in the House, to spare neither Pains nor Cost for his Instruction, and to get him legitimated by a Rescript of the Emperor Charles V. He sent him to the most celebrated Universities; to Louvain, Paris, Venice,

(a) A Village of Flanders, upon the River Lis. La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 475, makes him a Native of Bruges.

Venice, Bologna, and Padua (b). He improved very much under the learned Masters he heard in those Places. He was for some time at London with the Embassador of Ferdinand, King of the Romans (c) [A], from whence, being returned into Flanders, he received there a Letter from that Prince, who informed him, that he designed to send him Embassador to Constantinople. Busbequius quickly repaired to Vienna, from whence he soon set out on that Embassy [B]. Not finding

(b) Ex Val. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 93.

(c) Called Peter Lasso.

(1) Pag. 9.

(2) He should have said Ferdinand I.

(3) Busbeq. Ep. 1.

(4) Ibid.

(5) Melch. Adam. in vit. Juris. pag. 316. Bullart, Academiæ Scienc. Tom. I, pag. 80, who calls him Peter Vanderan.

(6) The Life of Busbequius, prefixed to his Works, Melchior Adam, pag. 366. Bullart, pag. 80. Swertius Athen. Belg. Telfier Elog. de Mont. de Thon, Tom. II, pag. 100, speaks only of Maximilian's Sons.

(7) See his first Letter at the beginning.

[A] He was some time at London with the Embassador of Ferdinand, King of the Romans. The anonymous Author, who published, in 1693, the History of the Archduke Albert, says (1), That the Emperor Ferdinand II (2) placed our Busbequius in the Family of his Embassador in England, and made him Preceptor to his own Sons. I believe neither of these Facts is true. I find by Busbequius's first Account that he was not known to Ferdinand till after he had been at London in the House of the Embassador of that Prince. 'Non te fugit cum effem ex Anglia domum reversus à Regis Philippi & Reginae Mariæ nuptiis, ubi fueram inter comites Don Petri Lassi, quem honoris causa cō Romanorum Rex Ferdinandus dominus meus clementissimus legaverat, quemadmodum idem Ferdinandus me per literas ad hoc iter evocavit (3). — You know, when I was returned from England, after the Marriage of King Philip and Queen Mary, where I had been in the Retinue of Don Peter Lasso, whom my most gracious Lord Ferdinand, King of the Romans, had honorarily sent thither, how I was called by Letter of the same Ferdinand to this Journey.' He tells us a little after, how he was introduced by John Vander Aa, Secretary to Ferdinand, and how graciously he was received by that Prince. 'Ut Viennam veni, per J. Vander Aa ad Ferdinandum, cui is erat à secretis, introductus cum ea benevolentiae significatione excipior, qua is rex uti solet erga eos quorum de fide & probitate opinionem aliquam concepit (4). — When I came to Vienna, I was introduced to the King by John Vander Aa, who was his Secretary, and received with such Expressions of Kindness, as he uses to those, of whose Fidelity and Probity he has conceived an Opinion.' All this looks like a first Acquaintance, especially considering that the Writers of Busbequius's Life observe, that he was sent for to Vienna by the good Offices of that Vander Aa his Countryman (5). But though this were not a Proof of a first Acquaintance, what I say could not be reasonably denied; since Busbequius says nothing whereby it appears that Ferdinand contributed to his Journey into England. Would it not have been a great Honour for Busbequius to have been placed by Ferdinand himself in the House of his Embassador, who was sent to London at the Time of the Prince of Spain's Marriage? Why should such an honourable Circumstance have been suppressed? To which I may add the Silence of all the Authors I have consulted, and the express Observation of Valerius Andreas, that it was the Embassador himself who called Busbequius to London. We may therefore reckon this for one of the Mistakes of that anonymous Author. Here is another: It is certain from Busbequius's Account, that, from the Time he was introduced to the Court of Ferdinand, to the Year 1562, he was wholly employed in his Embassies to Constantinople; and therefore if he had been Preceptor to Ferdinand's Children, it must have been after the Year 1562. But the Sons of that Prince were not then of an Age that required it. It was the Sons of Maximilian, King of the Romans, that wanted a Governour and a Preceptor, and Busbequius was intrusted with their Education (6). I do not question but the anonymous Author was misled by Moreri. See the following Remark.

[B] That Prince — appointed him Embassador to Constantinople — he soon set out for that Embassy. He received Ferdinand's Letter at Lisle the third of November, and he was to be at Buda in the beginning of December (7). You may judge whether he had much Time to make himself ready: The Departure of an Embassador was never so much hastened; and yet, if we believe Moreri, the Thing happened thus: The Emperor Ferdinand I sent for him to Vienna, where some time after he chose him to be Preceptor to his Children, and afterwards sent him Embassador to the Porte. Thus Time and Matters of Fact are confounded by those who do not consult original Pieces. If Moreri had consulted them, he might have seen that Ferdinand was only King of the Romans, when he sent for Busbequius to Vienna, and that the first Employment he gave him was the Embassy to the Porte. The Historian, whom I have consulted in the foregoing Remark, had without doubt consulted Moreri; there he found that Augerius made two Journeys into Turkey, after the Emperor Ferdinand I had made him Preceptor to his Sons (8). I am less surprized at these Faults, than at those which I am going to observe. The Words of Busbequius, which I have quoted, shew that he did not leave England, where he had been in the House of King Ferdinand's Embassador, till after the Marriage of Philip and Queen Mary, that is, after the Twenty fifth of July 1554; and that he made his first Voyage to Constantinople after his Return from England. Valerius Andreas does therefore confound the Times, when he says, that Busbequius, having been some Months in the House of the Embassador at London, whither he went at Twenty three Years of Age, returned into his own Country, where he staid till he was called to the Court of Ferdinand (9); which supposes that his Journey into England, and his Journey to Vienna, did soon follow one another: It is not therefore true, that he went into England at Twenty three Years of Age, as he affirms. Valerius Andreas cannot be acquitted of a gross Mistake; for, on one Hand, he says Busbequius was seventy Years old in 1592, and, on the other, that, when he was Twenty three Years of Age, he was some Months at London, in the House of Ferdinand's Embassador; he must therefore have been there in 1545: but he himself says that he went to Constantinople after he had been with the same Embassador, and after the Marriage of Philip and Mary Queen of England, which was the Twenty fifth of July 1554; he was therefore older than Valerius Andreas makes him to be, when he went to London. That Author has committed another Fault: He says, that Busbequius did not go to the Embassador till after his Father's Death. 'Patre e vivis sublato juvenis ætatis anno tertio ac vicésimo in Angliam à Ferdinand Imp. Oratore evocatur, ejus contubernio per menses aliquot familiariter usus in patriam revertitur (10). — After his Father's Death, he, being but young, was taken to England by the Embassador of the Emperor Ferdinand, in whose House he lived some Months, and then returned into his own Country.' But Busbequius declares, that, having received Ferdinand's Letter after his Return from London, he put off his Journey to Vienna no longer than was necessary to take leave of his Father and of his Friends. 'Quas literas cum insulis 3. Novembris accepissem tantum moræ interposui dum ad Busbequium desceſcerem, patrique & amicis valedicerem (11).' Besides, is it not a Piece of Inaccuracy to give Ferdinand the Title of Emperor in 1545? There is a Difficulty in these Words of Busbequius: 'Non te fugit cum effem ex Anglia domum reversus à Regis Philippi & Reginae Mariæ nuptiis, ubi fueram inter comites Don Petri Lassi — quemadmodum Ferdinandus me per literas ad hoc iter evocavit. Quas cum insulis 3. Novembris accepissem.' They signify that he did not return into Flanders, till after the Marriage of Mary Queen of England; from whence it follows, that the Letter he received at Lisle, November 3d, was not received before November 3, 1554, at the soonest: And yet his Account of the first Journey he made to Constantinople, after he received that Letter, is dated from Vienna, Sept. 1. 1554; and the Account of his second Journey is dated from Constantinople the fourteenth of July 1555. To remove that Difficulty, we need only mend those two false Dates, by putting 1555 in the first, and 1556 in the second: For, since Busbequius declares, that his

(8) Histor de l'Arch. Albert, pag. 9.

(9) Val. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 93.

(10) Id. Ibid.

(11) Busbeq. Epist. I, init.

M m

Embassies

ing Soliman at Constantinople, he was obliged to go to him at Amasia [C]. He was sent to the Porte to reside there, in the Quality of Ambassador in Ordinary; nevertheless, he made but a short stay. He only obtained from Soliman a Truce of six Months [D], and it was thought expedient he should quickly return to Ferdinand, to bring him the Letter of the Turkish Emperor. He did it, and was presently sent back again with other Orders to that proud Monarch, who would not hearken to Reason on the Affairs of Transylvania. The second Embassy was much longer, and more successful than the first; for it lasted seven Years, and ended in a good Treaty (d). Let us not forget, that, though he neglected nothing of what concerned the Affairs of the Embassy, yet he did not cease to labour for the Republic of Letters, as well with regard to the critical Part, as to Natural Philosophy.

(d) Ex Epistolis Busbequii de Legatione Turcica.

(12) Bonis avibus sub finem mensis Augusti
ortatum iter ingressus sum, me-
cum referens annorum octo fructum octennales inducias. — About the end of August I happily set forward on my desired Journey, bringing with me a Truce of eight Years, for my eight Years
time. Id. Epist.
iv, pag. 360.

(13) Epist. iv,
pag. 371.

Embassies lasted eight Years (12), and that he returned from the last, a little before the Coronation of Maximilian, King of the Romans, which happened the thirtieth of November 1562. It is manifest that the Month of November, in which he prepared himself for his first Voyage, is that of the Year 1554, and that the Month of November, in which he began the second, is that of the Year 1555. When he mentions his Arrival at Frankfurt, a little before Maximilian's Coronation, he says, it was then seven Years wanting one Day, since he set out from Vienna on his second Journey (13). Seeing therefore his second Letter is the Account of his second Journey to Constantinople, it is plain it must be dated, not the fourteenth of July 1555, but the fourteenth of July 1556. Here is another Mistake of Moreri; he says, that Busbequius procured, in 1560, the Liberty of Alvarez de Sande, Sanchez de Leve, and Berenguel de Requens, taken by the Bassa Piali in the Isle of Gerbes, and that he returned with the first about the End of the same Year to Vienna. There is but a Misreckoning of two Years. Melchior Adam has misled Moreri.

[C] He was obliged to go to Soliman at Amasia.] This plainly appears from his first Letter, which makes me believe that of a hundred Authors, who speak of Busbequius, there are scarce six that consult the Originals. It is certain, that Moreri did not give himself that Trouble. Soliman, says he, was then at Constantinople: Busbequius made a second Journey to him at Amasia in Asia. Moreri is not the only Writer, who divides the two Embassies in that manner; I mean, who pretends, that Busbequius went the first time to Constantinople, and the second time to Amasia: Valerius Andreas has committed the same Mistake: hæc prima illius in Asiam legatio; he means the Embassy to Constantinople; altera Amasiana fuit. Melchior Adam (14) and Swertius (15) express themselves in the same manner. The Expression is more faulty still in the Life of Busbequius prefixed to his Works: The Embassy into Asia is there distinguished from his Embassy to Amasia. Legationibus claruit quarum prima Amasiana fuit — altera Amasiana fuit (16). The best of all is, that some believe the Embassy to Amasia was not designed for the Turkish Emperor, but for some other Eastern Prince. He likewise, they are the Words of a French Author (17), made himself known in the Courts of Asia. His Embassies to Amasia and Constantinople raised the Admiration of those Eastern Nations. This Mistake proceeds in all likelihood from his being cited as the Author of an Account of a Journey to Constantinople, and as the Author of an Account of a Journey to Amasia. Indeed his first Letter contains those two Accounts; but, besides that those two Journeys belong to one and the same Embassy, which is the first, it would be a very improper Way of speaking to denominate the second by Amasia, tho' he had gone the second time to Amasia without passing through Constantinople. The Denomination of an Embassy is not taken from the Town, where the Ambassador has his Audience, but from the Court to which he is sent. It would be a pleasant Story, if an Ambassador of the Emperor to the King of England, who, not finding that Prince at London, had gone to him into Ireland, in 1690, should boast of two Embassies, the one into England, and the other into Ireland; but it might very well be said, if he published a Relation, that it contains his Journey to London, and his Voyage to Dublin. I must mend another Fault. When Melchior Adam mentions Busbequius's Curiosity in Drugs and Plants, he says, he undertook a Journey to Amasia to make a Collection of Plants, and such like Rarities. He adds, that Amasia is situate on the River Halys, which divides Galatia from Capadocia. What I have already said is sufficient to shew, that his Journey to Amasia was a matter of Necessity, and not of Curiosity. Besides, that Town does not stand upon the Halys, but upon the Iris.

[D] He only obtained a Truce of six Months.] We have here an egregious Instance of what I said before, that few Writers have consulted the Originals with respect to Busbequius. The Author of his Life, prefixed to his Works, says, that he had such Success, that he softened the fierce Humour of Soliman so, that he obtained from him a Truce for eight Years, Prout, as he goes on, latius de legationis Turcica Epistolis patet. — As appears from his Letters on his Turkish Embassy. This is what he ascribes to him with respect to his first Embassy; as to the second, he is contented to call it Amasiana. What Confusion is this! The first produced only a Truce of six Months; — Tantum de semestribus induciis dum deferri responsum referrique posset inter nos convenit (18). — We only agreed on a Truce for six Months, whilst Answers could go and come. Feci Regem Romanorum de meo reditu semeltribusque induciis & summa rerum gestarum certiores (19). — I informed the King of the Romans of my Return, and of the Truce for six Months, and the chief of my Negotiations. The second produced a Treaty, which the Emperor Ferdinand ratified, and contained a Truce for eight Years (20). Valerius Andreas commits yet more Faults than the Author of Busbequius's Life. He pretends, that the Grand Signor breathed nothing but Threats and War, because of the Treaty of Exchange, which Ferdinand had concluded concerning Transylvania; and that there being a necessity of sending an Ambassador to pacify the Sultan, Malvezzi was pitched upon, who was first put in Prison, and some time after released, and returned without concluding any thing; but that Busbequius, who was appointed to succeed him, did not return into Germany until he had concluded a Truce of eight Years. 'Sufficiens Busbequius qua erat animi modestia atque constantia mitigato Solimanni animo, & impetratis octennii induciis, in Germaniam revertitur. Hæc prima illius in Asiam legatio, altera Amasiana fuit (21). — Busbequius, who succeeded, having, by his Modesty and Constancy of Mind, mitigated the Anger of Soliman, and obtained a Truce of eight Years, returned into Germany. This was his first Embassy into Asia, the other was to Amasia.' Let us not repeat the Confutation of this last Fault, but only say, that John Maria Malvezzi was sent to the Porte before the Exchange of Transylvania was spoken of (22), and that he was imprisoned for having deceived the Grand Vizier, by assuring him that all the Reports, which ran of Ferdinand's Enterprizes upon the Principality of Transylvania, were false. 'Cum jam potito totius Transilvaniæ Ferdinando certa res esset neque dissimulationi locus relinqueretur, vehementer Turcarum Imperator in Rustanum (be was the Grand Vizier) quod affirmationi Malvezzi tantum fidei habuisset, multo etiam magis in Malvezium Rustanus, cuius se fraude circumventum clamabat, exanderunt (23). — When Ferdinand, by seizing all Transylvania, had put the thing beyond doubt, and no more room was left for Dissimulation, the Turkish Emperor was very much enraged with Rustan (the Grand Vizier) that he had given so much Credit to Malvezzi's Affirmations; and Rustan much more with Malvezzi, by whose Fraud he complained he was circumvented.'

(18) Busbeq. Epist. I, pag. 109.

(19) Id. p. 119.

(20) Id. Epist. iv, pag. 372.

(21) Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 93.

(22) Busbequii Epist. I, pag. 15.

(23) Ibid. pag. 16.

[E] He

Philosophy. He collected Inscriptions [E], he bought up Manuscripts [F]; he sought for rare Plants, and informed himself of the Nature of Animals. There are Proofs of all this to be found, either in the Inscriptions of Gruter, or in the Imperial Library, or in the Books of Matbiol; and it is well known, that, in his second Journey to Constantinople, he took a Painter along with him, that he might be able to communicate to the Curious, at least Figures of the Plants and Animals, which are not well known in the western Parts of Europe (e). He dived perfectly into the State of the Ottoman Empire, and the true means of attacking it with Success, upon which he composed a very judicious Discourse (f). The Account which he composed of his two Journeys into Turkey is also a good Work, and deserves the Approbation of those who are able to judge of such Writings [G]. He had a Mind to pass the Remainder of his Days in a private Life (g), but was obliged to re-imbark more than ever in the Affairs of the Court. He was intrusted with the Government of the young Princes, Sons of Maximilian II (h). And when the Princess Elizabeth, Daughter of that Emperor, was married to Charles IX, King of France (i), he had the Commission to conduct her to Paris. That Queen gave him the whole Administration of her House and Affairs; and when he quitted France, after the Death of her Husband, she left him there as her Ambassador (k). He had also that Character from the Emperor Rodolphus, till 1592 (l): At which time, having obtained leave to take a Journey into Flanders, [E] He collected Inscriptions. Moreri says, that he sent them to Scaliger, Lipsius, and Gruterus. I do not ask him why he varies from his Guide, Melchior Adam, who says, that Busbequius sent his Inscriptions to Clavius, who sent them to Gruterus, and that the latter inserted them in his great Collection, with the Corrections of Scaliger; I do not insist on this, since I find in Busbequius's Life, that he communicated several Inscriptions to Lipsius, by whose Means they were published in the Collections of Smetius, and Gruterus. This helps Mr Moreri, but not so far as to discharge him of all the Burden. It must not be forgot, that the Public is indebted to our Busbequius for the Monumentum Ancyranum, which would be one of the most curious and most instructive Inscriptions of Antiquity, if it were intire; for in it we should have a List of all the Actions of Augustus. Busbequius, passing through Ancyra, a City of Galatia, caused a Copy to be made of all that remained legible of that Inscription on the Marble of a ruined Palace (24), and sent it to the Jesuit Sebastian (25). You may see in the Suetonius of Mr Grævius what it is; Lipsius and Casaubon have had a Dispute about it.

Note, That Mr Gronovius published this Monumentum Ancyranum, with Notes, at Leyden, in the Year 1695, with a more ample and correct Copy than that of Busbequius.

[F] He bought up Manuscripts. The anonymous Panegyrist of the Archduke Albert says (26), that Busbequius enriched the Imperial Library with an infinite Number of rare and excellent Manuscripts. Why does he stray from his Guide? Why does he not limit himself to the Number of an hundred as others do? Quin & centum amplius antiqua cum Græca tum Latina in membranis calamo exarata volumina media in Græcia studiose collecta in Cæsaream Viennæ Austriæ Bibliothecam intulit (27). Besides, he presented to the Imperial Library, at Vienna, a hundred Manuscripts on Vellum, both Greek and Latin, which he had collected with great care in Greece. I do not deny that Busbequius bought more. Reporto, says he (28), magnam farraginem veterum numismatum, quorum præcipuum donabo Dominum meum. Adhæc librorum Græcorum manuscriptorum tota plaustra, totas naves; sunt, credo, libri haud multo infra 240, quos mari misi Venetias, ut inde Viennam deportentur. Converte omnes angulos ut quicquid restabat hujusmodi mercis, tanquam novissimo spicilegio, cogerem. I bring with me, says he, a great Collection of old Coins, the chief of which I will present to my Master. Besides Cart-loads, nay Ship-loads, of Manuscript Greek Books. I believe there are not much less than Two hundred and forty Books, which I have sent by Sea to Venice, thence to be brought to Vienna. I rummaged every Corner, to gather, as it were, the last Gleanings that remained of this kind of Ware.

[G] The Account of his Journeys deserves the Approbation of those who are able to judge of Writings of that kind. Thuanus says this of it: Vir eruditione, rerum agendarum peritia, candore & probitate insignis, qui unam atque alteram legationem ad Portam Othomanicam sub Ferdinando Cæsare magna sua cum laude gessit, & elegantissimis ac lectu jucundissimis epistolis explicavit, ex quibus quam plurima in hos Annales me transcripsisse ingenue profiteor (29). A Man eminent for his Learning, Skill in transacting Affairs, Candour and Probity, who discharged two Embassies to the Ottoman Port, under the Emperor Ferdinand, with great Honour, and gave an Account of them in very elegant and entertaining Letters, from whence I ingeniously own I have transcribed many things into these Annals. Mr Teissier reduces the Letters of Augustus Busbequius to two (30). It may be he made use of an Edition, wherein Thuanus acknowledged but two; for it is true, that there were no more published at first. Lewis Carriën published these two at Antwerp, by Plantin, in the Year 1581, without knowing whether the Author would be pleased with it or not; he only hoped it would not displease him too highly. The Title of these two first was, Itinera Constantinopolitanum & Amasianum. Some time after appeared four, under the Title of Angerii Gisleii Busbequii legationis Turcicæ epistolæ quatuor. They have been printed several times: Scaliger has praised them highly, and Francis (31) Hofman cites them in his Treatise of the Office of an Ambassador, as a Book worthy of that Character, and which contains ample Lessons for such as are employed in those high Functions (32). It is wrong to consider these four Letters as a different Work from that which bears the Title of Itinera Constantinopolitanum & Amasianum (33). They do not otherwise differ from it than as the whole differs from some of its Parts. As to Busbequius's Letters to Rodolphus concerning the Embassy of France, they relate chiefly to the Expedition of the Duke of Alençon into the Netherlands, and were not published till 1632, curante Jo. Baptista Houwaert J. C. & Patricio Bruxelensi. The Year following they were reprinted at Leyden with all the Works of Busbequius. By the way, Thuanus, in the Words I have quoted, places these two Embassies in the Reign of Ferdinand I. He is in the right; but Mr Teissier does not agree with him, since he will have it, that Busbequius's Embassies were posterior to the Office of Governor to the Emperor Maximilian's Children (34). Carriën was not very exact, when he said, that the Embassies of Turkey belong to the Reign of Ferdinand, and to that of Maximilian (35). They who would know the Encomiums, which have been given to our Busbequius, need only consult Sir Thomas Pope Blount, at the Five hundred fifty fourth Page, and Lewis Guicciardin, in the Place where he speaks of Commynes, in the Description of the Netherlands.

(e) Melchior Adam. vit. Juris. pag. 318.

(f) Intituled, De re militari contra Turcam instituta consilium.

(g) Busbeq. Epist. iv, pag. 372, 3 3.

(h) See Rem. [A].

(i) In 1570.

(k) Thuan. lib. civ, pag. 485.

(l) Melch. Adam. pag. 316.

(29) Thuan. lib. civ, pag. 484.

(30) Teissier Elog. taken from Thuan. Tom II, pag. 189.

(31) He ought to have said Julius.

(32) Bullart, Académ. des sciences. Tom. I, pag. 80.

(33) This is what Melchior Adam, Swert, Valerius Andreas, Teissier, Moreri, Pope Blount do, as well as those who make the Number of his Epistolæ Turcicæ six, as Melch. Adam, and Konig.

(34) Teissier Additions aux Elog. Tom. II, p. 190.

(35) Cum Busbequius nomine Imp. Ferdinandi & Maximiliani apud Turcom. Ora oris partem ageret. Epist. decretat. ad Niclaum Mœntium, which he believes to be the same to whom Busbequius wrote his Relations.

(24) Epist. I, pag. 87.

(25) Melch. Adam. Vita Juris. pag. 316.

(26) Pag. 9.

(27) Melch. Adam. vit. Juris. pag. 316. See also Bullart, Acad. des Sciences. Tom. I, pag. 80.

(28) Busbequius, Epist. iv, sub fin.

(m) Thom. lib.
civ, pag. 316.

(n) Bullart's Academy of Sciences, Tom.
I, pag. 81.

Flanders, to set his own private Affairs in order, he took the Way of Normandy. But notwithstanding he had furnished himself with the King's Passes (m), and with those of the League, he was robbed and abused by a Party of Leaguers (H), in the Village of Cailli, three Leagues from Rouen (n). These Robbers durst not detain him Prisoner, nor take away his Baggage, when they reflected on what he represented to them concerning the inviolable Privileges of his Character; but though they restored him his Liberty and his Trunks, yet it interrupted his Journey. He caused himself to be brought to the Lady of Maillot's House at St Germain, near Rouen, where he was taken with a Fever, which carried him off, after some Days, on the Twenty eighth of October, 1592. His Body was honourably interred in the Church at that Place, and his Heart carried to the Netherlands,

(15) Sweet. Athenae Belgicae.

therlands. He says, that Busbequius spoke seven Languages perfectly well; viz. Latin, Italian, French, Spanish, German, Dutch, and Slavonian. The Letters Patents of the Emperor Ferdinand on the Promotion to the Order of Knighthood, with which Maximilian, King of the Romans, honoured Busbequius, are as good as a Panegyric; they are dated the third of April, 1564 (36). See also Camerarius, in the fourteenth Chapter of the last Book of his historical Meditations.

The Author of the Miscellanies of History and Literature has given so fine a Judgment of one of Busbequius's Works, that I cannot forbear copying it. 'Busbeque's (37) Letters to the Emperor Rodolphus II, says he (38), contain more Matter, and are much more useful than those of Bongars.' They are a natural Representation of the Affairs of France, in the Reign of Henry III. He relates Matters with so much Plainness, that they seem to be transacted before our Eyes. We do not find any where so many historical Facts in so small a Discourse. The Grand Affairs, such as the Conspiracy of Anwerp, and the petty Intrigues of the Court, are equally well described there. The Attitudes (as one may say) in which he places Henry III, the Queen-Mother, the Duke of Alençon, the King of Navarre, Queen Margerita, the Duke of Guise, the Duke of Epemon, and the other Courtiers and Favourites of those times, shew them to us in such a manner as discovers their strong and their weak side, the good and the bad in them. In a word, Busbeque's Letters are a Model of writing well for Embassadors, who are to give their Masters an Account of what passes in the Courts where they reside.

[H] He was robbed and abused by a Party of Leaguers. Before I give an Account of the Variations and Fallacies concerning Busbequius's Death, I shall say, that Tivannus ought not to have forgot, that That good Man was Ambassador from the Emperor to the Court of France. He did what he could to make his Readers believe, that Busbequius had no other Character there than that of Agent of the Widow of Charles IX (39). As for what he adds, that the Leaguers, who stopped and plundered him, joined to this the most cruel Treatment, which broke his Heart, while they waited for Letters from the Duke de Maienne, I find it no ways conformable to the Narrative of other Authors. Melchior Adam, Swartius, Valerius Andreas, the Life which is at the Head of his Works, Bullart, &c. agree that all his Baggage was returned to him, that he was left at full Liberty to go where he pleased, that the Governor of Rouen promised him to punish those Villains, and that he got himself carried to the House where he died, only because he had some Prefaces of the Sickness which seized him a little after. This we must stick by as the most probable Account; for as to the Rumour which went about, and was asserted by some Authors, viz. that he was killed in a Wood, the Fallacy of it is long since known. The good Philip Camerarius was not undeceived in it, when he published his historical Meditations; for here is a Passage of it (40) from the French Translation: 'It is every way a lamentable Case that so excellent a Man, who had done so much good to the Public, and had been twice Ambassador at Constantinople from the Emperors (41), whence he came safe, after having happily overcome many Dangers, should at last, in a Journey to Diepe, to Henry IV (42), be robbed and murdered in a Forest by a Gang of Highwaymen; a Person worthy of

(39) See the following Remark, Citat. (50).

(40) Lib. v, cap.
xiv, of Vol. III.

(41) He was only so from Ferdinand I.

(42) It is not true that he was going to Henry IV.

'a longer Life, and a milder Death!' Neither was Scaliger undeceived; he says that Busbequius was killed near Paris (43). I should not wonder that Lippius, who was one of Busbequius's good Friends, should, in a heat, mention the pretended Murder in an Epitaph, on the Credit of common Fame: but it is somewhat strange, that at nine Years end he should consecrate that Error; and, being advertized of it, should not take care to correct that Epitaph. It is still to be seen in all the Editions of his Works, with that original Fault: Ecce sustulit viam per ipsam miles incertum an latro, sed sustulit (44). — So he was taken off in his Journey, whether by Soldiers or Robbers, is not certain, but he was taken off. You find it also uncorrected in divers Authors, who speak of Augustus Busbequius; Lippius cannot be excused on the Score of the Affection Poets have for their Works, nor on the Examples of divers Poets, who, having composed Verses in honour of some Friend, whom they falsely thought to be dead, have, nevertheless, published them while that Friend was alive (45). The Author, of whom I speak, did the same in Prose; you may see it still in his Letters: 'In Busbequii morte & tali morte in animo meo dolui, servatum hunc virum per tot discrimina apud exteros, apud barbaros, ut in limine fere patriæ latronum manibus (ita audimus) periret (46). — I was very much grieved at the Death of Busbequius, and the manner of it. That this Man, who escaped so many Dangers among Foreigners and Barbarians, should perish (as we hear) in the very Borders of his Country, by the Hands of Robbers.' He had been advertized of that Falshood (47), and yet did not correct it. As for what remains, since his Letter is dated the eleventh of January 1592, it should from thence be concluded, that Busbequius's Death has not been well placed on the Twenty eighth of October, 1592. I say, this Conclusion must be drawn from it, if it were not more reasonable to suspect the Omission of an I, there. For I see no kind of likelihood that Lippius should date his Letter according to the Style of those who do not begin the Year from January.

I cannot end this without giving an Example of the little Care Authors take to verify what they take at a Distance from the Fountain-head. Quenstedt (48) assures us, That Busbequius was not only an excellent Politician, grave and prudent, but also that he was a great Lover of polite Literature, and above all, that he was very curious in Natural Philosophy. For this, he cites a Letter of Justus Lippius, where only these Words are to be found: Suavem famam reliquit doctrinæ suæ, prudentiæ, probitatis (49). — He left a good Reputation on Account of his Learning, Prudence, and Probity. Quenstedt's Error was owing to his copying Melchior Adam, without giving himself any farther Trouble than barely copying; for if he had ever so little considered what Melchior Adam had grounded his Citation on, he would have thought himself obliged to keep within the same Bounds. I shall set down the Passage entire, that it may serve for a Warning to Transcribers. This is the Judgment that ought to be made of divers Things which I mention: It is not for the sake of the things themselves that I do it, but that they may serve for a Looking-Glass, in which Compilers may see what they ought to avoid. Fuit hic, this is the Passage of Melchior Adam, non solum politicus excellens gravis ac prudens: sed mansuetior etiam Mularum amantissimus: ac imprimis rerum naturalium cognoscendarum

(43) See the Scaligerana.

(44) Lippius Epitaph. lxxviii, ad Belgæ Cent. II, It is dated Jan. 31, 1601.

(45) Goin reproached Mr Menage with an Epitaph upon Corneille, who was supposed to have been dead of an Inflammation of the Lungs.

(46) Lipp. Epitaph. lxxix, Cent. II, Miscell.

(47) De Busbequii morte, scito errorem: sed adnotabitur & tamen sumam epistolæ non historiam vii inferunt. — I know the Mistake concerning Busbequius's Death, but it is to be observed, that I proposed to insert what was reported, not the real History, in my Letter. Id. Epitaph. lxxxii, Cent. iv, Miscell.

(48) De Patriis virorum illust. pag. 109.

(49) The xxixth of the 11d Century Selectorum: Or, as the other Editions have it, Miscellaneum.

* Justus Lippius Cent. II, Epitaph. select. lxxix, Epitaph.

(e) Melch. Adam vit. Jurific. pag. 316. Valer. Andreæ Bibl. Belg. pag. 97. Histoire de l'Archiduc Albert, printed at Co. legn, 1693, p. 9.

to be placed in the Tomb of his Ancestors (e). He was so well pleased with France, that he bought some Lands there, and seemed as if he designed to settle in that Country [f]. The Speeches which he had made to the Kings of France, in French, are much praised (p). The Lordship of Busbec was erected into a Barony by the Archduke Albert, Governor, and afterwards Sovereign of the Spanish Netherlands (g). That Prince designed thereby to honour the Memory of his Governor, and express his Acknowledgment to him.

(f) La Croix du Maine Bibl. François, pag. 475.

(g) Histoire de l'Archid. Albert, pag. 9. & 372.

'scendamus cupidissimus. - - - He was not only 'an excellent Politician, grave and prudent; but 'also a great Lover of polite Literature, and extremely fond of Natural Philosophy.' Lippius is called in as a Witness only to the Elogy of prudent: the rest is all of the other's own coining.

[f] He purchased some Lands in France, and seemed inclined to settle there.] Thuanus informs me of this: I shall give the whole Passage from him, because it confirms what I have said before (viz.) That it is not owing to Thuanus, that we are not absolutely ignorant of the Character that Busbequius had, in France, from his Imperial Majesty. There is, besides, something in this Passage, which might surprize the Readers. 'Elizabetha Caroli uxor vidua - - - in Germaniam ad Maximilianum patrem se contulit, relicto in Gallia, qui res suas procuraret, Augurio Gilsenio Busbequo - - - qui toto vitæ Elizabethæ tempore in Gallia mansit, & post mortem ejus five loci commoditate, five ingeniorum amcenitate captus, comparatis apud nos prediis larem fixit, donec his calamitatis ultimi temporibus cum novam patriam deferere cogeretur, eum ægrè se itineri accingentem mors oppressit. (50) - - - Elizabeth, Widow of Charles, went into Germany to her Father Maximilian, leaving Augerius Gilsenius Busbequius to take Care of her Affairs in France - - - who remained in France as long as Elizabeth lived, and after her Death, invited either by the Convenience of the 'Place, or the Agreeableness of the Inhabitants, he 'purchased Lands, and settled among us, till the last 'calamitous Times, when, being obliged to leave his 'new Country, while he was unwillingly preparing 'for his Journey, he was taken off by Death.' One would naturally conclude from hence, I. That nothing detained the Sieur Busbequius in France, after the Death of the Widow of Charles IX, but the Pleasants of the Country. II. That there passed much Time between the Death of that Queen, and the Departure of her Resident; for to buy Lands in a Country, and to fix one's Abode there, until the last of seven or eight Civil Wars drives you from thence, are things which import more than seven or eight Months. Yet this is all the Time of that good Man's Abode there, after the Death of the Queen his Mistress. I desire no other Witness to this, than Thuanus himself. He tells us, That this Queen died about the latter End of January 1592, and that Busbequius died towards the End of October of the same Year (51). In this Place the Historian gives no other Reason for his Departure than the Death of Elizabeth. 'Cum vero ille (Busbequius) post principis bene de se meritis obitum in Belgium, hoc est in patriam, cum tota familia remeaturus ad iter se accinxisset. - - - But when he (Busbequius) after the Death of the Princess, his Benefactress, had made preparation to return with all his Family, into the Netherlands, where he was born. - - -

(51) Id. lib. 104.

(co) Thuan. Hist. lib. 60. pag. 122.

BUSIRIS. If we believe Diodorus Siculus, there have been divers Busiris's in Egypt: For he relates that Osiris, having resolved upon a great Expedition, declared the Queen, his Wife, (a) Regent of Egypt, and left her two Lieutenants; the one for Counsel, the other to command the Forces; and that he gave the Government of Phœnicia, and the maritime Places, to BUSIRIS (b). In another Place (c) he says, that, after Fifty two Princes had successively possessed the Throne of Menas, from whom they were descended, BUSIRIS became King of Egypt. Eight of his Descendants, continues he, succeeded him, the last of which was called BUSIRIS, and built the magnificent and powerful City, which the Greeks called Thebes: The same which the Egyptians called the City of the Sun (d). He declares elsewhere, that what was said of the Barbarity of one Busiris, was a Fable of the Greeks, but a Fable which had for it's Foundation a Custom practised in Egypt. They sacrificed all the red-haired People that they could find to the Ghost of King Osiris (e); and as the Natives of the Country were hardly ever of that Complexion, there were few, except Strangers, who served for Victims. Now, in the Egyptian Language, Busiris signified the Sepulchre of Osiris: This is the Original of the Story, which passed current among the Greeks, That BUSIRIS King of Egypt was so barbarous, as to order the Throats of all Strangers to be cut (f). They supposed that he himself was sacrificed by Hercules [A], whom he would

(a) She was called Isis.

(b) Diod. Sicul. lib. i, cap. 17.

(c) Id. ibid. cap. xlv.

(d) Id. ibid.

(e) This was out of hatred to Typhon, whose Hair was of this colour, and had killed Osiris. Diod. Sicul. lib. i, cap. lxxxviii.

(f) Id. ibid.

(A) Apollod. Biblioth. lib. ii, p. 129.

[A] He himself was sacrificed by Hercules.] This is what we find upon this Head in Apollodorus (1). After Hercules had killed Antæus, he went into Egypt, where Busiris, the Son of Neptune, and of Lysianassa, the Daughter of Epaphus, was King. This Busiris sacrificed Strangers to Jupiter; this he did in Obedience to an Oracle. The Harvests had been very bad for nine Years successively in Egypt. Upon this, there comes a Soothsayer from Cyprus, whose Name was Thrasius, who declared that this Misfortune would cease, if they every Year sacrificed a Stranger to Jupiter. Busiris, giving Credit to this prophetic Declaration, began to execute it on the Soothsayer himself, and commanded that Thrasius should be sacrificed first; and from that Time treated Strangers in the same manner. Hercules was also designed to be made a Victim; they had seized him, and led him bound to the Altar; but he broke his Chains, and killed Busiris, and Iphidamus and Chabes. The first was the Son of Busiris, the last was his Herald of Arms. Isocrates refutes this Story thus. They, who say that Busiris sacrificed Strangers, say also that Hercules killed him. Now all Historians agree that Hercules lived four Generations after Perseus and Danaë, and above two hundred Years after Busiris (2). The latter was the Son of Neptune, and of Libya the Daughter of Epaphus, who was the first that reigned in the Country which bore her Name (3). Note, that an old Commentator on Virgil differs a little from Apollodorus as to Circumstances: 'Busiris, says he (4), Egypti rex omnibus annis Jovi hospites immolabat. Nam per octo annos sterilitate Ægypto laborante, Pygmalion Cyprius finem futurum non ait, nisi sanguine hostis litatum fuisset. Primus autem Thyestes alienigena immolatus originem sacrificio dedit. - - - Busiris, King of Egypt, sacrificed Strangers every Year to Jupiter. For when Egypt laboured under a Famine of eight Years, Pygmalion of Cyprus said, it would not end, unless they sacrificed the Blood of a Stranger. And Thyestes, a Stranger, being first offered, laid

(2) Isocrates in Busiridis laudatione, pag. 333. Edit. Basil, 1579, in Folio.

(3) Id. ibid. pag. 328.

(4) Philargyrius in Georg. Virgil. lib. iii, ver. 5.

would have had the Boldness to have served like the rest. There is a Passage in Virgil concerning Busiris, which has exercised the Interpreters [B]. It seems to me,

(5) Ovidius de arte amandi, l. i. 'laid the Foundation of the Sacrifice.' Ovid reports the Fact just as Apollodorus does (5).

[B] A Passage in Virgil concerning Busiris — has exercised Interpreters. Virgil places the Cruelties of that Tyrant among the Stories, which the Poets had sung a thousand and a thousand Times over, and which he could not make choice of for the Subject of his Poems, so very trite a Subject it was.

Cætera, quæ vacuas tenuissent carmina mentes,
Omnia jam vulgata. Quis aut Eurythea durum,
Aut inlaudati nescit Busiridis aras (6) ?

(6) Virg. Georgic. lib. iii, v. 3.

All other Themes, that careless Minds invite,
Are worn with use, unworthy me to write.
Busiris' Altars, and the dire Decrees
Of hard Euristheus, ev'ry Reader sees :
DRYDEN.

GRAMMATICAL Remarks on the Word inlaudatus.

The Word inlaudatus strikes every Reader; it has been found altogether improper: Is it enough to say of so inhuman a Monster that he was not praised, or that he deserves no Praise? Ought he not to have made use of a Term, which should inspire his Readers with all the Horror that so much Cruelty deserves? This Censure is not new, nor invented by those, who are on Mr Perrault's Side; the Grammarians who lived a little after Virgil entered that Process against him. 'Nonnulli Grammatici ætatis superioris, in quibus est Cornutus Annæus, haud sane indocti neque ignobiles, qui commentaria in Virgilium composuerunt - - - inlaudati parum idoneum esse verbum dicunt, neque id satis esse ad faciendum scelerati hominis detestationem, qui quod hospites omnium gentium immolare solitus fuit, non laude indignus, sed detestatione execrationeque totius generis humani dignus esset (7). — Some Grammarians of the last Age, among whom is Cornutus Annæus, neither unlearned nor obscure, who have wrote Commentaries on Virgil - - - say, that the Term inlaudatus is not proper, nor sufficient to raise a due Detestation of that wicked Man, who, in that he used to sacrifice Strangers of all Nations, was not only unworthy of Praise, but deserved the Detestation and Curse of all Mankind.' He did not want Apologists at that Time any more than now, and we shall see the two Reasons that one of his Advocates in the second Century alledged in his Defence. I. In the first place he maintains, that the Word inlaudatus or inlaudatus, signifying a Person who never did any thing Praise-worthy, is very proper to give the Idea of a very wicked Man; for we rarely see any so profligate and wicked, as never to have spoke some Word, or done some Action, that deserved to be approved. He adds, that, seeing the Term inlaudatus signifies the utmost Limits of moral Good, that of inlaudatus ought to signify the utmost extent of Wickedness; and he proves, by Passages out of Homer, that the most sublime Praises are contained in Terms exclusive of Imperfection, and that therefore a Term, which excludes Praise, is the most proper in the World for Blame. He alledges the Term inamabilis, which Virgil is content to use to express the most detestable Thing in the World. 'Nemo quicquam tam afflictis est moribus, quin faciat aut dicat nonnunquam aliquid quod laudari queat. Unde hic antiquissimus versus vicem proverbi celebratus est, Πολλὰκι γὰρ καὶ μωρὸς ἀνὴρ μὲν καὶ καίριον εἶπεν. Sed enim qui omni in re atque omni tempore laude omni vacat, is inlaudatus est, idque omnium pessimum deterrimusque est; sicuti omnis culpæ privatio inculpatum facit, inculpatum autem instar est absolutæ virtutis, illaudatus igitur quoque finis est extremæ malitiæ. Itaque Homerus non virtutibus appellandis sed vitii detrahendis laudare amplius solet - - - Eadem ratione idem Virgilius inamabilem dixit stygiam paludem, nam sicut inlaudatus καλὰ laudis ἐστίν, ita inamabilem καλὰ amoris ἐστίν delectatus est (8). — There is no Man of so abandoned Behaviour, but he sometimes says, or does, something or other which may be commended. Hence this ancient Verse is grown into a Proverb. Πολλὰκι γὰρ καὶ μωρὸς ἀνὴρ μὲν καὶ καίριον εἶπεν. A Fool oft speaks to the purpose. Certainly, he who in every thing, and at all times, misses of Praise, is inlaudatus, and is the worst and basest of Mankind: as the privation of all blame, makes a Man blameless, and blameless signifies absolute Virtue; so praiseless denotes the extremity of consummate Wickedness. Therefore Homer, when he commends highly, does it not by naming Virtues, but denying Vices. — In the same manner Virgil himself calls the Stygian Lake inamabilis; for as inlaudatus imports the privation of all Praise, so inamabilis signifies Detestation or Deprivation of all Love. The second Manner of justifying Virgil is this. In old Latin, laudare signified to name; so that inlaudatus is the same as inlaudabilis; 'tis supposed, that the Poet meant that Busiris did not deserve so much as to have his Name mentioned. Now this is expressing the Cruelty of that Tyrant very strongly; it is representing it as the most execrable thing in the World. Altero modo inlaudatus ita defenditur. Laudare significat priscæ lingua nominare appellareque. Sic in actionibus civilibus auctor laudari dicitur, quod est nominari. Inlaudatus enim est quasi inlaudabilis, qui neque mentione aut memoria ulla dignus, neque unquam nominandus est. Sicuti quondam à communi concilio Asiæ decretum est, uti nomen ejus, qui templum Dianæ Ephesiæ incenderat, ne quis ullo in tempore nominaret (9). — The Term inlaudatus is defended another way thus. Laudare in ancient Language signifies, to name or call; so in civil Actions the Plaintiff is said laudari, that is, to be named; for inlaudatus is as much as to say inlaudabilis, which is not worthy of any mention or remembrance, nor ought ever to be named: as once it was decreed by a general Council of Asia, that no Body should ever name him, who burnt the Temple of Diana at Ephesus. Macrobius has copied all this Passage of A. Gellius without citing any one. See the seventh Chapter of the sixth Book of his Saturnalia.

(7) Anulus Gellii, lib. ii, cap. 6.

(9) Id. ibid.

It would be very difficult, at present, to judge which are most in the right, the Critics of Virgil, or his Advocate A. Gellius; for to perceive the whole Strength of the Objection, and of the Answer, we ought to know what Idea such and such Words presented to the Mind in Virgil's Time. Argument serves but little in this Matter, because the Force of Words depend altogether on Use. Now to know the Use right, we must either live with those who made Use of such a Language, or consult Authors, who have clearly and precisely noted the Ideas, which answered to such and such Words. It is very certain, that, if one of our modern Poets should make use of the Epithet not praised, or not worthy of Praise, in speaking of Caligula, he would not only expose himself, without Reply, to the Censure that Gellius endeavoured to refute, but would even be turned into ridicule. Always supposing, that the Piece, wherein he should speak so was of a grave Style, and not of the burlesque or comic Kind. It would be in vain to offer Gellius's first Reason, and philosophize on the exclusive Terms of Perfection or Imperfection. 'Sir, might any one answer him, we are used to apply the Idea of a very small Evil to the Word not worthy of Praise; so that, when you tell us that Caligula is not worthy of Praise, it is so far from making us conceive a wicked Person and a Monster, that you incline us to think that he was but moderately wicked.' So that it would be impossible to save Virgil's Honour, if, in Augustus's Time, inlaudatus had been of no greater Force than our English Expression unextolled, or unworthy of Praise. Gellius's second Reason does not remove the Difficulty; for if a celebrated Author is permitted to make use of old Expressions, it is only on Condition that the Word has not altered its Nature by the Acquisition of a new Sense. This Rule Virgil had violated, if his Expression were to be judged me, that they do not take Isoerates right, who say that he made a Panegyric on that infamous Tyrant Busiris [C]. It is not certain that there ever was a King of that Name in Egypt [D]; but we must own, there was a City in Egypt of that Name [E]. Melanchthon thought it very probable that Busiris was the same judged by the second Answer of his Advocate. In Augustus's Time, the chief, governing, common Signification of the Words laudare, laudatus, inlaudatus, were not to name, named, not named, not worthy to be named, but to praise, praised, not praised, or if you will, not worthy of Praise. It would then have been very wrong to make use of the Word inlaudatus in a Signification derived from a Signification of laudare, which had scarce any more Place, but had yielded it to another Signification. Besides that it is a Licence somewhat vicious to make use of a Word, in which no reasonable Sense is to be found, but by supposing, that a Participle was put in the Place of a Noun: and yet what Participle? A Participle which denies the Fact; a Noun that denies the Right; a Participle wherein the Event is found; a Noun in which we find what does not deserve to happen. What shall we say then? I should not for my part think it amiss, to suppose, that That Place of Virgil is one of those Verses, wherein the Necessity of the short and long Syllables engages Poets to make use of a Word less proper, or even prejudicial to the Sense. The Quantity of Syllables requires many Sacrifices from Poets, in the dead Languages, as Rhime requires many in the Living.

(8) Id. ibid.

Pharaoh

I distinguished before between the comic and the grave Style, because I remembered some popular Ways of speaking, not unlike the unpraised Cafulgula. 'The Robbers stripped this good old Man to his Shirt, in a Wood covered with Snow; this was not over pleasant. Such a one received a Musket Shot through the Body before Philipp's burgh; this was not wholesome.' These are popular Phrases, or, as one may say, Jests: They are composed of Terms exclusive of some good Quality. A. Gellius admires Homer, who by such like Words raised Commendation to a superlative Degree. These are doubtless Privileges of the Greek Tongue, on which Latin Authors ought not to have made the Reflexion, which Martial made in another Case (10), if the learned Casaubon's justification of Livy be a good one. It has been thought a little strange that this Roman only called Polybius no despicable Author (11). According to our Ideas, it is a very mean encomium; an Author cannot be more moderately praised; nevertheless Casaubon shows, by I know not how many Examples, that That Expression of Livy is of an extensive Signification to the Honour and Praise of Polybius (12). I allow it; it is a strong Proof of the Capriciousness of Custom in Languages.

[C] They seem not to have entered into the Sense of Isoerates, who say, that he made a Panegyric on Busiris.] Almost all those who give the List of Writers, who have let loose their Pens in praising Evil; as for Example, Fever, Gout, Folly, Nero (13), place Isoerates in the first Rank, as the Panegyrist of Busiris. If they had read the Speech, which they have taken for a Panegyric on that Tyrant, with any kind of Attention, I am certain they would have made these two Reflexions: First, That Isoerates's chief Aim is to criticize an Orator (14), who had composed an Elogy on Busiris, and the Accusation of Socrates. He criticizes that Elogy on this Account, That the Author had owned the Evil that was said of Busiris, and had not made the most of the Good which might have been said of him. These are the grossest Defects of a Panegyrist. On this Head Isoerates assumes the Air of a Master, and shews that Orator what might be said to the Honour of Busiris. The second Reflexion is, that Isoerates, in pointing out, to this bad Panegyrist, the common Places which he ought to have chosen, and the manner how he ought to have treated them, to make an Elogy on Busiris, sets forth none but very good and very laudable Actions, which he pretends ought to have been attributed to him. He does not allow of the Cruelty that is attributed to that Prince towards Strangers, neither does he invent Reasons to justify so barbarous a Conduct; on the contrary, he blames the Panegyrist, who had owned that Cruelty in his Hero, and had also amplified it; and for his own Part, he shews him the way to refute it (15). To (15) See above, Citation (a).

σέσω δέ τις κεχρησθαι τοῖς λόγοις, ὥς ἐπεὶ μὲν Βουσιρὶς ἀπολογησάσθαι φάσκει, ἢ, ὅπως τις ὑπαρχέας αὐτὸν διαβολῆς ἀπὸλλας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τυραννικὴν αὐτοῦ τὸ μέγεθος παρενομίαν προσήλκε, ἢ ἐκ ἐσθ' ὅπως ἂν τις δεινότερον ἐξεύρειν δύνησθαι. Τῶν γὰρ ἄλλων τῶν ἐπιχειρησάντων ἐκείνῳ λοιδόρειν, τοσούτῳ μόνον περὶ αὐτοῦ ἑλασφημῶντων, οἷς ἔθνε τῶν ξένων τὰς ἀφικνημένους· σὺ καὶ κατὰ τοῦτον αὐτὸν τὸς ἀνθρώπους ἠτιάσῃ. 'Tantum abest ut eam in dicendo rationem tu secutus sis, ut Busiridis defensionem professus, non modò crimina, quæ illi obijciuntur, non refutaveris, sed & tam infamem ei notam immanitatis inuuleris, ut nihil contumeliosius excogitari queat. Nam cum alii quibus illi maledicere vitum est, unam in eo mactationem hospitum execrentur: tu etiam devorare homines solitum, es criminatus (16). — You have been so far from following this Method, that, when you undertake to defend Busiris, you not only do not refute the Crimes which are charged on him, but have branded him with such cruelty, that nothing more infamous can be imagined. For where-as others, who have thought fit to speak ill of him, detest in him the bare killing of Strangers: you have accused him of being accustomed to eat Men too.' So that it is evident he ought not to be placed among those, who wrote Panegyrics on wicked Things; since, besides that his Oration is rather a Criticism on the Elogy that was made on Busiris, than an Elogy on Busiris; he does not undertake the Defence of the Crimes which are imputed to that Tyrant; He supposes, that one might set forth divers fine Actions of that Prince, though he confesses he has no good Author to warrant them; but he says, that the Orator, whom he criticizes, cannot quarrel with him on that Head, since he advances much more incredible Things without any Proof. He does not deny but the Objection would be good in the Mouth of another. Is not this declaring, that he had very little Regard for the Honour of Busiris, and that he meant nothing more than to censure an impertinent Panegyrist? Ἐγὼ δὲ εἰ μὲν ἄλλος τις μοι τὸν τρόπον τούτον ἐπέκλυεν, ἠγόμεν ἂν αὐτὸν παπαιδευμένως ἐπιτίμειν σοὶ δ' ἐπεσχέκη ταύτην προείσθαι τὴν ὑπολήψιν. Ego vero, si quis alius hoc mihi opponeret, erudite me ab eo reprehendi putarem. Sed tibi sic argumentari nefas est (17). — If any body else should object this to me, I should think he blamed me judiciously. But you cannot be allowed to argue thus. Therefore to me it seems that Servius was not exact, when he said that inlaudatus in Virgil ought to be taken for illaudabilis (18). His Reason is, that, since Isoerates praised that Prince, it could not be said that Busiris was a Man who had never been praised. Servius would have done better if he had cited the Orator criticized by Isoerates (19); for that Orator praised Busiris, considered in the same Light in which Virgil considers him.

[D] It is not certain that there ever was a Busiris King of Egypt.] Strabo cites Eratosthenes, who affirms, that there had been no King, nor Tyrant, whose Name was Busiris; but that the Story, which was told of him, was founded on the Cruelty which the Inhabitants of the City and Province of Busiris exercised on Strangers. Οὐδὲ βασιλεὺς μὰ Δία, ἐδὲ τυραννὴ γενομένη τινὸς τῶ Βουσιρίδος. Cum medius fidius nullus neque rex fuerit Busiris nec tyrannus (20). — When indeed there was no King nor Tyrant named Busiris.

[E] — but there was a City of that Name.] Divers Authors mention it. It was built about the middle of Egypt, in the Delta: There was a very fine Temple of Isis, and the Tomb of Osiris, to be seen there. Some said, that Isis, having caused the Body of Osiris (21) to be put into an Ox of Wood, had built that Tomb for him. This might have

(10) Dicunt Erinon tamen Poetæ. Sed Græci quibus est nihil negatum, Et quos Ætæ Ætæ docet Ionæ. Nobis non licet esse tam differtis. Qui Mosis collimus severiores. Martial. Epig. xii, lib. ix.

(11) Haud quæquam spernendus author. Livius, lib. xxx, in fin.

(12) Casaubon Prefat. in Polyb.

(13) Infames materias, five quis mavult dicere inopinabiles quas Græci ἀδόξαι ὑποβόλαι appellant. — Infamous, or if you please, unthought of Subjects, which the Greeks call ἀδόξαι ὑποβόλαι. Aul. Gellius, lib. xvii, cap. xii.

(14) He was called Polycrates, and taught Orestes in Cyprus.

(16) Isoerates. in Busir. circa init.

(17) Isoerates. in Busir. p. 333.

(18) Servius in Georg. lib. iii, ver. 5.

(19) Quintilian, lib. ii, cap. xvii, does not cite Isoerates, but this Orator.

(20) Strabo, lib. xvii, pag. 552.

(21) It must be read in Stephanus Byzantinus, ὁ δὲ καὶ τῶν ὀσίων and not ὁ δὲ καὶ τῶν ὀσίων. This is Bochart's Correction. See Berkeley's Stephanus de urbibus.

(g) Melanct.
in Chron. lib. ii.

Pharaoh, who caused the Children of the Israelites to be destroyed (g). Orosius places him Seven hundred and Seventy five Years before the Foundation of Rome [F].

(22) Stephanus
de urbis Voe Bdēpū: he does hardly any more than copy Herodotus, lib. ii, cap.
59.

(23) Citat. (b).

(24) In Busfidis
laudatione, pag.
328.

(25) Strabo, lib.
xvii. pag. 552.

have been the Etymology of that City's Name. Others pretend, that it was so called because Osiris gave the Government of it to Busiris (22). We have said in the Body of the Article (23), that, according to Diodorus Siculus, there was a Busiris, whom Osiris left Governour of Phœnicia, and the maritime Cities, at his setting out on a great Expedition. Isocrates relates, that Busiris, leaving Lybia where he was born, and where his Mother reigned, went into Egypt, and founded a Kingdom there (24). Without doubt, it was in the Country that bore his Name; for there was not only a City in Egypt called Busiris, but also a Government, or a Nomos, of that Name (25). That City was entirely razed in the Reign of Disclefian on account of Rebellion (26).

[F] Orosius places him 775 Years before the Foundation of Rome. Eusebius makes him live in Joshua's Time, about 700 Years before Romulus built Rome. These are the Words of Orosius. 'Busiris in Ægypto cruentissimi tyranni crudelis hospitalitas & crudelior religio tunc fuit, qui innocentium hospitem sanguinem diis scelerum suorum participibus propinabat (27). — The cruel Hospitality, and more cruel Religion of Busiris, a most bloody Tyrant in Egypt, was at that time, who offered the Blood of innocent Strangers to the Gods, Partakers of his Crimes.' St Augustin spoke almost in the same Strain (28).

(26) Eusebius in Chron.

(27) Oros. lib. i, cap. xii.

(28) August. de Civit. Dei, lib. xviii, cap. xii.

BUSLEIDEN (JEROM), in Latin Buslidius, illustrious by his Embassies, and by the Love he shewed for Learning, in founding the College of three Languages in the University of Louvain [A]. I shall add very little to what has been said of him in Moreri's Dictionary. I do not believe that he was the Maker of his own Fortune [B], as is affirmed in that Dictionary. He was much regretted by Erasmus (a). Some Verses, Speeches, and Epistles of his, were found at Bruges, a long time after his Death (b). I do not know that the Public has seen any thing of his, except a Letter that was printed with the Utopia of Sir Thomas More. It is a great Mistake to say that Cardinal Ximenes founded Colleges by his Example [C].

(a) See the Greek and Latin Verses which he made in his Praise. Epist. vi, lib. iii.

(b) Val. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 337.

[A] He founded a College of three Languages in the University of Louvain. By his Will, made at Mechlin, the Twenty second of June 1517, a few Months before his Death, he left an Endowment for the Maintenance of three Professors, one in Latin, one in Greek, and one in Hebrew (1).

[B] I do not believe that he was the Maker of his own Fortune. He had a Brother named Francis, who was Preceptor to Prince Philip, the Father of the Emperor Charles V. That Preceptor always preserved a great Power over the Mind of his Disciple, and was made Archbishop of Bezançon. Having seconded the Solicitations of the Embassadors of Ferdinand and Isabella, he overcame Philip's Reluctance for the Voyage to Spain (2). He was given him for his Counsellor (3), and died in the Year 1500. He was much lamented by that Prince, whose Affection he had gained by his Integrity and Prudence. This is what I borrowed from the Life of Cardinal Ximenes, composed by the Eloquent Mr Flecher, Bishop of Nismes. There is all the Probability in the World to believe, that the Archbishop of Bezançon, with the Credit he had in the Netherlands, made his Brother Jerom's Fortune. They had a Brother, named Giles, who had a Place in the King of Spain's Treasury (4). He was Executor of Jerom's Will, as to what related to the College of the three Languages. Erasmus

(1) Miræus, de Script. feci xvi. pag. 10.

(2) Flecher, Vie du Card. Ximenes liv. i, pag. 172, Edit. Holl.

(3) Id. ibid. pag. 192.

(4) Thus I translate the Words Catholicus Regis a rationibus, used by Erasmus, Epist. vi, Book iii.

exhorts him in a Letter not to suffer himself to be diverted from so laudable an Undertaking (5). In another Letter (6) he recommends a converted Jew to him, as a very fit Person to teach the Hebrew Tongue in that new College. He was a Spanish Physician, whose name was Matthew Adrian; he was admitted to the Professorship, for which Erasmus judged him fit, and for which he caused him to come from Germany. That Professor read his first Lecture the first of December 1518 (7).

[C] It is a great Mistake to say, that by his Example Cardinal Ximenes founded Colleges. There was not three Months between the Death of Busleiden, and that of the Cardinal, and he had completed his University of Alcala, some Years before his Death. Albertus Miræus committed the Error of which I speak. 'Ea certe laus, says he, Buslidio nostro debetur quod primus in orbe Christiano collegium trilingue instituit: Cujus deinde exemplum secuti sunt alii; in his Franciscus I, Rex, Lutetiae in Gallia, & Franciscus Ximenes — Compluti in Hispania (8). — This Honour is certainly due to our Busleiden, that he was the first that founded a College of three Languages in Christendom: whose example others afterwards followed; among the rest King Francis I, at Paris in France, and Francis Ximenes — at Alcala in Spain.'

(5) Erasmus, ibid.

(6) The xliii of Book iii.

(7) Miræus de Script. seculi xvii, pag. 10, 29.

(8) Ibid. pag. 10.

BUSTAMANTINUS (JOHN), Professor of Philosophy and Physic in the University of Alcala, the Place of his Birth, writ a Book that is admirable, if we judge of it by the Title [A]. It was printed at Alcala, in the Year 1595, in two Volumes in Quarto; and at Lyons, in the Year 1602, in two Volumes in Octavo.

[A] He wrote an admirable Book, if we judge of it by the Title. This is it: 'Joannis Bustamantini Camærensis (1), apud Complutenses Philosophiae & Medicinae primariae Moderatoris publici, de reptilibus vere animantibus S. Scripturae libri sex. Opus eximiae eruditionis & utilitatis, cum Theologis tam Scholasticis, quam concionatoribus sacris, scripturaeque interpretibus, tum Medicis, Philosophis, & iis qui de bella literarum supellectile bene sentiunt (2). — Six Books of Johannes Bustamantini of Camæren, Chief President of Philosophy and Physic at Alcala, on the Reptiles which are real Animals in the Holy Scripture. A Work of extraordinary Learning and Use, both to Divines, as well as Scholastics as public Preachers, and Interpreters of Scripture, and to Physicians, Philosophers, and all the Well-wishers to good Literature.' Mr Bochart quotes this Book, sometimes, in his Hieroicoicon, which is on the same Subject.

(1) Nicolas Antonio Bibl. Hisp. Tom. I, p. 905, calls him Joannes de Bustamante de la Camara, and says he was a Native of Alcala.

(2) This, from Opus, is in the Title of the second Volume.

tinus Camærensis, Chief President of Philosophy and Physic at Alcala, on the Reptiles which are real Animals in the Holy Scripture. A Work of extraordinary Learning and Use, both to Divines, as well as Scholastics as public Preachers, and Interpreters of Scripture, and to Physicians, Philosophers, and all the Well-wishers to good Literature.' Mr Bochart quotes this Book, sometimes, in his Hieroicoicon, which is on the same Subject.

BUTAS

BUTAS, a Greek Poet, Author of the Work in elegiac Verse, wherein he gave the Reasons of the Pagan Ceremonies. Plutarch cites him in the Life of Romulus [A]. In my Opinion, they, who doubt whether Arnobius quotes him, are in the wrong [B].

(1) Pag. 31, C.

(2) Plut. in Romulo, pag. 31.

[A] Plutarch cites him in the Life of Romulus (1). It is in the Place where he speaks of the Lupercalia. Βάτας δὲ τις αἰτίας μυθολογίας ἐν ἑλεγεῖοις περὶ τῶν παλαιῶν ἀνὰ γένος, φησὶ. Causas fabulosas Butas quidam in Elegiis rerum Romanarum prodit (2). — One Butas has given an Explanation of the religious Fables, in his Elegiac Verses on the Roman Affairs. He was perhaps but a poor Author, yet he might be very useful if we had him at present: Our Critics would find Gold in that Dunghil, I mean the Explication of divers things, which are not well understood concerning the Religion of the Pagans.

[B] They who doubt whether Arnobius quotes him are in the wrong. After he has said that Fauna, or the good Goddess, having drunk a full Barrel of Wine unknown to her Husband, was whipt with Rods of Myrtle, he adds, for which reason Myrtle is forbid when the Woman celebrate the Feast of the good Goddess, and he cites Butas: 'Nec myrtas fas sit inferre verbenas, sicut suis scribit in Causis Butas (3). — Nor is it lawful to adorn the Altar with Myrtle, as Butas writes in his Causa.' They, who were ignorant that there ever had been such an Author in the World, corrected that word so often till at last they made Plutarch of it. First they put Butas instead of Butas, and then Plutar instead of Butas, and last of all, they said that Plutar was the Abbreviation of Plutarch (4). That Conjecture seemed the happier to them, as it is certain, that Plutarch (5) had said what Arnobius alleges. However, let us be assured that Arnobius cited Butas; for nothing hinders but that what is read in Plutarch, concerning the Interdiction of the Myrtle, may be found yet more clearly in the Work of this same Butas, who was quoted by Plutarch.

(3) Arnobius adversus gentes, lib. v, pag. 168. Vossius de Hist. Græc. pag. 337. cited in Sextio.

(4) Heraldus, in his Notes on this place of Arnobius, adopts all this.

(5) In the Questions on the Roman Affairs. He calls that Book αἰτίας μυθολογίας, in Romulo & Camillo apud Vossium de Histor. Græc. pag. 337.

BUTEO (JOHN), a famous Mathematician of the XVIth Century, was born at Charpei, near Valencia, in Dauphiné (a). He was a Friar of the Order of St Anthony, and yet studied the Mathematics with the utmost Application. He invented divers Instruments and Machines, and composed several Books [A]. He published one among the rest, on the Dimensions of Noah's Ark, wherein he shewed, that it might easily contain all the Animals that were shut up in it, and the necessary Provisions for their Subsistence, during the Flood. He disputed against his Master Oroncius Finæus, about the squaring of the Circle (b). The Civil-War, on the account of Religion, which laid the Kingdom waste, especially Dauphiné, in the first Year of the Reign of Charles IX, took him from his Books; for he was forced to quit his Residence, and go to Romans, where he died of Melancholy in 1564, aged Seventy five Years. Thuanus gives this Account (c); but another Historian, more credible in this Point than he, affirms, that Buteo died in the Year 1560, in the Abbey of St Anthony [B]; and so those of the Protestant Religion are absolved of the Crime of having caused the Death of that learned Person. Besides the Mathematics, he understood Greek and the Law very well. He wrote some good Books of Civil-Law. See Mr Moreri at the Word BOTEON [C].

(a) Allard. Bibliothèque de Dauphiné, pag. 41.

(b) Thuanus, lib. xxxvi, pag. 727.

(c) Ibid.

(1) Thuanus, lib. xxxvi, pag. 727.

(2) Additions aux éloges tirez de Mr de Thou, Tom. I, p. 266.

(3) Bibliot. de Dauphiné, p. 42.

(4) Abrégé de l'Histoire de Dauphiné, cité par Teissier, Elog. Tom. II, p. 403.

[A] He composed several Books (1). Here are the Titles of some of them: De libra & statera. Cujus formæ & capacitatis fuerit arca Noë. De publico ponte Cæsaris. Explanatio ad Quintilianum locum Geometricum. Emendatio figuræ organæ à Columella descriptæ. De fluviaticis insulis, secundum jus civile dividendis. De quadraturis circularum tam antiquis quam novis. De fluentis aquæ mensura. Ad problema cubi duplicandi. Geometria cognitio Jurisconsulti necessaria. Ad legem Julianam Si ita scriptum. Ad legem Africanam Qui quadraginta. Ad locum Vitruvii de proportionibus lapidum corruptum restitutum. You will find some other Titles in Mr Teissier

(2). The Sieur Allard says, that Buteo translated the Menologe, and the Horloge of the Greeks (3). [B] Another Historian, more to be credited in this Point than Thuanus, affirms, that Buteo died in the Abbey of St Anthony. This Historian is Mr Chorier (4). The Preference which I give him is founded on this, that his Work is confined to the Province of Dauphiné. Consequently it is to be presumed that he drew his Accounts from more exact Memoirs than Thuanus, in what relates to the illustrious Men of that Province; for Thuanus collected Memoirs, indifferently, concerning illustrious Men of all Countries, and he treated that Part as a small Accessory. His principal Design was to give the History of France, and even that of all Europe.

[C] See Mr Moreri, at the Word BOTEON. This is the French Name, which he makes to answer to the Latin Name Buteo, by which our Mathematician was known. He notes, that the Translator of Thuanus's History turns Buteo wrong into Bourel (a). The Editions of Holland have changed Bourel into Boutel. Indeed Boutel agrees better with Buteo than Bourel: so that it is probable that du Rier said Boutel, and not Bourel. Yet I find Bourel in his Translation (5), and Mr Teissier repeats the same Word in his Additions. Besides, I find in the Bibliothèque of Dauphiné (6), composed by a Man of that Country (7), that Buteo is Borel or Boteon in French.

[a] John Buteo is called Bourel, in the Index Thuanus. REM. CRIT.]

(5) Apud Teissier, Elog. Tom. I, pag. 264.

(6) Pag. 41.

(7) Guy Allard Conseiller du Roi, Président en l'Election de Grenoble.

BZOVIVS (a) (ABRAHAM), was one of the most famous Writers of the XVIIth Century, by the astonishing Fecundity of his Pen. Some maintain, that it is no Hyperbole to say, that he composed more Books than others have read. Two Pages would hardly contain the Titles only of his Writings (b). The chief of his Books is the Continuation of Baronius. He began at the Year 1198, where that Cardinal had ended, and composed twelve Volumes of Annals of the Church, which are not all printed as yet. They were not much valued at first [A]. He

(a) Thus they latinise his Polish Name Bzovius.

(b) Qui (tituli) si referendi sint vix binæ eos pagine caperent. Janus Nicius Erythraeus Pinacote 1, pag. 198.

[A] He composed twelve Volumes of Annals — which are not all printed as yet. They were not much valued at first. There are nine printed: the first was printed at Cologne, in the Year 1616; the seven following were printed at the same place one after another; the eighth in the Year 1641; the ninth was printed at Rome in the Year 1672; the eighth begins with the Year 1534, and ends with the Death of Pius IV, in 1565; the ninth comprehends the Pontificate of Pius V. The Author

VOL. II.

000

thor

was a Pole by Birth, and a Dominican. When he went to Rome, he was received there with open Arms by the Pope, and lodged in the Vatican. He deserved that Reception; for he imitated Baronius wonderfully, in his manner of turning all things to favour the plenary Power, and raise the Glory of the Papal See. His inconsiderate and violent Zeal drove him into Proceedings, whereof he had reason to repent. He had very much abused the Emperor, Lewis of Bavaria, and razed him ignominiously out of the Catalogue of Emperors. The Duke of Bavaria was so incensed at this Audaciousness, that, not satisfied with causing an Apology to be wrote for that Emperor, he brought an Action in Form against the Annalist, and got him condemned to make a public Retraction [B]. Bzovius did not get off for this Disgrace; he was treated like a Dog in the Apology of Lewis of Bavaria, published by George Herwart [C], and which made great Breaches in the Reputation of the Dominican. It is pretended, that Simon Starovolsius repaired them the best he could [D]. Bzovius would have continued till his Death in the Vatican, if the Murder of one of his menial Servants had not struck him with a Terror, which obliged him to retire into the Convent of Minerva (e). The Murderer was capable of undertaking any thing, after the Life he had led [E]. Bzovius died in that

(e) It is of the Order of the Dominicans.

thor whom I quote observes, that the ill Success of those, who undertook the same thing, gave this Man's Labours some Reputation, which but for that had been a bad Commodity for the Book-sellers. These are his Words: 'Præsertim cum non parum multi ab excessu Baronii assiduo opere eandem incudem dies noctesque tutiderint, neque adhuc quidquam in hoc genere quod magnopere probares attulerint. Quamobrem Bzovii Annales quorum præcia in æstimatione hominum diu jaecerunt, cum nondum quidquam quod sit vendibilis appareat, ceperunt caput attollere, seque altius efferre. Itaque merci quæ prope inven-

(1) Nicus Erythreus Pinacoth. I, pag. 198.

(2) Erythreus had just said, pag. 197, that Jerome Vecchiatus had spoke ill of Lewis of Bavaria. Scripserat etiam in eo (libro) de Ludovico Imperatore nonnulla que Ducis Bavarie animum offendere.

Legi ego datam ad Hieronymum à Ludovico Cardinali Ludovico, cum quo fortasse Dux ille quæstus fuerat, quique tum rerum potiebatur, epistolam, in qua ejus vicem dolet qui ea ætate que esset oculi in primis cupida tantum in se negotii molem attraxisset.

For he had wrote some things in that Book concerning the Emperor Lewis, that offended the Duke of Bavaria. I have read a Letter to Jerome from Cardinal Lewis Ludovici, to whom probably the Duke had made Complaint, and who was then in Power, in which he pities his Case, that at such an Age, when Quiet is most desirable, he had involved himself in so troublesome an Affair.

(3) Nicus Erythreus, pag. 199.

(4) Maimbourg, Decad. de l'Emp. lib. vi, pag. 620.

(5) It should have been Starovolsius.

(6) Nic Erythreus Pinacoth. I, pag. 200.

(7) It should have been Starovolsius.

(8) It should have been Starovolsius.

(9) It should have been Starovolsius.

(10) It should have been Starovolsius.

(11) It should have been Starovolsius.

(12) It should have been Starovolsius.

(13) It should have been Starovolsius.

(14) It should have been Starovolsius.

(15) It should have been Starovolsius.

(16) It should have been Starovolsius.

(17) It should have been Starovolsius.

(18) It should have been Starovolsius.

(19) It should have been Starovolsius.

(20) It should have been Starovolsius.

(21) It should have been Starovolsius.

(22) It should have been Starovolsius.

(23) It should have been Starovolsius.

(24) It should have been Starovolsius.

(25) It should have been Starovolsius.

(26) It should have been Starovolsius.

(27) It should have been Starovolsius.

(28) It should have been Starovolsius.

(29) It should have been Starovolsius.

(30) It should have been Starovolsius.

(31) It should have been Starovolsius.

(32) It should have been Starovolsius.

(33) It should have been Starovolsius.

(34) It should have been Starovolsius.

(35) It should have been Starovolsius.

(36) It should have been Starovolsius.

(37) It should have been Starovolsius.

(38) It should have been Starovolsius.

(39) It should have been Starovolsius.

(40) It should have been Starovolsius.

his Censure to other things, and therefore his Work incurred the Indignation of that Tribunal. 'Invectus est in eum, it is Nicus Erythreus speaks again, acriter vehementerque Georgius Hervartus qui Ludovici defensionem arripuerat, adeo ut quantum in ipso fuerit omnem ab eo ingenii, memorie, solertia, acuminis, diligentie, fidei & integritatis commendationem averterit: qui Hervartus liber Ludovici defensi titulo inscriptus superiorum decreto vetitus, statim depulsus est ab hominum manibus propterea quod ille cum Ludovici defensione conjunxerat multorum præterea dedecus.'

[D] Starovolsius repaired them the best he could.] That is to say, he gave Bzovius all the Praises due to an excellent Writer. But this was not answering the Proofs of his Adversary. However it be, let us hear what Nicus Erythreus says. 'Quod Hervartus Bzovio ingenii, judicii, memorie, eruditionis, eloquentieque patrimonium est conatus eripere, id illi Simon Starovolsius (5) in scriptorum Polonicorum Hecatontade tanquam tutor fidelis ac fortis summa ope studuit conservare, ac præter alias laudes quibus eum exornat, virum vocat ad laudem, ad gloriam, ad immortalitatem nominis, ad sæculi sui miraculum, ad posteritatis utilitatem divinitus datum atque concessum. --- Abat Stock of Wit, Judgment, Memory, Learning, and Eloquence, which Herwart endeavoured to take from Bzovius, Simon Starovolsius, in his Century of Polish Writers, has, like a faithful and brave Guardian, endeavoured to preserve to him, and besides other Encomiums which he bestows on him, he calls him a Man granted and sent by Heaven, for Praise, Honour, and an immortal Name, for the Miracle of his Age, and the Benefit of Posterity. A meer Rhetorical Declaration!'

[E] He retired to the Convent of Minerva for fear of an Assassin, capable of undertaking any thing, after the Life he had led.] Take his Character in few Words. His first Profession was that of a Benedictine Monk: He forsook his Order, and turned Protestant. He followed Marc Anthony de Dominis into England; he returned again with him into Italy; he entered with him again into the Profession of the Catholic Religion, and was his Steward at Rome. He fell in Love with a Woman in the Neighbourhood, and enjoyed her a pretty while, without her Husband's perceiving it; but at last the good Man discovered the Matter; for, coming home unexpected, he found, in his Bed, the Marks still fresh of the Place that another had lain in; 'Captus amore vicinæ mulieris honesto viro nuptæ, multos menses continuos ejus usuram corporis ceperat priusquam id viro suboleret; sed cum palam facta res esset, quod ex improvviso domum rediens in lecto recens impressa adulteri vestigia deprehendisset (6).' The Gallant foresaw that for the future it would be impossible for him to continue his Commerce; wherefore he resolved to make away with the Husband, and, having taken his Measures with the Wife, he killed him one Morning in the Streets. This happened during the Sede vacante, which followed upon the Death of Gregory XV. A thousand Disorders are committed in Rome, from the time of the Death of one Pope, to the Election of his

(5) It should have been Starovolsius.

(6) It should have been Starovolsius.

(7) It should have been Starovolsius.

(8) It should have been Starovolsius.

(9) It should have been Starovolsius.

(10) It should have been Starovolsius.

(11) It should have been Starovolsius.

(12) It should have been Starovolsius.

(13) It should have been Starovolsius.

(d) Taken from Janus Nicius
Erythraeus, Pina-coth I, pag. 198.
& seq.

that Convent a few Years after he came into it (d). It was in the Year 1637. He had brought himself into much Trouble with the Franciscans [F]; not only for the Reason that Mr Moreri mentions (e), but also on other Accounts. The Jesuits are no better satisfied with his Annals than the Franciscans [G]. Besides what his Successor, and most of the Crimes that are committed in that time go unpunished. The Wife was present at the Murder, and unconcerned at it: No search was made after the Murderer. So that he had Leisure to marry his Mistress to the Valet de Chambre of Marc Anthony de Dominis, and to share the Enjoyment of her peaceably with the new Husband; for he was a Man who freely connived at the Adultery, as long as his Wife could get by it wherewith to keep House; the Charge of it was considerable, and the Adulterer, not having any longer wherewith to supply them, took to robbing and murdering. 'Cum domestici omnes sumptus in ipsum incumberent, nec esset unde faceret, ad rapinas caedeq; confugerat (7).' He understood that Bzovius's Coffers were well furnished with Money, which put him upon the Design of robbing him: knowing therefore one Day that this good Monk was not at home, he broke open his Chamber, after he had killed the Servant, and carried away all that he found to his Whore. This was soon spent; and as there came no fresh Supply, the Husband grew weary of his voluntary Cuckoldom, conceived an Averfion to his Partner, and informed against him. The Consequence was, that this wicked Murderer was hanged. I do not wonder that the Annalist, frightened at the Murder of his Servant, and sorry for the Loss of his Money, should have a Mind to seek a securer Retreat in the Convent of Minerva.

(e) That is, for his talking disadvantageously of the subtle Doctor Johannes Scotus.

[F] He brought himself into much Trouble with the Franciscans. Every one knows the Jealousy, that has reigned so long, and which is not yet extinguished, between the Order of St Francis, and that of St Dominicus: There are continual Signs of it throughout the Annals of Bzovius, in his affecting to revile the Franciscans whenever Occasion offers. He had blackened the Memory of their great Hero, the subtle Scotus; they could not remain silent, but caused an Apology to be printed; to which one of Bzovius's Brother Friars replied (8). Besides that particular Apology for Scotus, the Franciscans published a general one at Lyons, in the Year 1627; the Name of the Author of that Piece was Dermicus Thadæus. His Book is intitled, Nitela Franciscanæ Religionis, & absteris sordium quibus eam conspurcare tentavit Abr. Bzovius. We shall see that Wading, the Annalist, of the Order of St Francis, was a perpetual Antagonist of Bzovius, as to all Points relating to the Franciscans: We shall see it, I say, in these Words of Father Maimbourg: 'I know, says he (9), that Bzovius, the Dominican, an implacable Enemy of the Manes of that great Doctor, has wounded his Memory in a strange manner, calling him Arch-Heretic, Corrupter of Philosophy and Divinity, and accusing him of having been the Author of all the Evil that Lewis of Bavaria did to the Church and the Pope; but I know also very well, that Wading, a very learned Franciscan, who refutes him very solidly, in all that he says without Foundation, against the Franciscans, whom he never spares on occasion, made Ohm's Apology against him, in his Annals of the Friars Minors.'

[G] The Jesuits are little better satisfied with his Annals than the Franciscans. An Apologist of the Jacobins observes, that some Persons are of Opinion, that a small marginal Note of Bzovius was the Cause of the Indignation of the Jesuits. In his third Volume he inserted the Prophecy of St Hildegard, and noted in the Margin, that it might be applied to the present Times. It is said, that this was the Original of the Hatred that the Jesuits had for him, and of the Contempt they expressed of his Annals. 'Hostili animo in Bzovium feruntur ferè omnes Societatis scriptores: causam haud scivi; pretextam autem suggestit mihi verè eruditus; quod scilicet Bzovius in suis Annalibus tomo 15, ad annum 1415, parag. 39, inferuerit Propheciam quandam Sanctæ Hildegardis; & ad marginem Bzovius apposuerit hæc verba, Proph- tia quædam S. Hildegardis, quæ ad hæc tempora referri potest; quasi Bzovius eam Propheciam Societati addiderit. Hanc dicunt irarum & odii in Bzovium originem fuisse: cum tamen Bzovius Societatis non meminerit, sed tantum Propheciam ad hæc tempora retulerit (11). --- Almost all the Writers of the Society fall foul on Bzovius; I do not know the Reason; but a learned Man suggested to me their Pretence, that Bzovius, in the fifteenth Volume of his Annals, under the Year 1415. Parag. 39, inserted a certain Prophecy of St Hildegard, and put in the Margin these Words: A certain Prophecy of St Hildegard, which may be referred to the present time; as if Bzovius had applied it to the Society. This they say was the Original of their Rage and Hatred of Bzovius; notwithstanding that Bzovius never mentioned the Society, but only referred the Prophecy to the present time. Lewis Carthier, one of them, calls that Continuation of Baronius's Annals an addition of Straw.

Another Jesuit affirms, that they are rather the Annals of the Dominicans, than the Annals of the Church; that Bzovius, a Man of little Judgment, is only a Foil to Baronius; that he only relates at large what concerns his own Order, except in Matters to their Disadvantage, which could not be refused; that he turns off from those Places as dumb as a Fish, but shews an extraordinary Diligence, when Occasion offers to censure and ridicule the Franciscans; 'Perexigui judicii scriptor, nec tam autor quam consanator; emisit multa volumina continuationis Ecclesiasticæ historiæ post Baronium, cui succedaneam in eo argumento operam navavit; ut objectu contrarii, magis elucesceret Baronii accurate, juxta Philonis observationem lib. quis rer. divinar. hæref. Tomi Bzoviani sunt potius Annales Dominicanorum, quam Annales Ecclesiasticis: Est enim totus in rebus domesticis effundis, ac dilandis; nisi cum aliquid ordinis probrosum, quod convellere non posset, malis avibus in historiæ feriem incidit. Tunc enim supra piscem tacitus ablit. At cum agitur de mordendis & risu omnium exponendis Fratribus Minoribus, probat exquisitè diligentiam. Arripit omnia, five aperte falsa, ut quod de rabie Scoti morientis exaravit; five de solis rumoribus inanibus hausta, ut cum F. Berthodum infamat ob inventas bombardas, & aliis sexcentis locis consimilibus (13). --- A Writer of very little Judgment, and rather a botching Compiler than an Author; he published a great many Volumes of the Continuation of the History of the Church after Baronius, designed as a Supplement to his Work; that the Accuracy of Baronius might shine the more, by being compared with the contrary, according to the Observation of Philo, in his Book quis rer. divinar. hæref. Bzovius's Volumes are rather Annals of the Dominicans, than Annals of the Church: For he is wholly taken up in setting forth and enlarging upon their private Affairs; except when any thing to the Dishonour of the Order, which he cannot confute, falls unluckily in the Course of his History. For then he goes off as mute as a Fish. But when he has an Opportunity of laughing and ridiculing the Friars Minors, he shews the utmost Diligence. He lays hold of every thing whether manifestly false, as what he has writ about Scotus's Madness a little before his Death, or taken from meer empty Reports; as when he reproaches F. Berthodus for the Invention of Guns, and Five hundred such like Places. The same Writer affirms, that Bzovius had inserted the History of the Council of Trent, composed by Father Paul, into one of his Volumes, and that it was not his Fault that That Volume was not printed with that poisoned Piece; but after he had got that Volume examined, and obtained leave of the Master of the sacred Palace to print it, a Fanery took him to desire a new Examiner of Urban VIII. That Pope shewed a little Difficulty at first; but at last committed the new revising of it to the Vicar-General of the Cistercians, who had no sooner

(11) Vincentius
Baronius, Apologet.
lib. iv, sect.
3, art. 2, p. 106.

(12) Ludovicus
Carthierus in ex-positione
apud Vincent.
Baronius. Ibid.

(13) Theoph.
Raynaudus de immunit. Cyriacorum dist. 7,
pag. 132. Apo-compai.

(8) Nicolaus Jan-
senius, cujus animadversiones & scholia in apologiam super edi-tam contra Bzovium de vita &
morte Joh. Duns Scoti, extant in
eisco Tom. XV.
Annal. Bzovii.
This is the third Volume of Bzovius, for the first is recounted, the thirteenth with regards to Baronius's XIIth.

(9) Decaden de l'Empire, lib.
vi, pag. 606. Edit. Holl.

(10) That is to say, of Ohm.

what he composed on the Popes in general, he wrote particularly the Life of Silvester II, and that of Paul V. A Judgment may be made of this Author's Discernment, by the Fables he has vented about the Genealogy of this Silvester [H]. Since run over some Pages, but he was struck with the Stench of the mortal Poison of Fra-Paolo. The Pope was informed of it, and named other Commissioners to examine that Book. These condemned the Manuscript with one Consent, and passed all the Leaves of it together: 'Subiit Abrahamum cupido, novæ recognitionis querendæ, quam aliquis nominatim à summo Pontifice delectus præstaret. Interpellavit ea de re Urbanum VIII. initio morosum ad concedendam novam recognitionem. D. Hilarion Rancatus Vicarius Generalis Cismon-tanus Cisterciensium, denique ad id delectus est à Pontifice. Is vix paucis foliis evolutis, putorem operis, & pro suavi odore, auctoris exscripti fœtorem illico odoratus, de morte in illa Pontificem admonuit, à quo alii insuper recognitores sunt adhibiti, de tanta obestitate ad veritatem pronuntiaturi. De omnium sententia, factum est codici Bzoviano, Pauli Suavis pestifera scriptioe faginato, ita ut Paulus Suavis sub nomine Bzovii edendus esset, si codex Bzovii prodiret; factum inquam eo est, quod à S. Ephremo olim esse præstitum circa librum hæreticum, retulit Gregorius Nyssenus. Mutuo namque per sanctum sumpto impio volumine, omnia folia interposito glutine simul sunt compacta; ita ut deinceps explicari ac evolvi paginas, ut ad legendum necesse fuisset, impossibile fuerit (14). — Bzovius took a Fancy to desire a new Examination, by somebody nominated by the Pope for that special Purpose. He applied for a new Revision to Urban VIII, who at first made some Difficulty; but at last chose Don Hilarion Rancato, Vicar-General of the Cistercians in Italy, for that Work. He, when he had just turned over a few Leaves, instead of a sweet Savour, smelt the ill Scent of the Work, and of the Author whom he had copied, and informed the Pope of the Poison lurking there. The Pope appointed other Examiners to give a true Report of such a gross Piece of Work. They with one Consent served Bzovius's Book, which was so stuffed with the pestiferous Work of Father Paul, that Father Paul was to have been published under the Name of Bzovius, if Bzovius's Book had come out; they served it (I say) as Gregory of Nyssa tells us St Ephrem served a heretical Book. For the Saint, borrowing the impious Piece, stuck all the Leaves together with Glue, in such a manner that it was impossible for them ever after to be opened and read.'

Father Baronius answered, as well as he could, for his Brother the Annalist, to the Censures of Theophilus Raynaud; and in some Respects it may be said that his Apology is not bad; but here are two Points wherein it seems to me defective. The first relates to the Prophecy of St Hildegard: The second is concerning the incorporating Father Paul's History. The Apologist answers, I. That Bzovius, without making any Mention of the Jesuits, said only that the Prophecy of St Hildegard might be applied to these Times (15). II. That he cannot believe, that That Annalist would insert the Works of Father Paul into his Annals: And these are the Reasons he gives for not believing it: Bzovius was not ignorant that Marc Antony de Dominis, the Apostate Archbishop, had published that Work, whose Infamy could not be unknown to him. It was a condemned Work; it is not probable therefore that Bzovius would insert it in his Annals. That History offends the Church of Rome and the Popes so often, that Bzovius could not be so blind as not to see the Poison which flows every where from it. 'Tot ac tanta sunt in ea historia contra summos Pontifices, contra Romanam Ecclesiam, ut non potuerit Bzovius ita cæcutire quin venenum quod undequaque erumpit non annotaret (16). He concludes with saying, that, at worst, the Precaution of the Annalist ought to be praised. He desired a new Revision of his Writing, that the Evil, which might have slipped into it thro' his Neglect, should not remain without Remedy. All this is very weak; for, in the first place, it is no excuse in the least, that the marginal Note names no Body; for the Malice of Bzovius does not appear a Jot the less; he knew well enough that the Enemies of the Jesuits applied the Prediction of St Hildegard to them. So that he explained himself sufficiently; and he could not have specified the Jesuits without exposing himself to vexatious Troubles, and to formal Processes before the Pope's Tribunals. II. I say in the second Place, that Theophilus Raynaud having advanced an Accusation, accompanied with Circumstances of Fact, it is almost in vain to oppose it by probable Reasons. A Man might be satisfied, and take up with them, against Accusers, who alleged only Proofs of the same kind; but when they alleged Witnesses, and specify Circumstances of Time, and the Qualities of the Persons, it is necessary to have Recourse to some Proofs of Fact, and thereby destroy the Evidence, which they allege. The Accuser had maintained, that Urban VIII had commissioned Don Hilarion Rancato to revise Bzovius's Book; he had, in some manner, marked the very Dwelling of that Commissary. It lay then on the Jacobins to prove that That Monk had never had that Employ, or had never made the Report in question to the Pope. There were many Persons then alive in Italy, who had known Don Hilarion Rancato, who had spoke with him, who could shew some of his Papers, &c. It is a strong Presumption in Favour of Father Theophilus, that the Defender of Bzovius alleges none of their Testimony; for this shews that the Jacobins durst not make any Enquiry, or publish what their Informations had cleared up to them. A negative Deposition might be of some Use; as for Example, That a Friend of Don Hilarion deposes, That having heard him relate divers curious Facts concerning the Examination of Books, their Approbation, Prohibition, or Permission to print them, and this in Conversations of Intimacy, wherein certain Particulars relating to Bzovius were mixed, he remembered very well that he had never heard him speak of the pretended Insertion of Father Paul; I say, if a Friend of this Don Hilarion should depose this, it would be more conclusive against the Accuser, than repeating over and over, it is not probable, it is not to be believed, &c. I own it is hard to believe, that Bzovius was ignorant, that the History of the Council of Trent displeased the Court of Rome; but after all, it is not impossible; and they allege Facts to us, which prove that he was ignorant of that Truth. A Writer, like him, had need to have many Things shewed to him, and had not time to read them all; if he had well examined all that he gave to the Printers, he could not have produced Folios with so much Dispatch. It is certain, that he has inserted some Treatises in his Annals, which others had published before him. He did this with regard to the Amedeus Pacificus of Father Monod. 'Hunc Commentarium pene ad verbum descripsit, & ad calcem voluminis sui 17 Annalium Ecclesiasticorum adjecit Abrahamus Bzovius, ut quæ de Felice parum rei consentanea scripserat, castigaret (17). — Abraham Bzovius has copied this Commentary almost verbatim, and annexed it to the End of the seventeenth Volume of his Ecclesiastical Annals, to correct what he had writ amiss concerning Felix.'

[H] One may judge of his Discernment by the Fables he has vented about the Genealogy of Silvester II. I believe it will be acceptable to a great many of my Readers, if I shew them a Sample whereby they may judge of the whole Piece; for a World of People would rather have the Character of a Writer's Genius, than the whole Story of his Life. Bzovius had given himself the Trouble, and not without Reason, to refute a thousand impertinent Fables, which have been set forth concerning the Birth of Gilbert Casius, Native of Guienne, Archbishop of Reims, afterwards of Ravenna, and lastly Pope, under the Name of Silvester II. But he ought not to have given, in the room of these Fables, a romantic Genealogy, and vouched the Truth of it. He will have it, that this Pope Silvester was descended from a King of Argos, whose Name was Temenus, and that there are some of that Te-

(14) Id. ibid. diatr. 5. p. 294. Apopompæi.

(15) Vinc. Baronius Apologet. Sect. 1. Art. II. Paragr. II. pag. 24. 106.

(16) Id. ibid.

(17) Samuel Billoth. Script. Societ. Jesu. pag. 684.

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, I have found the following Facts in an Elogy of Bzovius. His Grandmother, by the Father's side, was of the Family Szozepanowski, which had produced St Stanislaus, Bishop of Cracow. Neither Thomas Ostola, that Lady's Son, nor his Wife Magdalen Viscia, lived to educate their Son, our Bzovius; for he was but eighteen Months old when his Mother died, and he lost his Father soon after. He was educated by his Grandmother on the Mother's Side, in the City of Prosovit, and he made so good use of the Instructions of one of his Uncles (f), that, at ten Years of Age, he could write Latin, and compose Music, and make Verses (g). One of his Aunts sent for him afterwards to Secemin, where some Frenchmen, good Philosophers and good Philologists, whom Stanislaus Szafraniec had drawn thither, taught the Youth of Poland. They were indeed Heretics; but Bzovius, though he was but fifteen Years of Age, preserved himself from their Poison, and brought also some of his Comrades into the right way again. After this he went to continue his Studies at Cracow, and made great Progress. He took the Habit of a Dominican in the same City, in the Convent of the Trinity, and, being sent into Italy, read some Lectures of Philosophy at Milan, and of Divinity at Bologna. After he returned into his own Country, he preached in Poznan, and in Cracow, with the Applause of all his Hearers; he taught Philosophy and Divinity; he was Principal of a College of his own Order: He settled a Fraternity of the Rosary; he consecrated a Chapel to the Image of St Mary the Great, which he had brought from Rome to Cracow; he furnished the Library of the Convent of the Dominicans with a great Number of Books; he pacified Poland; he inspired the necessary Moderation into the Malecontents; he built the Church of St Hyacinthus in Warsaw, which was the first that was built to that Saint in Poland; he founded a Convent of Dominicans in the same City, under the Name of St Hyacinthus; he procured all manner of Conveniences for that new Monastery, and got that Saint inserted in the Missal and Breviary (h); he recovered the Monasteries of Silesia, which had been twenty Years separated from the Province of Poland; he took care to have the Relics of St Cestlaus Odrovasius laid up in a secure Place; he was commissioned by his Superiors to digest the Constitutions of the Dominicans into better Form; and he published a great Number of Sermons, and other Writings (i). One of his Works prepared his Way to the Continuation of Baronius: it was the Abridgment of the Ecclesiastical History, which he had extracted chiefly out of the Annals of that Cardinal. He shewed the Manuscripts of it to some Persons, who not only exhorted him to publish it, but also to undertake his Continuation of that History to his own Time: He was then at Rome with Virginio Ursini, Duke of Bracciano, who had made him his Library-Keeper (k). The Deference, which he had for the Exhortations which I have mentioned, brought the great Work of the Continuation of Baronius afterwards to light. The Letter, which the King of Poland wrote to the Pope in the Year 1633, does our Dominican a great deal of Honour [I].

(f) Ab Laurentio avunculo didicit. Starovolski de Scriptor. Poloniae. See Citat. (f).

(g) Musica modulos componere, versus patrios & Latinos pangere. Id. ibid.

(h) Ejusdem Divi Hyacinthi memoriam & cultum in sacros Ecclesiae (Breviarium & Missale vocant) reponi a pnd Urbanum VIII Pont. Max. procuravit. Id. ibid.

(i) Taken from Simon Starovolski, in Scriptorum Poloniae illustrium centuria, before the 8th Volume of the Annals of Bzovius, printed at Cologne, in 1641, which I observe, because in my Edition of this Treatise of Starovolski, which is of Frankfort, in 1625, there is scarce any thing relating to the Life of this Jacobin.

(k) Taken from the Preface to the first Tome of the Annals of Bzovius.

(18) See the Journal des Savants, for the 8th of August, 1678, pag. 332, where they give the Extract of this Work of Bzovius, without advertising that this is not the first edition. It had been printed at Rome in 1629, and afterwards at the end of the 8th Vol. of the Annals in 1641.

menus's Descendants still in being, in France and Italy (18). You must know that this King of Italy was descended from Hercules, and that he was one of the Chiefs of the Heraclidae in the Expedition, in which they retook the Peloponnesus. Now that Expedition is so ancient, that it precedes the historical Time, and belongs to the fabulous. The Chronologists place it in the Time of the Prophet Samuel. Judge then, if it be possible, that at present such and such a Family, which is still subsisting, can be known to have descended from that Temenus. Judge then, whether a judicious Historian, and a Lover of Exactness, will ever say, that a Pope, who lived an hundred Years after Jesus Christ, was descended from Hercules.

[I] The Letter, which the King of Poland writ to the Pope in the Year 1633, does our Dominican much Honour.] It was printed in the Elogy which Starovolski consecrated to the Honour of Bzovius (19). The King supplicates Urban VIII, most humbly to suffer that good old Man to return into Poland, whom he desired to employ in composing the History of the late Transactions there. He declares, that he shall esteem himself very much indebted to his Holiness, if he will be pleased to grant him that Favour, which he so instantly requests of him. 'Certus sum, says he, id Sanctitatem Vestram enixe petitioni meae daturam, ut vir mihi cumprimis charus, ad natale solum — redeat — quod ego inter infinita Sanctit. Vestrae erga me benevolentiae argumenta, non postremo loco reponam, quando virum tam paternae quam meae gloriae studiosum propinquius complecti, & consuetudine illius atque lubricatione frui licebit.'

(19) I saw it before the eighth Tome of the Annals of Bzovius.

C.

(a) See the Remark [A].

CÆSARIUS (JOHN), Physician and Philosopher, born at Juliers, flourished in the XVIth Century. He taught at Cologne (a), and published Editions of several Authors. His Zeal for the Advancement of Learning was very great, and he spared no pains in it, but was so far from advancing his Fortune by that means, that he was reduced in his old Age to the want of Subsistence, and had it not been for the Assistance of his Friends, he must have starved [A]. Being suspected of Lutheranism, he was banished from Cologne in the Year 1543 (b), and retired to the Count of Nuevenar and Meurs, and died there in the Year 1550, upwards of ninety Years of Age. Some say that he returned at last to the Romish Religion, and that, dying at Cologne, in the Year 1551, he was buried in the Convent of the Hermits of St. Jerom, near the High-Altar (c), with a long Epitaph (d), wherein, among other things, it is observed, that he was never married. Alexander Hegius, whose Scholar he had been at Deventer, having, (on account of his great Age), declined the Direction of the School, which they were founding at Munster, about the end of the XVth Century (e), proposed him for that Employ (f). He recommended also some other learned Men, and particularly Timan Camener, who was the Person chosen.

(b) Chytraeus in Saxonia, lib. xvi, init.

(c) Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 479.

(d) It is to be seen in Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 479.

(e) Chytraeus in Saxonia, pag. 80.

(f) Id. ibid.

[A] Had it not been for the Assistance of his Friends, he must have starved. Thus doubtless I may understand this Latin Passage of John Sturm: Floruerunt aliquando in hac civitate (Coloniae) literæ, cum in ea Sobius, & Cæsius, & Phrysemius, docerent. Simul cum Magistris atque Doctoribus vetus frequentia discipulorum sublatæ est. Sobium vis morbi nobis abstulit: Phrysemius quoniam nullum refugium in nostris studiis esse videbat ad Jurisprudentiæ portum confugit: & juris quam sapientiæ consultus esse maluit. Senex adhuc ibi est, atque omnium nostrum tanquam parens Cæsius: qui in hac affectâ ætate, post tot tantorumque laborum defunctionem, nisi ab amicis sustentaretur, viderent eum literæ egentem quas ipse semper ornavit, semperque maximi fecit (1). Learning once flourished in this City (Cologne), when Sobius, Cæsius, and Phrysemius taught here. With the Masters and Doctors the old Number of Scholars declined: Death has deprived us of Sobius: Phrysemius, seeing no Encouragement in our Studies, retired to the Study of the Law, chusing rather to be a Lawyer than a Philosopher. Old Cæsius, the Father, as it were, of us all, is here still: whom, after so many and so great Performances in this dull Age, Learning, which he always adorned, and always highly valued, would see in want, were he not supported by his Friends.

(1) Joannes Sturm, Epist. Dedicat. Tom. II, Orat. Ciceronis. It is without Date, but must be supposed to have been wrote about the Year 1540.

(a) In Latin Cæsius, or Cæjetanus.

CAYET (a) (PETER VICTOR PALMA (§ a), at first Minister of the Reformed Church [A], and afterwards Doctor of Divinity in the Faculty of Paris, is to be reckoned in the Number of learned Men: But there run several strange Reports to the Prejudice of his Reputation; for he was accused, not only of writing an Apology for Stews [B], but also of selling himself to the Devil.

* Mem. de la Ligue, Tom. VI, pag. 350, Edit. 1599.

(1) It is in the 6th Vol. of the Mem. de la Ligue, pag. 343, &c.

(2) Observe, therefore, that the Surname Næwarrus, given him in the Gallia Orientalis, pag. 144, and in the Bibliothèque of König, pag. 151, signifies only that he was Doctor in Divinity of the College of Næwarrus.

[§ a. As it does not appear to me that Cayet ever took the Latin Surname of Palma before his Return to the Romish Church, and that the name Victor was given him at his Confirmation *, probably as a Prognostic of his future Victories over the Heretics, whom he had then left, I should have thought that the Surname of Palma might have been given him on the same occasion, since the Palm is the Symbol of Victory. But Palma is the Latin Name of I know not what Lordship; and Cayet is styled Sieur de la Palme in the Privilege, which he obtained on the Twenty seventh of June 1596, for the Impression of one of his Tracts of Controversy, intitled, Le Vrai Orthodoxe, &c. REM. CRIT.]

[A] At first Minister of the Reformed Church. I learned from a Letter (1), which I shall mention in the last Remark, that he was born at Montrichard in Touraine (2), of a very poor Family, and that in his Youth he went through Classical Learning, at the Expence of a Person of Honour: and having made some Proficiency, they of the Reformed Religion, entertaining some hopes of him, furnished him with the means to study Theology, and made him a Minister: that about the Year 1582 he was presented to the Church of Poitiers at Montreuil-Bonnin; that, finding an Opportunity to enter into the King's Household, he quitted his Church, and followed the Court, and was recommended to Lady Catherine, Sister of Henry IV, to instruct and confirm her in her Religion.

Add to this the Account we have in pag. 268 of the Remarks on the Catholic Confession of Sancy, in the Edition of 1699. 'Peter Cayet of Montreuil-Bonnin, born of very poor Parents, who, with their Son, had embraced the Reformation †, had in his Youth studied at Geneva, from which time Calvin, whose Domestic he was, foretold his Father that his Son would one Day be a Plague to the Church, and would make War against GOD ‡: However, having acquired great Knowledge, especially in the Oriental Tongues, he was made Minister, first at Poitiers, then in the Houle of Mr de la Nouë † at Montreuil-Bonnin, in which places he began to discover his Ambition and Levity of Mind: he was afterwards made Minister to Madam, the Sister of Henry the Great.'

[B] He was accused of writing an Apology for Stews. D'Aubigné asserts this in several places of his Works; he puts these Words in the Mouth of Sancy: 'We ought not to account simple Fornication, or Adultery for Love, to be Sins, according to the Opinion of Caber, in his learned Book on the re-establishment of Stews, and his learned Dissertation on the seventh Commandment. . . . This

† See an Epigram of Beza, on the Revolt of Cayet, in Beza's Latin Poems, Edit. of Geneva, 1597, in 4^{to}, pag. 210.

‡ Advice to the Faithful, on the Apology of P. Cayet, Edit. 1596, pag. 7.

† Life of Mr de la Nouë, p. 203, ad Ann. 1576.

Devil [C]. Having been deprived of the Ministry by a Synod, he turned Catholic in 'This seventh Commandment, which is non morchaberis, forbids only the Sin of Onan, for μω-χέειν is derived, according to this Modern Theology, from τὸ μωχέειν and χέειν, quod est humidum fundere (3). The Verses at the end of the same Book (4) are yet more severe.

Cahier voulut loger les Putains en franchise,

Canoniser pour saints les véroléz perçus:

Nôtre Eglise le, prit quand vous n'en vouliez plus,

Catholique il poursuit encor son entreprise:

La paillard le voit martir pour les Bordeaux.

L'Advocat des putains, Sindic des Maquereaux.

Elle ouvre ses genoux, l'acole tres-humaine,

Honteux, banni, puant, vérolé, ladre vert.

Huguenots, confessez que l'Eglise Romaine

Tient son giron paillard à tous venans ouvert.

Cahier demanded Privilege for Whores,

And even the Pocky to be canonized.

Exil'd from yours, Our Church receiv'd him in:

A Convert, He the same Design pursues,

Martyr of Brothels, Advocate for Whores.

Yet Mother Church with open Arms receives

The Shameful, banish'd, sinking, pocky, Wretch.

Own, ye Reformers, that the Church of Rome

Receives all Comers in her whorish Lap.

What follows ought to be of greater Weight, because it occurs, not in a Satire, but in a History.
'It happened also some time after, that Cayer was degraded for studying Magic, being also accused of having written two Books, one to prove that by the seventh Commandment, neither Fornication nor Adultery were forbidden, but only the Sin of Onan, the other to prove the necessity of re-establishing Stews every where. Being thereupon rejected, he turned to the Catholic Religion, where he was well received by the Sorbonne,
but very indifferently by the Jesuits (5).'

The Author of the Notes on the Confession of Sancy observes, that D'Aubigné is mistaken, and that all these fine Maxims, attributed to Cayer, were couched in one single Piece intitled, A Discourse containing a remedy against public Debauchery presented to the Parliament (6).

[C] But also of selling himself to the Devil. Theodore Tronchin, Professor of Divinity at Geneva, and one of the Fathers of the Synod of Dort, in one of his Books says thus (7). 'Peter Cayer, among other Facts, for which he was degraded from the Ministry, was accused by credible Witnesses of having had communication with Devils. After he was degraded, instead of repenting, he grew worse and worse, and revolted from the true Religion:
After which he became such a Reprobate, that he made a Contract with Satan, under the Name of Terrier, Prince of the Subterranean Spirits, giving himself to him Body and Soul, now and for ever, on Condition that the said Spirit would make him successful in Disputes against the Reformed Religion, and compleat in the Knowledge of Languages. This Contract, signed with Blood, was found after his Death, and has been seen by several of the King's Council.' Mr Colomieu, who cites these Words (8), furnishes me with another Passage; which is: 'The Complaints against the Sieur Cayer were, that he had left the Church of Poitiers, to which he had been appointed, to intrude himself by indirect means, first into that of the King, and then into That of his Sister: that he gave himself up so much to curious Sciences, that he was commonly called Petrus Magus, and that he had behaved otherwise than became him towards a young Woman (9). I wonder that Montigny says nothing of the two Books, which, according to D'Aubigné, were one of the first Causes of Cayer's Disgrace. 'Did you expel him for Sorcery?

'In the Question of Fanelle, to which it is answer-

'red. The first Charge against him was only for

'two Books, in one of which he maintained, that

'the Sin, forbidden by the seventh Commandment,

'was neither Fornication nor Adultery, but that it

'forbids only τὸ μωχέειν, meaning the Sin

'of Onan; by which he had made the sacred Or'der his Enemies; the other Book was for the re-

'establishment of Stews: but on his Trial the Ac-

'cusation of Sorcery was brought in, and Books,

'wrote by him on that Subject at Tiel Chavain,

'were produced (10). In the same Work, D'Au-

'bigné gives us a pleasant relation of an Adventure

'of his Baron as follows. 'Cayer shewed me Books

'of Magic, written by himself, two Foot thick;

'he let me see an Eggshell, in which he made a little

'Man with Sperms, Mandrakes, and crimson Silk,

'and a slow Fire, to obtain things, I do not care

'to mention. He showed me Images of Wax, which

'he melted gently, to warm the Heart of a fair

'one; and others that he wounded with a little

'Arrow, to kill a Prince an hundred Leagues off

'(11). This may pass for a Piece of Raillery; but 'what follows is related seriously with all its Cir'cumstances as a certain Fact. 'The Scripture in'forms us, that there are Enchanters and Sorcerers;

'The first are rare; Witness a Duke of Savoy,

'who spent a hundred thousand Crowns to find

'one; the other too frequent; among which I

'reckon Cayer, who sold himself to the Devil,

'by a Writing signed with his own Hand, and

'stipulated with the Hand of the Purchaser: You

'have heard of his horrible Death; But I have seen

'the original Piece in the Hands of Mr Gilt,

'when the Court was deliberating whether they 'should burn his Body, or hang it Heels upper-

'most at Montfaucon. But there were Lords and

'Ladies of so high Rank Partakers of his horrible

'Practices, that this Piece of Wickedness was

'smothered up like many others at this Day,

'which it is thought much safer to stifle in our

'Bosoms, than expose to the World; and here to

'shew it is not à propos (12). It is somewhat sur'prising that D'Aubigné, who was so well acquaint-

'ed with this Affair, did not know the best of the 'Story. He did not know that the Devil took Cayer

'Body and Soul, and that, in order to deceive the

'Bearers at his Funeral, Stones were put into the 'Coffin, instead of the Corps, which the Devil had 'carried off: Marcellus tom. 2. contra Titinum pag.

434. ait, Vixit. Cabierum qui superiori sæculo vixit, ex Ministro Reformatæ Ecclesiæ Sorbonicæ, Kabalistam, & Magum factum, ejusque corpus a Diabolo ablutum esse, ut lapides vice illius ejus loculo condendi fuerint. Thus much we find in the Bibli-

'othèque of the Sieur König under the Word CA-

'HIERUS (13).

I think myself obliged to observe, that I have not found any thing relating to these strange and abominable Accusations in the Catholic Writers, except these Words of Leo Allatius: Hi quam si- millima inter quotidianos congressus quibus uter familiarissimis, ab omni beneficiis eruditionis Mystra Gabriele Naudero de Unicorn. Palma (14) Cajetanus &

Constantino Chymista frequenter audiui (15). He had just been relating some Stories about the Invocation of Demons; and adds, that his good Friend

Gabriel Naudé had often told him such things of Victor Palma Cayet. But there are two things to be observed. First, it does not appear, that Naudé ever believed the Tales of Sorcerers and Magicians;

next, that having had occasion in his Works to speak of Victor Cayet, with respect to these Matters, he never charged him with Sorcery. Read his Dialogue de Mascurat, where you will find (16): Patria Homer,

S. Oh the Devil take him of us two, who ever heard of such a thing. M. He must take us both then, if that be the Condition. S. I hope, not as he did Dr Faustus and his Man, however;

for I should not care to hang you by the Feet. S. The Letter

M. You tell me of an imaginary Person, a Chimera of the Germans, which the great Doctor Petrus

Victor Palma Cajetanus, or rather that foolish cre-duleus Animal Caillette, translated into French, as it

it

(3) Catholic Confession of Sancy, Book ii, cap 2, pag. 392, Edit. of Amsterdam, 1693. See also Baron de Fanelle, Book ii, cap. xii.

(4) Pag. 445.

(5) D'Aubigné's Universal History, Tom. III, Book iv, cap xi, pag. 502, ad Ann. 1595.

(6) Notes on the Confession of Sancy, pag. 53, Edit. 1699.

(7) Preface to the Defence of our Versions of the Bible, 1620.

(8) Colomieu, in Gallia Orientali, pag. 145.

(9) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(10) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(11) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(12) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(13) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(14) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(15) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(16) Id. ibid., pag. 144, from a Pamphlet entituled, Advertisement for la Deposition du Sieur Cayer, du St Ministère, & sur sa Revolté, by Fr. Loberanus, Lord of Montigny, Inte Ministre at Paris, pag. 5.

(10) Baron de Fanelle, Book ii, cap. xii, pag. 81.

(11) Id. ibid., pag. 79.

(12) Id. ibid., pag. 80.

(13) Observe, that König, not knowing the true Name of Cayer, believed that Petrus Cajetanus, and Petrus Victor Palma Cayetanus, were three different Men. In the Oxford Catalogue, Victor is given for the true name of Cayer, whereas it was only his Name of Confirmation.

(14) Read Naudé de Victore Palma.

(15) Allatius de Patria Homer, S. Oh the Devil take him of us two, who ever heard of such a thing. M. He must take us both then, if that be the Condition. S. I hope, not as he did Dr Faustus and his Man, however; for I should not care to hang you by the Feet. S. The Letter

M. You tell me of an imaginary Person, a Chimerica of the Germans, which the great Doctor Petrus Victor Palma Cajetanus, or rather that foolish cre-

duleus Animal Caillette, translated into French, as it

it

(b) Launoi Hist. Gymnas. Navarre, pag. 791.

in the Year 1593, and, being known to Henry IV [D], he was afterwards preferred to the Place of Royal Reader in the Oriental Tongues [E]. He was promoted to the Degree of Doctor of Divinity in the Year 1600 (b). He wrote several Books against those he had quitted [F], wherein, among other things, he complains of their Satires [G]. He entered into a Personal Conference with the famous Du Moulin. This Conference lasted several Days [H]; and, according to

* Sarisberienfis in Euthetico.

'it had been already into English, Adeo omnia * si nescis loca sunt plenissima nugis, Quorum tota corpora est inimica mihi. — Thus, whether you know it or no, all the World is quite filled with trifles, the whole tribe whereof are odious to me.' Add to this a thing which I shall mention in the Remark [H].

Observe, that, by the Epistle Dedicatory of the Book, which Gabriel Naudé has here ridiculed, which is signed V. P. C. one would judge, that our Cayet's Zeal against Magic was extraordinary. See also the whole Title of his Version. 'The wonderful and lamentable History of Doctor Faustus, with his horrible Death, wherein are shewn, the miserable Consequences of Curiosity, in the illusions and impostures of the evil Spirit, and also Satan overthrown by himself, when constrained to speak the Truth.' I use the third Edition, printed at Rouen, Anno 1604, in 12mo.

[D] — being known to Henry IV.] He had almost constantly followed him from the time he was first introduced to him by the Sieur de la Gauderie, who was Tutor to this Prince. These are the Words of M. Maimbourg, in his Preface to the History of the League.

[E] He was soon after preferred to the place of Royal Reader in the Oriental Tongues.] He has this Title in a Privilege, granted him, for his Controversial Works, the fifteenth of June 1596; and we find these Words in the sixty second Page of a Book (17) he published Anno 1597. 'I do not blame the Study of the Hebrew, Caldee, and other Languages: so far from it, that, thanks be to God, I myself am Professor of them, in the Service of God and his Church, by the good Pleasure of the Most Christian King our Sovereign.' There is therefore a Mistake in that Passage of M. De Launoi, where he assures us, that Cayet obtained this Post Anno 1599 (18). I am indebted for this Discovery to the Author of the Notes on the Confession of Sanci. But I ought to mention, that James de Breul observes, that our Cayet succeeded Francis Jourdain, Royal Reader and Professor in the Hebrew Tongue, who died in September 1599 (19). We may reconcile these Matters, by supposing he had that Title in 1596, and that he even read Lectures, but that, the place not being yet vacant, he was not, properly speaking, promoted to it, and installed till after the Death of Jourdain in 1599.

[F] He wrote several Books against those he had quitted.] You will find the Catalogue of them in the History of the College of Navarre (20). I mention here only the Title of the first that appears in that List. A Christian and Useful Remonstrance to the Nobility of France, who are not of the Catholic Religion. Paris 1596. M. de Launoi observes, that the Letter to the Author from Clement VIII, and several things relating to the Original and Progress of the Huguenots, are found in that Piece (21). When Cayet published this Book, he was lodged in the Place, where Possel died; for he dates his Admonition to those of the third Estate, who are not of the Catholic Religion, from the Abbey of St Martin des Champs. This Admonition was printed Anno 1596, as you will find in the Remarks on the Confession of Sanci (22), in the Place where these Words of the Preface are commented on; They ought at least to have retained Sponde in an honourable Imprisonment, in the Abbey of St Mathurin, as formerly Possel, and now Cayet, two learned mad Men. This gives great ground to suspect M. de Launoi of another Mistake; for he asserts, that Cayet lived in the College of Navarre, at the time when Pope Clement VIII wrote him a Letter, dated the twentieth of March 1596. 'Quo tempore datae sunt hae literae jam Cajetus' — in Navarre Collegium secesserat (23). — At the time this Letter was wrote, Cayet was already retired to the College of Navarre. I know not in which of his controversial Books this Profelyte mentions Seventy four Propositions of John Hus, which are contrary to the Doctrine of John Calvin (24). I do not find in Launoi's List Cayet's Book containing the Reasons of his Conversion, to which the Minister Rotan made a fine Answer, in 1596 (25).

[G] — — — Where among other things he complains of their Satires.] He renewed his Complaint in his nine Years Chronology. He says, that several Answers had been published to his Account of the Causes of his Conversion; and that he, who collected the Memoirs of the League, had inserted one of those Answers, but not his Reply to it; he calls the Report of his Amours with a Lady of Bearn (26) a Calumny: he observes, that none of those who spread these Slanders ever published their Names, so that he never knew to whom in particular to address himself. He adds, that no Answer was ever made to his Justification of himself, touching the Book On the Establishment of Stears. He maintains, that he was not the Author of it, and that Robert Stephens had owned, that he had promised never to shew the Manuscript to any body. He says farther, that it was not this Book that grieved the Ministers, but his Consilium pium de componendo religionis dissidio — — — Pious Advice for composing the Differences of Religion, of which they knew he had distributed several Copies. 'Afterwards, continues he, they gave out that I intended to turn Catholic; and that the King had given me, for so doing, an Abbey near Rochelle; and it will appear, that to this time (which is the Year 1607). — — — I have neither Abbey nor Benefice (27). There is a great deal of Moderation in this Part of his History. Mr Maimbourg is much more warm in his Favour (28). 'That, says he, viz. the Conversion of Cayet, supported by Reasons, and imitated by many Persons', put his old Brethren, the Ministers, in so ill Humour, that they inveighed against him most furiously, loaded him with numberless Reproaches, and endeavoured to blacken him with a thousand horrid Calumnies, with which they have filled, among many other Libels, that which they published in the Memoirs of the League, most basely concealing the solid and convincing Answers he had made to them; which is sufficient to discover the Falseness of all that they (according to the Genius of their Heresy) have wrote to defame him. For of all Heretics whatever, none have been more cruel and abusive than the Calvinists, or have avenged themselves with more Barbarity on their pretended Enemies, by Arms and violent Means, when they had the Power, or more shamelessly by the Pen and Libels, when they could do nothing else, baspattering those that have declared against their Party with all kind of Reproaches and Calumnies.' This is too violent: there was a more modest way of complaining, that the same Invectives had been repeated without any Answer made to the Apologies of the Accused. See Remark [O]. The Author of the Notes on the Confession of Sanci (29) gives the Titles of several Pieces published against Cayet, soon after his Revolt.

[H] His Conference with du Moulin lasted several Days.] We see in the Life of du Moulin (30), that he was challenged to this Dispute by Cayet; that he went without any Second, notwithstanding that Cayet had two Carmelites along with him; that they disputed fifteen Days successively: that, at the end of eight Days, the Sorbonne gave Cayet a sharp Reprimand for defending the Cause no better, and suffering his Adversary to go deeper into Questions, than it was for the Interest of the Catholics he should; that the Bishop of Paris forbade Cayet to sign the Acts of the Conference; that from that time Cayet disputed timorously, and often declared

(24) See the Theomachia Calvinistica of Fenardent, Tom. II, Book XIII, cap. viii, pag. 178, Edit. of Cologne, 1629, in 4to.

(25) Remarques sur la Confession de Sanci, p. 323.

(26) The Baroness d'Acos.

(27) Chronologie Novenaire, Book vii, ad Ann. 1595, fol. 545, verso.

(28) Maimbourg, Preface to the History of the League.

† A Letter from a Catholic Gentleman to his Friend, 1595.

‡ Memoirs of the League, Tom. VI, pag. 243, Cayet 33, fol. 545.

(30) It is in the Volume published by Dr Baur, at London, 1681, under the Title of Vita Schottorum aliquot circum qui doctrina dignitate aut pietate inclaruerunt. See pag. 703.

(17) Entitled, An Exhortation to the Re union with the Catholic and Apostolic Church of Rome.

(18) Launoi Hist. Gymnas. Navarre, pag. 791.

(19) Du Breul, Antiq. de Paris, pag. 567.

(20) Pag. 792.

(21) Launoi, Hist. Gymnas. Navarre, pag. 792.

(22) Printed at Amsterdam 1693, pag. 458.

(23) Launoi, Hist. Gymnas. Navarre, pag. 790.

to Custom, there appeared very different Accounts of it. Cayet was also esteemed a Chronologer, and wrote some Histories [I]. After he had embraced the Romish Religion, he resided mostly (c) in the College of Navarre at Paris (d), and died there the Twenty second of July, 1610, and was interred at St Victor (e). He took some pains about the Philosopher's Stone [K]. If that be true which is said of him, concerning the Design the Count de Soissons had to marry the Lady Catherine, Sister of Henry IV, we may be assured that his Conduct sometimes was very good [L]. It is a very odd thing, that, while one side say that the Devil failed him (f), and that the Parliament of Paris would hardly allow him Burial; the other asserts, that he continued a very good Man from the time of his Abjuration [M]. Scaliger has not said a Word against his Morals; which I wonder at: Would he have forgot the Crimes imputed to Cayet? Or did he doubt the Truth

(d) Launoi Hist. Gymnas. Navarre, pag. 790.

(e) Id. ibid. pag. 792. Du Breul, pag. 567, of the Antiquities of Paris, says, he died the second of July, being the Feast of St Victor.

(f) See the Remarks [C] and [H].

of

declared that he disputed without any public Authority; that the Sorbonne went, in a Body, to the Advocate-General, and told him, that, if a stop was not put to this Dispute by Authority, it was to be feared, it would raise a Sedition; that it is not known what Order the Magistrates gave, but that du Moulin, going to the Place of Conference, found the Door shut; that it was soon after opened to Cayet; that, on du Moulin's coming in, a Letter was given to the Master of the House, informing him, that he would do well not to admit the Disputants to his House any more, for if he did he would be sent to Prison; whereupon they despaired of finding another House; that Cayet, being called upon to sign the Acts, refused to do it, and withdrew, saying to du Moulin, You shall hear of me some other time (31); that he talked no more of renewing the Conference; that some Years after the too true and infamous Story of his Death (32) came to be known, viz. that the Devil had killed him, and that his Contract with the Devil, Terrier, was found; and that Archibald Adair, a Scotch Bishop, and witness of all that passed on both sides in this Dispute, published an exact Narrative of it. Matthias Zimmerman is guilty of an Error about the Conclusion of this Recital. It is in pag. 320 of his Florilegium Philologico-Historicum, printed at Miffen, in the Year 1687. His Words are these: 'Cayerus --- tergum obvertens dixit, Tu de me alias audies, sed nihil de iteranda disputatione auditum, verum enim Diabolo necatus, & membranae inventae quibus cum Demone Terrier foedus percussit. --- Cayer --- turning his Back, said, You shall hear of me another time; but not a Word more was ever heard of renewing the Conference, for indeed he was killed by the Devil, and a Contract was found, wherein he had made a Compact with the Spirit Terrier.' This for is a Falsification of du Moulin's History; for the Author of that History has not said, nor intended, nor ought he to say, that Cayer spoke no more of the Dispute, because the Devil killed him. Cayet published three Pieces upon that Dispute. I. A true Summary of the Questions proposed at the Interview between Doctor Peter Victor Cayet, and the Minister du Moulin. Together with an Answer to a scurrilous Pamphlet published by du Moulin. II. The Acts of the Interview, or Conference, with the Minister du Moulin. III. The Defence and Decision of Truth against Archibald Adair, a Scotch-

(c) We say, in Remark [E], that he lived some time at St Martin.

(31) Tu de me alias audies.

(32) This Conference was held in the Year 1602, and Cayet died in the Year 1610.

(33) Laun. Hist. Gymnas. Navar. pag. 792.

(34) Notes on the Confession of Sancy, pag. 98, Edit. 1699.

of Henry IV, — from the beginning of his Reign in 1589, to the Peace made at Vervins in June 1598 (35). The four Letters P. V. P. C. (35) Laun. Hist. Gymnas. Navar. pag. 791. subscribed to his Dedications, signify Peter Victor Palma Cayet. Mr de Launoi did not know that this Author published, in the Year 1600, An Appendix to the Chronology of Genebrard. Anthony de Lovat mentions this Work with Praise: For a compleat Body of History, says he (36), I would recommend the Chronology of the learned Genebrard, continued and enlarged by that Oracle of all Languages Dr Cayet.

[K] He took some Pains about the Philosopher's Stone. The Author of the Mercure François relates this Particular, and some others, which may be worth the Reader's Notice; therefore we will copy the whole Passage. 'Dr Peter Victor Cayet — had never any Enemies, but those to whom he had done good Offices: he was born under that Planet, and it has continued even after his Death. He died in the College of Navarre, and is buried at St Victor; his Dress, his Manner of living, and his Curiosity in searching after the Philosopher's Stone, brought him as much under contempt, as his Learning gained him Honour, and made him regretted by those who knew him particularly. As for myself, I knew him to be a very Frenchman, not at all trans-alpin, and have heard him mention several signal and meritorious Services he had done to the late King (37).'

[L] If that be true which is said of him, relating to — the Count de Soissons — his Conduct was sometimes very good. Some body has writ Notes on the History of the Amours of the great Alexander, printed with the Journal of Henry III. As by the name Alexander is meant Henry IV, so likewise other Persons are designed by names forged at pleasure. The Sister of this Prince is called Grassinda, and the Count de Soissons, Palamede. Let us now see one of the Notes. 'The Marriage of Palamede and Alexander's Sister was so far advanced, that Peter Cayet, Grassinda's Chaplain, was commanded to solemnize it immediately: he desired to be excused, whereupon Palamede threatened to kill him: he replied that he had rather die by the Hand of a Prince, than that of an Executioner (38).'

[M] Some assert, that he continued a very good Man from the Time of his Abjuration. 'All that the Huguenots have writ with so much, I will not say heat, but fury against Mr Cayet, immediately after his Conversion, cannot do him any prejudice, any more than their ridiculous Prediction, affirming that he would soon be neither Huguenot nor Catholic, but would make a third Party between both: For he always behaved himself so well among the Catholics, that, after having given on all occasions proofs of his Virtue and Learning, he was thought worthy to receive the Order of Priesthood, and a Doctor's Cap, and was Reader, and Professor Royal of the Oriental Tongues (39). The Testimony of Mr de Launoi will be of more weight with the Protestants, which I therefore give: 'Multis modis clarus evasit (Cajetus) imprimis quod Hæresim pura sinceræque mente depulerit, deinde quod Jacobus Perronius Ebroicensium Episcopus eum judicaverit dignum, qui ea super re literas a Clemente VIII acciperet, tum quod Clemens ei per literas conversionem gratulatus fuerit — postremo quod sui temporis historias memoriæ prodiderit, & vitam insuper virtutis

(36) Deffins des Professions Nobles, pag. 322, Edit. of 1613, cited by Colomies Gal. Orient. pag. 145.

(37) Mercure François, Tom. I, pag. 530, Année 1610.

(38) See the Journal of Henry III, pag. 295, Edit. Amsterdam, 1693.

(39) Maimbourg, Preface to the History of the League.

(f) Scaligerana, pag. 40.

(b) Under the Word Cabier; a little lower the same Person is mentioned again under the Word Cayet, as if he were another Man. This is an easy and cheap way of multiplying Ministers.

(i) Doujat Prae-not. Canonic. pag. 642.

(40) Hist. Gym-nas. Navarr. pag. 791.

of them? However that be, he says no more of him than this: Cabier, when he was a Minister, made the best Sermons when he was least prepared, and when he took much Pains he did nothing well (g). Observe, he calls him Cabier; there are but few Authors clear of this Mistake [N].

I never could meet with any of the Answers, published by Cayet, to the Accusations, which caused him to be degraded from the Ministry; but what he owns about the Book on Stews, is a Circumstance in favour of the Synod that degraded him [O]. It is owned in the Supplement to Moreri (b), that he wrote the Remedy for public Debauchery, which is the Book on the Re-establishment of Stews. I forgot to mention, that, in the Year 1597, he stood for a Professorship of Canon-Law, but miscarried. This Particular I learn from Mr Doujat (i).

‘ti conjunctam traduxerit, postquam effectus est Catholicæ communionis particeps (40). — Cayet became famous on several Accounts; first, for that he forsook his Heresy with a pure and sincere Heart; then that Jacobus Perronius, Bishop of Ambrun, thought him worthy to receive a Letter from Clement VIII on that Subject, and that Clement congratulated him on his Conversion by a Letter — lastly that he writ Histories of his own Times, and also lead a strictly virtuous Life, ever after he became Member of the Catholic Community.’

[N] There are few Authors clear of the Mistake of calling him Cahier.] This Fault were pardonable, if the Man had not put his Name to several Books; for, as the Pronunciation of Words has often but little conformity with the Orthography, especially in France, where we do not usually pronounce the last Letter, they, who had only heard his Name, and not seen it printed, might easily imagine it to be Cahier or Cabier. But were not they who writ against him inexcusable in this Error? Had they not the true Orthography in the very Books they undertook to refute? It may be said in their Behalf, that he is called Cayer in his Advertisement on the disputed Points of Religion, in order to reconcile Differences, which he published at Paris, in the Year 1596; that he is so called, I say there, both in the Title, in the Epistle to the King, in the Epistle to the Bishop of Eureux, in the Approbation of the Doctors, and in the Privilege (41); but this will not excuse them. They ought to have considered, that, as the name Cayet had appeared to a great number of his Books both before and after, there must needs be an Error of the Press in those Places of the Advertisement, where we find Cayer. There are so many Authors, whose hand writing is bad, that it may reasonably be supposed, that the Printers of that Book could not distinguish whether Cayet had put an r or a t at the End of his Name, and, having once mistaken the t for an r, they repeated the Error in the Privilege, the Approbation of the Doctors, &c.

[O] What he owns about the Book on Stews, is a Circumstance in favour of the Synod that degraded him.] He has thought fit to insert an Episode on this Subject, in his History of Henry the Great (42); but, if he has not supported his Cause better else where, than he has done there, I fear it is very bad. He owns he lent the Book on the Re-establishment of Stews to Robert Stephens, and says nothing against the Deposition of his Man against him, which imports that the Manuscript, which was in the Possession of the Synod, was copied from a rough Original of Cayet's own Hand writing. The Letter, inserted in the Memoirs of the League, gives us so frightful an Idea of this Book, that it is not sufferable for a Clergyman to keep such an Abomination even in his Closet; much less can he be excused for putting it into the Hands of a Printer. The Letter I speak of is a very good Piece: the Author acts the Part of a good Catholic, and gives his Matter a handsome Turn; he seems well versed in Ecclesiastical History; he accuses Cayet of having converted to his own use the Alms the Princess Catherine gave him to distribute (43); and of having said his Manuscript was a Translation of an Italian Book, printed at Venice forty Years before, writ by one Nicolas Perrot (44); of having taken Lodgings in a Tavern, in the Street de la Huchette, which was a notorious Brothel; of having continued for above three Months, ordinarily eating with the Judge de Coudon, one of the greatest Sorcerers and Magicians under Heaven, having an intimate Friendship and Acquaintance with the Empiric l'Esfoille, who never believed in any thing less than in God; of having some time applied himself to Magic, and the occult Sciences, to which he was much addicted, witness his frequent Calculations of Nativities, and his celebrated Predictions given to the late Sieur de la Rochebonne, concerning the Issue of the Siege of Rochebelle, and the Voyage of the Sieur de Strosse into Africa. See Remarks on the Confession of Sancy, pag. 53. Edit. 1699.

One thing more I have to observe, before I conclude this Remark, which shews, that a false Zeal for Religion finishes, what the Sin of Adam had but too much begun: The Disorders of Civil Societies are very great, it cannot be denied; yet we never see that a Man, banished from one State by a judicial Sentence, which declares him guilty of a great many filthy and villainous Actions, meets with so favourable a Reception in another, as to be received to Honours and Dignities, without ever clearing himself of those Charges. The Remains of Reason and Equity forbid such Practice; but this Remainder of Reason and Equity does not appear in Ecclesiastical Bodies: Here is Cayet, degraded with Ignominy by a Synodal Sentence, founded on infamous Accusations; he leaves the Reformed Religion, and joins the Catholics; there he is received with open Arms, they value themselves upon him as a glorious Conquest; he is admitted to Honours and Ecclesiastical Dignities, without any Enquiry whether the Synod had degraded him justly or no.

Tantum Religio potuit suadere malorum!

Religion so much Mischief could persuade!

The same Men, who act thus in a religious Affair, would not have done the like in a matter wholly Civil. One cannot too much press the Reader's Observation of this Remark (45).

(41) Memoirs of the League, Tom. VI, pag. 347.

(42) They produced Copies printed with this Title; Dissertation del Remedio della publica Dissolutioni di Nicolo Perrotto.

REFLEXION on the ill Effects of false Zeal.

(45) See above, the end of Remark [B], in the Article BEZANITES.

EXAMINATION of some Difficulties of the Pre-Adamites.

[A] ----- made him fear, that whoever found him would kill him.] This Expression seems to suppose, that Cain believed, that all the Earth was inhabited; for a Man, who believed that the whole Race of Mankind was comprised in the Family of Adam, could not have found a better way to avoid being

GOD was pleased to set a Mark on him, to prevent his being killed by any one that met him [B]. Cain retired into the Land of Nod, on the East of Eden, and built a City, which he called Enoch, after the Name of his Son. This is all that can be affirmed with certainty concerning him, being all that relates to him in the Book of Genesis (a). All the rest that is said of him, (which is a great deal), is nothing but Conjectures, Réveries, or very uncertain Traditions. I elsewhere (b)

(a) Chap. iv.
(b) In the Articles ABEL, ADAM, and EVE.

(1) Gen. v, 14.

being killed, than to absent himself from that Family; and here, on the contrary, Cain seems not to have feared any Murderer, provided he did not leave it: He fears he shall be killed, only in case he become a Vagabond and Fugitive on the Earth (1). This, I own, is no very great Difficulty; but we ought not to take it amiss that Libertines urge it, since it is certain there is no Christian Sect that would not be very ready to object it to the rest, if they differed from them in that Point. I find scarce one, who has undertaken to refute this Objection of the Præadamites, otherwise than by recurring to the Fecundity of Eve, and computing how many Children might be born of her and her Daughters in the space of One hundred Years. But this, in my Opinion, does not come up to the Point; it supposes, that Cain feared his Brothers and Nephews. Now it was not them he feared; for, as I said before, if they had been the Occasion of this Fear, he could not have desired any thing better than to be banished, nor would he have esteemed the Exile, to which God had condemned him, a Punishment too great for him to bear (2). It must therefore be the Inhabitants of remote Countries that he feared, People unknown, and no ways tied to him by any Relation. For this Reason, I am apt to think, that the Trouble of his Conscience, and the frightful Idea he had formed to himself of Banishment, made him forget what his Father, without doubt, had often told him, relating to the Origin of Mankind. And perhaps he only pretended he was afraid of finding Assassins every where in distant Countries; perhaps, I say, he only pretended it, in order to get the Punishment God had inflicted on him revoked, or commuted. It is a daily Practice of Criminals with their Judges; they endeavour to obtain Favour by exaggerating the Rigour of their Sentence beyond what themselves think of it. Let me not be told, that Cain was not so ignorant as to pretend to hide the bottom of his Thoughts from God; for why should we not think him capable of imitating his Father, who thought to cover himself from the Eyes of God by hiding among the Trees of the Garden? Besides, what means this Answer of Cain to God? I know not, am I my Brother's Keeper? Is not this the Language of a Man, who thinks that he speaks to another Man, and that he conceals from him what he does not confess? Is it not a palpable Lie? God at that time acted after the manner of Men, in order to accommodate himself to our Frailty; and this his Behaviour was answered in such a manner, as seems to show that he was really taken for a meer Man. There is a stronger Objection to be made, viz. That God is so far from undeceiving Cain about his false Supposition, that there were Men every where, that he seems to have confirmed it. He does not answer him; Thou hast no need to fear Murderers in remote Countries; for there is not one Man there: But he encourages him, by giving him a Mark, which would prevent any one that found him from killing him; which manifestly supposes, that Cain might find People in every Place where his vagabond and fugitive Steps might carry him. I answer, God contented himself to remedy what was most pressing, that is the Fear, which this Fratricide expressed of being killed by the first that met him. Now the readiest way to hearten a trembling Soul, who thinks his Life will be a Prey to the first that finds him, is not tell him, that his Kindred are the only Men that are in the World; but to tell him in general that none of those that find him shall kill him. I would join to these Answers the other Consideration. Men lived then several Centuries, and multiplied extremely. Cain doubtless had seen Proofs of this Fecundity. There was like therefore to be a great Number of People on the Earth before he died. So that the Mark, which God gave him, when he sent him into the Country not before inhabited, was not superfluous. I shall say nothing as to the Age he might be of when he murdered his Brother. I have spoke to it elsewhere; those who make him but about the Age of thirty or forty (3), and say, that neither he nor Abel were then married (4), perhaps are not much in the wrong: but, according to this Supposition, it would be more surprising, that Cain's Fears should be of People that he knew; it was not likely that Adam should kill one of his Sons, to revenge the Death of another; nor was it to be presumed that the other Sons of Adam would kill a Brother, to avenge the Death of another Brother. There is no reasonable Family, where any such Proceeding takes place. This, in all appearance, is the reason why God took upon himself the immediate Cognizance of this Matter, and was contented to banish the Criminal. Thus he accommodated himself to our Nature: in like Cases, the Families concerned decline being either Judges or Parties, and are contented not to see the Murderer any more. There were only Abel's Children, if he had any, that could give him any Apprehensions; but again, I say, it was not his Relations Cain dreaded; he feared the first Man he should meet in a foreign Country, where he must of necessity be destitute of all Protection, without Relations, without Friends, ignorant of his Way, and of the Country: This Condition, he thought, would encourage any one to attack him, especially since his Death was like to go unpunished. He had no grounds for these Apprehensions in a Country, where he was known, and among his Relations: There lies the Strefs of the Matter.

